All deep psychology makes us sure that we need the life of prayer, private prayer and corporate prayer. This is the thing we live by, and without which we can not help others in the truest sense. Our Lord Himself would steal away in the stillness of the early morning before it was light to commune with His Father, to strengthen His soul and steady His purpose. Far more needful for us is a like exercise, for our souls must be rid of rival preoccupations, of prejudice, animosity, coldness and sin. We must be clothed with humility and penitence. When Our Lord said "Verily, except ye become as little children, ye can not enter the kingdom", He was making a revelation of Himself. This was His own method, one of the most original and challenging notes of His character.

George MacDonald with startling insight has said somewhere, "A man may be possessed of himself as of the devil". How terribly true are these words! How often have we seen gifted souls, men with the five or ten talents, who are so taken up with themselves and their own plans and fortunes that little room was left for the whispers and pilotage of God. But the Christian who lives in slavish deference to the world, even the religious world, is in fact a living negation of the very soul of Christianity.

Reasons for the Life of Prayer.

1. Prayer effects a reversal of our habitual selfishness, and makes God the actual center of our world. God is not only the sum of goodness, He is creative and redeeming love. We belong to a living universe, not a dead one. We are sharers in a progressive creation, a progressive redemption. And the actual power in the movement is God.

2. Another reason for prayer is the sharp challenge of sin. Writers of fiction are more and more leaving sin out of their vocabulary. The only thing they take note of is its tragic consequences, not its root nor its rebellion.

Among the people at large there is more prosperity than character. Thousands of the Church's communicants are afflicted by sleeping sickness. We have been producing activities faster than we have produced religious experience. The bond which bound a forgiven soul to its redeeming Saviour, and caused it to say "Henceforth I am not my own, but bought with a price, even the precious blood of Christ" is only found nowadays, we fear, among the few. As to a conscience in regard to sins of omission, including such cardinal duties as church attendance on principle, and the faithful and regular reception of the Body and Blood of Christ, every one of us is aware how much laxity has crept in to men's habits.

A man's wisdom or folly, strength or weakness, does not end with him. The religion of Jesus Christ cannot degenerate into just another of the essentially selfish interests of life. Because Christ loved sinners and ate with them, and sought them out, and interceded for them, and died for them, you and I must do the same. Our Divine Master became so intensely identified with His lost brethren that He cried in one awful moment, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me"? "To pray for the conversion of a soul means to dedicate one's self to God on behalf of that soul." We use something higher than our own personality or our own impassioned pleading. We lay hold on the energies of the Living God.

As Pere Lacordaire, the great French preacher, once said in his unrivaled way, "He who is called to the priestly office is he who feels in his heart the value and the beauty of souls. Priests are bad or mediocre, simply because they enter upon the office with some other thought than that of self-sacrifice to the mystery of redemption. All other deficiencies may be remedied; nothing will avail if this is wanting". I know that to engage in such a life means the crushing of many selfish thoughts, of many temptations which seek to luxuriate in one's private life and hold back that life from its best.

It has often been said that there is no body of clergy who are more looked-up-to, respected and honored than the clergy of this Church. If it is true, it constitutes a very serious responsibility. The more a man is trusted, the more terrible the consequence is if he falls. The more he is looked-up-to, the keener should be his desire to walk worthily of his high and sacred vocation. There is a challenge to us today to be diligent in our student life, and honest and thorough in our thinking, for a "priest's lips must keep knowledge". I think we should concentrate upon our great vocational specialty, for surely it gives us a sufficiently large field of interest. We should try to do constructive teaching and preaching, and "speak as the oracles of God", instead of reaching out to right and left into all fields to find padding for sermons.

The men who have influenced the world most permanently have been those of positive conviction, men like St. Paul, Chrysostom, the great Ambrose, Savonarola, Wesley, Newman, Brooks. They spoke with authority, because they brooded long upon the deep things of God.

THE ROAD TO LAUSANNE

By Sir Henry Lunn

THAT great apostle of freedom, Thomas Jefferson, said, "the earth is inhabited by a thousand million of people, and these profess probably a thousand different systems of thought". He used these words in support of his Bill for establishing religious freedom, the first law ever passed by a popular Assembly giving perfect freedom of conscience. It may have been to some extent a rhetorical statement, but all would agree that religion, morals, and social progress are injured by the multiplicity of denominations. Yet there is a certain despairing attitude taken up by many excellent people with reference to the possibility of attaining greater unity in the religious world. It may encourage all such, and stimulate in our own hearts an increased hopefulness as to the realization of the Divine Purpose in the unity of the followers of Our Lord, if we look backwards over a hundred years and see what God hath wrought. Such a review will enable us to say triumphantly, in Galileo's words, "The world moves".

It is difficult for us to realize that only a hundred and fifty years ago, when the Declaration of Independence was signed, the laws of Virginia, the State that had given Washington, Jefferson, and Madison to the young nation, still had barbarous criminal laws, under which ministers of religion were arrested for preaching the Gospel, Quakers were pilloried, witches and heretics were burned to death, and Unitarians were deprived of the custody of their own children.

Even a hundred years ago the grandfather of my friend and colleague, Hugh Price Hughes, who was an Armenian Wesleyan Methodist preacher, was riding out to his appointment, and was followed along the same road in Wales by a Calvinistic Methodist preacher. The Calvinist would not allow his horse to drink water at the same pool, at which the Armenian's horse had just watered.

And as we reply to the skeptics who doubt whether any great good can come from this gathering at Lausanne for the discussion of Faith and Order, we need not go back even a century to mark the real progress that has been made. It was only in 1884 that the Conference of the Episcopal Church at Chicago set out the Lambeth Quadrilateral, and made their first appeal for the reunion of the divided members of the Christian Church. It was in 1888, that Lambeth adopted those proposals, and it was in 1892 that I was privileged to summon the first gathering since the Act of Uniformity in 1662, and the Savoy Conference which preceded that Act, of representatives of the Church of England and the Non-Conformist Churches to meet and consider how they might draw nearer to each other in the expression of their faith and order of their religious life.

When I first visited America thirty-one years ago, the idea of a Federal Council of the Churches of Christ to work for common ends had not yet appeared above the horizon. It was an entirely new conception when I had the privilege of speaking to Assemblies of the clergy, and told them how that in England men were drawing together for social effort. Today, it is not necessary for me in addressing an American audience to stress the importance of such combined work. You are doing magnificent service to religion and the State by your Federal Council, and now it is the turn of the English Churches to learn from you in this matter, though it would not be fair to omit a reference to the splendid coordination of the Christian forces which has been achieved in Christian Council of Politics, Economics, and Civics, whose initials have formed the new word, COPEC. Nor is it possible in this review of what has been achieved in the last two generations to fail to notice the culmination, from an international standpoint, of all these endeavors to unity in social reform achieved in the great Universal Conference of Life and Work at Stockholm, eighteen months ago.

Meanwhile, in another continent, great events are happening. The Episcopal Church of India is seeking powers of self-government to break away from its State connection, and these will no doubt shortly be granted. The Episcopal Church in India has for some years entered into close negotiations with the Non-Episcopal Churches. In South India the movement towards unity has reached a point where definite proposals have been accepted by all parties, which involve the full recognition of the present ministries of the different Churches on terms of equality, with the proviso that in fifty years' time, Episcopal ordination shall be universal within the Church. This decision has been reached after much heart-searching, and was practically forced upon those who were unwilling to advance so far by the fact that the Indian Christians said in effect, "We cannot be troubled with these European differences. If you will not agree to unity, we must leave you and unite by ourselves".

Many will ask, and rightly ask, "What can the gathering at Lausanne do"? All epigrams must be used with caution. At the same time when we ask what we hope from this Conference. we shall do well to remember the epigram, "We are right in what we affirm; we are wrong in what we deny". The Conference will succeed in so far as it emphasizes the truths of which each Communion is the special guardian. In the religious life, isolation means impoverishment, and not enrichment. Just as in the political world nations have their own special aptitude and function, the lace makers and silk weavers in France, the engineers of mountain railways in Switzerland, the cotton weavers of Lancashire, with its moist atmosphere, and the cotton growers of the Southern States, with their wonderful sunshine, and each nation is best fulfilling its destiny when it realizes that we are members one of another, and that in the prosperity of each is the well-being of all. So it is in the Christian world. The Quaker with his sense of the inner life, the Methodist with consciousness of the personal assurance of the forgiveness of sins, the Baptist with his strong sense of individual liberty, and the Anglican with his keen historic sense, each has something to teach the other.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE COMMUNITY

"The Kingdom Come, Thy Will be done on earth"

Edited by the Reverend R. Cary Montague

CHRISTIANITY THROUGH A COW-BARN.

A fine piece of Social Service work is being done on a farm in Greensville County, Virginia, where the Jackson-Feild Home for Girls is functioning, and is caring for homeless girls in a home-like way. It is part of the policy of this Institution to keep the number of its inmates small enough to preserve the household atmosphere, and this is being achieved most admirably.

The Home was started nearly ten years ago from a very small beginning, but through the untiring energy and efforts of the Rev. Norman Marshall, backed by the sympathetic support of the Diocese of Southern Virginia, and Church workers in other parts of the country, property has been acquired and buildings erected as needed.

At present, however, one more building of a very essential character is necessary, an up-to-date dairy barn, not large, but modern and sanitary. Five hundred dollars has been contributed for this purpose upon condition that one thousand dollars more be raised from other sources. Here is an opportunity for some liberal-hearted Christian philanthropist to practice Christianity in a humble, but useful way, through a cow-barn.

COMMENTS ON CHILD TRAINING.

By Mary Evelyn Brydon, M. D.

Article XI.—The Ten Commandments.

(Continued.)

Third Commandment—Reverence (continued).

Last week we discussed the teaching of Reverence mainly from the standpoint of respect for God's name. We will now take up:

2. Respect for the Bible. Teach your child to respect the Bible as the written Word of God.

How will you do it? Although one or two exceptional children are on record as having been able to read as early as three years of age, few can read the Bible for themselves before the tenth year or before the end of the fourth grade. To young children, therefore, the Bible cannot be a living reality through personal experience. They must gradually be led to see the sacredness of God's written Word through the eyes of others.

Whose is this privilege of bringing the Bible before the child's spiritual vision for contemplation?

First: Yours.. John Ruskin, that great English essayist, said, "All I am I attribute to my mother's influence. For one hour every morning she required me to sit at her side and memorize portions of Scripture—even whole chapters". In his work I understand that 1,800 direct quotations from the Bible have been counted besides innumerable references. If these were stricken from his writing, Ruskin would doubtless lose his high place in the literary world.

It is highly desirable that your children memorize certain selected portions of Scripture, chosen with due regard to age and mental growth. It is also desirable that they become gradually familiar with the beautiful stories of the Bible. Various authors have selected, retold and printed in book form these stories, adopting them for the various age groups; your Sunday-school Superintendent or rector will advise you concerning the special ones approved by our Church. Take time to read and re-read these to your little child until he is thoroughly familiar with them. However, these re-told Bible stories can never take the place of the Bible version; therefore, take time to read the Bible itself to your child until he can read it with you.

Second: His sponsor in baptism—his god-parents. They promised three things in your child's name (see page 266 of Prayer Book). Have you ever given these sponsors the opportunity of fulfilling their promises?

Third: Family prayers. On pages 322 to 325 in the Prayer Book you will find the form authorized by the Church for Morning Family Prayer; and on pages 325 to 327 the form of Evening Family Prayer. Each takes just about four minutes. You might also send to your nearest diocesan office for pamphlets containing Family Prayers.

The strong men of our early history grew up under the daily influence of family prayer. Ever so often you hear a knell sounded: "Something is wrong with our generation. Women are losing their femininity by adopting mannish attitudes, hair cuts, habits like smoking, etc.; the young people losing high ideals and morals, etc." Can this state of affairs have any relation to the fact that family prayers have fallen into disuse? Our country needs leaders. Your child may be one of the leaders we are looking for. Our leaders must be spiritually-minded men. Will you defraud your child of coming into his heritage of leadership by keeping from him this means of getting acquainted with this great source of spiritual influence?

Recently I visited a community where I was told that not a single home of the eight or nine hundred in the community had family prayer. I heard many bitter complaints about the low moral standards among the young people there. Do you imagine that the parents' indifference to family prayer had anything to do with this? Would you not be willing to try anything to raise the moral standard in your community? If so, won't you try to encourage the family altar? What better opportunity will your child have for learning reverence for the written Word of God than to hear the day by day reading of the Scriptures in the midst of the daily family life?

Fourth: In Church; hearing the Scriptures read at the regular Church service. The way our Episcopal table of lessons is arranged, the entire Bible is covered in our Church services every year and the Psalms, if read daily, every month. For this reason alone do you not think it important for your child to attend service regularly?

May I urge you not to let him miss these four opportunities of becoming familiar with the Bible and thus acquiring reverence for God's Word?

3. Reverence for the Church as God's House. We have already discussed what the child gets by regular Church attendance:

(a) Opportunity to worship God Himself and also in the company of other believers.

(b) Opportunity to learn hymns, chants, etc., and to sing them.

(c) Opportunity to hear the Word of God read regularly and to join in the responsive readings.

These things any child may get in any Church. But he may take a most active part in all the services and yet fail to learn reverence for the Church. Reverence is more than an act, or acts; it is also an attitude displayed before, during, or after the act.

According to Webster, attitude is the posture or bearing a person assumes indicative of his feelings or opinion. It involves the voice, facial expression, method of speaking of acting. It has to do with courtesy and self-control.

If the President of the United States or the Governor of your state came into the hall or room where you and your child were seated, you would immediately rise with every one else until he became seated or passed on. It is an act of respect accorded to the highest dignitaries of our country. God is greater than any potentate. To Him we give all honor and reverence.. Therefore, our child must sit attentively and quietly for instruction; stand still for praise; kneel humbly in prayer. These bodily positions in the Episcopal Church indicate the reverence we feel for God in His House. These positions or outward expressions of reverence must be definitely taught to each child, if that child is to learn respect for God's House, and a respectful attitude or bearing, whenever attending Divine Service.

BOOK REVIEWS

KEEN THINKING AND CLEAR WRITING.

REALITIES AND SHAMS: By L. P. Jacks, Doran. New York.

This is a book of two hundred and fourteen large-type pages. It is a collection of seventeen essays, some of which have been printed in magazines. "They are not," says the author in his Foreword, "a haphazard collection, but have an underlying theme which those who have the patience to read them through will apprehend without difficulty." This is true, except that no reader will need patience to read them through. Dr. Jacks is one of the moderns who, without resort to claptrap, has the knack of holding attention. As most readers know, he is editor of the Hibbert Journal and author of a number of books.

The second essay gives the title to this collection, and may be taken as key to each. "All realities," says the author, "God included, act as though they had nothing to gain from the plaudits of the multitude. . . . The barest minimum of publicity is enough for the real; shams seek the maximum and are never satisfied." These sentences show at once how Dr. Jacks thinks about the craze for propaganda and publicity and what this craze betokens. "Most of the good deeds of the world," he says, "are done in secret, and the best deeds, and the best part of every deed, cannot be done otherwise. . . . The reality of things is inversely proportional to the noisiness of their self-announcement. Whatever comes bouncing in with a brass band in front of it . . . is pretty sure to be a sham."

In the sixth essay the reader will find incidentally an answer to the question why so many who can vote do not. "Men are beginning to ask," says Dr. Jacks, "whether voting, elections, parliaments, law courts, and police, whether national or international, are the last words when the common good is in question." In other words many of us are skeptical about politics. People will vote if they think that there is reality in the question involved. There are thousands of quiet folk in all regions who know reality from sham, and they know that much of our politics is sham. People do not need a law to make them vote. They need conviction that there is some reality in what they are to vote about.

The ninth of the essays, entitled "On Minding One's Own Business", is a very delightful bit of truth-telling. Speaking of a certain type of would-be moralists the author says, not cynically but seriously, that they "meant well, but did harm. . . . . Without intending it, they set up a small aristocracy, which called itself 'we'. . . . It is not wholesome for any man to think of himself as one of the 'we' who do good to others". All of us must agree with the following: "Assuredly, there is no form of social service comparable to that which one can render by doing his job to the very best of his ability."

Throughout this little book there are keen thoughts on a number of living issues, such, for example, as the relative value of Organization and Personality, the League of Nations, and the union of Christian Churches. One feels like multiplying quotations. But the whole book should be read. This essay or that may hit us wrong at first, and yet, as we read on and think, we shall have to confess and applaud the fact that its aim is truth, and that it strikes beneath the complacent surface.

J. H. D.

CHURCH AND PHILOSOPHY.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND PHILOSOPHY: By Father Vincent McNabb. The Macmillan Company, New York.

The little book of one hundred and twenty-two pages might not be noted in these columns but for three important points which the author makes in an admirable way. Father McNabb is a Roman Catholic, but this fact in no way interferes with the three points:

1. He shows with what wisdom the primitive Church, whenever it had need of Greek philosophy or terminology, absorbed and used Greek thought and even Greek words, such as Logos. He shows not only the Church's power of assimilation, but also her power of rejection. "This power of assimilation," he says, "might easily have grown septic, if it had not been joined with the almost greater power of rejection."

2. The second point makes clear how men have slipped up, who, like Thomas Jefferson, for example, have tried to eliminate from the Bible the supra-physical elements and retain only what they called the "simple ethical teaching" of Jesus. No such cleavage is possible. The moment you eliminate the supra-physical and the other-worldliness out of the teachings of the Gospel, that moment you eliminate Jesus Himself. "The truth is," says Father McNabb, "that nothing is more metaphysical than this so-called simple ethical teaching. If our readers doubt this let them spend an hour or two reading this simple ethical teaching of the Sermon on the Mount, for the purpose of finding all the ultra-physical assumptions that are its motive-power."

3. Why did Greek philosophy decay in Greece? One of Father McNabb's answers is worth our taking to heart: "The conquests of Alexander in the East by opening up new trade and trade-routes had made Greece the emporium of the world. The Greece that had loved Truth and Beauty as ends in life, now made commercial success the end of a life in which Truth and Beauty entered as an amusement or an adornment. . . . . When Greece sought, as St. Paul found that it sought, news rather than truth, it was as good as dead."

It will be understood that this notice makes no pretence of being a review or criticism of this all-too-brief little book. At the bottom of page 103 the reader's attention may be called to an apparent confusion in the application of the words "one thing" and "that thing" to the same thing. Surely the author does not mean that Bacon, Descartes and Kant held in common a respect for authority.

J. H. D.

THE WORD ABIDETH: By Thomas Tracy Walsh. Longmans, Green & Co., New York. Pp. xi. x 6i.

We welcome this little but valuable volume, and consider it as a contribution to the understanding and significance of the Bible.

The writer uses three ways to show the reality that is behind the sacred pages, e. g., Bible, Church and Reason. He shows how limited were the channels of Divine revelation. He asks this question, "The Word of God is infallible, but are all its channels of revelation inerrant"? p. 2. Then he goes on to show that the Word of God is in the Bible, "but it comes to us through human limitations". This is the language of the Bible itself. Practically every problem concerning the Bible is briefly discussed in these few pages. Quotations from able writers serve to make this book stimulating and interesting.

S. S. S.

THE MEANING AND VALUE OF MYSTICISM: By E. Herman. George H Doran Company, New York. Pp. xvi-397.

This is the work of a gifted woman who portrays the immediate communication of the soul with God in a very interesting and able manner. This is a book that speaks for itself, and will help the reader to find the yet undiscovered paths that will lead him to a close touch with the Infinite.

The writer displays a wide acquaintance with the best literature on the psychology of religion and traces the element of mysticism in practically every field related to religion.

No one can read this book and fail to feel the touch of an invisible hand coming out of the windows of its poetical language. The mystic is really a poet. The practical man is in danger of despondency, the mystic sees God and feels His presence everywhere. We greet this book as a contribution to the spiritual needs of a materialistic age.

S. S. S.

The Great Commission

MEXICANS IN BORDER STATES.

The southern parts of Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and California teem with a great Mexican population, recently estimated at 1,175,000. The number is increasing rapidly, since the quota law does not bar immigrants from the neighboring Republic, and also because Mexicans have many children. Most of these people are poor, often in extreme poverty. Many are migrant, but many are permanent. A large number are American citizens of the second, third or fourth generation, and in many colonies of these, the English language is unknown. There are also Spanish-speaking citizens of high cultural and social standing. The most appalling fact is that the vast majority are entirely unchurched.

Well-equipped missions for Mexicans with corps of Mexican pastors and workers, and with trained Spanish-speaking missionaries, nurses and social workers, are established all along the border by Presbyterians, Methodists and others, and have been successful in reaching the Mexicans. The Roman Catholic Church is doing something, but thus far in a very meagre manner. Our Episcopal Church has just one Mexican project, a clinic of modest equipment, begun three years ago in El Paso, with a fine and devoted Spanish-speaking nurse in charge. A few of our border parishes, and our Neighborhood House in Los Angeles, are trying also to do their part.

Nevertheless, our bishops and many of our clergy and laity of these border states realize keenly the need and the opportunity, and wish to find a way to meet it.

The Rev. Dr. Thomas Burgess, National Secretary of the Foreign-Born Americans Division, has gone to study the problem. He left on January 18, and after attending diocesan conventions in Fresno, Los Angeles and San Francisco, proceeds along the border in February and the first half of March. He expects to spend about a week in each of the following places and their vicinity, the principal centers of Mexican population: Los Angeles, Phoenix, Ariz., El Paso, Texas (Diocese of New Mexico), San Antonio and Brownsville, Texas. He will visit Houston, Bay City, San Benito, Waco and Dallas, all in Texas. He desires to find out what is the consensus of opinion of those of our Church people who live among the Mexicans, and to see whether he can help in the formation of some unified program by which the border dioceses and parishes can meet the need.

Even if the Roman Catholic Church should undertake to cover the field thoroughly, they could not reach the vast number of Mexicans who because of political conditions in Mexico have become hostile to the Church of their fathers. It seems obvious that our Church has a real approach and a duty towards these unchurched.

CONDITIONS IN CHINA.

A cable received March 7 from Bishop Huntington gives the following information:

"Anking (and that means in all probability the entire Province of Anwhei) has allied itself with the Southern Government. The change occurred without violence. All members of the mission staff are safe."

The following passages from recent letters from Bishop Graves will show how carefully he is watching matters and what precautions are taken for the safety of members of the mission staff:

"You understand already what the settled policy in this District is and so do all our people, but in case you have to answer inquiries from friends of our missionaries at home as to their safety I will repeat them again. I have sent instructions to every station, although I did not think that it was needful, since they knew what they ought to do already, that in the case of any trouble women and children were to be sent here at once and the men were to stay only so long as they could do so without danger to life. Under present circumstances we are in a different position from what we have ever been. Heretofore we have had some chance of protecting property. As things go now it would do no good whatever for a foreigner to stay on longer than he could do anything to ensure the safety of the Chinese Christians. These are not the direct objects of attack, though the Chinese clergy are and will be. The attitude of our Government gives us some concern because they seem to have no policy and not to recognize that the destruction which is being worked on other people is going to be worked upon them when a convenient time comes."

"Acting on the request of the United States Consul General, I gave instructions on January 26 that all women and children should be sent to Shanghai. The people at Wusih, Soochow, Zangzok and Yangchow acted at once. All ladies and children have been brought to Shanghai and the last one, Mrs. Standring, arrived January 31. As to the Roberts' family and Miss Hammond, the advice of the Consul at Nanking with which Roberts agrees, is that it is just as safe as Shanghai at present and there are some four hundred Americans gathered there. I have the greatest confidence in Consul Davis and in Mr. Roberts' judgment, so that for the present these ladies will remain at Nanking. We have been able to accommodate almost everybody in the families of our Mission at Jessfield and in town.

The men are standing by at their stations and have instructions repeated from those of our Consul-General as to the steps they are to take regarding property, mission and personal. Everybody is acting with perfect coolness and unless something unforeseen occurs friends and relatives at home need not feel any great anxiety.

As to Jessfield Compound, we have laid in coal and provisions, and in case of any popular uprising the ladies of St. Mary's would immediately come over here and an armed guard will be sent out with motorcars to take them into Shanghai. We have, therefore, done everything that it is possible to do under the circumstances both for life and property."

Bishop Graves prints the following prayer in the Shanghai Newsletter, which he says they are using in China and in which they hope their friends at home will unite:

"O God, Who art our hope and strength in this time of trouble, grant that we who know Thee, may lift our hearts to Thee and not be afraid. Defend Thy Church in the midst of danger and persecution. Grant us Thy Grace that we may think and do only such things as are right, and give us wisdom and patience.

Grant that those who know Thee may not refrain themselves from idle rage and vain imaginings, and so order themselves by the light that Thou hast given them, that this country may take its rightful place in the brotherhood of nations, to the welfare of its people and the maintenance of peace throughout the world. For Jesus Christ's sake. Amen."

KYOTO'S GENEROUS PLEDGE.

Bishop Nichols, of Kyoto, writes that at the first meeting of the Council of Advice of his own Diocese, which he attended immediately after his consecration in April, 1926, a desire was expressed that the American members of the mission staff join in making a gift to help the Church in the United States meet the budget of appropriations for work both in the United States and abroad. The time was too short to organize any general effort for 1926. Therefore steps were taken to insure action for 1927. The Bishop addressed a circular letter to each of the missionaries and now writes to the Department of Missions as follows:

"We have pledges amounting to $113, and other pledges totaling Yen 145. Will you please record this pledge from the District of Kyoto to be included in the total reported on January 15 to the National Council? The greater part of the money should be in your hands early in the new year, all of it by the middle of the year.

"I trust that the response from the Church as a whole will be generous, so that you will be able to carry out all the plans you have under consideration."

For several years no quota has been assigned by the National Council either to Japan or China, because in both these countries there are national Churches. Each of these national Churches has a Board of Missions of its own, carrying on mission work at home and abroad. The American missionaries, both in China and Japan, are constantly giving generously from their slender salaries to meet special needs constantly being brought to their notice by those among whom they work. They are also giving generously towards meeting the quotas assigned to each of the dioceses by the national boards of missions.

The action of the Kyoto missionaries is simply an extension of the splendid response made by all our missionaries and many of our Japanese friends in Japan in connection with the effort inaugurated at New Orleans to wipe out the deficit existing on December 31, 1926. Bishop McKim at that time pledged $1,000. The National Council has received from Japan on account of this pledge $2,411.57.

There are twenty-two American missionaries in the District of Kyoto.

MAGAZINES NEEDED.

The Chinese librarian at Boone Library, Wuchang, China, reports a falling off in the number of magazines received at the library, just now when the library is a center of new interest, with many new visitors. Bishop Gilman and the Church Periodical Club urge all donors and subscribers to renew and continue their efforts. Even if a few magazines are lost, which is unlikely, it will be better than for us to appear to be losing interest and failing our friends now in their special need.

Church Intelligence

Church Schools.

An important meeting of the Provincial Committee on the Education of Youth was recently held in Pittsburgh under the chairmanship of the Rev. Robert N. Meade, D. D. This is one of the four committees recently organized by the Commission on Religious Education of the Episcopal Church in the Province of Washington, which embraces the States of Delaware, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, and the District of Columbia.

At the last meeting of the Synod of the Province, which was held in Bethlehem, Pa., in October, 1926, it was voted that a feature of the Synod of 1927 would be the Boarding Schools conducted by the Church in various parts of the Province. The Committee on Youth is responsible for preliminary arrangements for this part of the Synod program. The Synod of 1927 will meet in Southwestern Virginia, probably at Roanoke, in October next.

If the plans adopted by the Committee on Youth are accepted by the Provincial Commission there will be assembled at Roanoke at the time of the Synod meeting, head masters, head mistresses and faculty members from the twenty-odd schools now established in the Province, which are under Church influence. The object is two-fold. First there is a desire to set before Church people the advantages of sending their children to Church Schools. It will be shown that the academic standard of Church Schools is quite as high, if not higher, than that of secular schools, while at the same time the atmosphere and influence, as well as the teaching itself, lays a firm basis for a Christian life in adult years.

The second object is to secure a more complete contact between the governing bodies of the schools and the governing bodies of the Province and of its constituent dioceses, so that each may know the facilities, the accomplishments and the needs of the other. Such contact today is merely nominal in many cases and is not effective in producing the greatest good for the Church as a whole, nor for the individual pupil.

The topics proposed for the joint meeting of the Synod and Woman's Auxiliary will be "What Has the Church Boarding School a right to expect of the Church"? and "What has the Church a right to expect of the Church Boarding School"? Several well-chosen speakers will present these subjects and there will be very general discussion. At the same time there will be a large exhibit of posters, pictures, catalogues and literature to awaken the Church public to the value of the schools. Publicity material of several kinds will be prepared for distribution.

Mr. William H. Church, headmaster of St. Alban's School, Washington, the President of the Association of Schools under Church Influence, is cooperating with the Commission, and will secure from the schools of the Province material of value as well as the presence of representatives of every school. Steps will be taken to carry the campaign for due recognition of Church Boarding Schools into every parish in the Province.

Social Service Work In Five Dioceses.

The Central Committee on Social Service of the five Dioceses in the State of Pennsylvania met recently in Harrisburg to prepare for the 1927 session of the legislature. Officers were reelected as follows: Chairman, the Rev. Paul S. Atkins; legal adviser, Clinton Rogers Woodruff; secretary, Dr. W. J. Middleton. The chairman was asked to continue as treasurer.

It was the opinion of the Committee that its emphasis should be placed upon the strengthening of existing legislation rather than the introduction of new measures. Approval was given to the work of the Children's Commission in their proposal to establish a Juvenile Court in each County under the control of a Central Commission.

The following measures were also endorsed: The bill to reduce the state tax on bequests for welfare, educational, and religious purposes from ten to two per cent.

A bill to legalize a bond issue not to exceed fifty million dollars in the period of ten years for the construction of new buildings at state-owned institutions for the care of feeble-minded, defective, and epileptic individuals.

Mothers' Assistance Fund bills so as to provide adequately for the care of 2,400 widows and 6,000 children now eligible but not yet cared for by reason of inadequate funds.

Amendments of the marriage laws to raise the age for marriage of girls to sixteen years and to make mandatory a lapse of five days between the application for a marriage license and the issue of the same, with provision made for special cases.

The bill for the establishment of a State Parole Commission.

Proposed Probation Legislation.

Revised laws as to women offenders.

The Committee requested permission to print the valuable paper on Social Legislature read before the Committee by Mr. Woodruff.

Bishop Darlington addressed the Committee upon the Social Service Work being done at state institutions in the Harrisburg Diocese and commended the work of the National Probation Association, in which he is deeply interested.

It was recommended to the Diocesan Departments that a committee of five persons be appointed to be known as a "Committee on Legislation", whose duty shall be to study and watch social legislation and act in conjunction with the Central Committee, and that each parish and mission, with the consent of its minister, appoint one person to perform similar duties.

The Secretary was requested to advise the several departments of contemplated changes in the Sunday observance laws.

Attending were the Rev. Messrs. Paul S. Atkins, of the Diocese of Harrisburg; Julius C. H. Sauber, and Mortimer S. Ashton, of the Diocese of Pittsburgh; Robert P. Kreitler and E. A. Heim, of Diocese of Bethlehem; Mr. Wood Stewart and Mr. Clinton Rogers Woodruff, of the Diocese of Pennsylvania; and Mr. George R. Bedinger, Secretary of the Public Charities Association of Pennsylvania.

A. A. H.

Japan Mission Staff Safe.

To the Relatives and Friends of Missionaries in Japan and Missionaries from Japan on Furlough in the United States:

The press accounts of the recent earthquake in the neighborhood of Kyoto and Osaka, Japan, have naturally caused much anxiety among the relatives and friends of our mission staff.

It is a pleasure to be able to say that we received a cable from Bishop Nichols on March 9, as follows:

"All are safe. Extent of damage caused by earthquake not known yet. Writing you by next mail."

John W. Wood.

Latest News From China.

A cable from Shanghai received March 12, informs us of the return to this country of the following missionaries:

From the District of Hankow—The Rev. R. E. Wood, on the Siberia Maru. Sailed from Shanghai March 10. Due in San Francisco April 1.

From the District of Shanghai—Miss Emma Cook, on the Siberia Maru. Sailed from Shanghai March 10. Due San Francisco April 1. Miss L. L. Moffatt, Mrs. R. H. McNulty and children, Deaconess T. L. Paine, Miss M. A. Hill, Miss G. L. Selzer, sailed on the Empress of Asia on March 12. Due Vancouver March 27.

Conditions on the middle Yangtze from Nanking to Anking seem, according to press dispatches, to be less favorable than hitherto.

No word has reached us concerning the alleged occupation of some of our mission buildings in Wuhu by representatives of the Cantonese government.

We have cabled Bishop Huntington for information.

John W. Wood.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop

Dr. Wood at Lynchburg.

On Quinquagesima Sunday the members of St. Paul's Church at Lynchburg, the Rev. Carleton Barnwell, rector, had as their guest Dr. John W. Wood, of New York, Executive Secretary of the Department of Missions and Church Extension in the National Council. Dr. Wood delivered an interesting address at the Morning Service, describing many of his personal experiences as a visitor in various foreign mission fields of the Church.

On the same morning the Sunday School held a dedication service at which the mite-boxes for the Lenten Offering were distributed. There was a large attendance and the music was furnished by the Junior Choir, with thirty-two members present. The rector explained briefly the method that would be followed in tabulating the amount of the offering each Sunday and a talk was made by Miss Anne Davis, sketching the fifty year history of the Lenten Offering. Dr. John W. Wood made an address to the children on "The Meaning of the Mite Box".

The Auxiliary at St. Peter's, Roanoke.

On Tuesday, March 1, the Woman's Auxiliary of St. Peter's Church,, Roanoke, where the Rev. Alfred C. Bussingham is Deacon-in-Charge, celebrated the second anniversary of its organization with an informal gathering at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bussingham.

Officers for the coming year were elected and short talks were made by Mrs. W. H. B. Loving, Mrs. W. E. Mingea, and Mrs. Robert C. Jett, Diocesan Officers of the Auxiliary, and Miss Julia Leache and Miss Mary E. Batchelder.

The Rev. Mr. Evans Leaves Waynesboro.

The Rev. Theodore Hubbard Evans, rector of St. John's Church at Waynesboro, has announced his resignation of that charge, effective April 17; he having accepted a call to serve on the staff of St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, Mass.

Mr. Evans was ordained to the priesthood June 5, 1925, when he accepted a call to be rector of St. John's, Waynesboro, and has remained there to the present; giving a part of his time also to the work at the Church of the Good Shepherd, a mission at Folly Mills in Augusta County.

Mr. Evans takes with him to Boston the affection and good wishes of a number of friends and associates in Southwestern Virginia.

The Rev. Mr. Boyd Goes to Martinsville.

The Rev. Beverley M. Boyd, who, since his ordination to the priesthood, has been the rector of St. Thomas' Church at Abingdon, having served there also during his diaconate, has resigned that charge, effective May 1, and accepted a call to Christ Church at Martinsville.

The Church at Abingdon has made splendid progress during Mr. Boyd's rectorate. Shortly after he went there the old frame church was burned. The congregation immediately set about replacing this and the new St. Thomas' Church, recently completed, is one of the handsomest of its size in Virginia. Mr. Boyd has been especially active in the civic affairs of Abingdon and in Boy Scout Work, has rendered excellent service in connection with the two colleges for young ladies and has also been acting as Athletics Director for the Public Schools.

The Church at Martinsville, of which he now takes charge, has been without a rector since the death, in December 1925, of the Rev. Wilfred E. Roach. The congregation there is a most loyal one, however, and, notwithstanding its difficulties, has held together and "carried on" as few have ever done under similar circumstances.

T. A. S.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

Laymen Meet.

A joint meeting of the Churchmen's League of Washington and the Laymen's Service Association of the Diocese of Washington was called for Tuesday evening, March 15, at Diocesan House. This meeting was called in response to a desire by many for a large gathering of Men of the Church, where opportunity for better fellowship might be provided and those directly responsible for such a plan are Mr. George A. King, president of the Churchman's League and Dr. W. Sinclair Bowen, president of the Laymen's Service Association. The speaker, invited for the occasion, was Mr. A. C. Houghton, president of the Men's Club of St. Stephen's Church.

Sunday School Institute.

The regular monthly meeting of the Sunday School Institute of the Diocese of Washington was held in the Parish Hall of St. John's Church, on Tuesday evening, March 15. The Rev. W. L. DeVries, chairman of the Department of Religious Education of the Diocese, presided and special speakers were the Rt. Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander, whose subject was "Our Family Book, What It Is and How to Use It", and the Rev. Gerald V. Barry, whose topic was "The Children's Corner".

Cathedral Music.

Organ recitals, which were formerly a regular part of the Washington Cathedral program of services and which were discontinued a few years ago, were resumed this year and the last of a series of five recitals was given in Bethlehem Chapel on Tuesday evening, March 8, with a large number of people in attendance. These recitals were played by pupils from the class of Edgar Priest, Cathedral organist, and were of high order. The programs were made up of the best of organ music and were presented in a masterful way. Mr. Priest's high standard of music always maintained at the Cathedral, was followed in this case and it is hoped that such a series of recitals will become again a regular part of the Cathedral program.

The Rev. Reginald Foster Hall has accepted a call to become rector of Zion Parish, of which the parish church is St. John's at Beltsville, Md. This parish was ministered to, for a number of years, by the Rev. Christopher I. La Roche, who was obliged to retire eventually on account of ill health. The parish then stood vacant for several years until taken in charge by the Rev. Robert Lee Lewis, who remained there two years, and who did a splendid work in building up the parish.

Mr. Hall is a son of the Rev. Percy Foster Hall, formerly assistant minister in Epiphany Parish, this city, and now the rector of St. Paul's Church, Alexandria. He has lately been the rector of the historic Pohick Church in Truro Parish, near Mount Vernon, Va.

Mr. Hall will be instituted as rector of Zion Parish by Bishop Rhinelander at a special service to be held in St. John's Church, Beltsville, March 20.

The Rev. Roland Cotton Smith, D. D., and the Rev. James W. Morris, D. D., are assisting in the work, both parochial and preaching at Epiphany Church, and are expected to be there for this purpose for some weeks to come.

The Rev. Edward S. Dunlap, Canon of Washington Cathedral and field Secretary of the National Cathedral Association has just returned from a six weeks' tour of Texas, where he has been lecturing and giving newspaper interviews in the interest of the latest developments of Washington Cathedral. He reports a cordial response and plans to take another tour in some other part of the country in the near future.

The Rev. Edmund H. Stevens, rector of the Church of Our Saviour, has been elected president of the Diocesan Pageant and Drama Society of the Church in Washington and recently called a meeting at Diocesan House of all persons interested in this field of activity. Though definite plans are still in the future, it is expected that the Society will be responsible for the production of a great pageant, probably in the open air, during the meeting of the General Convention of the Church in October, 1928.

A Volunteer Choir of people interested in singing Church music in the French language, has been formed for the use of services being held in French at St. John's Church, on Friday and Sunday afternoons in Lent. These services are being well attended.

M. M. W.

ERIE.

Rt. Rev. Jno. C. Ward, D. D., Bishop.

Forty Years of Service.

The Church of the Holy Trinity, Brookville, the Rev. R. S. Radcliffe, D. D., rector, was opened for worship April 30, 1888 and three years later consecrated by Bishop Whitehead.

During all these days with the "ups and downs" which come to every Mission Church, Mr. George W. Heber has remained as the faithful and efficient organist, first on the Reed organ, and then on the fine toned pipe organ which by his efforts united with the help of the congregation and other friends, was installed and blessed in 1904, and is still as good as ever.

In all these forty years of service Mr. Heber has remained at his post, without remuneration of any kind, although more than once urged by attractive offers to go elsewhere. Four Bishops have come and gone since these days, and nineteen different rectors have had charge, for brief periods, of this congregation.

The Rev. E. H. Edson, who was rector for three years before Dr. Radcliffe took charge in 1924, with the help of his people and the Diocese purchased a rectory. During this clergyman's pastorate, as well as during the present pastorate, this congregation has won a real place in the activities and respect of the town and diocese.

DELAWARE.

Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., Bishop.

Crusade Results Varied and Wide-Reaching.

The Bishops' Crusade in Delaware was successful beyond all expectation. The first week's activities centered in Wilmington, where Trinity Church was packed every night to hear Bishop Guerry's powerful presentation of the fundamentals of the Gospel. A laymen's committee of one hundred, under the direction of the Hon. Richard S. Rodney, delivered a congregation which represented every parish in the city and vicinity. The combined choirs of the city furnished the music the first and last evenings, and the individual choirs served on the intermediate evenings. The noon-day services in St. Andrew's under the direction of the Rev. Robert E. Gribbin, grew in attendance and interest to the last. Most of the addresses were made by Dr. W. Sinclair Bowen, a physician of Washington, D. C. Mrs. Charles H. Boynton, of New York, met with remarkable success in the afternoon conferences for women. Dr. H. M. Bowen, a brother of Dr. W. Sinclair Bowen, rendered excellent service. Several laymen's conferences during the latter part of the week were well attended.

In Kent and Sussex Counties the chief missioner was the Rev. W. J. Loaring Clark, D. D. Mr. Gribbin alternated with Dr. Clark in preaching. Mrs. Boynton conducted conferences in the chief towns in that part of the state. The local clergy had made excellent preparation under the general direction of the Rev. Joseph S. Hinks, rector of St. Peter's Church at Lewes.

The press throughout the state gave exceptional service in reporting the Crusade. The general committee under the chairmanship of the Rev. Charles W. Clash, left no detail uncared for and won high praise from the diocese. Bishop Cook was present throughout the two weeks and his counsel was at all times helpful and his presence inspiring.

The results of the Crusade in Delaware cannot be included under one head —they are varied and wide-reaching. New work has been organized in some parishes, and the emphasis on a deeper loyalty to Christ has met with good response. The plain talks of the Rev. Robert E. Gribbin and Dr. W. Sinclair Bowen on the practical side of religion have fallen on good ground. Many women have been helped by Mrs. Boynton's thorough and devout expositions of the aims of the Crusade.

The greatest result, perhaps, has been the deepened sense of the importance of personal evangelism.

Special Lenten Services at St. Andrew's, Wilmington.

The Rev. Richard W. Trapnell, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Wilmington, has arranged the following schedule of preachers for his special Lenten services in St. Andrew's; Ash Wednesday, the Rev. F. M. Kirkus, D. D., rector of Trinity Church, Wilmington; March 9, the Rev. Chas. W. Clash, rector of Immanuel Church, Wilmington; March 16, the Rev. George M. Toop, D. D., rector of the Church of the Holy Apostles, Philadelphia; March 23, the Rev. B. J. Rudderow, Vicar of Holy Trinity Memorial Chapel, Philadelphia; March 30, the Rev. R. B. Mathews, D. D., rector of St. Thomas' Church, Newark, Delaware; April 6, the Rev. Hugh W. S. Powers, rector of the Church of the Holy Nativity, Baltimore; April 13, the Rev. William D. Gould, rector of Christ Church, Cambridge, Maryland.

Bequest: The late Mrs. Leroy Harvey bequeathed to Trinity Parish, Wilmington, two legacies of one thousand dollars each; one to be added to the Old Swedes' Church Permanent Fund and the other to the endowment fund of Trinity Church.

Calvary Parish: Bishop Cook recently blessed the new rectory which has been erected for Calvary Parish, Wilmington. Under the care of the Rev. George C. Graham, D. D., this parish has moved from its former location at Third and Washington Streets, a site now surrounded by business houses and factories, to Fourth and Rodney Streets where many of the parishioners have easier access to the services. Here it is proposed to build a church to the memory of the late Bishop Coleman. A commodious parish house was erected a year ago and now the second unit in the plan has been completed.

Bishop Cook invited the clergy of Delaware on Shrove Tuesday for a celebration of the Holy Communion in his Chapel of the Good Shepherd at Bishopstead. Following the celebration a meditation was given by the Very Rev. George G. Bartlett, D. D., Dean of the Philadelphia Divinity School, on Our Lord's Commission to the Apostolic ministry.

Through the generosity of Mr. William duPont, the Rev. Robert Bell, Vicar of Old Swedes' Church, Wilmington, Delaware, will soon occupy a new vicarage presented by Mr. duPont. The new residence is situated at Sixteenth and Woodlawn, a desirable residence section of the city and yet accessible to the old Church. The house is in process of erection and will soon be ready for occupancy.

J. H. E.

MAINE.

Rt. Rev. Benj. Brewster, D. D., Bishop.

The Bishops' Crusade on Mount Desert Island.

The Bishops' Crusade, conducted by the Rt. Rev. Paul Jones, D. D., in this parish in its two churches of St. Mary's-by-the-Sea, Northeast Harbor, and St. Jude's, Seal Harbor (the Rev. A. L. Whittaker, rector), was what the Bishops have declared their desire that the Crusade might be, a deepening of consecration to the cause of our Lord. It was more than that; it was an intelligent discussion of the implications of Christian discipleship. There was a searching analysis of conventional or traditional human conduct; and, on the other hand, a logical drawing out to their legitimate conclusion of the principles of Jesus, His faith in His fellow men, His love for God and them, His humility and gentleness. The Bishops' addresses were filled with examples of trust by man in fellow-men that was met by trust and friendliness driving out antecedent hate and threatened violence. Not many heathen were reached, but "average Christians" were made more ready to go out and convert the heathen.

The Bishop also spoke to the student bodies of Gilman High School and Stetson Grammar School in Northeast Harbor. His greatest opportunity, measured by numbers, was given him by a record attendance at the Sunday Evening Club, which summer residents of Northeast Harbor will be glad to know has gone through its first winter season with a very considerable degree of its success during the past several summers. A congregation which filled St. Jude's, at which it was a joy to see the Congregational pastor and his entire flock, gave the Bishop a similar community opportunity in Seal Harbor.

Before coming to Seal and Northeast Harbors Bishop Jones held Crusade services in St. Saviour's Church, Bar Harbor, and in the Church of Our Father, Hull's Cove. From Northeast Harbor he goes to Southwest Harbor and Seal Cove in the western part of Mount Desert Island. Local conditions and the Bishop's other engagements postponed the Crusade on Mount Desert till the opening days of Lent, March 4 to March 11, inclusive. No Lent could be more auspiciously begun.

The Bishops' Crusade in Northeast Harbor and Seal Harbor will be continued by President Kenneth C. M. Sills, of Bowdoin College, on Sunday, March 20.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.

Bishops' Crusade Conference.

The program of the Bishop's Crusade Conference, to be held in St. John's Church, Warsaw, March 29-30, is as follows:

Tuesday, March 29.

11 A. M., Holy Communion, Bishop Brown.

11:45 A. M., address, Bishop Brown.

12:15 P. M., address, Hon. Rosewell Page.

1 P. M., luncheon served by the ladies of St. John's Church.

2:15 P. M., conferences—

(1) Conference for Women, leader, Miss L. T. Davis.

(2) Conference for Men, leader, the Rev. W. E. Cox.

Wednesday, March 30.

10:30 A. M., Holy Communion, Bishop Tucker.

11:15 A. M., address, Bishop Tucker.

11:45 A. M., address, Miss Sallie Dean.

12:15 P. M., conference for the whole group.

1 P. M., luncheon served by the ladies of Cople Parish.

2:15 P. M., conferences—

(1) Conference for Women, leader, Miss L. T. Davis.

(2) Conference for Men, leader, to be selected.

The general purpose of the addresses in the morning is to set forth the necessity for and the spirit of the Crusade. The afternoon conferences, the one for women, and the other for clergy and laymen, will be given to a discussion of practical plans that may be used in the parish missions.

Will the rectors please notify the Rev. F. D. Goodwin as to the number that may be expected from their several parishes.

WESTERN MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. J. N. McCormick, D. D., Bishop.

Summer Conference Planned.

The Diocese of Western Michigan is laying plans for a Summer Conference to be held in the City of Kalamazoo, July 2 to 9, inclusive. This is the first time the diocese has attempted a conference of its own, and it is looking forward with real pleasure and anticipation to the event.

The faculty, as yet, has not been announced, but from all indications will be one capable of presenting the Church's work.

The Rev. L. B. Whittemore, of Grace Church, Grand Rapids, is Chairman of the General Committee with Miss Helen R. Stevens, Directress of Religious Education of St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral, Grand Rapids, and the Rev. James H. Bishop, rector of St. Luke's Church, Kalamazoo, as his able assistants. The Rt. Rev. John N. McCormick, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, will act as Chaplain of the Conference. The Rev. Wm. G. Studwell, of Battle Creek, is serving as Manager of Publicity.

The Conference will be open to all who are interested in the immediate vicinity and will welcome most cordially the young people of the Church.

W. G. S.

EAST CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop.

Bishops' Crusade Fulfills Every Expectation.

The Bishops' Crusade in East Carolina has fulfilled every expectation. From January 23 to 28, inclusive, the Rt. Rev. Theodore DuB. Bratton, D. D., Bishop of Mississippi, and the Rev. Pembroke W. Reed, of Richmond, Va., conducted the Crusade mass meeting in St. James' Church, Wilmington, N. C. From January 30 to February 4, inclusive, the Rev. H. F. Kloman, of Cumberland, and the Rev. Mr. Reed, conducted the mass meeting in Christ Church, Elizabeth City. Beginning February 6, and ending the eleventh, the Rt. Rev. Frederick Foote Johnson, D. D., Bishop of Missouri, and the Rev. Mr. Kloman, conducted the mass meeting in St. Peter's Church, Washington, N. C. For a two weeks' period, beginning February 14, the clergy of the diocese conducted a week's mission in every parish and mission in the diocese. Much interest and large congregations were reported in every place. An intensive follow-up period will begin at once.

To Build Parish House in Memory of Bishop Strange.

At a special meeting of the vestry and wardens of St. Paul's Church, Wilmington, February 6, 1927, resolutions, accepting a gift of $30,000 in the name of the Church, and for the benefit of the $60,000 parish house to be erected as a memorial to the late Rt. Rev. Robert Strange, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of East Carolina, from 1904 to 1914, were adopted. The name of the donor was withheld. The parish house will be the first unit of an elaborate plant. It will be modern in every respect, and will be adequate to handle all the activities of the Church. It will be of stucco construction, with stone trimmings. According to the plans, the building will have an auditorium with seating capacity of four hundred and a large gymnasium in the basement. Also there will be an administration room, assembly rooms for the various departments, and twenty class rooms equipped with modern furniture for the Sunday-school classes. It will serve a long-felt need of the congregation, and will enable the church to broaden considerably. The Rev. Alexander Miller is rector.

Other Items of Interest.

Bishop Darst and his family have returned to Wilmington, N. C., from Washington, D. C., and the Bishop will continue his work as Chairman of the National Commission on Evangelism, with headquarters in No. 506 Southern Building, Wilmington, N. C.

The three DuBose Memorial Training School students, Messrs. William H. R. Jackson, William A. Smith and Frederick J. Drew, who have been serving in East Carolina during their vacation, return to their studies the middle of March. All these young men have done fine work.

St. Thomas' Church, Oriental, has been repaired and reopened for service, for the first time since it was struck by lightning some years ago. An altar has been presented by Grace Church, Trenton. A large Bible was given by Bishop Stearly, of the Diocese of Newark, and a supply of Prayer Books secured from the New York Bible and Prayer Book Society.

The Woman's Auxiliary recently purchased and installed two chancel chairs in St. Mark's Mission, Grifton, N. C. They will also present for the chancel a set of new altar frontals by Easter.

Miss Venetia Cox, whose home is in Winterville, N. C., and is East Carolina's missionary to China, is returning home on furlough. She is traveling the Suez Canal route, visiting the Holy Land and other points of interest; and expects to be home some time during the spring.

G. F. C.

LEXINGTON.

Rt. Rev. L. W. Burton. D. D., Bishop.

Special Meeting of the Council.

A special meeting of the Council for the election of a Bishop Coadjutor has been called for Tuesday, May 10, and will be held in Trinity Church, Covington, the Rev. James D. Gibson, rector.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D. Bishop.

Further Plans For the Church Building at State College.

The Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., the Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D., and the Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., and the local members of the St. Andrew's Building Committee, composed of Professors A. H. Espenshade, Elton D. Walker and Warren B. Mack, and the Rev. E. M. Frear, met at State College recently to discuss the building program and advise about the expenditure of the fund which has been provided by Churchmen throughout the state during the past year. Prof. R. I. Webber, who has a large building experience, and Bishop Talbot's personal secretary, Mr. Benedict, were also present.

It was voted to approve the latest plans of the architects, which include a tower and transepts, estimated to cost, furnished in all respects except the organ, $90,000. They voted to set aside in trust the sum of $20,000, the income of which should be used to defray current expenses incident to the enlarged physical equipment. They voted to recommend that the Interdiocesan Building Committee proceed to secure detailed drawings and specifications and proceed with the work of building as quickly as possible.

A. A. H.

A helpful Mission was held in Trinity Church, Tyrone, the Rev. F. T. Cady, rector, from February 27 to March 6, by the Rev. E. V. Andrews, under the auspices of the American Health Society of Cleveland, Ohio.

A large number heard his lectures during the week, and the Church was crowded to capacity on Sunday to hear his final message.

MINNESOTA.

Rt. Rev. F. A. McElwain, D. D., Bishop.

Memorial to Pioneer Minnesota Physician.

As a memorial to the late Samuel D. Flagg, M. D., a pioneer physician of Minnesota and a life-long Churchman, his widow has presented a handsome pair of eucharistic candlesticks to St. Andrew's Church, South St. Paul, of which the Rev. Walter B. Keiter, Executive Secretary of the Diocese, is minister-in-charge.

The candlesticks were blessed and presented on Thursday, March 10, at Evening Prayer in St. Andrew's Church by the Rev. Frederick D. Butler, rector of the Church of St. John the Evangelist, St. Paul, of which Mrs. Flagg is a communicant.

Mrs. Flagg, the donor of this memorial, is a daughter of the Rev. Robert Hammond Cotton, retired, who was ordained to the ministry in the Church of England a half a century ago, and who came to Minnesota as a missionary thirty-seven years ago.

EASTERN OREGON.

Rt. Rev. Wm. P. Remington, D. D., Bishop

St. Pauls—The Dalles—The purchase of a lot for a rectory has been completed and plans for the new building are now underway.

St. Mark's, Hood River: As a direct result of inspiration received at the Convocation a new chapter of the Young People's Fellowship has been formed under the direction of Mr. R. B. Bennett.

St. Paul's, Klamath Falls: Two new organizations have been formed recently, a Boy Scout Troop under the direction of Mr. Frank Sexton, and also a chapter of the Young People's Fellowship. Mr. Heber Radcliffe received his license as a parochial lay reader at the Bishop's Visitation.

P.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Interdenominational Lenten Services.

A remarkable series of interdenominational Lenten services has been held in Brooklyn this past week. It was under the auspices of the Bedford Ministers' Association, which consists of eighteen ministers of various bodies, having pastorates in the "Bedford section" of Brooklyn. The Association includes three of our clergy. The value of Lenten observance having become evident to all these men, an effort for a series of "United Lenten Services" was determined on, and the dates, places and speakers were well advertised. The first was held on Sunday night, March 6, in Kismet Temple, which seats 2,400 people. The Rev. S. Parkes

(Continued on Page 22.)

Family Department

MARCH.

1. Tuesday.
2. Ash Wednesday.
6. First Sunday in Lent.
9, 11, 12. Ember Days.
13. Second Sunday in Lent.
20. Third Sunday in Lent.
25. Friday. Annunciation B. V. M.
27. Fourth Sunday in Lent.
31. Thursday.

Collect for Third Sunday in Lent.

We beseech Thee, Almighty God, look upon the hearty desires of Thy humble servants, and stretch forth the right hand of Thy Majesty, to be our defence against all our enemies, through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Collect for Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin Mary.

We beseech Thee, O Lord, pour Thy grace into our hearts; that, as we have known the incarnation of Thy son Jesus Christ by the message of an angel, so by His passion we may be brought unto the glory of His resurrection, through the same Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

For the Southern Churchman.

Lord, For the Little Things I Love Thee!

Mary Laird Tucker.

Lord, for the little things I love Thee most!
Our human minds can only dimly grasp
The vastness and the splendor of a God
Who fashions worlds, and guides our destinies,
And rules us as a monarch from His throne.
But all the little tender, thoughtful things—
The woodland ways that Thou hast made so sweet.
And packed with such surprises and delights.
As only one who loved the woods could do;
And those stern, barren paths from which we shrink,
Which, as we tread them, blossom into flowers
Undreamed of, that Thy love had planted there—
These make us know the Fatherhood of God—
The perfect Love, that holds each child most dear,
And calls each one by name. And knowing this,
Our hearts leap forth to Thine, in glad response.

The Talented Failure.

When Jesus in His parable of the talents commends the faithfulness of the man with five talents and rebukes the indecision and slothfulness of the man with one talent He is not suggesting that it is easier for a gifted man to live nobly than it is for a man with meagre gifts. It seems indeed that the man with five talents who by dint of discipline and application doubled his capital deserves more commendation than the man with one talent would have deserved had the latter also increased his. The greater our gifts the greater are our responsibilities and difficulties. The stronger the gifts of genius, the more furious seem to be the pent up forces of temptation. So it is that genius does not always bring a blessing, but oftimes tragedy.

Outstanding cleverness often slides into a stupid weakness of character, just as strong virtues have a tendency to slide into evil. How often does generosity become extravagance, humility become obsequiousness, gentleness become cowardice, and honest ambition become conceit! It seems that often where there is a Dr. Jekyl, there is a Mr. Hyde in concealment somewhere near. So genius and foolishness are often linked together. Native ability is sometimes a stranger to stability of character and a steady devotion to high purpose. Perhaps it is from a pride that hides from them the pitfalls of life, and makes them confident in their own self-sufficiency, perhaps it is from the inevitable reaction from moments of great exaltation, perhaps it is because their genius sees no need of seeking God and His influence upon them; from whatever cause many men whose natural gifts should have commanded a triumph in steadiness and brilliance of character have achieved in matters of chief importance only defeat and failure.

A mediocrity that goes steadily plodding on achieves a nobler character than a genius that knows moments of greatness and hours of indecision and drifting. Coleridge, gifted as are few men, knew not the stabilizing effect of high purpose and continuous application. Robert Burns discovered the cause of his tragedy in his lack of an absorbing and persistent aim. "The great misfortune of my life," he said, "was to want an aim. I had early felt some stirrings of ambition, but they were the blind gropings of Homer's Cyclops round the walls of his cave". Byron, of massive intellect, lacked the self-discipline and stability that would have saved him from disaster. And as he looked back upon the grave blunders of his life, Byron wrote, "And thus, untaught in youth my heart to tame, my springs of life were poisoned". The Hamlets whose genius is not allied with discipline, decision, steady application and high purpose, leave life unconquered because the self runs wild.

In the Old Testament the two outstanding examples of gifted men whose gifts were not consecrated to lofty purpose, and whose characters were not ennobled by a close comradeship with God are Absalom and Saul. Absalom was one of those rare individuals who are born with silver spoons in their mouths. The son of a king, he had every opportunity of education and training that his times afforded. With his striking presence and hypnotic personality he possessed strong qualities of leadership. But he was reckless, impulsive, vain. He never learned to train his wayward desires, or to discipline his genius. Because some things were easy for him he never realized the need of steady and persistent application to a lofty purpose that required effort to accomplish. His own accomplishments were so great that he felt no need of testing his life by his loyalty to God. And so accustomed to follow the bent of the moment's capricious inclination, yielding to whatever impulse had the ascendancy over him at the time, his youth so full of promise yielded nothing but distress and failure.

Saul, the first of Israel's Kings, was another man of many talents who lacked discipline, self-control and consecration to noble aims. Consequently he is another genius who achieved little and suffered much. Saul was a handsome man of great strength and courage. Fearless in battle, great in organization, he was a gifted leader of men. But Saul's genius was not the genius of a patience that directs concentrated attention upon the same problem day after day and year after year. Like Absalom he followed the moment's impulse, whether it were rash or sensible.

In the New Testament, Judas Iscariot is a notable example of one whose talents did not save him from failure and tragedy. That he had capacity for character and leadership is demonstrated by his choice as an apostle. That he had genius for business and organization is shown by his selection as apostolic treasurer. Yet his life ended in shame and suicide. It appears that he was one of those men of whom Bishop Butler speaks, whose constant theorizing upon virtue hardens the mind against the good that is pictured until at last is formed the habit of insensibility to all moral considerations. Like Absalom and Saul, Judas failed to consecrate his talents to the will of God and his unstable nature ruined him.

Failure or success, then, does not depend upon the number of our gifts, but the way in which we use them and the character which we hew out, within ourselves. To quote Ramsay Macdonald, the life that is a success is "the life that keeps to the high seas and the deep waters, and that has a steady compass and a chart and a plan; the life that is disciplined and is obedient to the higher things; the life that is steered steadily and consistently towards the harbour that is to receive it at the close of day".—Arnold N. Hoath, in Canadian Churchman.

For the Southern Churchman.

The Baptist Church.

Rev. T. F. Opie, D. D.

Two distinguishing characteristics mark this branch of the Christian Church. They are baptism by immersion and close communion. While the latter may have tended to narrow this denomination's scope, in the opinion of some, and doubtless did cause the breach which resulted in the formation of the Disciples' or "Christian" Church, under Mr. Campbell's leadership—the latter (immersion) as a distinctive practice has appealed with great force to many who believe this to be the Scriptural and only valid form of inducting into the Church of Jesus Christ.

The growth of this denomination in America has been phenominal, and in some sections of the nation, most notably in parts of the South, it leads in popular favor.

In respect to education the Baptists have in late years had what might be termed a renaissance—and both popular and theological learning have been given great impetus. Some of the most astute scholars among American theologians and educational leaders generally, are of this faith. They have contributed notably to modern theological literature and more generally to the cause of progressive scholarship.

Possibly no Church of modern times, not accepting even the Congregation, has more parochial independence than has this branch of Christ's Church. No individual (pope, bishop or superintendent) and no ecclesiastical organization or group (save the congregation) directs the separate congregations and the several churches of the Baptist denomination. Each church has its own autonomy and each regulates its own household affairs. The advantages of this system are apparent, though it also has its disadvantages, sometimes resulting in the open breach of groups or congregations, as can be attested to by certain pastors and leaders in this Church.

The churches are organized into associations and conventions, but these do not apparently assay to rule or to legislate for the several congregations—which are under the direction of the pastor and deacons.

This Church is divided into many bodies, such as the Primitive, the Missionary, the Hard-shell Baptists, etc., all of which, however, fall into the category of the Baptist Church. There is a distinctive line of cleavage between Northern and Southern Baptists, which dates back to unpleasant conditions arising out of the War Between the States and the status of the Negro question. These two churches are separate and distinct, but negotiations are pending looking to the ultimate reunion of the Northern and the Southern Baptist Associations or Conventions.

Through their excellent Sunday Schools and the famed Baptist Young People's Union, this denomination has developed a singularly successful work among the juvenile. Probably no Church makes better provision for the training of its young people in the things of its own denomination and the Bible generally, than does this Church. The B. Y. P. U. trains young men and young women for missionary and Sunday-school activities, and is a recruiting ground for the sacred ministry, as many men come up to the pastorate from the Young People's Union.

The wisdom, tolerance and the denominational solidarity of this Church have been put to the test in the conflict between the Liberals or Modernists on the one hand and the Fundamentalists on the other. The former polled a majority vote and a split in the Northern Convention was averted, much to the gratification of all Christians who hope for the ultimate unity of the whole fabric of Christianity.

This great body of Christian believers will be represented officially at the World Conference on Faith and Order and its representatives have it in their power to do much towards the creation of fellowship and harmony on the part of those who name the name of Christ.

Kindly Construction.

Minerva Hunter.

"How do you like your new tenants?" Mrs. Driver asked as she and Mrs. Yates sat in the rose arbor for their "weekly darn and visit".

"There are four in the family: the father, mother and the twin daughters," Mrs. Yates replied.

A smile twinkled in Mrs. Driver's eyes. "I understand," she murmured.

Mrs. Yates looked up inquiringly.

"You have told me something like that three times now; it is impossible that you have learned nothing more. What you have found out is not favorable and you are politely keeping it secret."

"S-s-sh," cautioned Mrs. Yates.

Around the house came little Anne Rogers from across the street. She carried her much-loved puppy in her arms. "Let's play on this side of the house where it is shady," she said.

"We had better not," one of the twins quavered, "she might not like it."

"Who might not like it?" asked Anne.

"Mrs. Yates. She might get mad."

Mrs. Yates gave Mrs. Driver a look that said plainly, "Just listen and your question will be answered".

"No, indeed!" Anne's voice piped eagerly, "Mrs. Yates will not mind. She likes to have the children play here." She paused a moment and laughed. "Why I never saw Mrs. Yates the least bit mad. I do not believe she ever would get mad. It would be rude, you know."

"Mother gets—" one of the twins began, thought better of the confession and stopped.

Anne petted her puppy and he began gnawing her fingers. "What a bad little dog!" one of the twins exclaimed. "He is biting you!"

"He is cutting his teeth," Anne explained, "and likes to chew on things just as a baby does when it is cutting teeth."

Cautiously one of the twins reached a finger toward the puppy which awkwardly reached his paw toward her. "He is slapping at me!" the twin exclaimed.

"Maybe he wants to shake hands," Anne suggested. "I have been trying to teach him, though mother says he is rather young to learn tricks."

Just then a car drove up before Anne's house. "There's Uncle Herbert," she said. "I must go home and see him."

"Yes," a twin agreed, "he might get mad if you didn't."

Anne had started running, but she stopped suddenly and walked back slowly. "See here," she explained, looking solemnly at the twins, "no one around here ever gets mad." Then as Uncle Herbert's horn called a joyous "Honk, honk, honk", she ran home.

The twins stood in silence watching Anne and her uncle mount the steps together, then they looked a long time at each other.

"'No one around here ever gets mad'," said one as though she were repeating a lesson.

"I am so glad," said the other. "Let's go and tell Mother. I am sure she does not know."

Mrs. Driver smiled ruefully. "That is the secret: 'Mother does not know'."

"She is learning," Mrs. Yates amended hopefully. "Anne was over there a little while yesterday and I heard her giving just such replies as she gave today. I am sure she set Mrs. Brunson thinking for she was not nearly so shrill and fault-finding with the children the rest of the day.

"I am glad Anne has unconsciously taken the role of reformer. Her habit of putting a kindly construction on all that is said and done will help more than anything."

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of Oil and Water.

I sojourned in an House where they used Kerosene Lamps, or rather they used One Lamp and that not very often.

And on the night when I was there, they essayed to light it, but it would not burn. For there was but an inch of Oil in the bottom, and the Wick was short. And I think if the Wick had been Long there would have been no Oil at all, for they had already burned it down as far as the Wick would reach.

And they said, It is too bad that we have no more Oil and no longer wick.

But it happened that I wanted to write, and I needed a Light. Therefore I said, Bring me some Water.

And I unscrewed the top part of the Lamp, And I pored in some water. And I lighted the Wick and it Burned.

And they were amazed, and said, We never knew before that Water would burn in a Coal Oil Lamp.

Now the Lamp held out to Burn as long as I needed it, and I said unto them, It hath been all right for tonight, but I would Venture to Suggest that if ye are likely to need a Lamp again, ye get some more Oil.

And they said, Wherefore should we buy Oil when we have Water in the Well?

And I explained unto them, that while water cannot be burned in a lamp, still may it be used to raise the level of the Oil so that it will reach the Wick, because the Oil doth rise to the top.

Now the lamp of my life hath had much of rich blessing poured into it, and if I have not kept it Trimmed and Brightly Burning it hath not often been for lack of Oil. Yet there have and blessings that I could have wished, been times when I have lacked the joys and the lamp burned low. But I have learned that even in such case the matter may not be hopeless. There have been times when the waters of disappointment or even of sorrow, if they could not of themselves give light, were able to lift the level of the Oil of Felicity to where the Wick could reach it. And sometimes it hath seemed to me that I gained a Clear Light on some dark matters when I was thus constrained to use my lamp.

Water is not Oil, and Sorrow is not Joy, and Disappointment is not the pleasure of Attainment and Possession. Yet he is much mistaken who supposeth that these untoward things may not have their Profitable uses, and even help to keep the Lamp from Going Out. —Exchange.

At the Threshold.

In childhood's pride I said to Thee,
O Thou, who mad'st me of Thy breath,
Speak, Master, and reveal to me
Thine inmost laws of life and death.

Give me to drink each joy and pain
Which Thy eternal hand can mete,
For my insatiate soul would drain
Of earth's most bitter cup, or sweet.

Spare me no bliss, no pang of strife,
Withhold no gift or grief I crave,
The intricate lore of love and life
And subtle knowledge of the grave.

Lord, Thou didst answer clear:
"Child, I will hearken to thy prayer
And thy unconquered soul shall know
Each poignant rapture and despair.

So shall thy chastened spirit yearn
From its blind prayer to be released
And, spent and pardoned, sue to learn
The simple secrets of My peace.

I, bending from my sevenfold height,
Shall teach thee of My quickening grace,
Life is a prism of My light
And death the shadow of My Face".

—By Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, President of The Indian National Congress, 1925.

For the Young Folks

"You Who Are Young."

You who are young, it is you, it is you
Who must make the dreams of the world come true.

You who are young have a world to build,
The future shall be what you have willed.

Learn and practice, plan and do;
Hold to a vision and shape it true;
And you'll find at last that a dream or two
Because of you, because of you,
Has out of the mist and the dark, come true!

Heed what you build, with hand and tongue
You who are young, you who are young!

—Mary Carolyn Davies.

For the Southern Churchman.

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

Jesus As A Teacher.

M. L. G.

"Learn of Me," said Jesus to His friends. They did try to learn, and He was a patient Teacher, not giving lessons too hard or long, explaining over and over, and telling wonderful stories to illustrate His teaching. The strange thing about His lessons is that they could be learned by little children and untrained minds of the poor and sick; yet they have never been exhausted nor fully acted upon.

Not from Jesus have men learned war. He never taught that the strong man is the one that bends all others to his will. He never taught that one may do wrong in a good cause, or balance his sin by good deeds. No; His lessons were all of love; love going out to the least, and the farthest; spending itself without thought of gain; saving its life by losing it. Those lessons fell on cold hearts sometimes. They do even now. But as the spring comes to thaw and melt and give life to the earth frozen by wintry cold, so the Spirit can melt our hard hearts, and make them blossom into love.

Self-denial this means; losing the self ish thought, the mean wish, is no plea- ure; it is, indeed, a kind of dying. But it is dying into life, as we see the earth giving up protecting ice and snow and, by no power of her own, but by the warm sun's rays and the southern wind, rising to new life.

As Jesus taught this lesson to His friends long ago, so we try to learn it anew each Lent. He taught it most of all in His own life of sacrifice, His giving up Himself to death for us, and His rising again in newness of life. Let us learn of Him as did His disciples in Galilee knowing that following His teaching we shall find rest to our souls.

How Bob Found "Ibbef".

It was the very first day of school. aThe boys and girls in Miss Allen's room were working busily.

"Frances Deane has the very neatest arithmetic paper of all," said Miss Allen, "so she may choose some one to go with her and take this message to the high school building," and she handed an envelope to Frances.

All the girls looked at Frances, each one hoping she might be the one to go for the walk up the shady street. Frances hesitated. She looked across the aisle at Nancy Lee. Nancy was the new, little girl who had just moved into the brown house right across the street from the schoolhouse.

It must be hard, Frances thought, to be a new little girl and not know any one.

"If you please, Miss Allen, I will choose Nancy Lee," said Frances.

Nancy was surprised, and pleased, too. She was lonely in this strange town, and the new school, where she did not know any one at all, had made her feet lonelier yet. When Frances chose her it made her feel a little bit more as though she belonged.

The two girls tip-toed out the side door.

A moment later a toddling boy with yellow hair and yellow rompers, pink cheeks and big brown eyes, came in at the front door. Miss Allen went quickly down the aisle to meet him.

"Bob want Ibbef," lisped the child.

"Why you blessed baby," said Miss Allen, "tell me again what it is that you want."

"Want Ibbef, if 'oo pese," said Bob with a happy smile, for he was sure the lady would give him what he wanted now that he had remembered to say please.

"Who is he, children?" asked Miss Allen, but no one knew.

"Come sit by me, dear, till we can find Ibbef," Miss Allen suggested, leading him towards her desk.

The baby cuddled down contentedly beside her chair and was soon hunting busily for cats in the reading book.

"Do you know what ibbef means?" Miss Allen asked the children, but no one could imagine.

Just then Frances and Nancy Lee came running in looking dreadfully frightened. Nancy's face was white, and Frances looked ready to cry.

"Oh, Miss Allen, Nancy's baby brother is lost, and may we help to hunt for him?" she asked, and Nancy added, "Mother needs me, Miss Allen, brother is only two and a half years old".

At the sound of Nancy's voice, Master Bob scrambled to his feet, "Ibbef", he squeaked gleefully.

"Why, Bob Lee, how did you ever get here?" and Nancy caught her little brother into her arms.

"Come to find Ibbef," chanted the baby happily, "Did find Ibbef".

Nancy ran quickly to the door and her mother seeing the baby held high in her arms came quickly across the street to get him.

"Say good-bye to Bob, children," said Miss Allen.

"Good-bye, Bob," called the children softly.

"Bye," answered Bob, throwing a kiss to them all.

"But why," asked Frances, "why does Bob call you 'Ibbef' when your name is Nancy?"

Nancy laughed merrily. "My name is Nancy Elizabeth Lee," she told them, "and I have always been called Elizabeth before. But I like Nancy so much better that Mother said I might say that was my name, when we moved to a new place. But Bob still calls me Elizabeth, or tries to, though he cannot say it very plainly."

They all laughed together then, and some way after that, Nancy could not feel lonely any more, for all the children knew her now, and she felt sure that she was going to love them every one.—Herald and Presbytery.

For the Southern Churchman.

An Able Alligator.

Louis Tucker.

Once upon a time there was an able and intelligent alligator who lived in Fowl River at the back of Mon Louis Island. His principal business was catching catfish, but he did a good many other things, like swimming from Dauphin Island to Portersville and back or lying out on the softest Fowl River sandbank in the hot sun. He had improved his shining tail for twenty years and was a sizeable reptile; and William Clarke and Frank Parker came along and shot him.

They shot him on the head and he promptly turned over on his back and floated white underside up, with his paws stuck stiffly in the air like dead hands. William and Frank were almost sorry they had shot him, he looked so pitiful. Still, since they had him, they decided to take him home and skin him; so they pulled him and hauled him into the boat, where his head reached well toward the bows while the tip of his tail touched the stern-sheets. And when they had him well stored away, they anchored the boat and began fishing.

Now the alligator was not dead. The bullet had dislocated his ideas and sprained his brain, but it had glanced from his memory and done no real harm. So that when he came to himself and found that he was in a boat he was just as angry about it as if he had never been shot at all. He stood up on all four of his little, short legs and began to hiss like a goose; and the midships thwart of the boat, which is the bench where the rower sits, came up with him. William Clarke was in the stern and Frank Parker in the bow, and they both stood up on the seats and were very much afraid. The Winchester rifle was tied to the side of the boat in the middle. Neither one could reach it on account of the alligator; and so they both stayed quite still to see what he would do.

Pretty soon he started for Frank and William Clarke pulled him back by the tail. He lashed his tail so hard that it threw William Clarke overboard, and he had to swim ashore and was out of the matter altogether. Then he started for Frank again, and Frank fought him off with the fishing-pole; but when the pole broke, Frank went overboard and swam ashore, too. As for the alligator, he lay quiet a few moments and chewed the fishing-pole; and then he got angry.

You see, in chasing Frank, he had got his nose into the boat's forepeak under the foresheets, so that it got caught under the little bench in the front of the boat, and when he tried to lift his head, he could not. This, of course, made him think of traps and scared him; so he slapped around with his tail and knocked the lunch-basket into the air. Then he hissed like a flock of geese and rolled to one side, so that the boat shipped water and nearly turned over, but not quite. The water made him hopeful, so he began to wag his tail and paddle as if he were trying to swim though it was only an inch deep in the boat. First, the stern-sheets flew into the air. Then, the bottom-boards came up in pieces. Then, the midships thwart flew overboard and, then, the bottom and sides came apart so quickly that it looked as if the whole boat blew up in a smother of white foam.

The able alligator swam off to a sandbank and crawled out and lay in the hot sun; and Frank Parker and William Clarke had to walk home and the mosquitoes nearly ate them up before they got there. The next morning, very, very early, they got another boat and went back to get the wreck. They found most of the pieces of boat fastened to the anchor rope and floating, and tied to the side, where it belonged, was the Winchester rifle. On the way back, they passed the able alligator, so they shot him again; and this time they kept on shooting until there were no more bullets and then they skinned him and cut his head off to be quite sure he was quite dead. So Frank Parker had a valise made out of his skin and William Clarke used the rest for a pair of shoes.

For the Southern Churchman.

Gifts.

Mary May.

Give me the blue of a clear sky,
And friendly trees that stand so high,
And let me sit and dream:
While overhead some song birds sing,
As blithely flitting on the wing,
They follow a sunbeam.

Oh, what is gold compared to these,
Or to the lure of summer's breeze,
If one but be content?
So keep from here the city's style,
And let sweet Nature each beguile,
Just as the dear God meant.

A Famous Indian Boy.

Back in the early days of our country, in 1776 to be exact, there was born a little Indian boy whose name will go down in history, forever and forever, because he did what no other man in the whole world has ever done before or since.

Sequoyah was a Cherokee. When he was a boy he occupied himself, as all other Indian boys did, by hunting, fishing and trapping. He did not go to school because there were no schools for Indian children, consequently he knew nothing of what we call "education".

By the time Sequoyah was a grown man, a number of white people had moved into the Indian country bringing with them letters, newspapers and books. It puzzled the Indians to see the white man read.

"The leaf talk to the white man," they said and many of them actually believed it.

Sequoyah did not know what to think when he saw men reading from a book or paper. It puzzled him so that he thought about it all the time. At last in an attempt to satisfy his curiosity he borrowed a book from a missionary to see what he could make from it. On looking it over, he thought at first that each letter represented a word but he soon saw that twenty-six words would not make a language. Then he decided that each letter represented a sound. And with this decision came a desire to make an alphabet and a written language for his people, the Cherokee Indians.

Gradually he became so absorbed in trying to do this that he gave up association with his friends and all other occupations. He would sit for days at a time and make marks on a piece of bark with a sharp stick, for these were his only paper and pencil. He did this for so many months that every one began to look upon him with suspicion, his wife most of all.

One day, when he had finally finished his alphabet, he said to her, "I can now make the leaf talk to the Indian". Then, calling his little daughter, Akoyu, to him, he showed her the curious marks on his bark manuscript, and in a few days she, too, declared that she could make the leaf talk.

Sequoyah's wife, very much alarmed, called in the conjurers and medicine men to see if they could not tell what was the matter with her husband and her daughter. After going through their weird incantations they declared that Sequoyah and Akoyu were bewitched and should be killed. They allowed them, however, to be tried by a band of young warriors before the death sentence was passed. When they were brought up for trial Sequoyah taught the warriors how to read and write with his new alphabet and they freed him and his daughter.

He afterwards taught many Cherokees his written language. When they realized what a great thing he had done they gave him a medal and made him a chief. Many books and papers were printed in Cherokee for the pleasure and enlightenment of the Indians.

Thus he made himself famous for he is the only man in the whole world who ever alone made an alphabet which was so perfect that no change had to be made in it.—Christian Observer.

Matches Are Poor Playthings.

Jimmy liked to play with matches. Of course, he knew he should not do so, and many, many times he had been forbidden by his mother. But whenever he had a chance, he would sneak off alone somewhere and burn pieces of paper or sticks.

Two or three times he burned his own fingers and had dreadful blisters on them. Just as soon as they healed, he seemed to forget all about the pain and would strike matches again at the first chance he got.

"Some of these days you'll set fire to the house," said his sister Dot.

"No, I won't, either," said Jimmy, who thought he knew more than a girl.

One afternoon, when every one had gone out, Jimmy found some Chinese punk.

"I guess I'll light a piece!" he said to himself. Rags, his pet dog, jumped about when he saw the flame. He barked and barked. seeming to know that Jimmy was doing something he ought not to do.

The garage was the first safe place he saw. He and the dog entered, closing the door after them. Of course, nobody with any sense would go into a garage with a handful of blazing punk. But Jimmy never stopped to think of anything but hiding because he had disobeyed mother.

In his excitement and haste he dropped the punk to the oily floor. It did not take long for the whole building to become a mass of flames. There in the corner, too frightened to move, huddled Jimmy and Rags.

When the firemen had dragged the two culprits from their corner, they were both in a pretty bad way.

"Where's Rags? Is he hurt?" the boy asked over and over.

"Yes, he's dreadfully burned—hasn't a speck of hair left!" replied mother.

"All because of me!" wailed Jimmy. "Oh, mother, if only Rags gets better, I'll never, never touch matches to play with again." He did not seem to mind his own pain, but worried about the dog.

At last they both got well, and Rags went over to lick Jimmy's hand as though to say: "I forgive you."

"Well, Rags, I know now that fire isn't a safe playmate."

And Rags' wagging tail meant: "Yes, I know it."—Exchange.

Common Things.

The things I prize of greatest worth
Are just the common things of earth;
The rain, the sun, the grass, the trees;
The flowers, the birds, the glorious breeze;
Clouds that pass, and stars that shine,
Mountains, valleys, all are mine;
Rivers broad, and open sea
Are riches none can take from me,
O God is here on ev'ry hand,
Upon the sea, upon the land!
And day by day my thanks I give
That with these common things I live.

—Leonard G. Nattkemper.

Billboards or Scenery.

"The billboards along the track are so interesting!" exclaimed Mollie, as she looked from the window of the moving train.

"More interesting than the scenery?" asked her father. "Just see that beautiful oak tree and that pretty stream."

"I didn't see any oak tree," Mollie objected. "I saw only that funny advertisement."

"But the oak tree was there," her father answered. "It seems a shame to me that these ugly billboards should be put in places where they hide the beauties of nature."

"They are fun, though," said Mollie.

"They are like many other things in life," responded her father gravely. "Some things attract us because they are funny, or just because they are big. These things often hide that which is really worth while, so that we miss the important and beautiful things in noticing that which is really of no consequence. Don't let the unimportant things hide your view of what is really important, Mollie, on this trip, or in your life. Cultivate your taste for the beautiful, and look for that instead of the ludicrous. It will pay in the end."—Selected.

A Prayer.

Lord, make me quick to see
Each task awaiting me,
And quick to do;
Oh, grant me strength, I pray,
With lowly love each day
And purpose true.

To go as Jesus went,
Spending and being spent,
Myself forgot;
Supplying human needs
By loving words and deeds,
Oh, happy lot!

—Robert M. Offord.

Dollars For

The Lenten Mite Box

To the Young People of the Church, now planning ways to earn money to swell the annual Sunday School Easter offering, the SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN offers an opportunity for big returns at pleasant work, and lots of dollars for the mite box.

There are many Church people in your neighborhood who will willingly subscribe to the SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN if you ask them to do so. You will find the work agreeable, and you will be surprised at the results.

THE SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN is a national Church paper with departments of interest to all members of the family. Its weekly visits will bring pleasure to the young people as also to the mature. The subscription price is $3.00 a year.

$1.00 A SUBSCRIBER.

THIS IS OUR OFFER: For each new annual subscription sent us by a Sunday School scholar, or Sunday School organization, we will pay the sender ONE DOLLAR. Put the dollar in your mite box, and send us two dollars with the name and address of the subscriber. In this way your good work will result in double benefit, a joy to the subscriber and an increase to your offering.

We will furnish you subscription blanks, literature, and all information on request. Start your Southern Churchman club now, and see the dollars for the offering roll in.

Southern Churchman Co.

112 North Fifth Street,

Richmond, Va.

The Scout Who Played Traffic Cop.

He was trudging down the street, in his khaki shirt, cotton puttees and stiff-brimmed Scout hat with the three dents in the crown. He was wondering what good turn he would find to do that day, as I stepped alongside of him and got my left foot stepping in time with his.

"Hello, Harry!" I greeted him. He lives around the corner from me and is patrol leader to the Scout troop in our church. "What's up today?"

"Don't know yet; going to see. Got to be there by two. Got a blister, too."

"Why do you go? No idea what they want?"

"Go 'cause it's orders. Blisters don't count. I've done most everything; sold Liberty bonds; distributed bills; kept the Fourth of July crowds back in line; carried suitcases for the Christian Endeavor girls; stopped a man's artery from spouting; I— Crickets! what's wrong here!"

At the downtown street intersection ahead the traffic was in a tangle at the busiest hour, and no traffic officer on the spot.

"Say, she's tied up in forty bowknots," said Harry. "Why don't the policeman come, I wonder?"

That's what every one was wondering. Then a portly man brushed up—the mayor. He took in the situation; his roving eyes lighted on the sturdy Scout. "See here!" he snapped at Harry, "something's happened to the cop; next best thing's a Boy Scout. Snap into it and unsnarl this mess. You can do it; it's orders."

"Yes, sir," responded Harry, saluting, sober as a deacon. Orders were orders. People stared at first as they caught sight of the drab-colored youth taking the missing traffic cop's place. Then, in the matter-of-fact way of one used to doing whatever he is ordered to do, in the best way he knows, Harry began blowing his patrol leader's whistle, and windmilling his arms. He was perfectly cool, and master of the situation. And the tangle began to untangle. Steady, ordered streams were flowing first this way and then that, when the belated cop arrived. The Boy Scout had made good where it took steady nerve and manly grit.—Religious Herald.

Lenten Observance.

Just the other day the remark was overheard, "I don't think I can live through another Lent", and the reply was "I do wish it was over". What could Lent mean to these people?

Others, a little more "religious", are less outspoken, and seem to say to themselves, "I enjoy being miserable once in a while". This morbid asceticism which seeks the mortification of the flesh as an end in itself is far from the teaching of our Church, and is certainly not Christian, though only too often it appears to find support in some of our hymns. Yet, it is unlikely to attract the thoughtless, or to help the thoughtful Christian who does desire to observe this sacred season, but is not quite clear as to what it ought to mean.

The following extracts are from a Lenten letter issued by an American Rector to his people, in Fredericksburg, Virginia.

"The uses of Lent are for the deepening of the spiritual life. Whatever the means may be, and they may vary with different people, the end of it all should be . . . . . to measure up to the ideal that our faith imposes upon us. The spiritual life should be to us a greater reality, and the . . . things of the Spirit as read to us as the things we see and touch.

To accomplish this end it is necessary to devote more time to communion with, and study of Christ. It is as necessary to commune with Christ, and study Him, if you would know Him better as it is to study and commune with the friends you love. And just as human love may require the temporary sacrifice of personal pleasure to its continuance and growth, so may love for the eternal Christ demand the same. I your personal pleasures are crowding Christ out of your life, then be sure the time for sacrifice has come. Your own spirit and the eternal Spirit of God can tell you best how, and when, and where to begin."

The letter goes on to urge a frequent attendance of Lenten services as a means of strengthening fellowship with Christ, then adds, "I plead not for the services, but for the Christian life that the services are intended to develop".—Canadian Churchman.

Five Chickens.

Said the first little chicken
With a queer little squirm,
"Oh, I wish I iould find
A fat little worm!"

Said the next little chicken
With an odd little shrug,
"Oh, I wish I could find
A fat little bug!"

Said the third little chicken
With a sharp little squeal,
"Oh, I wish I could find
Some nice yellow meal!"

Said the fourth little chicken
With a small sigh of grief,
"Oh, I wish I could find
A green little leaf!"

Said the fifth little chicken
With a faint little moan,
"Oh, I wish I could find
A wee gravel stone!"

"Now see here," said the mother
From the green garden patch,
"If you want any breakfast
You just come here and scratch!"

—Selected.

THE MINISTRY OF LAYMEN

BY LEON C. PALMER, B. D.

Executive Secretary, National Commission on Evangelism

Order Now—Off the Press March 10th

Ninety-six Pages, Paper Bound

Single Copies 25 Cents; four for $1.00; nine for $2.00 post paid. Bishop Darst, Chairman of the National Commission on Evangelism, has written the Foreward, saying in part:

"The members of the Commission have been hoping that one result of the Crusade would be the issuing of a book on Lay Evangelism by a layman of the Church, and we are happy that our hopes have been so fully realized in this admirable book on the subject. * * * Mr. Palmer has made a wonderful contribution to the subject and has presented a helpful and stimulating appeal for finer service on the part of the laymen of the Church, together with practical suggestions as to methods of work. * * * Mr. Palmer's book, if read and studied and followed by our lay people cannot fail to stimulate enthusiasm into perserverance and re-dedication into continuing and happy service for Christ and His Kingdom.

Order Now From

THE BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW

202 South 19th Street

Philadelphia

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

PIPE ORGANS.

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, INC., Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices. Particular attention given to designing organs for memorials.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 209 East Franklin Street. Richmond, Va.

ALTAR AND SURPLICE LINEN.

Sold by direct importer to Guilds, Rectors and others, by the yard, or piece, wholesale rates. New Specials 305, 54 inch, fine and heavy for Fair Linen. Surplice Linen 1800, 36 and 40 inch. Write for prices and samples.

MARY FAWCETT,
115 Franklin St., New York City.

ROOMS—WASHINGTON.

VISITORS TO WASHINGTON ACCOMMOdated with comfortable rooms in private home. Reasonable rates. Private bath. Mrs. W. A. Masker, 2751 Macomb Street. N. W.

SELECTED CARDS.

RELIGIOUS CARDS FOR ALL OCCASIONS—Birthdays, Consolation, Eucharistic, Lent and Easter. G. L. Bender, 7421 Boyer Street, Mt. Airy, Philadelphia, Pa.

—CATHEDRAL STUDIOS—
Washington London.

Church Embroideries and Vestments, Silks, Fringes, Gold thread, Stoles with crosses from $7.60, Burse and veil from $15, Surplices and exquisite Altar Linens, Church vestments imported for the Churches free of duty.

MISS L. V. MACKRILLE,
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington, D. C. D. C. Telephone Cleveland 52.

OLD ENVELOPES.

WANTED—Old Envelopes from letters written between 1845 and 1874. Do not remove the stamps from the envelopes Highest prices paid. GEORGE HAKES, 290 Broadway, New York.

CONFEDERATE STAMPS.

WANTED—Confederate Stamps, also United States Stamps used before 1870. Collections purchased. Higest prices paid. GEORGE HAKES, 290 Broadway, New York.

STAINED GLASS

JAMES POWELL & SONS (Whitefriars), Ltd., London, England—Stained Glass. Designs and estimates submitted on receipt of full particulars. Distributor ADRIAN A. BUCK, 665 Fifth Ave., New York City.

SITUATION WANTED.

CHURCH WORKER.

INFORMATION DESIRED CONCERNING an opportunity in Church work where the services of a trained and educated layman are needed. No objection to traveling. Subscriber is at liberty to refer to the Bishop of the Diocese. Address "S-4" care of Southern Churchman

WANTED, BY REFINED, EDUCATED woman, with fifteen year old daughter, position in office, or home department, of some good accredited school, beginning September 1st, where daughter could enter until she graduates. Address 72341, care of Southern Churchman.

WANTED, POSITION AS SUPERINTENdent, or field worker for institution, by lady executive with good training and wide experience best references. Address "T. W." care of Southern Churchman.

HELP WANTED

EXPERIENCED NURSE, OR NURSERY Governess wanted for two children. Write Mrs. Herbert Mann, 2004 Monument Avenue, Richmond, Va.

WANTED, A SETTLED WHITE WOMAN to assist in care of an old lady and help about household affairs in the country. Small salary, comfortable home. Address Miss Mary M. Cooke, King William C. H. Virginia.

WANTED, HOUSEKEEPER FOR CHURCH Institution. Apply to Miss Thompson, Church Home for Girls, 58th St., and Baltimore Ave., Philadelphia, Pa.

Deaths

BLANKINGSHIP: Entered into Eternal Rest, Friday, March 4, 1927, in Louisa, Va., MISS HATTIE WINSTON BLANKINGSHIP, daughter of William Blankingship, of Edgefield, Chesterfield county, Va. She leaves one brother and three sisters. She was a devout Christian.

"Peace, perfect peace."

KENNETH STALEY.

Entered into Life Eternal Tuesday, March 15, in Richmond, Va., following one month's illness of pneumonia, KENNETH STALEY, aged thirty-nine years, of Shepherdstown, W. Va., and New York City. Mr. Staley was a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Walter Staley of Shepherdstown, W. Va., and a great-grandson of Lyman Dennison, Senior Warden of St. Thomas' Church, New York. He is survived by his widow, who was Helen Barnwell, a daughter of the late Bishop Barnwell of Alabama, and a sister, Mrs. John Montgomery, of Shepherdstown.

ELLEN MERCER COOKE BROCKENBROUGH.

A Memorial.

On February 22nd, 1927, God in His Infinite wisdom took from this world the sweet spirit of ELLEN MERCER COOKE BROCKENBROUGH, beloved by all who knew her.

She lived a life of simple, trustful faith and her friends who loved her here, feel that her joyous spirit has but passed into a life of higher service.

We thank God for her beautiful life, and pray that it may be an inspiration to those who worked with her.

Resolved, that this memorial be recorded in our minutes, that a copy be sent to her family and, also, that it be published in the Southern Churchman.

ALICE N. HAGAN,
ROY ELLERSON MASSIE,
EVA L. JENNINGS.
Corresponding Secretary C. S. L. of Grace and Holy Trinity Church.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

(Continued from page 16.)

"Hill Zone" United Services.

Another series of Lenten services, begun in St. Mary's Church, Brooklyn, on Tuesday evening, March 8, will be continued on Tuesday evenings through Lent. These are the inter-parocmal or "zone" services of our five parishes on the "Hill": St. Mary's, St. James', St. Luke's, Messiah, and Incarnation. One service will be held at each church. At the first, the Rev. Spence Burton, of Boston, American Superior of the Society of St. John the Evangelist, was preacher. The attendance was five hundred and fifty.

Cadman, D. D., pastor of the Central Congregational Church and President of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, was the preacher. The attendance was upward of two thousand. Dr. Cadman's theme was "Faith in God". On the four nights following, the service was held in our Church of St. Matthew, which is said to seat six hundred and fifty. The preachers were the Rev. S. Edward Young D. D., pastor of the Bedford Presbyterian Church; the Rev. Victor C. Mills, D. D., pastor of the New York Avenue Methodist Church; the Rev. J. Percival Huget, D. D., pastor of the Tompkins Avenue Congregational Church; and the Rev. John J. Heischmann, D. D., pastor of St. Peter's Lutheran Church. Attendance varied from four hundred and fifty to the total capacity of the church. On Friday evening the series concluded in the Tompkins Avenue Congregational Church, which seats 1,400. Bishop Stires was the preacher, and his theme "Christ Our Living Leader".

The sermons were all helpful and valuable, and the service was informal. It was an interesting demonstration of the willingness of a considerable proportion of the various Protestant constituencies to acknowledge a value in the Church's season of Lent, and to meet together for common worship, inspiration and uplift.

Advance in Educational Work.

The Diocesan Board of Religious Education, which has for several years maintained a Diocesan Normal School for Training School Teachers, announces that the commencement exercises of this year's session will be held on April 26. In addition to the central school, the Board has now organized seven training classes in seven districts of the diocese, each district comprising five to eight churches. This will extend teacher training facilities to many who cannot attend at the diocesan center.

Five new week-day classes for religious education of school children have lately been started in the following parishes: Epiphany, St. Clement's and St. Cyprian's (Colored), in Brooklyn; St. James', Franklin Square; and the Long Beach Mission. Each will meet once a week, after school hours. The work is being organized for an indefinite term, but is expected to become permanent.

A Churchwomen's Central Committee has been organized to further the work of Daily Vacation Bible Schools in this diocese next summer. There were eight or nine such schools last year, but through the interest of this new committee it is expected that $500 will be raised to start five more schools in mission churches where they are plainly needed.

The Teachers' Fellowship, organized only a year ago, and fostered by the D. B. R. E., has now more than three hundred members and publishes its own Bulletin. The Fellowship is organized in twenty zones, with a leader in each zone and a "key-teacher" in each parish, so that contacts are kept without burdening rectors or superintendents. The same organization is used to promote the Church School Service Program.

Largest Confirmation Class So Far.

The largest class which Bishop Stires has confirmed, so far, was presented on the First Sunday in Lent in Grace Church, Jamaica. The class numbered eighty-seven. In the class were representatives of every denomination that is organized in Jamaica; and representatives of every division of the old Town of Jamaica, now the Fourth Ward of the Borough of Queens in the City of New York. There were more men and boys in the class than women and girls.

Other Parishes in 225th Anniversary.

The coming celebration of the two hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of Grace Church, Jamaica, will be an interparochial matter, four colonial parishes of this diocese combining. These four parishes are Grace, Jamaica; St. George's, Flushing; St. James', Newton (Elmhurst); and St. George's, Hempstead. Bishop Stires has appointed a committee to represent the diocese in the matter: the Rev. Frank M. Townley, D. D., the Hon. Stephen Callaghan and Mr. Walter R. Marsh.

Community Services.

"Community Noonday Lenten Services" were inaugurated on Ash Wednesday at the Church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, with Bishop Stires as the first preacher. With repentance as his theme, the Bishop emphasized the importance of amendment as part of true repentance. The Church, which is said to have twelve hundred sittings, was completely filled, and many people were standing.

This series of noon-day services is not a parochial, nor yet a diocesan, undertaking. It is under the management of an interdenominational committee of ministers, of whom the Rev. Dr. French, pastor of the Church of the Pilgrims (Congregational), is chairman. To this committee the rector and the vestry of the Church of the Holy Trinity allowed the use of their edifice as the most desirable place for such services. The location of this church, in the "Borough Hall section" of Brooklyn, is as strategic as that of old Trinity at the head of Wall Street in Manhattan. Other Churchmen among the preachers announced are four from Manhattan—the Rev. Drs. Norwood, Reiland, Bowie and Guthrie, and three from Brooklyn—the Rev. Dr. Atwater, the Rev. Dr. Melish and the Rev. Dr. Dorance. There are also six Congregational ministers, five Presbyterian, four Methodist, three Baptist, two Lutheran, two Unitarian, one Disciple, one Dutch reformed and one Unitarian.

Merger of Parishes Proposed.

The Brooklyn Daily Eagle of February 28 states that the vestries of the Church of the Redeemer and of St. Michael's Church have decided to merge the two parishes under the name of "the Church of the Redeemer and St. Michael's". They will use the building of the former, and they propose to add the proceeds of the sale of the property of the latter to the endowment of the united parish. "It is also agreed," says the Eagle, "that places shall be found in the merged church for both rectors"—the Rev. Thomas J. Lacey, Ph. D., and the Rev. J. H. S. Putnam. It is understood that the proposal will come before the Bishop and the Standing Committee at their next meeting.

The Church of the Redeemer, at Fourth Avenue and Pacific Street, was organized in 1853. Its communicants number three hundred, and its Sunday School one hundred and eighteen. Its property is valued at $200,000, and it has $41,000 in endowment. St. Michael's, located in High Street near the Navy Yard, was begun in 1847. Its property is valued at $75,000, and it reports about two hundred communicants.

C. H. W.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Robert T. Davis, formerly rector of Holy Trinity, Pueblo, Colo., has taken charge as rector of St. Luke's, Denver.

The Rev. R. J. Belt, of Clairton, Pa., has resigned as locum tenens of the missions at Braddock, Turtle Creek, and Wilmerding, to take effect March 31.

The Rev. G. E. Hitmeyer, Deacon, is assisting the Archdeacon of Cairo (Diocese of Springfield), the Ven. Charles E. Weller, in the work within his field.

Mr. Hugh W. Knight, of New York, who has completed his theological preparation, but has not yet been ordained, assumed charge of Grace Church, Plymouth and St. Luke's, Roper, Diocese of East Carolina, the fifteenth of March.

The Rev. Alfred Newberry, assistant at the Church of the Redeemer, Chicago, will become rector of the Church of the Atonement, Chicago, on May 1. He will succeed the Rev. Frederick S. Fleming, D. D., who has accepted a call to St. Stephen's Church, Providence, R. I.

The Rev. J. N. Bynum, of Belhaven, N. C., in addition to his regular duties, will have oversight of the churches in Hyde County until a minister is obtained for that field.

The Rev. Lee W. Heaton will become rector of the Church of Our Redeemer, Lexington, Mass., on April 15.

The Rev. John Hartley, Ph. D., who has been rector of St. Mary's Church, Kinston, N. C., since the fall of 1923, resigned, effective February 1, 1927.

The Rev. Charles E. Freeman, formerly rector of St. John's Church, Aberdeen, Miss., has entered upon his work as minister-in-charge of St. John's, Thibodaux, La., and of the missions of Napoleonville and Donaldson, with residence at Thibodaux.

The Rev. and Mrs. H. D. Cone, of Clinton, N. C., are planning a two months' trip to England this summer. Mr. Cone will be a delegate to the World Convention of Rotary Clubs in Ostend, Belgium.

The Rev. George C. Shaw, formerly minister-in-charge of Holy Trinity, South River, N. J., who has accepted a call to Kingston Parish, Mathews, Va., will take charge April 1.

The Rev. W. Postell Witsell, D. D., rector of St. Paul's Church, Waco, Tex., who has accepted the call to be rector of Christ Church, Little Rock, Ark., expects to take charge April 1.

The Rev. Cranston Brenton, formerly minister-in-charge of St. Martha's Church, has entered upon his duties at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York City.

The Rev. Arthur H. Styron, formerly assistant at All Saints' Church, New York City, entered upon his duties as minister-in-chief of St. Martha's Church, New York City, March 1.

The Rev. Arthur H. Mellen, formerly secretary of the American Bible Society, in Mexico City, is now minister-in-charge of St. Clement's Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Rev. G. Philip Jung, D. C. L., rector of Emmanuel Church, Elmira, N. Y., who has accepted a call to be on the staff of Church of the Ascension, Pittsburgh, Pa., with care of the churches at Bradflock, Wilmerding, and Turtle Creek, will take charge April 1.

The Rev. Francis M. Bacon, formerly general missionary at Laramie, Wyo., has taken charge of St. Mark's Mission, Hanna, Wyo.

The Rev. William C. Seitz, formerly rector of the Transfiguration, Ironweed, Mich., took charge of Christ Church, Springfield, Ohio, March 16.

The Rev. E. Leslie Rolls, formerly rector of Grace Church, Ellensburg, Wash., will become canon of All Saints' Cathedral, Spokane, Wash., April 1.

ORDINATIONS.

On Thursday, February 17, 1927, in St. Luke's Chapel, Sewanee, Tenn., the Rt. Rev. Theodore DuBose Bratton ordained Raymond Earl MacBlain, B. A., to the diaconate. Mr. MacBlain was presented by the Rev. W. H. DuBose, M. A., Professor of Old Testament in the Theological School at Sewanee, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Charles L. Wells, Ph. D., dean of the Theological School at Sewanee. The Rev. Geo. B. Myers read the litany, and the Rev. W. L. Bevan read the epistle.

After his graduation from the Seminary in June, the Rev. Mr. MacBlain will start his work in the Diocese of Mississippi.

The Rev. Charles Leslie Glenn was advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Stearly at a service held in Grace Church, Greenville, Jersey City, N. J., on the First Sunday in Lent.

The candidate was presented by the rector of the parish, the Rev. Jesse C. Joralemon. The litany was said by the Rev. Thomas A. Hyde, of Christ Hospital, Jersey City, and the epistle was read by the Rev. John W. Suter, Jr., of the National Council. The Rev. E. L. Stoddart, D. D., rector emeritus of St. John's Church, was also present and joined in the laying on of hands.

Mr. Glenn is a graduate of Stevens' Institute of Technology and of the Theological Seminary of Virginia. He has during the past year served as Curate in All Saints' Church, Worcester, Mass. Early in the summer he is to take up work among college students under the Department of Religious Education of the National Council.

On Friday morning, February 18, the Rt. Rev. Charles Lewis Slattery, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Massachusetts, ordained priest the Rev. Nelson Weston Bryant and ordained deacon Roy Melvin Grindy. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, rector of Trinity Church, from which parish Mr. Bryant comes. Mr. Sherrill also read the litany. The epistle was read by the Rev. Herman R. Page, of the Cathedral. Mr. Bryant was presented by the Rev. W. A. Lawrence, rector of Grace Church, Providence, R. I., under whom he had served his diaconate in St. Stephen's, Lynn, where he will remain for the present as assistant to the Rev. John F. Scott.

Mr. Grindy was presented by the Rev. Dwight W. Hadley, rector of Grace Church, Medford. At present he is a student at the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, while also in charge of the mission of Montello.

DEATHS.

The Rev. George Buffett Pratt, died at his home in Chicago, Ill., on Saturday, February 26, in his eighty-sixth year. He was buried from St. Simon's Church on Monday morning, February 28, the rector, the Rev. L. C. Ferguson, officiating.

The Bell Book and Stationery Co.

ENGRAVED WEDDING ANNOUNCEMENTS
VISITING CARDS.
Fifth Street between Broad and Grace
RICHMOND, VA.

CHOIR SLIPS

With order for entries of Anthems and Hymns for Morning and Evening Service.

In pads of 100 each, arranged for carbon copies.

100 Slips	$1.00
200 Slips	1.75
300 Slips	2.50
500 Slips	4.00
1000 Slips	5.00

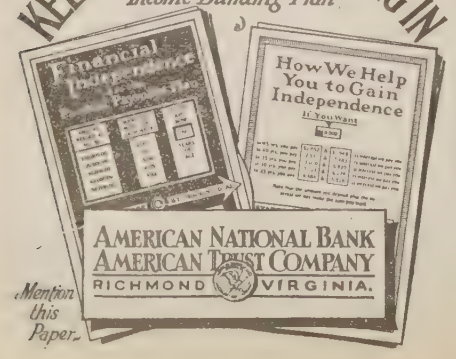
A copy for your rector, organist and each member of the Choir will help the service.

Order From

Southern Churchman Co.

Richmond, Va.

YOU CAN'T GO FAR IF YOUR MOTOR IS MISSING.



and so with saving money.

To go far the best way is to make regular weekly deposits—select an amount within your means and then be regular. The regularity is what counts. Don't miss and you will be surprised at your financial progress.

Try this method by the Income Building Plan, geared to 6% on units of $100 by First Mortgage Investments.

KEEP YOUR INCOME COMING IN

Ask for Booklet on Income Building Plan

Mention this Paper

INCORPORATED 1832

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,398,462.62

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.

B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer
J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm . P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

A Complete Store of shops and --- more --- an Institution

Miller & Rhoads

THE SHOPPING CENTER

Richmond - Virginia

QUALITY CHICKS

Chicks from winter laying, farm raised, mature stock, S. C. W. Leghorns, R. I. Reds, Barred Rocks, White Orpingtons, Anconas, Black Jersey Giants, White Wyandottes, White Plymouth Rocks, Black Minorcas, Pekin and Indian Runner Ducks; $15 per 100 up. Live Delivery guaranteed. Parcel Post prepaid. Hatching eggs $8.00 per 100 up. Several breeds rabbits. Circular free. Shipments will be made from one of our nearest associated hatcheries.

Glen Rock Nursery and Stock Farm, Ridgewood, N. J.

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC., 308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.
QUALITY—SERVICE

The South's Best Book Store

HUNTER & CO.

105 E. Broad Street
Richmond, Va.
Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen.
Prompt and Reliable Service.

SYDNOR & HUNDLEY'S STOCK REDUCTION SALE

Complete Suites and Hundreds of Occasional Prices at

25 Per Cent, 33 1-3 Per Cent and 50 Per Cent Reductions.

7th at Grace — Richmond, Va.

BIG PROFITS

For Your Church Organization
The Handy Household Helper
Write for full information
METAL SPONGE SALES CORP., Lehigh Avenue and Meacher Street Philadelphia.

A NATIONAL CHURCH PAPER FOR ALL THE FAMILY.

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS ✱ FRUSTRA ✱ NISI 1835

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., MARCH 26, 1927. No. 13.

WE may not climb the heavenly steps
To bring the Lord Christ down;
In vain we search the lowest deeps,
For Him no depths can drown.
But warm, sweet, tender, even yet
A present help is He,
And faith hath yet its Olivet,
And life its Galilee.

:: Contributors for 1927 ::

The Rt. Rev. Charles L. Slattery, D. D.
The Rev. Robert Norwood, D. D.
The Rt. Rev. Theodore I. Reese, D. D.
The Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, D. D.
The Rt. Rev. Edward L. Parsons, D. D.
The Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, D. D.
The Rev. John Gass.
The Rt. Rev. Clinton S. Quin, D. D.
The Rev. George Parkin Atwater, D. D.
James H. Dillard, LL. D.
The Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, D. D.
Margaret Prescott Montague
Mary Evelyn Brydon, M. D.
The Rev. W. Russell Bowie, D. D.
The Rev. Karl M. Block, D. D.
The Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D.
The Rev. W. Cosby Bell, D. D.
The Rev. Thos. K. Nelson, D. D.
The Rev. E. Stanley Jones.
Sir Henry Lunn.

EDUCATIONAL

The Virginia Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded.
Established 1892.
For terms and information address
MISS M. GUNDRY.

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-eighth year of this School for Boys opened September 15, 1926. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. Hoxton, B. A., Principal.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The Requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA.

prepares boys at cost for college and university. Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountians of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., Rector.

St. Hilda's Hall

Charles Town, W. Va.
Near Harper's Ferry.

Chevron School for Girls. Episcopal Junior College—four year' High School and two years' College Courses. Elective Music, Art. Business, Athletics. Limited numbers.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

The One Hundred and Fourth Session
Opened Wednesday, Sept. 15, 1926.

For catalogs and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria Va.

The Divinity School of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia
42nd and Locust Streets.

Graduate Courses in Theology, Privileges at the University of Pennsylvania.

Address: The Rev. G. G. Bartlett, D. D., Dean.

THE EUROPEAN TRIP THAT SUITS YOU

A Lady who has lived in Europe, and also has taken the Mediteranean and World Cruises, has a few vacancies in her small party to Europe this Summer.

Moderate cost, References exchanged.

Itinerary sent upon request.

MRS. ROBERT BOWIE STODDERT
1526 Park Ave., Baltimore, Md.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY, Publishers,
112 North Fifth Street, - Richmond, Va.

LEWIS C. WILLIAMS.....President
REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Associate Editor
MISS FENTON WILLIAMSON, News Editor
MISS SUSAN C. COOKE, Circulation Dept.
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00 Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful.....	4
Editorials	5-6
The Pulpit of the American Church	7
The Boy and His Church; What Becomes of the Collection?—Lewis B. Franklin	9
The Schools of the American Church Institute for Negroes—The Rev. Elmer N. Schmuck	10
Christianity and the Community—The Rev. R. Cary Montague	11
Tendencies in Modern Protestantism	12
After the Minister—The Rev. Nelson P. Dame	12
Church Intelligence	13
Family Department	17
Children's Department	19
Personal Notes	23

St. Stephen's College

An Undergraduate Church College for men.

There are four curricula—Classical, Literary, Scientific and Social Scientific.

For tution $250.00 a year; foo a room furnished and heated $150.00 a year; for board in hall $250.00 a year; a total of $650.00.

Address: BERNARD IDDINGS BELL, President
Annandale-on-Hudson, N. Y. (Railway Station, Barrytown, N. Y.)

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesvile; St. Margaret's School, Tappahannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.)

(About gifts or bequests, address the Dean, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR BOYS.
Richmond, Virginia.

Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 60 pupils.

RATE $700.00.

Reduction to sons of Clergymen, teachers and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., Headmaster.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

St. Agnes' Episcopal School

Alexandria, Virginia.

Boarding and Day School for Girls on Braddock Heights overlooking the Potomac River.

On the interurban trolley and bus lines between Washington and Alexandria.

Athletics and open air life; sixteen-acre campus. Primary, Intermediate, General and College Preparatory Courses. Music.

For information apply to
THE PRINCIPAL.

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University.

For catalog address
The Dean.

STUART HALL

STAUNTON, VA.

1843 1927

FORMERLY VIRGINIA FEMALE INSTITUTE

Oldest girls' school in Virginia—Episcopal For Catalogue, address MRS. H. N. HILLS, A. B., Box P.

CHATHAM EPISCOPAL INSTITUTE,
Box 13, Chatham, Virginia.

College preparatory school for girls. Certificate privileges. Also two years of advanced Academic work. Special courses, Music, Art, Expression, Home Economics. Modern equipment. 15 Acres campus. Pool, Golf. Terms moderate. 33rd session September 22, 1926.

Bishop of Diocese of Southern Virginia President of Board.

For catalogue address
MABEL ELEANOR STONE
Principal.

HOBART COLLEGE, Geneva, N. Y

A Church College for men, founded 1822. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

The New Evidences.

Dean Inge in Lay Thoughts of a Dean states his essential belief after a searching analysis of the theories of his time. "The centre of gravity in religion has shifted from authority and tradition to experience. The evidences of religion are no longer external and miraculous; they are those which faith itself supplies. For example the apologists ot the past invited us to believe that Christ is risen, which is what we want to know, by marshalling the evidence that He rose. The believer, today, whether he knows it or not, infers that Christ rose, because he feels and knows that He is risen. In his humble measure he can say with St. Paul "it pleased God to reveal His Son in me". Such an experience makes religion personal and real, and redeems the Church from the charge of hypocrisy.—Exchange.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY

EASTER GIFTS

Bibles - Testaments - Portions

Visit or Write Nearest Agency

Of Every Kind
In Every Language
For Gift and Home Use
For Missionary Purposes

New York - New York Colored - Philadelphia - Washington - Richmond - Cincinnati - Chicago - Dallas - Denver - San Francisco

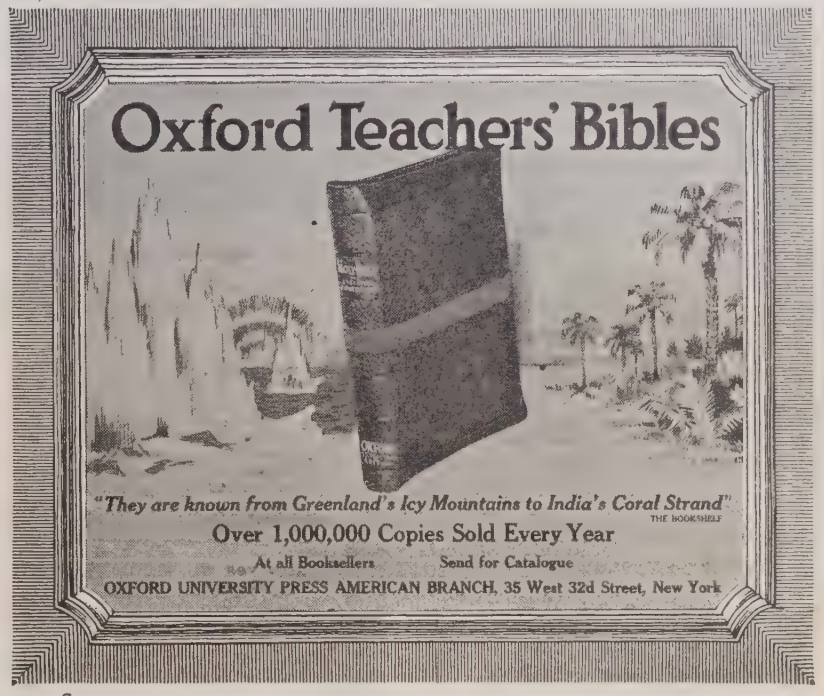
$25.00 to $150.00

FOR YOUR CHURCH OR SOCIETY

Sell our DeLuxe Easter Box Edition of 12 Steel Engraved Cards with lined envelopes and a handsome ribbon tied folder. Appropriate Easter verses. Cost 50c sells for $1.00 SEND FOR SAMPLE BOX. 60c stamps, check or money order.

GILLMORE BROS., Pub. Reading, Pa.

Richmond Trust Company



3%

ON SAVINGS.

BANKING—TRUSTS—REAL ESTATE

Capital $1,000,000.00

Main at Seventh — Richmond, Virginia.

AN EASTER GIFT

An appropriate and valuable gift to your church would be a supply of New Hymnals. The use of the musical edition in the pews would have a lasting effect upon the spiritual value of the services. A singing congregation is an enthusiastic congregation.

Musical Edition.....$1.20 per copy

$1.00 per copy in lots of 100 or more

Word Edition..... 40c per copy

Carriage Charges are Extra

Orders should be sent direct to

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

14 WALL STREET, NEW YORK

EVERYTHING FOR THE CHURCH

J. & R. Lamb
25-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED WOOD · METAL · ETC.

Dewey's
EST. 1857
MATURED
WINES
for Sacramental Use
Affidavit Blanks and Price Lists Mailed on Request
H. T. Dewey & Sons Co.,
138 Fulton St., N. Y. C.

WOODY ART GLASS SHOP
Art Stained and Leaded Glass
Church Windows a Specialty
402 East Marshall St.
Richmond, Va.

Church and Sunday School Furniture
THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY
Hickory N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue

WINSTON-INTERNATIONAL
TEACHERS' BIBLES
SELF-PRONOUNCING
Containing References, a Concordance and the most authoritative Aids to Bible Study. Printed in Black Face Type. Beautiful Bindings.
Send for Illustrated Catalog
THE JOHN C. WINSTON CO., Publishers
American Bible Headquarters
455 WINSTON BUILDING PHILADELPHIA

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS
Largest stock in the South. We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival
The Couper Marble Works
(Established 79 years.)
294-296 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

We are Headquarters for CHURCH BOOKS
and
CHURCH SCHOOL SUPPLIES
Send for a copy of our Complete Catalogue
GEORGE W. JACOBS & COMPANY
Booksellers-Stationers-Engravers
1726 CHESTNUT STREET
PHILADELPHIA

R. GEISSLER, INC.
56 W. 8th STREET, NEW YORK, N.Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS

XANTHINE
Hair Restorative
Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.
Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.
XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

CHURCH VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Surplices, Stole.
EMBROIDERIES
Silks, Cloths, Fringes.
CLERICAL SUITS
Rabats, Collars, Shirts.
COX SONS & VINING,
131-133 E. 23d St., New York.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS
Gold, Silver and Brass.
Church and Chancel Furniture
Write for Catalogue for Episcopal Churches.
W. & E. SCHMIDT CO.
308 THIRD ST. MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Washington Cathedral
A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation
THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work of Missionary Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.
Chartered under Act of Congress.
Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.
Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.
Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

MOLLER PIPE ORGANS
three thousand churches. Every organ specially designed for the church and service in which it is be used and fully guaranteed. Specifications and estimates on request. Correspondence solicited.
M. P. MOLLER,
Hagerstown, Maryland.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"One man alone is no man at all."

He who can stand the little trials is fitted for the great trusts.

Be as careful of the books you read as of the company you keep.

Minor sins rarely fail to reach maturity.

The hungry heart is the only requirement to obtain the Bread of Life.

No nation can lose its Sunday and keep its soul.—Rev. Wm. Porkess.

A happy man or woman is a radiating center of good-will; and their entrance into a room is as though another lamp had been lighted.

We are men by a more sacred bond than we are citizens. We are children of a common Father more than we are Americans.—Charles Sumner.

It has been reserved to Christianity to give the world an ideal character, which through all changes of eighteen centuries has filled men's hearts with an impassioned love. This short life of three years has done more to regenerate and soften mankind than all the dissertations of the philosophers and all the exhortations of the moralists.—Selected.

Jesus, 'tis nigh two thousand years ago,
One would have pour'd as pebbles in Your Hand
Gold, gems, slaves, souls—the riches of our land—
Had You but knelt. Help us to understand
The splendor of Your everlasting 'No!'
—A. S. Cripps.

"A certain missionary board had appointed man after man to undertake pioneer work in a new mission among the Indians, but all had declined. The youngest member, pastor of a large and flourishing city church, said, 'Let us have special prayer for guidance, then let each man write the name of the man best fitted for the work, regardless of the position he now holds'. When the votes were read, all but one bore the name of the young pastor. A great protest was made by the board at such a sacrifice, but the pastor went home, and told his wife, 'You and I are to open up the new mission among the Indians'. By proxy his church went with him. One reason of the dearth of missionary spirit in some churches is, they have not expressed themselves in the gift of one of their members."

Cassocks
Surplices, Stoles, Altar Hangings, Bookmarkers and Embroideries Altar Linens, Materials, Rabats, Rabat Vests. Birettas, Collars, Cuffs and Shirts. Clerical and Custom Tailoring.
Moderate prices.
J. M. HALL, Inc.
9 East 35th St., New York
Tel. Caledonia 8648

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., MARCH 26, 1927. No. 13.

THE PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM.

INSTRUCTION THROUGH A QUESTION BOX has for many years been a recognized method of giving information about the Church, its usages, services, etc. At Trinity College this plan was carried further during a recent service, when the president, the Rev. Remsen O. Ogilby, was interrupted in the middle of his sermon by a question from a member of the faculty. After the ice was broken several other questions followed that of the faculty member. The account of the proceeding states that it was not prearranged, but we can hardly imagine that one of the professors would interrupt the president in the middle of his chapel sermon, without at least, having secured the latter's consent to do so. Unless such questions were limited, we should think that this method would lead to great confusion, and that the sermon period would soon become a mere round table discussion. There are undoubtedly, however, a great many problems in the minds of Church-goers that they have never presented to the clergy, and some method of having these questions frankly discussed would certainly be beneficial. The Bishop of London has long considered this method of enlightenment so valuable that he includes questions and his answers with his sermons, when they are published.

FOUR SUMMER SCHOOLS FOR RURAL CLERGY are planned for this year, besides numerous conferences stressing country work. The schools are organized as a bureau of the Social Service Department of the National Church. They will be held as follows: Madison, Wis., June 27 to July 8; Manhattan, Kansas, June 6 to 10; Cornell, Ithica, N. Y., July 11 to 23; Chestertown, Md., tentative date first week in September. Further information about these meetings can be obtained by addressing the Executive Secretary of Rural Work, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City. No movement in the Episcopal Church holds greater possibilities than that now going forward in this line. None of our city congregations reproduce themselves. Invariably their reports show larger numbers "received by transfer" than "by confirmation", and most of these transferred people have moved from the country to the city. This kind of migration is going on all the time in every locality. If, therefore, we can build up our country work, we are rendering the greatest possible service to the whole Church. The Summer Schools bring clergymen together, from widely scattered points, offer them practical suggestions that have stood the test of experience and give them working outlines to carry home. Besides this they gain the inspiration that comes from contact with other men engaged in the same efforts as themselves.

THE POPULAR APPETITE FOR RELIGIOUS LITERATURE seems unabated. Many people thought that books of this character only attained large sales during the perilous days of the war. Figures for 1925 prove that nearly ten years after that world tragedy, the public is still hungering for reading matter that deals in the permanent values of the soul. In that year, fiction and juvenile books lead the list, but religious literature came next in quantity of production and consumption. It is interesting, too, to see that it is the volumes dealing with missionary problems that are in the greatest demand. There are those who think that liberalism leads to an abatement of missionary fervor, but "The Clash of Color", by Basil Matthews, has reached a sale of more than one hundred thousand copies. "The Mission World In Revolution," by W. W. Clark, has also had an enormous sale. Intelligent reading accompanied by instruction about the mission fields, is the best possible impetus that this effort can receive.

A GREAT MILITARY DEMONSTRATION PLANNED FOR THE MEXICAN BORDER to take place in May is announced by the War Department. It would be difficult to imagine any move on the part of the United States Government less conducive to a peaceful adjustment of our differences with Mexico, than such a warlike demonstration at this time. It almost seems as though the War Department were conspiring with the State Department to drive this country into hostilities with our Southern neighbor. President Coolidge has made the statement that "property rights of American citizens cannot be arbitrated". We do not see why they cannot be. When the rights of Edward T. Doheny were in question, they were arbitrated by the United States Supreme Court, and he lost his supposed rights. If other speculators make their investments in Mexico, why should that eliminate them from being subjected to the same test. War with Mexico will be brought about by three steps. First, concentration of troops on the Mexican border. Second, breaking off of diplomatic relations. Third, the lifting of the embargo on the export of arms into Mexico, thereby giving the revolutionists the means to overthrow their own government. Christian citizens, both in groups, and as individuals, should protest vigorously against this concentration plan of the War Department and so try to prevent the first step toward war.

DEAN WILLIAM R. INGE OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL, gives his unqualified support to the changes suggested in the English Book of Common Prayer, and promulgated by the Bishops. In an article appearing in "The Church of England Newspaper", and reprinted in "The Churchman", March 19, he begins with this sentence: "It seems to me, that the Bishops' Book ought to be not only loyally accepted, but cordially welcomed." Later he says: "The Bishops have, I think, succeeded in avoiding any doctrinal innovations." Such statements coming from a liberal Churchman like the Dean are reassuring, and the fact that there is so much protest in England goes to show that the large majority of the Church of England is still vigorously Protestant.

CHINA FOR THE CHINESE, A MISSIONARY MOTTO

A good deal is being written at this time about China that is misleading, and unfair to the missionary effort which has been carried on in that war-torn country for many years. For instance, one statement reported from one of the Chinese leaders, says: "The Mission Schools are now reacting on the foreigner who established them, because, through the education that they gave us, we are throwing off the foreign influence."

It has been the object of the missionaries all along to enable the Chinese to become independent of foreign influence. It may not have been the purpose of the countries from which the missionaries came, but they would not have given their time—in some cases their lives—to this work if they had not believed in "China for the Chinese".

There is no country in the world today in a more critical condition than this great Oriental Empire. According to Sidney L. Gulick, the representative of the Federal Council of Churches, there are no less than five different kinds of revolutions going on there at the present time. He believes that there is a literary, educational, scientific and industrial revolt against the old order, as well as a great political upheaval. The greatest hope for the country is in the spirit of patriotism aroused by the Nationalistic movement. It is this feeling of unity that can draw the various factions together, and will enable them to present a solid front to their enemies from without, and the disintegrating forces from within.

Dr. Sun Yat-sen, in his "will", now regarded as almost sacred, formulated three fundamental principles as the objectives of his party. These three principles have become the slogans of all forward looking Chinese: (1) The recognition of China as an equal among the nations and the readjustment of all existing treaties; (2) The political unification of China with a truly democratic government controlled by the People's Party; (3) The betterment of economic conditions for all industrial workers.

The relations of the United States to China have always been of a very cordial character, and the present crisis offers an opportunity for the practice of International friendship by which we can demonstrate Christianity.

The way to overcome the irreligious Rusian influence in China is by a sufficiently friendly attitude to prove the genuineness of our desire to help them.

It is said by those who know best that the Chinese are naturally conservative and will not take to the ultra radical ideas unless driven to it by the hostile attitude of European powers.

The present situation is one that should call for the utmost Christian effort to build for friendship with this great power in its time of need, and our Government should not be swayed by mere business influence in her dealings with the Chinese.

THE WEEK'S CONTRIBUTORS

THE RT. REV. BEVERLEY DANDRIDGE TUCKER, D. D., was born in Richmond, Va. His early education was begun in his native city, but later he, and his brother, attended school in Switzerland for five years. They returned in time to see service in the War Between the States. At its conclusion, Bishop Tucker was a refugee in Canada, where he attended the University of Toronto. Returning to the United States, he taught in Winchester, Va., for five years, before going to the Theological Seminary at Alexandria, Va. Upon his graduations he served as rector of the church at Warsaw, Va. He was called to St. Paul's Church in Norfolk in 1882. After serving this historic parish for nearly a quarter of a century, he was elected Bishop Coadjutor of Southern Virginia in 1906, the Rt. Rev. A. M. Randolph, D. D., being the Bishop. He had served his Diocese as Deputy to the General Convention in several of these gatherings before entering the House of Bishops, and is so well known and so much beloved throughout the General Church, that he was accorded quite an ovation in the House of Bishops at its meeting in New Orleans. Bishop Tucker is the author of numerous poems, and has been a frequent and interesting writer for the Church Press. He has received the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity from the University of Toronto, the Theological Seminary in Virginia, and Roanoke College, and he has also been honored with an LL. D. degree from William and Mary College. Although one of the oldest members of the House of Bishops, he keeps an open mind, and takes a broad and liberal view of all questions before the Church.

LEWIS B. FRANKLIN, who writes the article on "The Boy and His Church" this week, is perhaps the best known layman in the Episcopal Church, and he is certainly the most deserving of gratitude. He was born in Flushing, New York, and grew up in that part of the world. He took up banking as his profession, and was active in floating the Liberty Loans during the War, assisting Frank K. Vanderlip in this work. At the conclusion of the War he was offered the position of Vice-President of one of the largest Trust Companies in the country. He had, however, become interested in the Nation-Wide Campaign, and was induced to accept the position as treasurer, an office which he has held ever since. He has almost completely reorganized Church finances, and last year began the "pay as you go" policy, so that for the first time in its history the Church closed its books January 1, 1927, with a balance, instead of a deficit. He has devoted the same energetic and efficient business methods to the Church's affairs that won for him such high standing in banking circles. From the material point of view he has made great sacrifices in taking up Church work, but he has earned the gratitude of Episcopalians from one end of the country to the other.

THE REV. ELMER N. SCHMUCK was born in Peoria, Ill. After graduating from the Seabury Divinity School, Faribault, Minn., he served several parishes in that state, doing particularly good work at St. John's Church, Minneapolis, where a handsome church now marks his efforts. In 1923 he was called to St. Mark's Church, Denver, Col. While rector of this church, he represented his Diocese in the General Convention of 1923. That year he accepted work with the Field Department of the National Council. Dr. Patton has recently chosen Mr. Schmuck to help him in his work for the American Church Institute for Negroes, and one of his first duties has been to make a visit to, and survey of the schools under this organization. It is the result of this tour of inspection that we are able to present to our readers this week. Mr. Schmuck's wide experience with educational institutions and church work make his opinions especially well worth while.

THE PULPIT OF THE AMERICAN CHURCH

THE CHRISTIAN ATTITUDE TOWARD EVOLUTION

By the Right Reverend Beverley D. Tucker, D. D.

MAY I say in the beginning that I approach this subject, not to minister to any spirit of passing sensationalism, not as one who has a profound knowledge of science, or as one who speaks ex cathedra? As a theologian, I think that I can truthfully say that, as I grow in years, I realize more and more the vastness of truth, human and divine, and my own feeble knowledge of the revelation it presents. I was very much more satisfied when I was young, than I am today, of my ability to cope with any question. I have, however, this advantage, I have lived through eight decades, which, whether in the realm of science or of ethics or of material developments, have witnessed changes unsurpassed in previous ages.

There has been need for a readjustment of attitude toward the problems of thought, but, after all, the truth has not changed, however different our interpretation may be. Our faith in God and in Christ, as the Way, the Truth, the Life, has only been made more assured.

We have learned, first of all, that the realm of science, the knowledge of nature, and the realm of theology, the knowledge of God, are distinct, though related and mutually interpretative. Science has ceased to be dogmatic outside of its own domain, and theology recognizes, or should recognize, that no actual scientific discovery can threaten the truth as to God. On the contrary, it enlarges our conception of the divine.

We have had to learn this truth, the truth that St. John declares in his wonderful prologue to his Gospel, when he says, "The light shineth in darkness, and the darkness overcame it not".

Science, the knowledge of the material universe, has been built up by hypotheses. They are not always certain. But when a fact of science has been demonstrated, it has been found to be not destructive but interpretative of the knowledge of God.

Copernicus, Columbus, Feared by Church.

It is always hard, at first, to realize this, to learn the lesson that was taught, when the Church of Christ trembled lest the theory of Copernicus, that the sun is the center of the solar system and that the earth is but one of the several planets that revolve around it—lest this should contradict the truth of God's Word as to the universe. The truth that the earth was a sphere seemed to be a heresy, and Columbus was deemed to be irreligious for attempting to sail around the world.. The condemnation and torture of Galileo by the inquisition amazes us today. Had Newton lived a century earlier his theory of gravitation would have been condemned as contrary to the truth, and he himself would have suffered persecution. We think this strange, as we look back, and yet there are those today who just as conscientiously fear that the establishment of the theory of evolution, of the development of the universe, would threaten the foundations of our faith.

We live to learn. I look back to the sixties of the last century, when Darwin's theory, which had been foreshadowed again and again, was first propounded. The Christian Church had held to the theory of what may be called fiat Creation. Those wonderful opening chapters in the Book of Genesis, unsurpassed in human literature, which proclaimed to the world, for the first time, that God was the maker of heaven and earth, were held to be an exact scientific account of the process by which the material universe came into existence. The truth itself that back of the immensities of creation there was an Almighty God, a living intelligence, was, I believe, a distinct revelation.

All through the ages men have been feeling after God, if perchance, haply, they might find Him. Their search was but vain until the truth was revealed by God Himself: "In the beginning God created the Heaven and the earth"—a truth which was further interpreted by St. John, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. All things were made by Him, and without Him was not anything made that was made."

These opening chapters of Genesis leave no doubt as to this great truth. But how God made the world is not revealed in scientific form. God has placed man in the universe, and He honors and dignifies man by letting him discover for himself the secrets of the world in which he lives. All human progress has been worked out by men asking Why? and How? and learning more and more the wonders of creation.

Evolution Magnifies God.

And so what we call the theory of evolution, of development, is not a theory that belittles but rather one that magnifies God. It makes God not only a God transcendent above all, and back of all: it makes Him a God immanent, a God in all, upholding all things by the word of His power, guiding and controlling the mysterious forces that lie back of nature, making all things move toward the goal of perfection.

Darwin did not pretend to be a theologian. He was a pure scientist. He says, at the close of his autobiography, that he had become so self-centered in scientific research that other faculties, the love of music, of art, and the religious faculty, what we may call curiosity as to God, had unconsciously become atrophied. He was of all men the least dogmatic outside of his own domain.

The Christian is not obliged to accept the truth of evolution, of development from the smallest beginnings of the universe. He may have no scientific curiosity or no power to face the facts of evolution. But if he does accept what he ascertains to be the established truth of science, he can be just as loyal to his faith in God and Christ as he who rejects it.

To me man is more marvelous as a work of God, if I can trace his evolution from mere protoplasm to man with reasoning faculties, with memory, with the power to think, to will, and to choose, with the vision of God and with the consciousness of his own immortality, than if he were created in a moment in the full possession of these God-like attributes.

Theory Elevates Man.

It does not degrade him if he share his origin with the lifeless world, with amphibious creatures, with the animal creation around him. It magnifies him, it proves him to be the son of God, one into whom God has breathed the breath of life, so that he has become a living soul. The theory of evolution does not lower man by teaching that he is descended from a monkey. It elevates him by showing that he and the animal world around him have the same ancestry, going back through many changes to the primordial beginnings, but that he himself alone has moved onward and upward, until he feels, through Christ, his sonship to God.

The theory of evolution does not limit but expands the Majesty of God. How much more wonderful that God made the world, not as Jupiter exercised his power by the nod of his head, but by slow and surely moving processes, a God not outside of nature, but immanent—working day by day, and hour by hour, evolving the wonder, the beauty, and the glory of the world which we are only beginning to comprehend. God transcendent, dwelling in the light to which no man approacheth, is wonderful; but God immanent, ever present, guiding, ordering, governing all things is more wonderful still. Job said, "Behold I go forward, but He is not there, and backward but I cannot perceive Him, on the left hand where He doth work, but I cannot behold Him. He hideth Himself on the right hand that I cannot see Him".

The Psalmist says, "When I consider the heavens the work of Thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which Thou hast made—what is man that Thou art mindful of him, or the son of man that Thou so regardest him?" One of the later prophets cries almost in despair, "Truly Thou art a God that hideth Thyself, O God of Israel". God seems far off to those who seek Him. But evolution teaches us that He is always near, always working. We learn that we go from the simple to the complex, from the inorganic to the organic, from the lower to the higher, from the imperfect to the perfect, from the first Adam to the second, in whom we see the whole fulness of the Godhead bodily. The process of development is often puzzling, sometimes it seems to turn backward, there are losses and apparent failures, and yet, as we read the story in nature, we learn that the progress is ever onward and upward. There is no standing still, there is no turning back.

St. Paul Expresses Theory.

As St. Paul says, "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the sons of God". That is the theory of evolution, that is development. The Christian world has begun to recognize this, not only as consistent with God's revelation, but as an interpretation of His work as Creator and Maker of heaven and earth. The pessimism which threatened to color all human destiny, as men felt when the theory of evolution was first put forth that life could be expressed only in terms of matter, that he could only trace his lineage from formless protoplasm, or that he was helpless to mould or to determine his own destiny, disappears as we begin to see that there is room in the history of development for choice and for advancement.

Men begin to admit that life impelled by some conscious power has moved and is moving, with losses and recoils here and there, but with steadfast aim from lower to higher, from the imperfect to the perfect. We may not accept the whole or exact philosophy of evolution, scientists differ among themselves, but we begin to recognize that back of it all is not chance but the wisdom and the power of God. It is very significant that Henri Bergson in his Creative Evolution finds himself compelled to recognize a power, a tendency all through the process of the development of the material universe, what he calls l' elan vital, the living leap, often seemingly baffled and repressed, but ever working for the better and the higher. He sees, here and there, the touch—we call it the touch of God— that changes and uplifts, and at last transfigures.

We might ask, "Can I hold the scientific truth which interprets these early chapters of Genesis, without losing my faith in God as Maker of heaven and earth, in Christ as the revelation of the highest possibilities in humanity"? The answer comes as we call the names of the most recent leaders in scientific research—Lord Kelvin, Sir Arthur Thomson, Sir Oliver Lodge—all welcoming the truth of the development of the world and of humanity, as only confirming their faith in a God who is never far off, and who has drawn nearer still in the face of Jesus Christ.

It is a confirmation of this theory of the evolution of the material universe and of the development of man, that we find this process of unfolding running through all things.

Word of God Progressive.

Take the Bible. It is the Word of God, but that Word is progressive. God cannot speak to us in language we cannot understand. "When I was a child," says St. Paul, "I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child." To think that the whole of the Bible, every word that it contains, is of equal value, of the same binding force, of the same clearness as an expression of the divine mind, is to misunderstand the process of revelation. The Book of Judges and the Gospel of St. John are as far apart in value, in the power to reveal the heart and mind of God, as the wealth of Shakespeare, of Milton, and of Browning are from the A. B. C.'s of a five year old child. The divine speech was necessarily phrased in human accents, often rudimentary and imperfect, for God had to speak to those who were under the limitations of elementary human experience and human understanding. He speaks to men as a mother must speak to her child.

There is the human element in the Old Testament. The men were of their own age. They knew the truth only as it had been revealed. But back of the imperfections of the human medium, which account for misinterpretations voice of Jehovah, not as we hear it through Christ or even through St. John and St. Paul, but, as says the writer to the Hebrews, "in sundry times and divers manand for mistakes, there is always the message divine—the ners". It is now clear and now almost indistinct. It is seemingly but a whisper in the dark ages of the Judges. At times it is an undertone in the history of the chosen people, almost silenced by the din of battle and lost in the darkness of apostacy, but always heard by those who had ears to hear. It vibrated with music in the Psalms, until at last in Isaiah and the later prophets it sounded in no uncertain tones the evangel of Christ, as, like an aurora borealis, the watchers on the mountains saw the dawn of the promised day. It was God's truth, simply expressed and limited in a kindergarten age. It flashed forth in the fulness of its light, when at last it was spoken by Christ who is the Word of God.

Development in Ethical Training.

There is an evolution and development in the ethical training of men. We would not like to go back to the age of the patriarchs or the days of the kings for the teaching of morality. Samson stood above his fellow men because he recognized himself as a son of God. But we would not hold Samson up as a pattern of life today. Joshua was a servant of God, but we who pray that the world may never again know the inhumanities of war turn from the story of how he smote his enemies, sparing neither women nor children nor beasts.

Our Lord recognized this development in the ethical world. He did not say that the Old Testament morality was not a morality wonderful in its contrast to the pagan world, but He felt it was only rudimentary, "It was said of old . . . but I say unto you", these words meant the opening of a new page in the Book of Ethics. The Sermon on the Mount, whose idealism is still unreached, represents the larger morality of God. "Ye have heard that it hath been said, an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth— I say unto you that ye resist not evil, but whosoever smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." "Ye have heard that it hath been said, love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy—but I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you, that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven." Vengeance and even self defense were to Him things of the imperfect part. "Put up thy sword within its sheath," He said to Peter, or again, "the Son of Man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them". In spite of the polygamy of old, He proclaimed the sanctity of marriage of one man to one woman. He preached the truth that life is more than meat and the body than raiment and said "Take no thought of what ye shall eat or wherewithal ye shall be clothed". He did not expect the fulness of His ideal of life to come in His own day. But He gave the ideal and toward that the world is moving. He recognized the truth of evolution, "First the seed, then the blade, then the full corn in the ear". He realized that in Him were all the possibilities of humanity, and He showed Himself to men as the pattern, as the goal to which they must reach, if they would be the sons of God. It is all development. Sometimes we despair, but if we look to Christ we hear no note of pessimism. He is the supreme optimist. We look at our bodies frail and helpless; how can life endure, we ask—and then we hear the words of St. Paul: "It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption. It is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory. It is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory. It is sown in weakness, it is raised in power. It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body."

Welcomes Evolution.

And so I welcome evolution, whether in the development of the material universe, whether in the making of the perfect man, whether in the unfolding of history and the purification of ethics, or whether in the building up of the Kingdom of God.

Christ Himself, the greatest of all optimists, never doubted. He came into the world, the true Light that lighteneth all men. He never doubted His ultimate triumph. He never lost sight of the perfect goal, when God's creation shall have reached, in spite of seeming failure and disasters, the culmination of that development, that marvelous evolution of formless protoplasm, when God Himself shall say, "It is very good".

"The Light has come into the world, and the darkness overcame it not!"

THE BOY AND HIS CHURCH

WHAT BECOMES OF THE COLLECTION

By Lewis B. Franklin

THERE is a familiar story told of three Scotchmen who went to Church one morning thinking there was to be no collection and when they found that an offering was to be taken, one of the Scotchmen immediately fainted away and the other two carried him out.

Few people are so mean that they avoid a collection as these Scotchmen did, but there are many of us to whom the collection seems the most uninteresting part of the Church service. This feeling is, I think, due to the fact that we do not appreciate just what is comprehended in the simple act of giving some of our money to the work of the Church.

In the first place, we ought to realize just what money is. It is not wealth in itself, but merely a measure of wealth. Real wealth consists of things material value, such as homes, factories, stores, railroads, farms, mines, forests. Pieces of paper, such as stocks, bonds, mortgages and money, which we frequently think of as wealth, are merely evidences of wealth. All of this real tangible wealth comes from one source—human labor applied to the natural resources which are given to man as the free gift of God. The coal in the ground has no value until man's labor, both of the brain and of the body, is brought to bear upon it, making it available for the use of mankind. Through human labor the iron ore and the limestone become steel; through human labor the steel becomes the framework of a building; through human labor the clay becomes the brick and through human labor the brick is used to complete the building. The building is wealth and if a mortgage is issued then that mortgage is an evidence of wealth, but the real wealth remains in the building.

If then, wealth is the product of labor and money is the measure of wealth, the giving of money is the giving of labor and, therefore, the giving of self.

A man who works in a mill and for his day's work receives four dollars, takes two of this amount and places it on the plate at the Sunday morning service. Has he done an uninteresting or stupid thing? By no means. He has given to God a half a day of himself, his toil and his sweat, the product of his brain and his muscle. He has to a degree carried out the pledge he made in the Holy Communion Service, "And here we offer and present unto Thee, O Lord, ourselves, our souls and bodies, to be a reasonable, holy and living sacrifice unto Thee". The thing which he has given is not a dead, intangible, dirty piece of paper, but part of a life, full of personality.

These facts are recognized by our Church in its Prayer Book. The only provision for taking an offering is found in the most solemn service of the Church, that of the Holy Communion. The rubric gives instructions as to how the offering shall be taken, "and reverently bring it to the Priest, who shall humbly present and place it upon the Holy Table". Just think what this means. On that Holy Table, or Altar, only three things are allowed—the Prayer Book, the sacred elements of the Communion Service and money. The cross, the flowers and other decorations are not on the altar, but behind the altar. But it is eminently fitting that the thing which measures the value of part of a man's life should be placed there.

What becomes of the money after it has been given? Does it lose that individuality of which we have spoken? By no means. In most of our parishes today a large part of the offering is taken through the means of the duplex envelope, part of the money going for the current expenses of the parish and part of the money going for the extension of Christ's Kingdom in the Diocese and throughout the world, what we call "Missions".

"Current expenses" sounds mighty stupid, yet here again we find that this classification includes little that is not human. Part of this current expense money goes to buy coal and the price paid for the coal means payment for the labor of the men who transported it and the men who mined it, toiling in their underground workings. The light which lights our church building seems far removed from any human agency and yet it is human labor which has produced it and the money which is paid for it is paid for human labor ministering to the worship of God.

And then there is the more personal and individual side of "Current Expenses". Part of it goes to support the life of the man who keeps our church building heated for us and cleaned for us; part of it goes to support the life of the man who is our spiritual leader and guide, our rector. Part of it goes to help mould the lives of the youth of our parish in the Church School. In every item there is life, rich and throbbing.

And then the other side of the duplex envelope, which we call "Missions". As I have said, part of the money in the "Missions" side of the envelope goes to the Diocese in which we live, and here too, we find that it is transformed once more into life. It becomes the City Missionary laboring in the gaol, the asylum, the poorhouse, the home for the aged. Perhaps part of it is used in the direct support of the unfortunates in some of these institutions. Or else it becomes the worker in the country districts, carrying help and cheer and the message of Christ to the people in lonely places.

The other part of the money in the "Missions" side of the envelope goes to the work under the supervision of our National Council which includes practically all of the work done by our Church, which is neither parochial nor diocesan. Part of your offering which goes to the National Council may be shortly transformed into the life of a priest of the Church living year after year on the shores of the Arctic Ocean, ministering to the little groups of Eskimo people, traveling up and down the coast in the dead of winter, perhaps on days in which the sun rises for only a brief hour or so above the horizon, and with the thermometer ten or twenty degrees below zero. He brings to these primitive people the message of the Christ in all its fulness, a message made real by his work not only for their souls, but for their minds and bodies. Another part of the money may be transformed into the life of a nurse in our little mission hospital in Liberia, where the heat of the tropics is just as hard to endure as the Arctic cold and where the need of loving care is just as great.

And then part of the money is going into politics, the kind of politics that is going to decide the fate of the world. It is helping to support great institutions of learning in China, the land where live one-fourth of all the people in the world, a land of little learning and great potential power. Through the leadership created largely in these schools and universities is to come in some future day the stable government which will enable China to take its place among the great nations of the world.

And so we might go on through the list, finding everywhere stories full of heroic service and romance. The stupid, inert thing we call money has ceased to be stupid and inert; it is part of our own life transported to distant fields so that we, too, may share in the great adventure of the extension of the Kingdom.

HOW A PRAYER BOOK HELPED ONE MISSION.

A stolen carpet in which a Prayer Book had inadvertently been gathered up in its folds was a decisive factor in the development of what is now becoming a very promising mission. Calvary Chapel is located at Hillcrest, a suburb of Wilmington, Delaware. The work was organized and a small building erected in 1855, but the work was for years allowed to drag. In the course of time some miscreants began making ravages by breaking windows and doors and otherwise injuring the property. Finally some one rolled up a piece of the Church carpet, and bore it off and sold it. When the carpet was unwrapped, there dropped out a Prayer Book with the name of the Church upon it. The matter was reported to the police and before long they had captured the thief. The incident so aroused interest in the Church that the movement was begun which has resulted in the present vigorous life. The latest achievement is the erection of a Church School and social center building. Under the supervision of the Rev. Charles A. Rantz, rector of the Church of the Ascension, to which the property of the Calvary Mission at present belongs, the local members have carried on a Church School, a Parish Guild, a Junior Guild, a Girls' Club, an orchestra and a Chapter of the Order of Sir Galahad.—J. H. E.

Church finance really depends upon love and good will to Christ and His Church; when we love Him and His service we shall have solved the financial questions; for all will give regularly and gladly.—Bishop Carey.

THE SCHOOLS OF THE AMERICAN CHURCH INSTITUTE FOR NEGROES

By the Reverend Elmer N. Schmuck

WHEN I started on a visit to the schools of the American Church Institute for Negroes several questions were in my mind by which I was going to measure their value for my own satisfaction. Were they meeting a real need for the Negro population? Were they giving a training to these Negro boys and girls that would fit them for useful service and a place in life? Were they efficiently administered? Finally were they training the students in Christian character and in the spirit of the Church? I believe these are fair questions by which to judge any of the missionary activities which challenge our attention and claim our support as Churchmen. Since the American Church Institute for Negroes is a part of the work administered in partnership of the whole Church with the dioceses in the state in which an Institute School is located, I was especially anxious to learn the value of its work. I did not visit all, but did see five of them in the time at my disposal, which gave me a very clear idea of the policy of the Institute and what was being done.

The first place visited was The Fort Valley and Industrial School at Fort Valley, Georgia, of which H. A. Hunt is the Principal. This school, with its buildings and some ninety acres of land, is located in the most strategic part of the great State of Georgia, in the midst of a Negro population of more than 500,000.

Principal Hunt took charge of a meagre beginning in 1904, and has guided its development to the present time. Here, indeed, is being done a splendid piece of work in every way. The physical equipment consists of a newly constructed Carnegie Library; Royal C. Peabody Trades building; a dormitory; and a building containing the dining room and teachers' dormitory. There is in process of construction another building, with an adequate auditorium. Cottages, barns and other buildings, mostly outgrown and old, make up the plant.

The extremely interesting feature of this school's work is its community activities carried on by trained workers. These go out among the Negro people who constitute three-fourths of the neighborhood population. By these workers Farm Demonstration; Home Demonstration; Jeanes Work; Vocational Agriculture; Social Service and Health work are carried into the entire community. One can hardly estimate the practical and far-reaching value of such teaching.

Here is an institution with some seven hundred students; twenty-eight instructors, teaching eight trades and industries, and operating on an annual budget of $79,000. The thorough training given the students makes it known as the best training school for Negroes in the state. The fine Christian spirit of the Principal is reflected in the life of the student body and the entire school. One gains the impression here of an institution that is efficiently serving in a maximum way, not only the student body of the school, but the whole Negro population in the vicinity with every bit of equipment it has. There is no lost motion in its operation.

Next I visited The Vorhees Normal and Industrial School at Denmark, S. C. Here Principal J. E. Blanton is in charge of a most successful and flourishing school. His sane leadership and wise administration are making this school a tremendous influence in South Carolina for the training of the Negro youth. One gets the impression that this is a veritable bee-hive of industry. There are over six hundred students; thirty-four teachers; instructing pupils in eight different trades. With the buildings there are over five hundred acres of land. This institution carries on the public school work for the Negro children of the town, which makes an appropriation of $1,500 a year for this work. The children's school is literally packed. Farming, sewing, carpentry, cooking, blacksmithing, construction, printing, etc., are taught, to fit them to be helpful members of their communities. In all subjects the teaching is practical, with the purpose of making the student thorough. Here again Christian idealism is dominant.

St. Augustine's School, the oldest of our Church Schools for Negroes, was chartered in 1867 as St. Augustine's Normal and Collegiate Institute. While the practical and vocational subjects are taught here, the training of teachers and preparation for the ministry and for leaders among the Colored people, has been emphasized as the object, as the charter states.

A junior college is part of the School's curriculum. It is hoped soon to add the last two years, so that St. Augustine's may become, indeed, our center for training Colored Negro superintendents of schools, doctors, nurses, ministers and Church workers.

St. Augustine's is admirably located in Raleigh, N. C., to do this work. The Rev. Edgar H. Goold is president and principal. His careful administration, following that of Rev. Dr. A. B. Hunter, has made St. Augustine's a school of which the Church may be proud. Here one is struck with the keen and alert student, bent on making the most of his opportunities. One can understand how such a school has effectually trained a large number of our Negro clergy, as well as many men and women to be leaders among their people. There are about five hundred students; some thirty teachers, and about one hundred and ten acres of land. They are taught ten trades.

The annual budget is $83,000. An outstanding feature in connection with the school, is St. Agnes' Hospital. It serves, not only a large Negro population, but has about thirty-five nurses constantly in training. Another important unit is the recently completed Bishop Tuttle Memorial Training House for Negro Women. This building is on the same grounds, and is doing a wonderfully fine work.

We can be justly proud, as Churchmen, of this fine institution, the work it is doing and the type of student it is sending out.

St. Paul's Normal and Industrial School at Lawrenceville, Virginia, is one of the most interesting and best known of our schools of the Institute for Training Negro Boys and Girls. Its founder, the Rev. James S. Russell, D. D., has been its Principal from the beginning, thirty-seven years ago. His fine Christian character is indelibly marked upon this school of his creation. He is a man of vision and faith. His careful management has won the support and confidence of the white people and the loyalty and devotion of his own race. The property today contains about 1,600 acres, some thirty buildings in the way of equipment, and a beautiful chapel. About seven hundred students are not only being trained by thirty-eight efficient teachers through high-school grades, but in some sixteen trades and industries. The buildings were erected by the students. The lumber was cut and sawed on the farm; bricks were made by those attending the school. In fact, the whole institution has been built by the long line of students who have attended it. Not only have they done this, but they have been the builders of seventy-five per cent of all the buildings in the town of Lawrenceville.

Nearly all the trades and industries are taught: farming, sewing, carpentry, brick laying, plastering, cooking, nursing, teaching, blacksmithing; tailoring, printing and a host of other things. When one sees the earnestness of the students, one can understand how it is that St. Paul's graduates are regarded in that part of Virginia, as being real leaders of the Colored people in everything that is best in Christian character and as capable workers in their communities. I would say that a very marked characteristic of this school is its real missionary spirit of helping to spread Christianity. No wonder is it said that a St. Paul's graduate has never been known to be in the criminal class. Brunswick County, in which the school is situated, and the adjoining counties are the only ones in the State of Virginia where the Negro outnumbers the white people, and yet the influence of St. Paul's is such that the criminal record of the Negro is lower than anywhere else in the Commonwealth. A wonderful testimony to its influence. In a legislative debate, the member of the General Assembly from Brunswick declared, on the floor of the House of Delegates: "We have no race problem in our county, thanks to the wise policy and helpful leadership of Archdeacon Russell and his school." Another declared: "Negroes of Brunswick, thanks to St. Paul's School, are the most thrifty and law-abiding in the state." It was the Commonwealth's Attorney of that county, who said in a public school, that, in his, "more than twenty-five years' service as public prosecutor, he had never had brought before him for crime or misdemeanor of any sort a single student of St. Paul's School". Well may Virginia Church people, and all Churchmen everywhere, be proud of this really great school for the Negro people in that fine old state. When one thinks of this, together with the other estimates made by Mr. Jackson Davis of The Rockefeller Foundation, the General Education Board, that St. Paul's accomplishes more for the amount of money it expends, than any other similar institution for Colored people, one can get an idea of the efficiency with which the training and work is being carried on. All this, I am sure, makes a tremendous appeal to Virginia Churchmen, and that generous and liberal support will be given to the effort made in Richmond and elsewhere to more adequately equip St. Paul's for their present pressing needs. The annual budget expense of the school is $138,000, including board and fees paid by students.

There is so much more that could be said about these schools that would be interesting and worth while, but space is limited and all that I can do is to give but a glimpse of what they are doing and the splendid way in which it is being done. I saw earnest students; fine devoted groups of teachers; efficient administration; a great work being done under consecrated leaders in the name of Christ for His Church and the Nation. I finished my visits of The American Church Institute Schools, convinced of their supreme value. They are a credit to this Church in meeting a real need; in training the boys and girls to useful service in life; in being efficiently administered and in training up a high type of Christan Negro men and women for Church and nation. The one weak feature of all that I saw, was the lack of adequate equipment to do a greater and better work. Frame buildings constructed years ago; lack of room for students and work, demand that Churchmen everywhere give liberal support to rehabilitate and enlarge these schools to meet the need of the present time. This work of The American Church Institute for Negroes in these, and the other schools, warrants our generous and loyal support to equip them to do the work of the Master among the great Negro population of the South. I feel in this we are doing as fine a piece of constructive missionary work as can be found anywhere in this Church. Let us meet the challenge and make the "specials" in the Church's Program for the Institute realities for these schools.

Recognizing the sound policy of the Institute, and its statesmanlike administration under the leadership of Dr. Patton, who is himself a Southerner and Virginian, the General Education Board (Rockefeller Foundation) has recently appropriated $200,000 towards the Church's official building equipment program of $600,000 for these three schools, St. Paul's, Lawrenceville, Va.; St. Augustine's, Raleigh, N. C., and Fort Valley School, Fort Valley, Ga.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE COMMUNITY

"The Kingdom Come, Thy Will be done on earth"

Edited by the Reverend R. Cary Montague

COMMENTS ON CHILD TRAINING.

By Mary Evelyn Brydon, M. D.

Article XII.—The Ten Commandments

(Continued.)

The Fourth Commandment—Rest.

There are two parts to the Fourth Commandment, and we will consider them separately:

a. Keep one day, the Sabbath Day, holy.

b. Work for six days, and then stop working and rest.

Teach your child to keep the Sabbath Day holy. There is such a difference of opinion on the subject of Sunday laws and Sunday observance that I think it wiser for me not to attempt to interpret this Commandment for you. You must think it through for yourself. This you should do first by careful study of the Bible references on the subject, and here are a few from my concordance:

Isaiah 56:2.
Isaiah 58:13, 14.
Luke 4:16.

Second, by going directly to our Lord Himself and asking Him what to do and just how to teach the observance of His Day in your home. If you will do this you will be on safe ground.

I must warn you, however, that in whatever way you have your family observe this day you will have some criticisers. It would be well, therefore, to have a good standard in mind when you make your decision. And just here let me impress upon you one thing. When you have made your decision, stick to it. Do not let yourself be wishy-washy in the matter. If you listen to this or to that faddist, you will merely become confused in your mind. Make up your mind, you and the father together. It has been said that modern people are prone to reopen decisions and make them all over again. Never let this be said of you. How can your child depend upon your word if you are continually changing it? Study the subject carefully and after looking to our Lord for His guidance accept a standard and stick to it until you have a perfectly good reason for changing it.

Do you know what "holy" means? Let us look up your old friend, Webster: "Holy, (a) Set apart to the service or worship of deity; hallowed; sacred". Is there anything clearer than that?

A generation ago the Sabbath Day was kept holy, that is, it was set apart to the worship and service of God. Those who had this godly up-bringing testify to the fact that they owe what they are today to this training. Many of the biggest leaders today in public life, in thought, in community work, are giving this wonderful service to their country or community because of the background of spiritual training received in childhood.

In view of the present-day tendency to rebound too far from what is called "Puritanism" many conscientious mothers are puzzled to know just how to have their children spend the day. The more your community custom is to allow public recreation the harder for you to see your duty clearly. A summing up of my ideas on a Sunday schedule may be helpful.

First: If possible every member of the family including all children over three years of age attend church services at least once; any shut-in ought to have the opportunity of a service at home. Every child of kindergarten age or over, must have instruction in the Bible. This, of course, may be at Sunday School or at home, but no child should ever be allowed to miss this instruction, wherever you plan for him to receive it. But remember that Sunday School can never take the place of regular Church service.

Second: I think that the whole atmosphere of the day should be of a spiritual nature, but in no sense gloomy or harsh. As regards conversation on that day, cannot the family agree to exclude all unfriendliness, scandal, critical comments, etc., from the table or parlor conversation, and instead connect it with Sabbath Day activities as much as possible? The work and plaything that hold attention on week days, the books, toys, dolls, etc., might be replaced by special ones. I should never attempt to make out a Sunday schedule for a child without including time to play. I know a very successful mother who has a "Sunday cupboard". It is never opened except on Sundays. Her three children look forward with the keenest pleasure to Sunday, anticipating the weekly opening of the cupboard.

Third: A little sacred music should find a place in the day's pleasure. If you have no piano, teach the hymns without accompaniment. In the Sunday evening twilight there is often opportunity to sing together the hymns sung that day in Church or Sunday School, and thus help the child to learn the words with the music; this will ever be one of the sweet memories of home.

Fourth: As all children need to learn something about God's great handiwork, Nature, why should not Sunday afternoon be a wonderful time to take them to the park or to the woods? What better way of using the time could a father have—one who is busy all the week and has little opportunity for getting acquainted with his children, than to take them regularly for a walk on Sundays? They can together learn about trees, wild flowers, rocks, birds, and the other little things of the woods. And as they get older, when the boys especially need help and advice that only their father can give—here is his opportunity to be the truest friend to them that they can ever know. He will receive his reward; for under these informal circumstances, his children will bring their little confidences to him sure of his help, and in time he will be able to guide them through the pitfalls of their adolescence.

Perhaps you would like to know the Sunday schedule of one busy mother—the one who invented the "Sunday cupboard" mentioned above. No day in the week was as carefully planned as this one. In general, the order of the day was this:

1. Family prayers.
2. Breakfast.
3. Sunday School.
4. Whole family to Church.
5. Dinner. Uncritical discussion of the sermon at dessert.
6. Opening the "Sunday cupboard" for play time.
7. Walk in park with father.
8. Supper.
9. Family Prayers.
10. Singing Hymns.
11. Younger children to bed.
12. Older children and one parent to church.

Daily Bible Reading.

March 20—Eph. 5:1-14.
March 21—Psalm 84.
March 22—Titus 2:1-15.
March 23—Heb. 6:1-20.
March 24—2 Cor. 3:1-18.
March 25—Luke 1:26-38.
March 26—Matt. 5:43-34.
March 27—Gal. 4:21-31.
March 28—Gen. 41:1-44.
March 29—1 Sam. 17:1-58.
March 30—Dan. 6:1-28.
March 31—Amos 3:1-15.
April 1—Ruth 1:1-18.
April 2—Esther 4:1-17.
April 3—Heb. 9:11-15.
April 4—Heb. 2:1-8.
April 5—Heb. 3:1-19.
April 6—Heb. 4:1-16.
April 7—Heb. 5:1-14.
April 8—Heb. 6:1-20.
April 9—Heb. 16:1-22.

Tendencies in Modern Protestantism

Report of an Address of the Rev. Harris E. Kirk.

By the Reverend James A. Mitchell.

AN address of great significance, reflecting the intelligent opinion of modern Protestant leadership, was delivered in Baltimore recently before a great mass meeting of laymen from all the evangelical bodies of the city. The speaker, the Rev. Harris E. Kirk, D. D., occupies an unique position in the city by the influence of his pulpit over young people and professional men. Last year he refused a call to the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church in New York.

The announced subject of the address was "The Situation of Protestant Christianity in Baltimore", but the speaker dealt in the main with the larger issue of modern Protestantism and its problems. His conclusions will be of particular interest to Episcopalians. A digest of this portion of his address follows:

1. An analysis of the environment in which the Church works.

In the Middle Ages life was God-centered. Religion was the mother of the arts. The age was not moral, but was more conscious of God. During the Renaissance interest drifted away to man and his growing material activities. Today, in consequence, our view is circumscribed and partial; we are interested in particulars and not in the whole. We are over-impressed by bigness and mass. This has led to several results.

(1) The humility of the Middle Ages has been displaced by self-assertiveness. Hence there is a loss of dependence on God.

(2) There is a non-religious motive for living. Culture, art and science have taken the place of religion as "ends".

(3) The Church is no longer of one mind but is a Church of adaptation and compromise. Hence there is a loss of responsibility over souls.

(4) Fear of God has been displaced by fear of the mechanistic life; no longer do we feel the immediacy of the eternal. Thus the soul, and the beauty and glory of living early depart.

(5) There is a new asceticism. Formerly asceticism was a sacrifice of the world; now it is a sacrifice of cultural possibilities, of the Church, of the nation and of God, to be successful in business.

(6) A revolt of the spirit against the tyranny of things is inevitable. This is difficult to discern but is there at the very center. Science having built up the modern world now turns and says it leads nowhere. The lowest form of such thinking is behaviorism.

Amid these discouraging symptoms there are others which may eventually lead us out.

(1) There is a break-down in non-religious motives for living. "Frog" philosophy, which sees the lily pods and mud, but cannot view the whole as does the bird, and "cafeteria" thought, are dying out in our colleges.

(2) The infallibilities of science are waning. In many respects science has been a fine ethical teacher and has not always been appreciated by the Church. It has a real love of truth. But its search for truth obliges it to follow the results of its own investigation. Hence, if God exists and the spiritual world is real, science will ultimately reach this conclusion.

(3) The searching mind is making new demands upon the Church. The Church has been too much concerned with comfort and external conduct. It has been tied to the Anglo-Saxon idea of keeping things as they are, and to an emphasis on mere ephemeral morals of an age. Our time is weary unto death of this sort of religion.

II. What kind of religion is most likely to solve these problems?

Protestantism must learn that religion has two aspects: to behold the beauty of the Lord and then to inquire in His Temple; it must include both worship and teaching. The non-liturgical Churches have so exaggerated the sermon and the personality of the minister that God is not felt in Church unless the preacher is in the pulpit and the crowd in the pews. There is too much secularity in modern Protestantism. The Church is not the place for paid agitators; for prohibition propaganda; for condemnations of certain newspapers—but for salvation of souls. The laymen cannot expect to have a prophet in the pulpit if they demand a "go-getter" all week.

After the Minister

By The Reverend Nelson P. Dame.

One of the difficulties which the Episcopal Church encounters in her effort to win men for God, is the way in which her Liturgy is used.

An unlearned man can go into one of the non-liturgical Churches and take as much part as anybody else in the service that is being held, which is not much at best. But not so in an Episcopal Church. There he finds people using a book out of which they read their part of the service; and he cannot read very well, or he has left his glasses at home, or the light is bad, or he would not know how to find the places in the book if he had one, and often he cannot find a book, even if he knew how to use it. For one reason or another he cannot do as most others around him are doing, and he is made to feel that he is a stranger, an outsider.

Now that is not the fault of the Church, or of her liturgical form of worship. It is due to the fact that the minister and Church people either do not know of any other way of using the Liturgy than that to which they have been accustomed, or if they know of another way, prefer to use it to suit themselves, regardless of others who are not Church people.

But there is another way of using our services than that which is general in the Church today: a way that would make it possible for the most unlearned man to take almost as much part in it as any one else. He need not be able to read at all. He does not have to have a book. In one congregation that I recall, very few people could read at all; and they were not allowed to use a book; and yet the responses of this unlearned congregation were far better than they were in the Seminary Chapel in my time there.

This way of using the Liturgy is the ancient Catholic way. In the days of the Reformation in England, there were very few books, and still fewer people who could read them even if they had had them. And yet the Church was called on to minister to the masses of these unlettered people, which she did most successfully.

In the rubric before the General Confession in the Morning and Evening service, the Church requires the prayer following to be said by the people "after the minister", instead of with him, as it is now generally done in the Church.

At the time of the revision of the Prayer Book after the Commonwealth in England (1662), "Bishop Cosin" (of Durham), one of the Committee, "erased the word 'after' in the rubric and substituted 'with', but the original word was very carefully restored. 'After the minister' means that each clause is to be said first by the minister alone, and then repeated by the whole congregation alone: i. e., while the minister remains silent, as in the case of a response after a versicle".—Blount's Annotated Book of Common Prayer, p. 182.

Not only so. The Church had the Lord's Prayer, the Confessions, the Creeds, the Trisagion, the "Duty to God" and the "Duty to My Neighbor" in the Catechism, and other portions of her services which the people were to say, divided into sentences, each beginning with a capital letter, that there might be no uncertainty on that point. The Canticles, the Gloria in Excelsis, the Te Deum, the Psalms, which we now often read in the smaller Churches, were meant to be sung, and so were not divided into sentences; but where they have to be said, they can be recited by the people after the minister in the same way.

This use of our service would be quite novel to us now; but it would be equally novel to hear everybody in the congregation taking part in the worship of God, even in the smallest country congregations. These often consist very largely of people of other communions, who now take no part in our services, but have come to hear the sermon. A little novelty of that sort would not hurt anybody. Used in this way our splendid Liturgy would have a tremendous value, not merely as a vehicle of true worship, but also as a means of religious education, which cannot be gotten in any other way. Let's try it.

Church Intelligence

The New General Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

At the recent meeting in Philadelphia of the National Executive Committee of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Mr. G. Frank Shelby, carrying into effect a purpose expressed by him at previous meetings of the Committee, and postponed by him from time to time at their request, presented his resignation, which was, upon his insistence, regretfully accepted. Thereupon Mr. Leon C. Palmer was unanimously elected General Secretary of the Brotherhood and also with the cordial approval of the Editor, Mr. Randall, he was appointed Associate Editor of St. Andrew's Cross. Mr. Palmer has accepted his election, and will remove to Philadelphia and take up his duties there April 1.

Mr. Palmer was born in Fairport, New York, and was reared from early childhood on a cotton plantation in Dallas County, Alabama. He is the son of the Rev. Stephen D. Palmer, who before entering the ministry was a newspaper man, and who is now rector of St. Stephen's Church, Eutaw, Alabama.

The new General Secretary was graduated from the University of the South in 1909, being given the degree of B. A. in course, and one year later the degree of B. D., being the only person in the history of the University to take the full theological course and degree solely as preparation for religious work as a layman without intention of taking Holy Orders. While at Sewanee, also, Mr. Palmer won the Williston Prize in Metaphysics, the Richmond Medal in History, and the second honor in Hebrew. He is a member of the college fraternity of Kappa Sigma.

While serving the Alabama Sunday School Association, Mr. Palmer was promoted successively from the post of Office Secretary to those of Field Secretary, Superintendent of the Adult Bible Class Department, and finally General Secretary of the Association. He went from Alabama to Spartanburg, South Carolina, to become General Secretary of the South Carolina Sunday School Association, which position he occupied until 1925 when he accepted the position of Field Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, making his home at Sewanee, and having his field of work generally in the South.

During these years Mr. Palmer not only served the Brotherhood assiduously, but he served the Church as Chairman of the Church School Commission, Department of Religious Education, in the Province of Sewanee. He also gave numerous lectures and summer school courses at the University of Alabama, the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, the University of South Carolina, Winthrop College, and the Theological Department of the University of the South.

In September, 1926, Mr. Palmer was temporarily released by the Brotherhood from his work on the field staff, that he might become Bishop Darst's chief assistant in the executive work of the Nation-Wide Bishops' Crusade, and at the headquarters at Washington Mr. Palmer did distinguished service as the Executive Secretary of the National Commission on Evangelism, having the Crusade in charge.

Mr. Palmer has a wife and three children, and it may be said here that Mrs. Palmer herself not only has been an able help-meet in the usual ways of womanhood, but she has been of invaluable assistance to Mr. Palmer as a helper in the office in the several places where his talents have found their outlet. They will remove to Philadelphia at once, and have already leased a home in the suburb of Lansdowne.

Mr. Shelby, the retiring General Secretary, has been made a Vice-President, with such duties as may be assigned him by the President. Mr. Shelby has been on the secretarial staff of the Brotherhood since January 1, 1905, first as a Field Secretary, then—during the War—as Secretary of Personnel, in the securing of Brotherhood secretaries for the army and navy camps, and since September, 1918, as General Secretary. Mr. Shelby's work as a Field Secretary was chiefly—at first—in the East, and particularly in the New York Metropolitan District, and later in the Far West, from which he was summoned to the National headquarters to take up the war work when the nation entered the world conflict. As the Brotherhood's General Secretary, Mr. Shelby has traveled widely throughout the Church, and hosts of friends everywhere will rejoice that as a member of the staff of officers he will retain his connection with the work.

Five Mexicans Ordained to the Diaconate.

One of the greatest days in the history of the Missionary District of Mexico was the first Sunday in Lent, March 6, 1927, when five candidates for Deacon's Orders were ordained by Bishop Creighton in Christ Church Cathedral, Mexico City. The day for which they all had longed and prayed was a glorious one of clear air and warm sun.

On the previous night the Bishop had the candidates with him for final instructions and preparation. Archdeacon Watson said the Penitential Office and had special prayers. Then the Bishop spoke on the practical side of the ministry, honesty, truthfulness, the dedication of time, etc. After prayers by Presbitero Saucedo, the Bishop spoke again, about the spiritual side of the ministry, and, after further prayers by the Rev. Efrain Salinas, said the blessing.

Of the following day the Bishop writes: "Christ Church was truly Mexican this morning". Some members of the English congregation were present, together with many members of the congregation of San Jose de Gracia, San Pedro Martir, Popotla and other nearby missions, with delegations from Hooker School and Sagrado Nombre. "It seemed strange to see the graceful rebosos of the women, and the sombreros of the men, and to hear the cries of the little children, but it made me very happy." Representatives from Gobernacion were in the congregation, and two "technicos" in uniform were there, one on each side of the church.

Morning Prayer was said by Mr. Philip A. Leach. He is a vestryman of Christ Church, one of the lay readers who served during the period of inhibition, and a postulant looking forward to Holy Orders.

The officers of the service were: Master of ceremonies, the Very Rev. H. D. Peacock; chaplains to the Bishop, Dean Peacock and Archdeacon Watson.

The order of the service was as follows: Hymn, "Christ is Made the Sure Foundation"; sermon, the Rev. Efrain Salinas; hymn, "Our Blest Redeemer"; presentation of candidates; hymn, one verse, "Saviour When in Dust to Thee"; litany, the Rev. F. Orihuela; hymn, "God of the Prophets"; Holy Communion; epistle, the Rev. L. J. Saucedo; hymn, "Veni Creator"; examination and ordination; gospel, Samuel Cespedes; Nicene Creed; offering; anthem, "How Lovely Are the Messengers"; Holy Communion resumed and continued to end of administration, in English. The remainder, special prayers and blessing, in Spanish; hymn, "The Church's One Foundation".

Everything up to the Nicene Creed was in Spanish, save the sung portions, which were rendered by Christ Church choir.

Those ordained were Jose Filogonio Gomez, Jose Nicolas Robredo, Samuel Cespedes, Jose Martinez, Samuel Ramirez.

In the chancel with the Bishop were Dean Peacock, Archdeacon Watson and Presbiteros Efrain Salinas, Fausto Orihuela, L. J. Saucedo, Daniel Romero, L. Y. Caballero, Josue Miranda and Miguel C. Camara.

"All who attended," says the Bishop, "felt that the service was stately, reverent and truly blessed by the presence of God's Holy Spirit received in peculiar manner by these young soldiers of Christ, and in marked degree by all who were privileged to be present.

In an accompanying letter Bishop Creighton says: "I had to buy material from my discretionary fund for stoles for these young men. The work of making them was done at Sagrado Nombre. I also had to buy the Testaments from the discretionary fund. (It is almost used up. What am I to do?)"

The National Federation of Church Clubs.

The 1927 Annual Conference of the National Federation of Church Clubs of the United States will be held at Briarcliff Lodge, Briarcliff Manor, N. Y., beginning Thursday evening, May 5 and continuing through Friday and Saturday, May 6 and 7.

The general subject of the Conference is the office work of laymen in the Church.

The meeting is not merely for members of Church Clubs, but will be a great gathering of laymen from all parts of the country.

An invitation is cordially extended to every layman of the Episcopal Church to be present at the conference.

Briarcliff Lodge is thirty miles by excellent roads from New York City. There is also convenient train service on the Hudson River Division of the New York Central. The station is Scarborough. The Lodge offers agreeable accommodations for those attending the conference; large rooms for the meetings; and opportunities for the recreation and social acquaintance which should be a part of such a gathering. The management offers a flat rate of ten dollars a day to those who attend the Federation meeting.

For the program, and other information concerning the Conference, address Edward R. Hardy, Secretary, 7 East 48th Street, New York City.

For accommodations, address Briarcliff Lodge, Briarcliff Manor, N. Y.

Appoint Commission on Problems In China.

Conditions in China have been causing Bishops Graves, Roots and Huntington much anxiety, fully shared by the Department of Missions. Recent letters and cables from the Bishops have urged the Department to send a commission to confer with them regarding the problems facing the Church in China. At a special meeting held on March 18 the Department carefully reviewed the situation and unanimously voted to comply with the request of the Bishops. The Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Virginia, and the Executive Secretary of the Department, Dr. John W. Wood, were asked to serve on the commission, with the understanding that if, in the judgment of the Presiding Bishop and his advisers, it seemed desirable so to do, a third member should be added. As Bishop Tucker was nominated for this service by Bishop Brown of Virginia, it is hoped that in spite of the heavy diocesan schedule Bishop Tucker will be able to accept. The Department felt that he would be an invaluable member of the commission in view of his long experience in the Orient and his unrivaled grasp of missionary problems and policies. It is hoped that the commission will arrive in China before May 1.

Special Meeting of the House of Bishops.

A call for a special meeting of the House of Bishops, to meet in Calvary Church, New York City, on June 1, has been issued by the Presiding Bishop. The meeting is called, following the assent of twelve bishops, to act upon the resignation of the Rt. Rev. Theodore P. Thurston, D. D., Missionary Bishop of Oklahoma, and possibly to elect his successor. Provision is made in the call for the transaction of "any other business that may be lawfully presented at a special session". Preceding the meeting there will be an opening service in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

Will The Church at Home Help?

A cable from Bishop Nichols received March 15, gives the following information concerning the earthquake of March 7 in the northwestern part of the District of Kyoto:

"Only one Japanese Church member lost life.

"Fifteen families entirely burned out.

"The Japanese Church has already contributed its utmost for relief of our own people as well as contributing to the General Relief Fund.

"We need $1,000 additional to meet personal needs of Japanese fellow Churchman.

"Our churches at Kaya and Miyazu completely wrecked. We need $9,000 to replace them. Will the Church at home help us meet this disaster?"

Cables From China.

A cable received from Shanghai on March 14 gives the following information:

"Mrs. F. E. Lund and children, and Mrs. Vincent H. Gowen have arrived at Shanghai.

"American Consul at Nanking has not advised women and children leaving yet.

"All are safe at Shanghai."

A cable received from Hankow on March 14, gives the following information:

"Situation unchanged. Miss C. A. Couch and Miss J. C. Wilson have returned to station."

A cable received from Bishop Huntington on March 14 says:

"All are safe. Unsuccessful attempts being made to borrow property. There is no cause for anxiety at present."

Cables received March 15 from all three Bishops in China give the following reassuring information:

From Bishop Huntington: "The situation in Wuhu is not so bad as has been represented in newspaper dispatches. Absolutely no cause for anxiety or alarm. Japanese steamers are running regularly on the Yangtze. There is no necessity for leaving stations at the present time."

From Bishop Roots: "Passenger steamers for Shanghai leave Hankow almost daily. Four American, six English, five other naval vessels in port.

"I am keeping in close touch with American Consul and other authorities and consider it would be safer for women and children to remain in Hankow for the present.

"If necessary we can leave on short notice."

From Bishop Graves: "Everybody in Shanghai safe."

A cable received from Bishop Graves March 16 informs us that the following have arrived in Shanghai, and are safe and well:

"Mrs. W. P. Roberts and children, Miss S. E. Igo and Mrs. L. B. Ridgely."

John W. Wood.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop

The Lenten Offering Plans in the Diocese.

Following out the idea of the Golden Jubilee Celebration to be held in Philadelphia on June 5, arrangements are being made for a diocesan celebration to be held in Roanoke in the afternoon of the Sunday after Easter. It is planned that every member of every Sunday School in the diocese who can possibly come will be present at that time. There will, of course, be practically a full attendance from the local and nearby schools—including Salem, Lynchburg, Bedford and Lexington—and those farther away will be represented as fully as possible. Bishop Jett will be in charge of the service and will make an address. Reports will be submitted from all the schools in the diocese, these will be added and the total from the whole diocese will be thus obtained.

The plans are to be carried out under the direction of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education, of which the Rev. Devall L. Gwathmey, of Wytheville, is chairman.

Mission at Lynchburg.

From March 6 to 11, the Rev. A. V. Colston, rector of the churches at Buchanan and Fincastle in Botetourt County, conducted an interesting series of services for the Colored congregation at the Chapel of the Good Shepherd in Lynchburg, where the Rev. Charles L. Somers is rector. On Sunday, immediately following the mission, Bishop Jett visited the chapel and confirmed seven persons. The Bishop was encouraged by the splendid spirit of optimism and co-operation which he found among the people there.

Plans for the Diocesan Council.

On account of the fact that Emmanuel Church, Covington, has for some time past been without a rector, there has been some doubt as to whether it would be advisable to hold the Diocesan Council of 1927 there, as was determined last year. However, since the Rev. E. R. Rogers, Ph. D., recently ordained to the diaconate, is serving Emmanuel at this time, it has been decided that the Council will meet there as planned. A local committee on arrangements has been appointed by the vestry and is already actively at work. The dates set for the Council are Tuesday and Wednesday, May 17 and 18

The Rev. E. H. Ward, D. D., rector of St. Luke's Church at Hot Springs, Virginia, has been directed by his physician to take a rest for several weeks, and arrangements are under way with a view to supplying the church in his absence. On Sunday, March 20, the services were conducted by the Rev. S. Janney Hutton, Chaplain and a member of the faculty of Virginia Episcopal School, Lynchburg.

The Rev. J. Manly Cobb is rapidly recovering his strength following his recent operation for appendicitis. While he is away from his charge, Christ Church, Blacksburg, is being served by lay readers and clergymen when these can be obtained.

T. A. S.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland D. D., Bishop.

Church Hospital Receives Bequest.

Many public bequests are made in the will of William W. Harrison, who died recently at his home, "Gray Towers", Glenside.

Included in the bequests to organizations and institutions are:

Ursinus College, Collegeville, $50,000; Hospital of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Philadelphia, $25,000; Pennsylvania Hospital, Philadelphia, $25,000; University of Pennsylvania Hospital endowment fund, $25,000; Presbyterian Hospital, Philadelphia, $25,000; St. Agnes Hospital, $10,000; Jewish Hospital, $25,000; Rush Hospital for Consumption and allied diseases, $25,000; Philadelphia Polyclinic Hospital and College. $10,000; Pennsylvania Institution for Deaf and Dumb, Mt. Airy, $10,000; White Haven Sanitarium for Consumptives, $20,000.

Children's Seashore Home at Atlantic City, $20,000; trustees of the University of Pennsylvania, for general purposes of college department, $25,000.

Death of Clergyman's Mother.

Mrs. Albert Lucas, who was active in the work of the Church in this Diocese, died at her home in Philadelphia, March 8.

During the World War she was active in the Red Cross and she founded the Diocesan Supply Bureau of the Woman's Auxiliary.

She is survived by a son, the Rev. Albert H. Lucas, assistant headmaster of the Episcopal Academy and assistant to the rector of St. James' Church, Philadelphia. The funeral service was at St. Mark's Church, and interment was in South Laurel Hill Cemetery.

R. R. W.

TENNESSEE.

Rt. Rev. Thos. F. Gailor, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J. M. Maxon, D. D., Coadjutor.

Lay Cornerstone for New Church.

The cornerstone of the new building of St. James' Church, of Knoxville, the Rev. Eugene N. Hopper, rector, was laid Sunday afternoon, March 13, by the Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Gailor, D. D.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Broadcast Lenten Services.

The services at Keith's Theatre every day in Lent, except Saturdays and Sundays, at 12:25, are being broadcast by Station WRC, so that many people, unable to attend on account of illness, may be able to enter into the worship of these services.

The Thirty-Second Annual Convention of the Diocese of Washington will be held in Ascension Church, Massachusetts Avenue and Twelfth Street, on Wednesday, May 4, 1927.

The Rt. Rev. Peter Trimble Rowe, D. D., Bishop of Alaska, has been in Washington during the past week and preached three times on Sunday, March 20: Epiphany Church, St. Margaret's Church and St. John's Church. He was unable to make any other Church appointments, because his time was entirely taken by that for which he especially came to Washington, namely, business with the United States Government concerning Church affairs in Alaska. The Bishop is expected to return to the city on April 5, when he is scheduled to address the Woman's Auxiliary at its regular monthly meeting.

The Silent Mission for Deaf Mutes of the Diocese, the Rev. Henry J. Pulver, priest-in-charge, has been granted by the rector and vestry of St. Mark's Church, the use, for one year, of St. Mark's Church on Sunday at 3 P. M., for divine worship and the parish house on the second Wednesday evenings for social purposes.

The Woman's Auxiliary of Epiphany Church is sponsoring a course of lectures which are being held at the Willard Hotel. The program is as follows:

Friday, March 18, Miss Frances B. Johnson—"Through the Garden Gate" (illustrated).

Friday, March 25, Miss Grace Lincoln Temple—"Old Wall Paper, and Their Stories" (illustrated).

Friday, April 1, Dr. William Mather Lewis—"Best Book in My Library".

Proceeds are to be used for the expenses of the missionaries and delegates attending the Triennial Convention in 1928.

The Rev. Remsen Ogilby, D. D., president of Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., was the preacher at All Saints' Church, Chevy Chase, at the eleven o'clock service, March 20. Dr. Ogilby has recently been responsible for an innovation at Trinity College Chapel, whereby debates from the floor between himself and members of the faculty have been allowed to follow his sermon on morning talks. This is believed to be a departure well worth while, especially for its stimulating effect upon the students.

M. M. W.

MILWAUKEE.

Rt. Rev. W. W. Webb, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. B. F. P. Irvins, D. D., Coadjutor.

Canon St. George's Twenty-Fifth Anniversary.

On February 1 the Rev. Canon St. George completed twenty-five years as Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Liturgics at Nashotah House. On that day the Dean and Faculty passed a resolution thanking him for his unfailing devotion to the interest of Nashotah, and expressing the hope that he be spared many years to adorn the office which he has so worthily fulfilled.

Announcement of this action was made by Dean Nutter at the meeting of the Milwaukee Clericus on March 7, when the members joined with the Faculty in congratulating the Canon on his many years of faithful service. In all the years that he has taught at Nashotah he has endeared himself to all who have come under his instruction.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, D. D., Suffragan.

The Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

On Sunday afternoon, March 13, Dr. Jaroslav Novak, Czechoslovak Consul General, representing the Czechoslovak Minister to the United States, who was unable to attend, presented to Bishop Manning for the Cathedral a chandelier sent by the Government of Czechoslovakia, and made of hand-cut Bohemian glass by Czechoslovak artists, descending from generations of cunning craftsmen. Bishop Manning accepted the gift in a brief and appropriate address, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. W. R. Bowie, D. D., rector of Grace Church, New York.

At the Beethoven Centenary Service, held in the Cathedral Sunday evening, March 20, Bishop Manning introduced Dr. Walter Damrosch, who delivered the commemoration address. At the close of the service, before pronouncing the benediction, Bishop Manning offered the following prayer, which Beethoven himself used, and which was probably composed by him as it was found after his death in his own handwriting:

"O God, Thou art the true, eternal, blessed unchangeable light of all time and space. Thy wisdom apprehends thousands and still thousands of laws, and yet Thou ever actest of Thy free-will and to Thy honor. Thou wast before all—to Thee is due praise and adoration."

The Church of The Heavenly Rest.

A special Lenten course of lectures on the History and Content of the Prayer Book is constituting one of the interesting sessions each Monday evening at the Church of the Heavenly Rest and Chapel of the Beloved Disciple, by Miss Louise Eckhardt, who holds a diploma of first-class membership from the National Accredited Teachers' Association of the Episcopal Church. She will conduct the course on Principles and Methods at the coming Summer Conference of the Province of New England to be held at St. Paul's School, Concord, New Hampshire.

Miss Eckhardt has reorganized the work of the Church School of the Heavenly Rest, and the School is holding week-day sessions in order that "the children may have an opportunity to express the great truths which they learn on Sunday".

Due to lack of space in the present church structure, where this parish and the Parish of the Beloved Disciple are temporarily holding worship, the idea of week-day sessions is finding only limited interpretation. The children, however, come once a week for woodwork and craft classes under the direction of Miss Alma A. Clarke, in which they are taught to make gifts for other people, often those in need.

In the new church, however, definite class rooms and kindergarten rooms will probably be furnished for a complete weekly schedule.

Assisting Dr. Darlington and Miss Eckhardt in the Church School is a staff of trained teachers, including students from General Theological Seminary and Union Theological Seminary. All teachers are being trained or taking Child Training courses.

FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. F. A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop.

Successful Mission.

On Sunday, March 13, the Rev. Loaring Clark, D. D., concluded a ten-day Mission in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Jacksonville. This Mission was largely attended, the church being packed to its capacity for the closing services. Great good was done the community by the Mission and the rector of Good Shepherd, the Rev. C. A. Ashby, and the vestry, as a token of appreciation, passed and had sent to Dr. Clark, and the Presiding Bishop, a resolution endorsing his work.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

New Hospital to be Built at Once.

Important action was taken on March 14, when the Board of Managers of the Church Charity Foundation, at their monthly meeting, unanimously authorized the building committee to proceed at once with the construction of the first unit of the new St. John's Hospital. An effort will be made at the same time to raise the money needed for the other units, so that building operations may not cease until the whole hospital is completed.

This is the culmination of a long and carefully considered plan. St. John's Hospital has for years been known to be too small for the demands made upon it. The present building, dedicated in 1882, was then ideal for its purpose; but in late years it has been exceedingly difficult to adapt it to the rapid development of medical and surgical science. The new hospital will be built on vacant land adjoining the present building, and will provide for about two hundred patients.

When the new hospital has been completed, it is planned to renovate the old building and make it into a Hospital for Chronic Diseases—a philanthropy at present sadly needed in every part of New York City.

A new power house, of ample capacity for the present and the projected buildings, is now nearing completion. In it are also included refrigerating machinery, an ambulance garage and a steam laundry. The Walter Gibb Memorial Chapel also is almost finished, and will soon be consecrated. It stands between the Home for the Aged and the proposed new hospital, and will be connected by corridor with both.

Federation of Churches' Lenten Services.

The Brooklyn Federation of Churches will hold a series of daily noon-day meetings at Albee's Theatre for the last three weeks of Lent. The most prominent ministers of various bodies in Brooklyn will speak. Bishop Stires was the preacher at the first service, Monday, March 21. The series will continue every week-day until Easter, and will be followed by an out-of-doors service on Easter Day at Prospect Park Plaza, when the Rev. S. Parkes Cadman, D. D., will preach.

Improvements at Bay Shore.

A new parish house for St. Peter's, Bay Shore, is under construction. Beside a large main assembly room it will have a reading room, a woman's guild room, men's club room, billiard room, and kitchen; and in the basement a Galahad room. The cost will be $50,000. The present small parish house will be moved to the rear of the property and used for basket ball and other gymnasium purposes.

There has recently been placed in St. Peter's Church a fine copy of Raphael's Madonna della Segiola, secured seventy years ago in Florence, and recently presented to the Church by the heirs of the late H. R. DeMilt.

Cornerstone Laid.

The cornerstone of the new building for St. Simon's Mission, Avenue K and East Twenty-Ninth Street, Brooklyn, was laid on Monday, March 21. St. Simon's was begun as an Archdeaconry Mission in 1911, in a rented store on Avenue J, near East Twelfth Street, that neighborhood being then in the first stages of development from rural to urban conditions. In 1913 a plot one hundred feet square was purchased at Avenue K and East Twelfth Street, and a portable chapel erected there. Since then the population of the section has greatly increased, but the influx being predominantly Hebrew the congregation has not grown much. The removal about a mile eastward gives promise of greater usefulness, and the sale of the property acquired in 1913 has been very profitable. The Rev. Herbert J. Covell is in charge.

Council Continues Support of Jewish Mission.

The Diocesan Council has acted favorably on the request of the Archdeaconry of Brooklyn, and has voted to continue the appropriation previously made to the House of the Holy Comforter, 44 Debevoise Street, the Jewish Mission of the Archdeaconry of Brooklyn. The Rev. Harry Greenberg, deacon, is in charge of this work.

C. H. W.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. J. B. Cheshire, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, D. D., Coadjutor.
Rt Rev. H. B. Delaney, D. D., Suffragan.

Crusade Missions.

An inspiring mission was held in the Church of the Holy Comforter, Burlington, March 14-21, the Rev. B. N. deFoe Wagner, of Warrenton, N. C., being the missioner. This mission was held in connection with the Bishops' Crusade program of the diocese and the preacher proved inspiring, forceful and in every way helpful. There were three services a day. The intercession services were perhaps the most helpful of all.

The diocesan commission on Evangelism, Bishop Edwin A. Penick, chairman, arranged for an evangelistic mission in every parish in the diocese. Following the general Crusade meetings in Raleigh and Charlotte, a schedule of services for every parish and mission was adopted and practically every clergyman has held a mision somewhere in the diocese during the past six weeks.

T. F. O.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

The Rev. Dr. Lee To Leave Macon.

The Rev. Charles H. Lee, D. D., who has been rector of St. Paul's Church, Macon, for the past nineteen years, has resigned his charge there to accept a call to St. Simon's Island. The Macon Telegraph, commenting editorially on Mr. Lee's long service in the community, says:

"Macon is losing an unusually good citizen and priest. His parish has been not only the whole city, but the whole world. . . .

"Mr. Lee has revealed himself to the community as not only a public-spirited citizen, but also as a man of insight and as possessing the catholic mind. He has a zeal for civic as well as personal righteousness and good works. He has lent his tongue and his hand to every good cause and has been disposed to aid every good work originating outside of his own Church as well as within.

"He will be greatly missed here and will carry with him the good wishes of the whole city."

Mr. Lee expects to take up his work at St. Simon's Island May 1.

SPRINGFIELD.

Rt. Rev. John C. White, D. D., Bishop.

The Golden Jubilee of The Diocese.

The Golden Jubilee of the Diocese of Springfield is to be celebrated in connection with the meeting of the Synod at St. Paul's Church, Springfield, the Rev. Edward Haughton, rector, May 10, 11 and 12.

Bishop White and the Committee appointed to arrange for the celebration of fifty years of organized Diocesan life are extending hospitality of Church people of the city of Springfield to all the former clergy and lay people of the Diocese who may be able to return for the celebration, and it is hoped that a great many may be able to re-

(Continued on page 22.)

Family Department

MARCH.

1. Tuesday.
2. Ash Wednesday.
6. First Sunday in Lent.
9, 11, 12. Ember Days.
13. Second Sunday in Lent.
20. Third Sunday in Lent.
25. Friday. Annunciation B. V. M.
27. Fourth Sunday in Lent.
31. Thursday.

Collect for Fourth Sunday in Lent.

Grant, we beseech Thee, Almighty God, that we, who for our evil deeds do worthily deserve to be punished, by the comfort of Thy grace, may mercifully be relieved, through Our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Larger Prayer.

"At first I prayed Light.
Could I but see the way,
How gladly, swiftly would I walk
To everlasting day.

"And next I prayed for Strength,
That I might tread the road
With firm, unfaltering feet and win
The heaven's serene abode.

"And then I asked for Faith.
Could I but trust my God,
I'd live enfolded in His peace,
Though foes were all abroad.

"But now I pray for Love:
Deep love to God and man,
A living love that will not fail,
However dark His plan.

"And Light and Strength and Faith
Are opening everywhere;
God only waited for me, till
I prayed the larger prayer."

—Mrs. E. D. Cheney, in The Congregationalist.

Fasting.

Fasting, in the spiritual sense (Isa. 58, and 1 Cor. 7:5), has a much broader basis than a temporary abstinence from food. It aims to put an end to the dominion of the body over the soul, and to restore the soul's dominion over the body. You know that everything that feeds and pleases the body, has a tendency to repress the clearness and elasticity of the life of the soul. The side of our life that is turned toward the world rarely operates in harmony with the side of our life that is turned toward God. When you are alone you feel as a rule closer to God than when you are in company. In the banquetting hall you seem farther away from God than in your bed-chamber. In the midst of your cares to increase your wealth you enjoy less of God's presence than at the times when you give of your money to the poor. You are closer to God when you feed the hungry than when, with your family and guests, you feast on choice food and drinks.

In brief, experience confirms again and again, that the less enjoyment you have in the world, the more intimate is your thought of God. The more you get apart from the cares and the joys of the world, the closer becomes your walk with God.

Fasting has a right of being introduced into the habits of life. Our first interest is eternal life. This can only be tasted in an ever deeper knowledge of God. This is true as fed by secret prayer. And secret prayer has need, that in the face of the offensive dominion of the body and the environments, the dominion of the soul be strengthened by fasting rightly understood. That sobriety in food and drink is an aid in this direction, appears from the difficult in prayer, which you find upon your return from a banquet hall. But this is merely the beginning of real fasting. It is not only abundance of food and drink, but extravagance as well, in diversions and satisfaction of the senses, and in financial cares, voluntary or involuntary, that harmfully affect your approach to God. Fasting, therefore, is an aid to sanctify prayer and to make it more fervent is by no means alone the depriving of the body of food and drink, but the withdrawal of self by generosity from the dominion of money, by sobriety and simplicity of life to liberate oneself from the power of self-indulgence and certainly also by seclusion to escape the mastery of environment.

This is what the Lord declared, when He extended fastening to loosening the bands of wickedness, and to feeding the hungry. From time to time the soul must set itself free, cast away all bonds and become entirely itself. Then the gates lift up their heads, then the door of eternity is opened, and God makes His approach to us, and our soul its approach to God, and the Knowledge of God, which is eternal life, blossoms in the sanctuary of the heart.—Selected.

For the Southern Churchman.

The Methodist Church.

Rev. T. F. Opie, D. D.

When John Wesley launched his method of reform in the Church of England, he little dreamed that he was starting a movement which was to culminate in the forming of a Church, the members of which were to outnumber almost, if not quite, any other Protestant body in the world. Wesley had no intention of founding a Church, if his letters and published statements may be accepted, and he is liberally quoted as having called down maledictions upon any of his followers who should be instrumental in actually breaking with the Established Church.

However, the reform movement, undoubtedly badly needed in the Church of England at the time of the Wesleys, which he had started, soon got beyond control as regards conformity, and although John Wesley never surrendered membership in the Episcopal communion, a break was inevitable in the circumstances, and what is now the Methodist Episcopal Church resulted.

Distinguished for its good works, its loyalty to the teachings of Christ, for its unparalleled Sunday-school activities, for its enthusiastic Epworth League, for the young people, and for its system of ministerial transfer, the Methodist Church is possibly the most popular branch of the Christian Church with the masses. It is the Church of the common people and reaches more different classes of folk, perhaps, than any other denomination.

The Methodist Church seems to meet the demands of the cultured and of the relatively uncultured—and at least in the realm of the Church they all meet in unity and fellowship and cordial relations. This church is no respecter of persons. Its ministry is not confined to the highly aristocratic and the conspicuously intellectual, but it numbers among its membership many who are notable in both respects.

Its system of having lay-preachers, where trained and ordained men are not immediately available, has enabled this denomination to furnish from year to year "a pastor for every church and a church for every pastor"—or at least to approximate that happy condition, even at a time when there have been upwards of five thousand vacancies in pulpits of the Protestant communions of America.

It would be almost impossible to estimate the uplifting effect of the splendid efforts of the innumerable number of "circuit riders" who have for years ministered to groups of churches throughout the land—traversing miles of isolated territory, ministering to the remote country places and gradually building up the Church in rural settlements and small towns. No Church in the land has equaled in zeal the Methodist Church in this particular.

The missionary activities of this denomination, both at home and abroad, have been conspicuous. In nearly every part of the world Methodism has made itself felt and few if any branches of the Church are doing more to carry the Gospel to all parts of the world.

Doctrinally sound, numerically strong, socially inclusive, intellectually adaptable, spiritually alert, the Methodist Episcopal Church is destined to play an ever-increasing important part in the religious world of the immediate future.

The Methodist communion will have important contributions to make looking to Church unity, when the World Conference on Faith and Order is held in 1927.

"Blind Nature and Inexorable Fate."

I have received a letter so interesting and important that I must quote it almost in full. It runs as follows:

To thoughtful and able minds, being born in the "slums" is a difficulty insignificant in comparison with the apparently inexorable element in the control of the world and of our human life. Nature never forgives a mistake, and sins of ignorance are often more heavily punished than deliberate and conscious wickedness. No allowance is ever made for motive, and the just man is often overwhelmed in the catastrophe with the careless and ungodly. The blindness of Nature to the claims of the individual can be seen in thousands of instances of innocent sufferers, imbeciles, epileptics, etc., and affords some excuse for the plea that while careful of the type she is careless of the individual life. . . . From Sophocles to Hume, men have been oppressed with the sense of a fate which no care on their part could avert, and it is this sense, as widespread today as ever, which makes it difficult for multitudes to believe in the Christian creed, or indeed to believe that the world is governed by a Personal Being, and not by blind force.

I am sure that my correspondent is right. Indeed I think it would be difficult to express better, or more plainly, than he has done the great fundamental difference between the Christian world-view and that of many noble and thoughtful men who are unable to accept Christianity.

As he says, the difficulty is as old as, and older than, Sophocles. It recurs all through the Old Testament. It is the problem discussed in the book of Job in what was probably its original form; it is the recurring theme of the book of Ecclesiastes; Omar Khayyam echoes it in quatrain after quatrain; Mr. A. E. Houseman sings of "Nature, heartless, witless Nature", who "will neither care nor know"; and one may take up the latest novel, published yesterday, and find the same passionate cry against the blind inexorable fate that takes no account of our desires or ideals or pains. On the other hand the religious consciousness of the race has always borne witness to a God Who does know and care. It has been the deep conviction of thousands of men and women in every age that "underneath are the everlasting arms. The declaration of the Psalmist that "Thou art about my path and about my bed, and spiest out all my ways" is the conviction of unnumbered men and women today. Above all, the very purpose for which Christ came was to "declare the Father"; to declare the universe is not a blind fate, an unseeing force, but a living, loving, Personal Being. Which is the right view? Which view is supported by the facts of experience?

I think we may get help here from a rather similar problem, that of the freedom of the will. Looked at from outside, man certainly seems to be as much determined by mechanical forces as any other part of nature. But Dr. Johnson was expressing, forcibly if not with any great scientific precision of diction, a true view, as it seems to me, when he said—"All theory is against the freedom of the will; all experience is for it". What he meant was that the experience of our own moral freedom outweighs all arguments drawn from observation of other men. So too, surely, the evidence of our own religious experience must outweigh all argument from what we think we observe in others. What are elements of religious experience? I should say that, when any man knows God at all, he knows Him as One Who knows His children personally—"I know thee by name"—as One Who loves His children—"Thou hast found grace in My Sight"—and as One Who provides for His children—"I will give thee rest".

I do not think that this weight of testimony can be safely ignored; and I have noticed that people obsessed by this sense of blind fate, and of the cruelty of life, rest their arguments almost always on what they observe in the lives of others. When I say to them —"But what has been the experience of your own life? How has fate treated you"? I nearly always get the answer, "I am not complaining for myself. I have been lucky. But the fact that I have come off better than others does not blind me to the tragic nature of existence". Indeed, it is often the noblest and most unselfish of men who are most oppressed by this same sense of the blind cruelty of life. Theirs is a noble rage. But I am sure they are wrong.—Canon Peter Green, in Guardian (English).

For the Southern Churchman.

The Mountains.

E. J. Welby-Adams.

Look up at the mountains at dawning
And think of the might of God,
Mysterious mountains at dawning,
All grey in the mists of the morning,
And give thy thanks to God.

Look up at the mountains at noontide,
And think of the glory of God,
Beauteous mountains at noontide,
Smiling bright in the high noon suntide,
And give thy praise to God.

Look long at the mountains at even,
And think of the peace of God.
Beneficent mountains at even,
'Tis the hour He walks in His Eden,
Make then thy peace with God.

The Communion of Silence.

Carlyle, we are told, used to talk for hours on the virtue of silence. It is quite evident, however, that the silence he admired was the silence of other people, and that when the mood was upon him his tongue belied his philosophy. But that there is a time to keep silence, and a time to speak, the writer of Ecclesiastes proclaimed long years before Carlyle. The difficulty that many people have is to distinguish these times. To keep silence when one should speak, and to speak when one should keep silence, are grievous faults that only a finely adjusted character can intuitively avoid.

Consider Peter—Impulsive, impetuous, his undisciplined nature rushed into comment on every event, not understanding that in facing great mysteries, silence is the noblest speech. Instead of pondering over his experiences in the solitude of thought, reckless, blundering Peter faced them hurriedly "like a bull charging at a fence". Perhaps Peter's greatest fault was an impatient eagerness to burst into talk, so that at times like some chattering and noisy stream, what he possessed in tumult he lacked in depth.

There was the occasion when Peter was granted a vision of the transfiguration of Jesus. From the pressing duties of His busy ministry, Jesus, with Peter and James and John had retired to the loneliness of a mountain for prayer and meditation. There Moses and Elijah appeared with Jesus and talked to Him. Overcome by the brilliance and mystery of the vision, Peter could not gather his distracted thoughts together. Yet, although he wist not what to say, his impulse was to say something. Surely, if ever there was a time in Peter's life when silence was the tribute which he should have offered Jesus, this was the time. How sadly do we offend in our religion by saying too much, by carrying our heart upon our sleeve, and by rushing into talk about the deep and barely understood experiences of the soul. There are relations between ourselves and God into which no one else has a right to pry, and that we ourselves have no right to disclose. The witness we must make for Jesus is not so much the witness of words as the witness of a modest and Christian life. But Peter could not understand that there are occasions when the only virtue is silence. "Master, it is good for us to be here; and let us make three tabernacles; one for Thee and one for Moses, and one for Elijah". So Peter blunders into a stupid speech. He would retain the vision by building three dwelling places upon the mountain so that Moses and Elijah and Jesus might always live there in the same glory with which they had been pictured to him. Two members of the spirit world would he retain in permanence upon the earth. The ministry and work of Jesus he would interrupt so that the world would go its same old way of ignorance and sinfulness, while Jesus remained in glory upon the mountain. Poor blundering Peter—had he accompanied Jesus down the mountain in profound and thoughtful silence the full meaning of the vision would likely have been perceived by him. But in the tangle of his talk the thought that the vision suggested was lost by him. Peter's blundering speech is the sad outcome of the vision that God had given him to grant him wisdom.

As with Peter, so there are times with us when anything but silence would be a blunder. There are some things about which we can never speak without destroying all that is finest about them. When a friend who has been the intimate comrade of our heart is about to undertake a journey that will take him from our side for many years, what can we say or what words can we speak? It is much that we may take his hand and say "Farewell", and more than that we cannot do unless our tongues can babble while the heart stands still. At such a time words would proclaim our shallow insincerity. So too, when the flagrant sin of some loved one has brought distress to one we know it is better that our sympathy should be pressed by kindly silence. If our friend should seek relief from his grief by telling us of his sorrow, let our silence help him to soothe his ache by laying bare his trouble.

In the hour when death has spoken, shall we speak too? Or shall we give the blessing of our silent sympathy to grieving hearts? After all, words do but enlarge the grief. Silence, alone, is understood, and comes like a softly spoken benediction. So it is that our Church has no custom of funeral sermons. For the prayers and Scripture preach the greatest sermon that can be preached, and any words that man can say no matter how true or eloquent, would break the sympathetic structure of the service.

In our ordinary communication with God is not our silence as we kneel, the greatest prayer of all? Perhaps we weary God oftener with our swift-flowing and eloquent prayers than we offend Him by no prayers at all. The glib tongue that knows not how to be mute will stumble sooner or later upon a blundering speech.—A. N. Hoath, in Canadian Churchman.

For the Southern Churchman.

Reality.

Eugenie du Maurier Meredith.

Real friendship's bliss we cannot hope to know;
Its holy kiss we cannot o'er bestow,
Until sweet pity comes, the tie to bind;
Until our lives teach love to all mankind.

Men wonder if they shall recognize their friends in heaven. They need hardly wonder. Are the ties that bind them of the eternal kind?—Henry Churchill King.

For the Young Folks

For the Southern Churchman.

Be Merciful.

Martha S. Lippincott.

Be merciful to erring ones
And let us not forget
That there is not, among mankind,
One who is perfect yet.
Some's faults are greater than your own;
But their temptations, too,
May have been many more than have
Been ever sent to you.

Their strength to help resist them, too,
perhaps, was less than yours.
You cannot judge what agonies
Another soul endures.
So if it falls help lift it up,
And ever keep in mind
How Jesus Christ, to erring ones,
Was merciful and kind.

Oh, let our criticism not
Drive souls down to despair,
That we could lift out of life's gloom,
By tender thought and care.
Forgive the erring, as Christ would,
And teach them to begin
To live upon a higher plane,
Above all human sin.

For the Southern Churchman.

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

The Enemies of Jesus.

M. L. G.

As Our Lord went about doing good, healing and teaching and loving, many were drawn to His side as iron filings are to a magnet. There they seemed to breathe the air of heaven; and to hear in His tones more than angelic music.

It is sad to think that it was not so with all. He healed the crooked woman, and the ruler of the synagogue missed the mercy and the joy, and saw only that it was too much work for a Sabbath day. He unveiled the glory of His God-head, and the Jews took up stones to cast at Him. He stood at an open grave calling a brother back to those who mourned Him, and the chief priests plotted to kill Lazarus and Jesus, too. How many times the story of His tender love is marred by their envy, hate, evil, counsels and treachery!

It is a dreadful thing to look upon beauty and find it unlovely, or to hear a heavenly message and call it madness. The robe whose hem carried healing power to the poor woman on the road, was but a rag to be gambled away to the soldiers who parted His garments among them. The Face that little children looked up to in happy confidence, drew from the crowd when Pilate brought Him forth to them, shouts of "Crucify Him"! The same robe; the same Face. All the difference lay in the hearts that touched and saw them.

Children, you feel so sure you love Him now! But keep the fire in your heart burning. As you grow older watch that it does not die away, but glows brighter with each year that passes. Do not be cold to Him; He is not so to you. Be with Him so that you may never be found to be against Him. Ask Him to teach you to live so that He may say, "I have called you friend".

The Mended Vase.

Jose awoke early and looked at the rising sun. It seemed as happy as the boy, for it was smiling on the waters of the canal. Jose hurried to dress in his best white trousers and blouse and flung a colored scarf over one shoulder. Then he called to his sister, Juana, who was still asleep.

When Juana finally came from the house in her white cotton dress and bright shawl she seemed to be the only one in all nature that did not smile. "I don't want to go to the city," she complained while they were eating their breakfast of baked meal cakes. "I want to stay at home and finish the lace that I am making."

"Oh, but today we are to take the pottery to the American senor."

Still Juana did not smile. She plodded along slowly in her bare feet, helping Jose to put their father's clay pottery in the flat-bottomed boat. The last time that they had been to the city market with pottery to sell they had met the American. He had been sauntering along among the people seated on the ground under huge umbrellas, for that was the way they sold their wares. And there he had found the children with their father's clay vases and dishes. The American was very rich and was making a collection of all manner of pottery. He told the children that the next time they came to the city they must bring the pottery to his home, for he wanted first chance to buy their best dishes.

There were so many boats on the canal this morning that they traveled side by side. Juana was still cross as they floated toward the city. So she was not careful as she helped with the boat. Suddenly bump! crash! the children's boat jammed into a flower boat on its way to market.

When the boats were again separated, Jose explained: "Oh, the pottery! What if it is broken?" He unwrapped the pieces, and one by one found them unharmed. Then he came to the last piece. It was the finest of all—the one that the American would be sure to want. It was a big vase for flowers and had a woman's face on one side. Slowly Jose's fingers moved over it. The bottom was all right, the middle wasn't cracked, the head was there. But, oh, the face was spoiled, for the lips had been broken!

"Oh, what will we do?" both of the children asked at once.

It was some time before Jose spoke. "I have some clay here in the boat that I was to take to the senor. He wanted to examine it to see what the dishes were made from. I will try to mend the lips," he said.

"But it won't get dry and harden so soon," Juana declared.

"No, but it is the best I can do," Jose replied. Finally they came to the senor's home and showed him the clay dishes. "I don't care much for these," he said when he had looked at the pieces. "Haven't you any more?"

"I have one more," Jose answered. "It was the nicest of all. But the lips got broken and I tried to mend it."

"Let me see it," the senor demanded.

The boy brought it. "Please, senor," he explained, "I couldn't get the lips right. They were straight before, and I couldn't get them just right."

The American looked at the vase. "I will buy this one," he said.

"You will buy it?" the children asked in bewilderment.

"Yes," the American answered. "Don't you see what you have done, boy?" he asked. "You have mended it with a smile. A smile will mend a quarrel, will mend a broken heart, will mend more things than all the clay in the world."

So that day which had started to be spoiled was mended, too.—Christian Observer.

For the Southern Churchman.

The Bountiful Bower-Bird.

Louis Tucker.

When Little Girl lived in the bush on the edge of a Back Block of Australia, she had a dolly named Mary Ann, that her daddy brought in his saddlebags from Sidney. She wore a fixed smile and come-off clothes just like Little Girl, and her sash was as wide as Daddy's finger and was made of twinkly-glittery gold braid. Jackey, the Australian native, who was tracker for Daddy's bullocks, admired her very much, though he did not try to steal her; but the benevolent bower bird almost stole her as much as seven times.

A bower-bird wants things to decorate his bower—glittery things. He makes a bower out of brushwood, about as high as a man's waist, which is as high as Little Girl's head; and he makes a runway through it where he struts up and down doing dance steps with his wings spread out like a small sized pouter-pigeon. Sometimes he makes a cross runway and a room in the middle; and always he takes white pebbles and shells and bits of crockery and broken pieces of glass and any thing that glints and shines, and puts them on the edge of the room and runways. He stole Mary Ann from the front doorstep and dragged her half across the yard, and he stole her four times from Little Girl's doll-house under the gum tree by the back door and got her half across the garden so that Jackey had to find her and bring her back and Little Girl did not dare leave her alone any more. Once he stole her from the hammock where he must have flown out with her; and once he walked off with her out of the house. Little Girl was quite sure he must have come into the house or else that she must have gone out to him, for she was perfectly quite gone. They hunted for her everywhere, but not even tears would bring her back.

When Jackey saw the tears he went away for an hour. When he came back he was dancing and flapping his arms: and he got Little Girl and Little Girl's Daddy and made them follow him and never stopped dancing at all. Daddy walked, but Little Girl danced too; and so they came down into the brush at the edge of Dusty Creek and there Jackey showed them the bower of the bower-bird.

It had two passages with a room in the middle where they crossed and in the room sat Mary Ann, leaning against the side and with lots of things before her. There were seven broken bits of blue china from Little Girl's doll house, and a couple of pieces of glass and a lot of white snail shells and a brass buckle that Daddy had dropped and some pieces of yellow stuff that looked like brass and a couple of flowers, real white and yellow flowers. Jackey parted the bower and Little Girl picked up Mary Ann and the flowers and Jackey snatched the buckle; but Daddy took the yellow stuff and looked at it and cut it with his knife and asked Jackey if he had ever seen more of it. Jackey said, yes; so he and Daddy took Little Girl back within sight of the house and then they went off together.

That night Daddy's pockets were full of the heavy yellow stuff and next day he rode to Sidney; and then men came and dug up Dusty Creek and cut down the trees and the bower-bird went away. They ate up the sheep and they ate up the bullocks; but Daddy and Mother were glad instead of sorry, and then Little Girl and Mother and Mary Ann got into a real carriage—a shiny carriage—and went to Sidney; and they had a lovely house and beautiful dresses, and Mother said it all came from the bower-bird who was really a fairy god-mother in disguise. But Little Girl and Mary Ann were always sorry about the spoiled bower.

His Mistake.

He longed to find the road to fame,
But not a highway bore that name.
He thought to glory there must be
A level path that he should see;
But every road to which he came
Possessed a terrifying name.
He neve thought that fame might lurk
Along the dreary path called Work.
He never thought that fame might lurk
What marked the road called Industry.
Because it seemed so rough and high,
He passed the road to Service by
Yet had he taken either way,
He might have come to fame some day.
—Detroit Free Press.

The Duck's Dilemma.

Have you ever heard animals—beasts and birds and even tiny insects talking to each other? If you watch them quietly and carefully, you will find they all do. Of course, some of the big ones, like horses and cattle, speak quite loudly and call to each other a long way off. In a big flock of sheep, of thousands perhaps, where every mother ewe has a lamb and all are calling at the same time, every lamb knows its own mother's voice and can come straight to her.

Some animals and little insects which have no voice can speak by movements of their bodies. The little busy-body ants, which run about so quietly, can tell things by touching each other with their feelers; and if you listen carefully and watch what happens, you will soon be convinced that every creature you know can say all it needs to its own companions.

Now I am going to tell about some ducks talking to each other. They were so tame that I was able to stand close to them while I watched. If I had never before noticed that birds could talk to each other, I would have been quite sure of it after what I saw and heard that Saturday afternoon.

There were three black ducks concerned in this matter. The fat old Father Drake was asleep in his shed at the time and did not take any part in the curious thing that happened, and I have often wondered why.

The three had all been hatched on the same day; so they had known each other all their lives like sisters. In fact, they were so much alike that you could hardly tell one from the other. We shall christen them Mrs. Quackles, Mrs. Quoggles, and Mrs. Quaggles, so that I can tell you about them easily.

These ducks lived in a yard at one end of a big shed which had a wooden wall with a hole cut in it, so that they could go into the shed to sleep at night. In one corner of the yard beside the shed there was a big round table tank in which the water could run off the roof of the shed. Mrs. Quackles had hollowed out a nice little nest on the ground in the corner between the shed and the tank. She had laid quite a lot of eggs and was sitting on them very happily.

Now, it happened that I was digging a hole in the middle of the yard, intending to plant a tree. I was in a hurry, because it looked as if it might rain soon. As I was working I noticed that the overflow from the tank would pour water straight down upon Mrs. Quackles if it rained and the tank overflowed. It seemed a shame to think that her nest and the eggs would all be spoiled.

What could I do to prevent the disaster? It was impossible to move the eggs to another place, because one of the rules—they have quite a lot—of the Muscovy duck tribes is that if their nest has been disturbed they will not sit on the eggs again. So I decided to try an experiment.

I knocked the side out of the box and then placed the box very carefully over the eggs. Of course Mrs. Quackles waddled off the nest while I was doing so and stood watching me from the middle of the yard. Then I put a small piece of tin on top of the box to make a good waterproof roof and put a couple of bricks upon it to make everything secure.

When I had finished making this nice little nest house, I went a short distance away to watch if Mrs. Quackles was satisfied with my arrangement for her comfort.

And this is what happened: Mrs. Quackles waddled toward the nest very carefully indeed, on tip-toe, as it were, with her neck stretched out as far as it could go; but when she saw the nice nest house that I had made for her, she was very doubtful about it. She evidently decided that it would be wrong for her to enter without the advice and comment of her friends. So what did she do but waddle off through the hole into the shed, in which Mrs. Quoggles and Mrs. Quaggles had just gone to bed!

"Quack! Quack!" said Mrs. Quackles. "Do wake up, Mrs. Quaggles and Mrs. Quoggles! I have something important to show you. You really are a pair of sleepy heads. You know it is only just after sundown!"

"Why, Mrs. Quackles," said Mrs. Quoggles crossly, "we're not asleep at all! We only come in here early because it is such a cold day. What is it you want to show us?"

"Well," said Mrs. Quackles, "the man from the big house has been doing such funny things to my nest. He has put a box over it and some iron and bricks on top. Come, and I'll show you!"

So all three ducks waddled quickly over to look at my beautiful nest house. At first Mrs. Quackles did most of the talking.

"Look," said she; "you can see why I don't know whether it's quite safe to go inside. It might fall over, or that iron might fall on my head, and those bricks might break my eggs, and after all the trouble I had laying them I don't want that to happen."

"I should think not indeed," agreed Mrs. Quoggles.

But there Mrs. Quaggles interrupted. "Why," she said, "can't you see, sister, what the man has done? He has made a house for you just like his house. I heard him tell the woman yesterday that he must mend their veranda roof with new iron, so no rain could come through."

"I see," said Mrs. Quackles. "The box is the house and the iron is the roof to keep the rain out. But what are the bricks for?"

"Why, look!" said Mrs. Quaggles, pointing to my veranda with her beak. "That man has put bricks on that new sheet of iron on his own veranda. I heard him tell the boy to get him some nails in town next week and that he would have to leave the bricks there to keep the iron down till the nails came. That's what your bricks are for, too—to keep the rain roof on till the man gets nails."

"How nice of him!" said Mrs. Quackles. "I'll hop in and see if my nest is comfy."

So Mrs. Quackles waddled in to her nest and sat carefully down on the eggs. "It's simply fine," she called out, "and it's so much darker than outside! I feel sleepy already. Good night, Mrs. Quaggles and Mrs. Quoggles."

"Good night, sister," quacked the others, and they too waddled off sleepily to their nests.—P. B. Prior, in Christian Advocate.

Fred's Foot Warmer.

For once in his life Fred went to bed without being sent. That was because tomorrow would be his birthday, and Fred thought the sooner he got to bed the sooner his birthday would come. But, though Fred was in bed, he couldn't get to sleep. He kept wondering what daddy and mother would give him for a birthday present, and then he wiggled and flounced around because his feet were cold. Every one knows how hard it is to go to sleep when the feet are cold. Well, Fred tried his best. He counted imaginary sheep again. By and by he got drowsy. He could still hear daddy and mother talking and laughing downstairs, and then he heard a dog bark. After awhile he lay very quiet, and a moment later he was almost asleep. Almost, I say, for a thump on the bed had aroused him. Fred stirred a bit, and the next thing he knew his feet suddenly got warm.

"Mother has put the fur rug over my feet. That's what makes them warm," thought Fred to himself, and then he fell fast asleep.

The sun was shining in his face when Fred awakened.

"Oh, it's my birthday," he cried, and blinked his eyes and yawned. "My! but a fellow sleeps well when his feet are warm."

Out of the bed he sprang, and began to put on his clothes.

"Birthday greetings, little son," said daddy and mother, putting their heads in at the door.

"Thank you," replied Fred, and then he noticed daddy looked puzzled. "What's the matter?" he asked.

Daddy and mother took turns at explaining. "It was your birthday gift, and now it's gone," said daddy. "It disappeared in the night, and we have looked everywhere for it. I can't imagine what became of it," said mother.

"What was it?" asked Fred, his curiosity beaming in his eyes.

"A dog, a nice, friendly, half-grown collie," answered mother. And then something funny happened. The covers on Fred's bed suddenly raised and moved. Every one saw it—daddy,

Dollars For

The Lenten Mite Box

To the Young People of the Church, now planning ways to earn money to swell the annual Sunday School Easter offering, the SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN offers an opportunity for big returns at pleasant work, and lots of dollars for the mite box.

There are many Church people in your neighborhood who will willingly subscribe to the SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN if you ask them to do so. You will find the work agreeable, and you will be surprised at the results.

THE SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN is a national Church paper with departments of interest to all members of the family. Its weekly visits will bring pleasure to the young people as also to the mature. The subscription price is $3.00 a year.

$1.00 A SUBSCRIBER.

THIS IS OUR OFFER: For each new annual subscription sent us by a Sunday School scholar, or Sunday School organization, we will pay the sender ONE DOLLAR. Put the dollar in your mite box, and send us two dollars with the name and address of the subscriber. In this way your good work will result in double benefit, a joy to the subscriber and an increase to your offering.

We will furnish you subscription blanks, literature, and all information on request. Start your Southern Churchman club now, and see the dollars for the offering roll in.

Southern Churchman Co.

112 North Fifth Street,
Richmond, Va.

mother, and Fred—but all were too surprised to say a word. Then from under the covers peeped a black nose and a pair of friendly eyes, while the covers began to move furiously; but that was because a tail was wagging as hard as it could.

"Why, here he is," shouted daddy.

"Why, I thought it was a rug at my feet," laughed Fred, and then he told them how cold his feet had been and how he thought mother had covered him with the fur rug.

The collie was on the floor now making friends with them all, and proving that a dog makes the most acceptable kind of a birthday gift.

"I couldn't blame him for not wanting to sleep down in the cold kitchen alone," said daddy. Word and Way.

A Good Boy.

I woke before the morning, I was happy all the day,
I never said an ugly word, but smiled and stuck to play.

And now at last the sun is going down behind the wood,
And I am very happy, for I know that I've been good.

My bed is waiting cool and fresh, with linen smooth and fair,
And I must off to sleepsin-by, and not forget my prayer.

I know that, till tomorrow I shall see the sun arise,
No ugly dream shall fright my mind, no ugly sight my eyes.

But slumber holds me tightly till I waken in the dawn,
And hear the thrushes singing in the lilacs round the lawn.

—Robert Louis Stevenson.

Three Essentials To YOUR Bank

Experience—Strength— Helpfulness

Formed by consolidation of two of the oldest banks in the South, this institution invites your business with the assurance of ample facilities for all your financial requirements and a sincere spirit of helpfulness in banking relationships.

FIRST AND MERCHANTS NATIONAL BANK OF RICHMOND

JOHN M. MILLER, JR., President.

CAPITAL, SURPLUS AND UNDIVIDED PROFITS, $6,300,000

TO CLEAN, POLISH OR RENEW THE FINISH OF ALL KINDS & COLORS OF FOOTWEAR, JUST ASK FOR Whittemore's Shoe Polishes

Don't Suffer
With Itching Rashes
Use Cuticura
Soap, Ointment, Talcum sold everywhere. Samples free of Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. J. Malden, Mass.

JOHNSON'S FOOT SOAP
ACTS LIKE MAGIC
ON TIRED, TENDER, SMARTING, SWOLLEN, SWEATY FEET
25 CENTS — ALL DRUGGISTS

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.

Richmond, Virginia

THE SAFE EXECUTOR

Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock $1,000,000.00
Surplus earned $1,500,000.00
Held in trust $30,000,000. (plus)

THE MINISTRY OF LAYMEN

BY LEON C. PALMER, B. D.
Executive Secretary, National Commission on Evangelism
Order Now—Off the Press March 10th
Ninety-six Pages, Paper Bound
Single Copies 25 Cents; four for $1.00; nine for $2.00 post paid. Bishop Darst, Chairman of the National Commission on Evangelism, has written the Foreward, saying in part:

"The members of the Commission have been hoping that one result of the Crusade would be the issuing of a book on Lay Evangelism by a layman of the Church, and we are happy that our hopes have been so fully realized in this admirable book on the subject. * * * Mr. Palmer has made a wonderful contribution to the subject and has presented a helpful and stimulating appeal for finer service on the part of the laymen of the Church, together with practical suggestions as to methods of work. * * * Mr. Palmer's book, if read and studied and followed by our lay people cannot fail to stimulate enthusiasm into perserverance and re-dedication into continuing and happy service for Christ and His Kingdom.

Order Now From
THE BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW
202 South 19th Street
Philadelphia

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

PIPE ORGANS.

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, INC., Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices. Particular attention given to designing organs for memorials.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 209 East Franklin Street. Richmond, Va.

ALTAR AND SURPLICE LINEN.

Sold by direct importer to Guilds, Rectors and others, by the yard, or piece, wholesale rates. New Specials 305, 54 inch, fine and heavy for Fair Linen. Surplice Linen 1800, 36 and 40 inch. Write for prices and samples.

MARY FAWCETT,
115 Franklin St., New York City.

ROOMS—WASHINGTON.

VISITORS TO WASHINGTON ACCOMMOdated with comfortable rooms in private home. Reasonable rates. Private bath. Mrs. W. A. Masker, 2751 Macomb Street. N. W.

SELECTED CARDS.

RELIGIOUS CARDS FOR ALL OCCASIONS—Birthdays, Consolation, Eucharistic, Lent and Easter. G. L. Bender, 7421 Boyer Street, Mt. Airy, Philadelphia, Pa.

OLD ENVELOPES.

WANTED—Old Envelopes from letters written between 1845 and 1874. Do not remove the stamps from the envelopes Highest prices paid. GEORGE HAKES, 290 Broadway, New York.

CONFEDERATE STAMPS.

WANTED—Confederate Stamps, also United States Stamps used before 1870. Collections purchased. Higest prices paid. GEORGE HAKES, 290 Broadway, New York.

STAINED GLASS

JAMES POWELL & SONS (Whitefriars), Ltd., London, England—Stained Glass. Designs and estimates submitted on receipt of full particulars. Distributor ADRIAN A. BUCK, 665 Fifth Ave., New York City.

SITUATION WANTED.

CHURCH WORKER.

INFORMATION DESIRED CONCERNING an opportunity in Church work where the services of a trained and educated layman are needed. No objection to traveling. Subscriber is at liberty to refer to the Bishop of the Diocese. Address "S-4" care of Southern Churchman

WANTED, BY REFINED, EDUCATED woman, with fifteen year old daughter, position in office, or home department, of some good accredited school, beginning September 1st, where daughter could enter until she graduates. Address 72341, care of Southern Churchman.

COLLEGE STUDENT WITH EXPERIENCE desires summer position as Governess. Address C-2, care of Southern Churchman.

HELP WANTED

WANTED, A SETTLED WHITE WOMAN to assist in care of an old lady and help about household affairs in the country. Small salary, comfortable home. Address Miss Mary M. Cooke, King William C. H. Virginia.

Deaths

JOHN COLES TERRY.

Entered into Eternal Life at Roanoke, Virginia, Thursday, March 3rd, 1927, JOHN COLES TERRY of Bent Mountain, Virginia. The son of John Coles Terry and Elizabeth Beverley Whittle, he was born at Bent Mountain, Roanoke County, Virginia, August 4th, 1879; where he lived until his last illness.

In 1914 he married Elizabeth Huger of Roanoke, Virginia. He is survived by his wife, and three children, Aurelia Huger, Frank Huger and Elizabeth Beverley, and by one sister, Mrs. P. St. L. Moncure, of Norfolk, Virginia.

Beautiful in person, he was possessed of grace and charm, and a magnetic personality, added to a kindly nature, a tender and warm heart.

In childhood he won the affection of those among whom he lived, and their grief in his passing is sincere.

He was in frail health for many years, but his gay, indomitable spirit lifted and upheld him above the depression which is so often induced by sickness; and he met each day with unfailing energy and cheerfulness.

Although a Christian from childhood, he was not confirmed until 1924, when he became an active member of the church of his forefathers.

"What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they? These are they which came out of great tribulation and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

And He that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them.

They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes"

MRS. SARAH SOPHIA MADDOX WOOD.

Resolutions of the Vestry of St. John's Church, Georgetown Parish, Washington, D. C.

On February 7, 1927, at her home, 2905 Q Street, Washington, D. C., MRS. SARAH SOPHIA MADDOX WOOD beloved wife of John T. Wood, entered into life eternal. Mrs. Wood was for thirty years a most loyal and devoted communicant of St. John's Church, Georgetown Parish, Washington, D. C. She was the Choir Mother, the Chairman of the Vestments Committee, a teacher in the Sunday School, but her interest and work entered into every phase of the life of the parish and of the Church. It was her joy to do the Master's will. She gave unstintingly of her time and thought, but it was the joy and love that went into all her work that made it beautiful, for there was always the consciousness that she served the Lord Christ. All who came within the influence of her radiance, her confident faith, her self-effacement in service, were given a glimpse of higher and holier things.

Now, therefore, be it resolved, by the Vestry of St. John's Church, Georgetown Parish, that we express our sorrow in the death of this devoted Churchwoman and Christian and our deepest sympathy to her family; that this resolution be spread upon the minutes of the vestry, and that a copy be sent to the Southern Churchman and a copy be sent to her husband.

F. BLAND TUCKER,
G. L. NICHOLSON,
Committee.

MRS. PHOEBE HAMILTON SEABROOK.

Entered into life eternal, on February 19, 1927,in Riverton, New Jersey, MRS. PHOEBE HAMILTON SEABROOK. Mrs. Seabrook was the daughter of Colonel Paul Hamilton and Catherine Campbell, his wife, of Beaufort, South Carolina. Her childhood was passed with joy and untrammeled freedom in the old family home known as "Friendville", a centre of culture, refinement and lavish hospitality, based as it was upon a foundation of eternal truth, for none could ever doubt for a passing moment that Christ was the Master of the home.

A period of school days was passed in Virginia until she attained her beautiful womanhood. In her eighteenth year she went back to Beaufort, where many joys and festivities awaited her. In 1872 she became the bride of Mr. Joseph Whaley Seabrook, of Edisto Island, and lived in affluence and luxury, through which she passed with unspoiled sweetness, and ever retained it when heroism and undaunted courage were needed through her years of widowhood and the rearing of her infant children.

Mrs. Seabrook was associated with many prominent schools, and in 1900 she established the Hamilton School for young ladies in Lafayette Square, Washington, D. C. From this work, through the devoted love and ability of her son and daughter, she retired to the congenial surroundings of a happy home with her children and grandsons. Verily it was a glimpse of South Carolina in the midst of a congenial New Jersey atmosphere.

Her spiritual life ripened and deepened with the passing years, submissive to whatever came, and always retaining the joyous outlook, she rested calmly in her Father's keeping, and so through weeks of suffering, the Peace of God that passeth all understanding rested in full measure upon her.

The funeral services of this servant of God were held at St. Helenas' Church, Beaufort, where she had been in infancy baptized, confirmed and married. She sleeps amid generations of her own, under the shade of the live oaks and the waving moss of her Southern home. To the loved ones who miss her, the sweet thought comes: "That one in Christ and one in heart we part to meet again."

M. M. L.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

(Continued from page 16.)

turn to the Diocese and take part along with the Bishop and the present clergy and lay people in the celebration.

An important feature of the Jubilee gathering will be the convention dinner to be held at the St. Nicholas Hotel on Tuesday, May 10. The speakers are to be Bishop Woodcock of Kentucky; the Rev. Dr. John Henry Hopkins, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Chicago; Dr. John W. Wood, of the Department of Missions of the Church at New York; and Bishop White. Already acceptances have been received from eight or nine of the Bishops of the Province of the Mid-West to be in attendance and indications are that this gathering of men and women under the auspices of the Church Club of the Diocese will be the largest of its kind ever held in Springfield.

Those who are expecting to come for the celebration are asked to so advise the Rev. Edward Haughton, rector of St. Paul's Church, 815 South Second Street, Springfield, Illinois.

F. H. S.

NEWARK.

Rt. Rev. E. S. Lines, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, D. D., Coadjutor.

New Church For Morris Plains.

After the Confirmation Service held by Bishop Lines at St. Paul's Church, Morris Plains, on the second Sunday in Lent, the site of the new church where work was to begin the following day, was visited. Under the Rev. John C. Lord, who has returned to his old home at Morristown, the congregation has been gathered in a hall and services maintained for a few years. A sufficient sum of money has been collected to warrant proceeding to build. The present contract is for a one-story, high basement room, to be covered over, while money is collected to build the church upon this foundation. There is hope that the site of the building in progress may lead to the discovery of friends who may send the work further on, but no great debt will be incurred. Morris Plains is three miles west of Morristown. The number of new homes is rapidly increasing, and a great insane asylum, where thousands are cared for is there, with hundreds of nurses and attendants, who will appreciate the new Church.

THE INN
Located in Historic
CHARLES-TOWN, WEST VIRGINIA
In the beautiful Shenandoah Valley. Two hours from Washington on the National Highway. Large shady lawn; home atmosphere; Southern cuisine.
Address
THE INN,
Charles Town, West Va.
Mrs. John P. Briscoe.

Personal Notes

The Rev. George Oscar Watts, rector of Holy Trinity Church, Clarksville, Tenn., has accepted a call to St. John's Church, Hampton, Virginia, and expects to take charge May 1.

The Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott, D. D., rector of Grace and St. Peter's Church, Baltimore, Maryland, has declined the call recently extended him to become rector of St. George's Church, Montreal, Canada.

The Rev. Arthur W. Taylor, who for the past five years has been rector of Grace Church at Anderson, S. C., has announced his acceptance of a call to the rectorship of Christ Church at Marion, St. Paul's at Saltville and Grace at Glade Spring, in the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia. These three churches together form what has been known as Preston Parish. The Rev. Mr. Taylor expects to assume the duties of his new charge on April 18.

The Rev. Royal K. Tucker, rector of St. Paul's Church, Louisville, Ky., has accepted the rectorship of St. Mark's Church, Brunswick, Ga., and takes charge on April 1.

The address of the Rev. William H. Talmage is changed from Springfield, Mo., to Columbus, Nebraska.

The Rev. Joseph W. Gubbins, formerly in charge of St. Ignatius' Church, Eagle River, Wis., has taken charge of the Church of Our Saviour, Atlanta, Ga. His address is 44 Carnegie Way.

The address of the Rev. Frederick Edwards is changed from Cassadaga, Florida, to R. R. 1, St. George, New Brunswick, Canada.

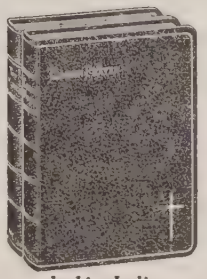
The Rev. W. P. Kemper, rector of Christ Church, Meadville, Pa., who has accepted a call to St. John's Church, Kingston, N. Y., expects to take charge. April 20.

The Rev. George E. Platt, formerly in charge of St. Barnabas' Church, Saratoga, Wyo., has entered upon his work as rector of St. Paul's Church, Dixon, Wyo., and neighboring missions.

The Rev. Carl A. G. Helligstedt, formerly rector of Grace Church, Ottawa, Kans., will take charge of St. John's Church, Kewanee, Ill., April 1.

ORDINATIONS.

Bishop Garland officiated at the ordination to the priesthood of the Rev. H. Dimmick Baldy at present curate of St. Michael's, Germantown. The ordination took place in St. Michael's March 12. Mr. Baldy was presented for ordination by the Rev. Gilbert Pember, rector of the parish. Mr. Baldy is a Philadelphian and grandson of the late Rev. Hurley Baldy.



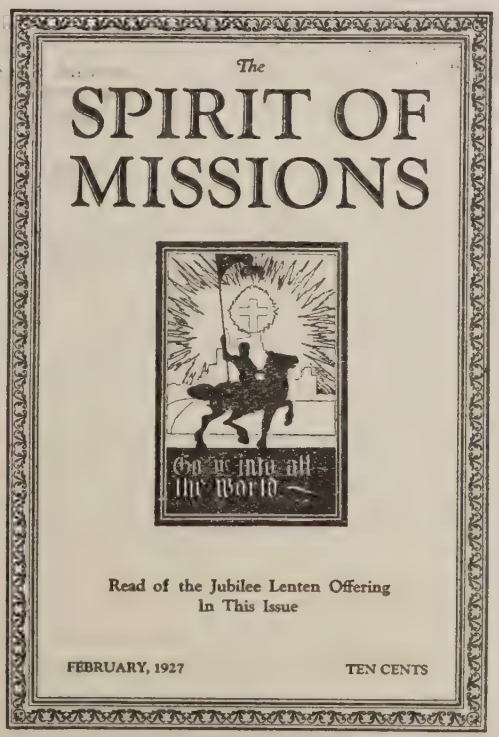
DEATHS.

The Rev. Arthur Forbes, Ph. D., rector emeritus of Grace Church, City Island, died Sunday, March 6, at his home in White Plains, N. Y.

Dr. Forbes was made deacon in 1881, and the following year ordained priest by Bishop Horatio Potter. Practically his entire ministry was spent at Grace Church.

NELSON PRAYER BOOK AND THE NEW HYMNAL

Possess this beautiful new edition of the Prayer Book: use it in your devotion; enjoy its clear, readable type, its fine paper. This Prayer Book is published under certificate of approval from the custodian of the Standard Prayer Book.



Increase the joy of the service by the use of this beautiful new hymnal—the last word in satisfying book construction. The hymnal is authorized and approved for use by the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America.

Printed on fine white paper and thin India paper, they may be purchased singly or in combination. Prices 50 cents to $22.50. For Sale by all Dealers.

Thomas Nelson & Sons 381R—Fourth Avenue New York

Subscribe to THE SPIRIT OF MISSIONS

Essential information about the missionary work of the Church, at home and abroad, told each month in picture and story

Only $1.00 a year

Subscribe now through the children of your Church school, through the Woman's Auxiliary of your Parish or send direct to

THE SPIRIT OF MISSIONS

"The Best-Loved Magazine"

281 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

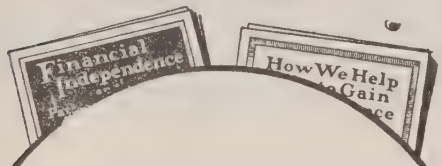
The Bell Book and Stationery Co.

ENGRAVED WEDDING ANNOUNCEMENTS
VISITING CARDS.
Fifth Street between Broad and Grace
RICHMOND, VA.

CHOIR SLIPS

With order for entries of Anthems and Hymns for Morning and Evening Service.

In pads of 100 each, arranged for carbon copies.



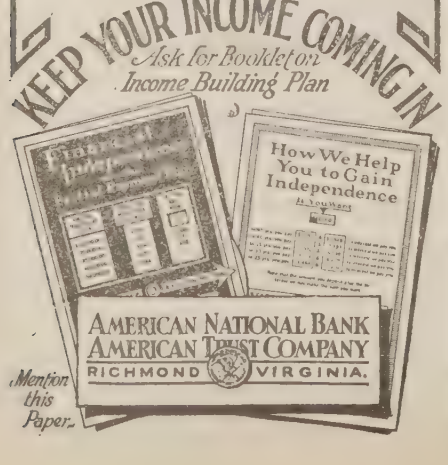
100 Slips	$1.00
200 Slips	1.75
300 Slips	2.50
500 Slips	4.00
1000 Slips	5.00

A copy for your rector, organist and each member of the Choir will help the service.

Order From

Southern Churchman Co.

Richmond, Va.



YOU CAN'T GO FAR IF YOUR MOTOR IS MISSING.

and so with saving money.

To go far the best way is to make regular weekly deposits—select an amount within your means and then be regular. The regularity is what counts. Don't miss and you will be surprised at your financial progress.

Try this method by the Income Building Plan, geared to 6% on units of $100 by First Mortgage Investments.

INCORPORATED 1832

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,398,462.62

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.

B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer
J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm . P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

A Complete Store of shops and --- more --- an Institution

Miller & Rhoads

THE SHOPPING CENTER

Richmond - Virginia

QUALITY CHICKS

Chicks from winter laying, farm raised, mature stock, S. C. W. Leghorns, R. I. Reds, Barred Rocks, White Orpingtons, Anconas, Black Jersey Giants, White Wyandottes, White Plymouth Rocks, Black Minorcas, Pekin and Indian Runner Ducks; $15 per 100 up. Live Delivery guaranteed. Parcel Post prepaid. Hatching eggs $8.00 per 100 up. Several breeds rabbits. Circular free. Shipments will be made from one of our nearest associated hatcheries.

Glen Rock Nursery and Stock Farm, Ridgewood, N. J.

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.,
308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.
QUALITY—SERVICE

The South's Best Book Store

HUNTER & CO.

105 E. Broad Street
Richmond, Va.
Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen.
Prompt and Reliable Service.

SYDNOR & HUNDLEY'S STOCK REDUCTION SALE

Complete Suites and Hundreds of Occasional Prices at

25 Per Cent, 33 1-3 Per Cent and 50 Per Cent Reductions.

7th at Grace — Richmond, Va.

Giant Pansies—Pansy blooms are from the size or a quarter to 3 1-2 in. across. We grow the latter strain—no better anywhere at any price. Transplanted in Nov. Outdoors all winter. Mixed gorgeous colors. 50c per doz., $1.50 for 50, $3.00 for 100, postpaid. Wakefield Floral Co., Charlatte, N. C.

A NATIONAL CHURCH PAPER FOR ALL THE FAMILY.

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS NISI FRUSTRA 1835

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., APRIL 2, 1927. No. 14.

TO give and not to count the cost;
To fight and not to heed the wounds;
To toil and not to seek for rest;
To labour and not to ask for any reward
Save that of knowing that we do Thy will,
O Lord, our God.

:: Contributors for 1927 ::

The Rt. Rev. Charles L. Slattery, D. D.
The Rev. Robert Norwood, D. D.
The Rt. Rev. Theodore I. Reese, D. D.
The Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, D. D.
The Rt. Rev. Edward L. Parsons, D. D.
The Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, D. D.
The Rev. John Gass.
The Rt. Rev. Clinton S. Quin, D. D.
The Rev. George Parkin Atwater, D. D.
James H. Dillard, LL. D.
The Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, D. D.
Margaret Prescott Montague
Mary Evelyn Brydon, M. D.
The Rev. W. Russell Bowie, D. D.
The Rev. Karl M. Block, D. D.
The Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D.
The Rev. W. Cosby Bell, D. D.
The Rev. Thos. K. Nelson, D. D.
The Rev. E. Stanley Jones.
Sir Henry Lunn.

EDUCATIONAL

The Virginia Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded.
Established 1892.
For terms and information address
MISS M. GUNDRY.

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-eighth year of this School for Boys opened September 15, 1926. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. Hoxton, B. A., Principal.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The Requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA,

prepares boys at cost for college and university. Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountians of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., Rector.

St. Hilda's Hall

Charles Town, W. Va.
Near Harper's Ferry.

Chevron School for Girls. Episcopal Junior College—four year' High School and two years' College Courses. Elective Music, Art. Business, Athletics. Limited numbers.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

The One Hundred and Fourth Session
Opened Wednesday, Sept. 15, 1926.

For catalogs and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria Va.

Saint Mary's School

A Junior College.
Rev. Warren W. Way, A.M., Rector.

An Episcopal School for Girls. Four years High School and two years College Courses. Accredited. Special courses: Music, Art, Expression, Home Economics, Business.

20 Acre Campus, Gymnasium, Field Sports New, Indoor, Tiled Swimming Pool
Advent session opens September 14, 1926
For catalogue address
A. W. Tucker, Bus. Mgr.,
Box 19. Raleigh, N. C.

National Cathedral School

A Home and Day School for Girls.
The Bishop of Washington, President Board of Trustees. Jessie C. McDonald, M. S., Principal. Helen L. Webster, Ph. D., Academic Head. Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY, Publishers,
112 North Fifth Street, - Richmond, Va.

LEWIS C. WILLIAMS.....President
REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Associate Editor
MISS FENTON WILLIAMSON, News Editor
MISS SUSAN C. COOKE, Circulation Dept.
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00 Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful.....	4
Editorials	5-6
The Pulpit of the American Church	7
The Object of the Good Friday Offering	8
A Follow-Up For the Crusade—The Rev. Nelson P. Dame	9
Christianity and the Community—The Rev. R. Cary Montague ...	10
Book Reviews	11
Letters to the Editor	12
Interesting Pageant in St. John's Church, Richmond, Va.	13
Church Intelligence	14
Family Department	17
Children's Department	19
Personal Notes	23

St. Stephen's College

An Undergraduate Church College for men.

There are four curricula—Classical, Literary, Scientific and Social Scientific.

For tution $250.00 a year; foo a room furnished and heated $150.00 a year; for board in hall $250.00 a year; a total of $650.00.

Address: BERNARD IDDINGS BELL, President

Annandale-on-Hudson, N. Y. (Railway Station, Barrytown, N. Y.)

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesvile; St. Margaret's School, Tapphannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.)

(About gifts or bequests, address the Dean, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR BOYS.
Richmond, Virginia.

Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 60 pupils.

RATE $700.00.

Reduction to sons of Clergymen, teachers and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., Headmaster.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

St. Agnes' Episcopal School

Alexandria, Virginia.

Boarding and Day School for Girls on Braddock Heights overlooking the Potomac River.

On the interurban trolley and bus lines between Washington and Alexandria.

Athletics and open air life; sixteen-acre campus. Primary, Intermediate, General and College Preparatory Courses. Music.

For information apply to
THE PRINCIPAL.

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University.

For catalog address

The Dean.

STUART HALL

STAUNTON, VA.

1843 1927

FORMERLY VIRGINIA FEMALE INSTITUTE

Oldest girls' school in Virginia—Episcopal For Catalogue, address MRS. H. N. HILLS, A. B., Box P.

St. Albans

The National Cathedral School for Boys

Thorough Preparation for Leading Universities splendid equipment, unexcelled location on Mt. St. Alban overlooking Washington.

Eight years' course. Athletics for Every Boy.

Address:
WILLIAM H. CHURCH, Head Master,
Washington D. C.

HOBART COLLEGE, Geneva, N. Y

A Church College for men, founded 1822. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

Entreaty.

Too close life crowds. There is no place to hide.
From feverish days my heart throbs in my side,
"Let us take time, take time".
Let us take time to know the thoughts of men;
Time to know beauty; and time to feel again
Calm and content of soul—the quiet power
Of meditation through a gentle hour;
Time for the book, the song, the golden weather
Made for the happiness of friends together;
Time to believe; and time to lift the bars
'Twixt us and Truth, 'twixt heart-beat and the stars,
Before our breath is spent, before life's mill
Grinds all too fine. Let us this hour be still.
Let us take time—take time.

—Ellen H. Davis.

Christianity a Fire.

Prof. James Moffatt, who has given us that excellent translation of the New Testament, has recently been among the Methodists in Belfast, Ireland, and in an address given at the Garrett Biblical Institute said, among other things, the following: "Men and women, the Christianity of the Lord Jesus Christ is a fire which he came to kindle. 'I came,' He said, 'to kindle a fire.' You and I are not like a group of men upon a lonely moor kneeling down to prevent a little spot of fire being blown out by the great winds of the world, although to listen to some people you would think we were. The Christian Church is not nervously engaged in trying to prevent the extinction of Christianity from the universe; Christianity is in far wiser hands than ours, as it has always been. What you and I have to do is to keep in touch with the fire. The fire will always burn in our lives, whether in our devotion and thought and perseverance it has material for its use that will enable God to do the work of lighting and warming our age. That is the problem for our service, and that is where we are to learn against the great truth that the Christian religion, the Christian service implies first-hand acquaintance with God."—The Methodist, Australia.

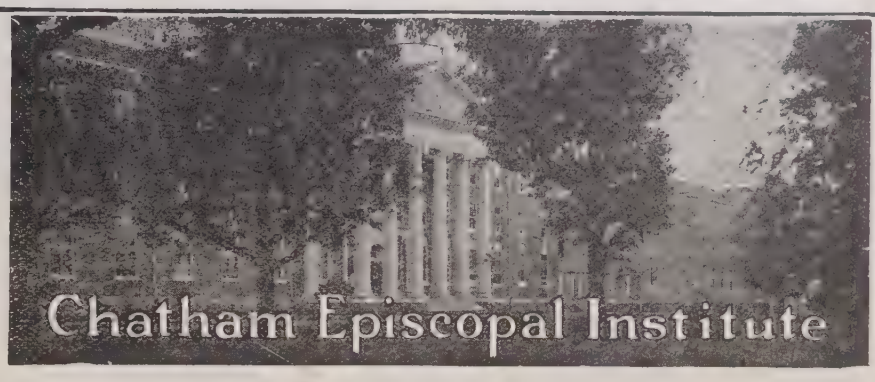
Green Leaves.

We all live on sunlight—men and beasts and all living things in the world. To be sure, it is served up to us as bread and potatoes and cucumbers and onions and other things to eat, but these are mere carriers for the energy of the insubstantial shining rays that were captured and locked up in sugar and starch molecules by the strange green stuff called chlorophyll in the leaves of plants. No part of a plant touches human life at so many points, nor so vitally concerns our daily activities as leaves. For the food that we eat, whether vegetable or animal; for the clothing we wear, whether cotton, woolen, or silk; for the frame dwellings in which some of us live; and for the wood, coal, gas and electricity by which our buildings are heated and lighted, we are dependent, either directly or indirectly, upon certain vital processes that take place, almost exclusively, within the tissues of green leaves. Sometimes we eat leaves directly, such as lettuce and cabbage, or spinach and other greens; or indirectly, as in the form of bread and potatoes and other vegetables. As every one knows, most of the meat that we eat, as well as our butter and milk, are derived from animals that live wholly or largely on leaves. Every particle of wood and of coal in the world was formerly inside of a green leaf; and the heat and light that give comfort and cheer to our homes represent the sunlight and sun's heat of a previous geological age, captured by green leaves of trees and stored up in their new fossil trunks in our coal mines.—Presbyterian Banner.

Learn to rest; not only from sin and self, but in all stress. Refuse disquiet. Sink into God. Hide in Him. Understand the attacks of evil, why they come, and how to defeat them. Souls are often bound by lack of knowledge; they need to know how to reckon themselves to be dead indeed into sin and alive unto God, to dispel the darkness and cast off the burden.—Stearns.

It is an old commonplace of divinity, which we are strangely forgetting, that despair is the only utter perdition; because despair binds a man in the prison of his own evil nature, and fastens the chain of the evil spirit upon him; because all hope points upward to God and is the response of our spirit to His Spirit."—E. P. Maurice.

Richmond Trust Company



3%

ON SAVINGS

BANKING—TRUSTS—REAL ESTATE

Capital $1,000,000.00

Main at Seventh Richmond, Virginia.

Chatham, Virginia

College preparatory school for girls. Certificate privileges. Also two years of advanced academic work in English, History, Psychology and Sociology. Special courses—Music, Art, Expression, Home Economics. Modern equipment. 15-acre campus. Swimming pool. Golf course. Terms moderate. 33rd session September 22, 1926. BISHOP OF DIOCESE OF SOUTHERN VIRGINIA, President of the Board. For catalog address

MABEL ELEANOR STONE, A.M., Principal, Box 13.

SEEDTIME

Planting is going on apace and in due course the harvest will be reaped. In like manner you should sow the seed of future success now —save, accumulate and invest.

Open a savings account with us.

State-Planters Bank and Trust Co.

Richmond, Virginia.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY

EASTER GIFTS

Bibles - Testaments - Portions
Of Every Kind
In Every Language
For Gift and Home Use
For Missionary Purposes

Visit or Write Nearest Agency

New York - New York Colored - Philadelphia - Washington - Richmond - Cincinnati - Chicago - Dallas - Denver - San Francisco

"Palmer's book is a wonderful contribution to the subject," says Bishop Darst.

THE MINISTRY OF LAYMEN

A Plea for Lay Evangelism

By

LEON C. PALMER.

Over 2,000 copies sold before edition was off the press.

Postpaid: Single copies, 25c.; four for $1.00; nine for $2.00.

From

The BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW

202 S. Nineteenth St., Philadelphia.

EVERYTHING FOR THE CHURCH

J. & R. Lamb
23-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED WOOD · METAL · ETC.

Dewey's
EST. 1857
MATURED
WINES
for Sacramental Use
Affidavit Blanks and Price
Lists Mailed on Request
H. T. Dewey & Sons Co.,
138 Fulton St., N. Y. C.

WOODY ART GLASS SHOP
Art Stained and Leaded Glass
Church Windows a Specialty
402 East Marshall St.
Richmond, Va.

Church and Sunday School
Furniture
THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY
Hickory, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue

Real Estate
Loans
REASONABLE RATES
AND TERMS
SOUTHERN BOND AND MORTGAGE
COMPANY, INC.,
627 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.

GRANITE AND MARBLE
MEMORIALS
Largest stock in the South. We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival
The Couper Marble Works
(Established 79 years.)
294-296 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

Cuticura
Soap and Ointment
Keep the Scalp
Clean and Healthy
Promote Hair Growth

R. GEISSLER, INC.
56 W. 8th STREET, NEW YORK, N.Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER
FABRICS + WINDOWS

XANTHINE
Hair Restorative
Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.
Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.
XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

The Sargent Camps For Girls
Peterboro, New Hampshire
Exceptional equipment for riding, boating, tennis and all other outdoor sports. Sargent Club for young Woman over 20. Come and stay for a week or more. Number limited. For booklet address
MRS. C. L. SCHARDER, Director,

Washington Cathedral
A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation
* * *
THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work. Missionary, Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.
Chartered under Act of Congress.
Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.
Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.
* * *
Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

Church
Furniture
Pews · Pulpits · Chancel · Furniture
· Sunday School Seating
American Seating Company
General Offices 1029 Lycton Bldg., CHICAGO.
Catalogues on Request.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Death is a glorious event for one who is going to Jesus.—Livingstone.

There can be no true politeness without the practice of self-denial.

It is a good deal easier to be patient with an elephant than with a mosquito.

If you love Christ and love your friends, how easy to bring the two together.

Each Christian is an ambassador for Christ. He may forget his message, but his responsibility remains ever the same.

Where one man reads the Bible a hundred men read you and me. I would not give much for all that can be done by sermons, if we do not preach Christ by our lives.—D. L. Moody.

When Saint Paul was growing old in Christian faith and experience he considered one of his younger colleagues in Christian work to the effect that "The Lord's servant must be gentle towards all".

Until the birth in Bethlehem God spoke to man in human words, but in Christ God appeared in human nature. A human heart here speaks in human language and human motions.—A. Kuyper.

Of all things, beware of taking an attitude of cold condemnation toward one "overtaken in a fault". In that after reaction, when men feel the sting of their failure they need, not our condemnation, but our Christ.

When we land on the bleak shore of disappointment we shall make the wonderful discovery that the Saviour has anticipated our coming and has made ample provision. There will be heavenly cordials, and there will be comforts of grace, and there will be the exhilarating wine of a new hope.—J. H. Jowett.

O endless sense of rest!
Like the beloved John,
To lay his head upon the Saviour's Breast,
And thus to journey on.
Yea, in Thy life our little lives are ended,
Into Thy depths our trembling spirits fail:
In Thee enfolded, gathered, comprehended,
As holds the sea her waves, Thou hold'st us all."

It should be a primary principle of interpretation that one is misusing and abusing the Bible whenever he fails to give to it the finest possible construction—the one that will encourage and promote the highest and most idealistic type of Christian conduct. Whoever seeks to find in the Bible justification for his own littleness of spirit or conduct thereby betrays the fact that he is not desiring to know the will of God but to follow his own selfish pleasure or profit.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., APRIL 2, 1927. No. 14.

RELIGION THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

TWO MILLION THREE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS for one moving picture show seems a tremendous sum, and at first some will exclaim, "What an amount of money to put into frivolity"! But this expenditure is in behalf of religion, and of the Christian religion. It has been spent in the preparation of "The King of Kings", a great picture showing the public ministry, the death and resurrection of Christ. This production has been prepared under the direction of one of the ablest moving picture producers in cooperation with George Reid Andrews, Chairman of the Drama Committee of the Federal Council of Churches, representing Protestant thought, and the Rev. Daniel A. Lord, S. J., Professor of Drama, of St. Louis University, representing the Roman Catholics. It has been the constant effort of the producers to present the Universal Christ in such a way that young and old will love Him more, and seek to know Him better; and a reverent, prayerful atmosphere has been the aim continually in the mind of the creators of this picture. It is hoped that it will reach many millions of people with a forceful religious message, great numbers of whom rarely attend Church.

A LONG STEP TOWARD DRYING UP PRINCETON was taken the other day, when nearly one thousand gallons of liquor were confiscated by Federal agents of the Prohibition Department. While Dean Christian Gauss was not mentioned in any way, nevertheless he smiled in a satisfied and significant manner when questioned about it the next day. Last year he waged a successful war on road houses and speak-easies, causing a general cleaning up. If only our respectable citizens would take this kind of interest in law enforcement and help instead of hindering officials, prohibition would soon be a force and not a farce.

THE NATIONAL RELIGIOUS QUESTION BOX conducted by the Rev. S. Parkes Cadman is responsible for the following statistics on the religions of the world. Even though they are not absolutely accurate, they are certainly interesting:

"What is the estimated number of Christians in the world and what is the estimated number of non-Christians? And how does Christianity stand relatively to other religions?

According to the latest compilations made by the Lutheran World Almanac (1924-26), the total population of the globe today is approximately 1,817,302,000 souls. These are substantially divided as follows:

Mahometans	227,549,000
Hindus	215,512,000
Confucianists and Taoists	310,715,000
Buddhists	140,047,000
Shintoists	20,150,000
Animists	161,272,000
Jews	15,557,000
Miscellaneous	100,000,000

There are 639,000,000 Christians, including all branches of the faith throughout Christendom, of which the main divisions are:

Roman Catholics	301,645,808
Eastern Orthodox Churches	125,575,688
Protestants	181,259,655

These figures are at best mere approximations. No census has been taken since the World War and there is always a wide margin of speculation in such huge statistical reports. But even their approximate value shows that Christianity has far more followers than any other single religion. It also prevails in those nations which have hitherto led the civilization of the race. A popular yet scholarly account of the extension of the Kingdom of Christ throughout the last twenty centuries and of its influence over every phase of thought and life can be obtained from "An Outline of Christianity", now in course of publication.

What Protestant denomination has the largest number of adherents in the United States and what Protestant denomination has the largest number of adherents throughout the world?

The Methodist Churches, North and South, together with the thirteen affiliated Churches of that persuasion constitute the largest Protestant communion of the Republic, with an approximate strength of 8,920,190 members.

The next six largest American denominations are the Baptists of all branches, 8,397,914; the Presbyterians, 2,561,986; the Lutherans, 2,546,127; the Disciples, 1,759,399; the Protestant Episcopalians, 1,164,911, and the Congregationalists, 907,583.

The Lutheran Churches have the largest number of adherents of any Protestant body throughout the world, their total membership being in round numbers about 80,000,000."

A CHANDELIER OF GLASS HAND-CUT BY BOHEMIAN CRAFTSMEN was presented to the Cathedral of St. John The Divine in New York, by Dr. Jaroslav Novak, Czechoslovak Consul-General, representing his government. This is the seventh foreign power to make a contribution to this Cathedral, and in his presentation speech, Dr. Novak said in part:

"As six other countries before her, Czechoslovakia wishes to contribute in her way to the beauty of this monument of American creative spirit, which is to stay as a lasting memorial of this our period of immense growth and rapid development.

"With admiration we look at this magnificent poem in stone rising before our eyes toward heaven. We wish to help you in your task by a modest contribution.

"We also shall never forget in Czechoslovakia that America was among the first states to recognize the Czechoslovak government formed, during the war, by President Masaryk, Minister Benes and General Stefanyk.

"On the twenty-sixth of October 1918 President Masaryk signed the declaration of Czechoslovak Independence at the Independence Hall of Philadelphia and—at that moment—a bell, cast on the example of Liberty Bell, was rung by orphans of Czechoslovak soldiers from America killed in action."

By such gifts and symbols are the friendships of nations welded more securely.

A CHRISTIAN POLICY TOWARD CHINA, OR WORLD DIVISION, is what confronts European nations and the United States. Bolshevik Russia is backing the Nationalist movement in China with both sympathy and material, sending them trained leaders as well as giving them encouragement. The Chinese are by nature conservative, and not Communistic, but with harsh treatment from the conservative half of the world, and with assistance from the Communistic portion, they may be influenced to join the latter, and if they do, the combined populations of Russia and China will make a formidable group to be reckoned with. The danger is all the greater since the unrest might easily spread to the swarming myriads of India, and a combination result that would include half of the people of the world.

If, on the other hand, we show a conciliatory spirit toward this awakening nation, recognizing that a certain amount of violence is sure to follow the evacuation of territory by one group of soldiers, while another faction is taking possession, we can maintain that friendly relationship with the Chinese, that has existed in the past and so offset Russian influence. It will be more Christian, and cheaper, too, for the United States Government to pay for loss of property in China than to awaken antagonism in the hearts of these people, who are just beginning to come to themselves as a world power.

"MY GOD, MY GOD, WHY HAST THOU FORSAKEN ME?"

These final words from the Saviour's lips have puzzled many thoughtful Christians, who have wondered if Jesus felt at the last moment a sense of separation from the Father.

We do not believe so. Of course, this exclamation will be recognized as the opening verse of the twenty-second Psalm. If we turn to that portion of the Scripture we shall find therein a picture in all its harrowing details of the trial and crucifixion of Jesus. If one reads the Gospel Records of this event and then turns to the Psalm, the similarity is amazingly striking.

First comes the scene of the agony in the garden, then in verses three, four and five is the respite when "there appeared an angel unto Him from Heaven, strengthening Him" (Luke 22:43).

Then the mocking of the soldiers, followed by another temporary relief when He stood before Pilate, who was so filled with respectful awe that he could not repress the tribute, "Ecce Homo" (Behold the Man). Afterward the scourging (Psalm 22:11, 12, 13). Then the final agony of feverish thirst (Psalm 22:14, 15). The racking of the joints from hanging on the cross, and the scene of struggle and agony pictured in the Psalm, closing with verses 20 and 21, where a great paean of praise begins, and the rest of the Psalm changes to a song of triumph as the victorious soul of Jesus goes forth to carry His message of conquest to "the great congregation" (see 1 Peter 3:18, 19, 20).

May it not have been the intention of the Master in using the apparently despondent words of the opening verse of this Psalm, simply for the purpose of calling the attention of His followers to the accuracy of the prophecy concerning His death? We are not literalists, but it cannot be forgotten that the progress of early Christianity among the Jews was based upon the fulfilment by Jesus, especially in His death and resurrection in the Old Testament prophecies.

In Peter's first sermon he cites the Book of Joel and the Psalms of David. Philip uses passages from Isaiah to convert the Ethiopian. Everywhere that Paul went he used the Old Testament Scriptures to preach Christ to both Jew and Gentile.

Today, we have such wonderful evidence of the Messiahship of Jesus all around us in the improved condition of the world, that we are apt to neglect the mighty argument of fulfilment of prophecy, which was so potent in the early days, and, in fact, was the sole convincing proof used by the Apostles. Whatever view one may take of the time and place of the writing of the twenty-second Psalm, the fact remains that it must have occurred at least one or two centuries before the coming of Jesus and if one reads it carefully in connection with the Gospel narratives, it gives a new meaning to that clause of the Nicene Creed, wherein we profess our faith "in the Holy Ghost, the Lord and giver of life, . . who proceedeth from the Father and then in verses three, four and five is the respite when

THIS WEEK'S CONTRIBUTORS

THE REVEREND JUSTIN WROE NIXON, D. D., was born in Delphi, Indiana. He took his college education at Denison College, Ohio, which subsequently conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Divinity; he has also studied at Columbia University and in Chicago. Upon his graduation he went to Minneapolis as pastor of the Judson Memorial Church. After remaining there almost a decade, he came to the Theological Seminary in Rochester, New York, as Professor of Hebrew Language and later of Christian Sociology. He was called from the Seminary to the pastorate of the Brick Presbyterian, Rochester, where he is at present. In securing a Pulpit Sermon from Dr. Nixon, we are establishing a precedent, which we expect to keep up from time to time in using sermons from leading preachers outside of our own communion. Dr. Nixon is recognized as one of the best pulpit speakers in this country.

THE REVEREND NELSON PAGE DAME was born in Danville, Virginia, belonging to a family that has furnished many distinguished clergy to the Episcopal Church. He received both his college and Theological training in his native state, at the University of Virginia, and The Seminary at Alexandria. After graduating from the latter he served the Church at Blacksburg, Virginia, for three years. He then went to West River, Maryland, and from there he was called to Christ Church, Winchester, Virginia. He remained in this parish nearly twenty years. In 1904 he was called to St. Paul's Church, Ossining, New York, where he remained for eight years. He then took up work as the Missioner of the Diocese of Virginia, in which position he is rendering untiring and faithful service, frequently moving from one end of the Diocese to the other during his monthly round in keeping up the work in vacant parishes.

THE PULPIT OF THE AMERICAN CHURCH

THE TRUTH OF RELIGION

By the Reverend Justin W. Nixon, D. D.

"By the manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God."—2 Corinthians 4:2

IS RELIGION really true? There are few questions which search the depths of our inner spiritual disturbance in these days more thoroughly than this one. There are many of us who are perfectly willing to grant that religion is consoling, that it is a comfort to the bereaved, a solace to the lonely, an anodyne to the suffering. There are scholars who tell us that religion has been a fertilizing influence in human history. There are hard-headed men of affairs who assert that it is good for business. But is it true? Can an intelligent man be religious with his eyes open and his brain working? On the answer to that religion, with many of us, stands or falls.

Now it is an interesting fact that the founders of the Christian religion, at any rate, thought that the religion which they preached, was true. They did not dodge this question of ours. They met it head on. Jesus said that He came to bear witness to the truth. The Apostle Paul says (Moffatt's translation) "I state the truth openly and so commend myself to every man's conscience in the sight of God". Jesus and Paul were tremendously interested in a religion that was true. They were not interested in any other kind. The fact that a religion was helpful or consoling was not an excuse for its being untrue. We might as well have it out with this question, for we cannot permanently ignore it. The reason for a vast deal of the religious indifference of our day is that men and women half suspect that the articles of their faith are not true; and no religion is going to do very much for the world, which is held in only a luke-warm fashion by those who profess it.

But how shall we get at such an immense question as the truth of religion? Shall we take up the various articles in the Creeds and assay them for their truth? Shall we compare the various religious philosophies? Shall we take up one of the great doctrines and put it under the microscope of criticism? The complications involved in the use of such methods are indefinitely great, and after all we should be discussing matters of secondary importance. The matter of primary importance is to be able to detect religious truth when we see it, and upon that matter it is possible to throw some light from the passage in Paul's second letter to the Corinthians, quoted a moment ago. "I state the truth only and so commend myself to every man's conscience in the sight of God."

The word "truth" itself would help us on this question of the tests of religious truth if we would take the word seriously and ask what it meant. We do not take such words seriously. They slip off the tongue in an easy fashion and we pay no attention to the vast amount of human experienced which they have crystallized. "Truth" is one of the great words in our language, but how easily we say it! Socrates drank the hemlock that truth might flow on, a perennial spring. The ashes of Giordano Bruno littered the public square in Rome that the fire of truth might not die out on the altars of human aspiration. The word "truth" comes to us garnished with the tears, the struggles, the sacrifices of the ages. It is an infinitely precious word, but what does it mean?

Suppose you asked the first men who used the Greek word for truth, that Paul uses, what it meant. You come upon something quite suggestive. Homer, for instance, gives us the picture of a man who renders a report of the number of the enemy, and comes back with evidence which confirms the second report. In regard to the second report, Homer uses the adjective which we translate "truthful". The context shows that Homer intended to convey the idea that the first report concealed something while the second report was open, above-board, candid as to all the facts. The earliest use of the word "truth", accordingly, refers not at all to some formula or doctrine or theory. It refers to the character of men who made reports. The men who acted openly, sincerely, honestly, Homer calls "truthful"; the men who acted in a crafty, dubious manner he calls "untruthful".

Another experience of the ancient world may help us to understand the idea of truth. People were accustomed to see actors upon the stage. These actors wore masks. They played the parts indicated by their masks. When they took off their masks they were themselves as they really were. The notion gradually grew up that truth was a version of life as spoken by men without masks, who were not playing a part, who had nothing to conceal, who were just themselves. Again, you see, the truth is the statement of the honest, genuine man as against the statement of a man who is not open and sincere.

The point I am interested in making is that "truth" in its original sense is the report of an honest man. It is not a formula or doctrine or philosophy at all; it is an honest man's reaction to life. It is a moral affair before it is an intellectual affair. It is a matter of character before it is a matter of words.

You must have the rose in the garden before you can have a classification of roses in your botanical text-book. You must have a dog in the kennel before you have the word "dog" in the dictionary. You must have mothers and babies before you have college courses on the care and feeding of children. The truth of religion, the truth Paul was talking about, is something people live before the intellectuals come along and make a theology out of it. Whatever else may be the fact about religion, its truth is life before it is doctrine or philosophy.

There is nothing peculiar to religion, of course, about this conception of truth. We act on this view in both our everyday conduct and in the technical matters of science. We say "That man rings true". We may not be able to judge what he says by some specialized standard. He may be speaking as an expert. We judge the truth of what he speaks by the manner in which he speaks it. We trust a man's words even though we do not understand them, when we know his character.

The truth of science, abstract as it is, rests, at bottom, on basis of morals. Science is not primarily a matter of instruments or technique; it is a matter of humility, honesty, industry, and self-forgetfulness. Let me illustrate. A distinguished anatomist was discussing a certain reputed medical discovery. He said, "It is all very interesting, but I wish Dr. A—— had worked out more cases, I wish he could explain his failure more satisfactorily, and above all I wish that he were not in such a hurry". The anatomist could not attack the results of Dr. A——, but he did feel that certain moral qualities, such as patience and humility, essential to sound scientific work, were absent. Compare this scientist's hurry to get credit for his discovery with Darwin's delay of twenty years before publishing his conclusions concerning the origin of the species. The greatness of Darwin's work had a moral basis. In reply to a question as to where the secret of his scientific achievements lay, he said that if it lay anywhere it lay in his habit of giving special attention to the negative cases—those which were against his theory. Darwin's truth was in Darwin's character first, then in his doctrine.

The moral basis of science is clearly demonstrated by the recent tragic suicide of Paul Kammerer, the famous Austrian Biologist. Professor Kammerer discovered that some of the evidence upon which he had based his theory of the inheritance of acquired characteristics had been falsified by an assistant. The Austrian scientist felt that he himself would be accused and that he would probably be unable to clear his name. He knew, moreover, that if he lost the moral confidence of the scientific world, he could not hope to retain its intellectual respect.

What does this ultimate moral nature of truth mean for us in the sphere of religion? Simply this: if truth is life before it is doctrine or philosophy, then the truth of religion for you is embodied neither in a Church nor a Creed, but in the best person you know. I do not care primarily what that person believes. Study that person, live with him, catch the contagion of his ideals, allow the spell of his motives to lure you to higher things.

The truth of religion—the supreme truth—is always in a life. That is why Jesus Christ stands at the center of the Christian faith—a sound instinct has placed Him there. Christianity is simply the spirit of Jesus reincarnated in human lives. But that means taking Jesus seriously. It is so much easier to embalm Him in a doctrine and then pay lip-service at His shrine. The world has preferred to be innoculated with a mild form of Christianity which will prevent it from catching the real thing. The real thing will be something lived. Men know little in religion beyond the level of their living. The level of living has to rise before the eyes of our generation will be able to sweep a wider horizon of theology or philosophy.

It would certainly be paradoxical, however, if the Apostle Paul should leave us to the tender mercies of scholarship to discover that the truth of religion is life rather than doctrine. He does not so leave us. He makes his thought explicit when he says that his truth is truth for the conscience. "Commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God." In this message Paul simply followed in the footsteps of his Master whose first word to the world, back in that Galileean springtime had been "Repent".

We shall have to come back to it. A religion which does not reach the conscience is no good as a religion. Religion starts with the conscience, as philosophy starts with the reason, and in our generation, as in Paul's, the appeal of religion to the conscience comes before the appeal to either the mind or the heart.

Does not our age stand in serious need of such a presentation of truth? Listen to the deans of our colleges inquiring anxiously for a lost or mislaid "sense of responsibility" which many of our youth seem to get along without. Listen to the judges of our courts as they ask, "What is there to appeal to in those who simply want what they want when they want it"? How quaint, how far-off, and alien to the spirit of the times are the words of that old hymn—

"A charge to keep I have—
A God to glorify,
A never-dying soul to save
And fit it for the sky.

To serve the present age—
My calling to fulfill.
O may it all my powers engage
To do the Master's will!"

Quaint, did I say? But it was Jenkin Lloyd Jones, a famous Unitarian preacher, who said that those words contained the essence of all true religion.

Religion for you and for me starts with the conscience. It starts with the duty which lies near us, with that apology which we owe, with that evil habit which must be removed, with that sin to be confessed. There is where religion starts. And no truth of religion is true for you which does not reach you there—in your conscience—to burn, to cleanse, to heal, and at last to bless.

May we suggest, in conclusion, that there is a gracious assuring promise in this text of Paul's, as well as this word of warning to the conscience. The truth which he preaches, he says, is truth which is good for "every man". It is not truth to be appropriated simply by an ecclesiastical or intellectual elite. "By the manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God."

No truth can be the primary truth of religion which is not simple enough for the humblest soul to understand. Simplicity is one of the marks of religious genuineness. A washerwoman bending over her tub may know more of God and of eternal things than a philosopher in his study or a scientist in his laboratory. The truth of religion belongs to the glorious democracy of the divine, along with justice, mercy, faith, hope, and love. Beware of any little circle, liberal or orthodox, which claims that "We alone have the truth". The primary truths of religion cannot be monopolized by any select group. You cannot "corner" the atmosphere, neither can you set bounds to the loving revelation of God to His children. The fundamental method of the religious life for every one of us is to take the simple truths of religion, those truths which are real to us, and to begin to live them. Such was the advice, at any rate, of a distinguished college president to one of his students who was exceedingly troubled about his faith. "George," he said, "take your New Testament and underscore everything that Jesus said which you honestly believe." After a week's absence George returned with a well-marked New Testament. The great teacher then gave his final word of counsel. "Now, George," he said, "start to practice those things in which you really believe Jesus was right." The young man took his president's advice so seriously that it ultimately carried him not merely into a satisfying faith, but into a position of Christian leadership.

Yes, religion is true. It is eternally true. It is the most profound, essential truth that we know. But its truth is found incarnate in life rather than in theology; in the appeal to the conscience rather than in the appeal to the mind; in the simplicities available to God's "little ones" rather than in the disquisitions of the learned. That is why the truth of the Christian religion must be stated forever as a person—the man Christ Jesus—rather than as a theology.

THE OBJECT OF THE GOOD FRIDAY OFFERING

THE ordination of ten deacons marked the beginning of the new year's work at the Armenian Seminary in Saint James' Convent, Jerusalem, where, under the leadership of the Armenian Patriarch, this sorely tried people is endeavoring to build anew the foundations of the race. One of these men is in his third year of theological work and eight of the others have just finished their preparatory work and are embarking on theological studies. Three years of hard discipline are ahead of them before they can be ordained priests.

American readers should need no introduction to this educational venture. Their interest has doubtless been aroused by the fact that they have been sharing in the work, as it is from the Good Friday offerings in the United States that the American Church has been able to finance the American Educational Chaplain in Jerusalem, the Rev. Charles T. Bridgeman, who devotes a large part of his time to teaching in the Armenian School. The Anglican Communion may well be proud to have been invited by the ancient Armenian Church so to help her.

Jerusalem is an ideal place for training men to follow in the steps of our Lord and bear witness to His Gospel. From the windows of their class rooms the boys and men look out on the sacred Mount of Olives where our Saviour gathered His disciples about Him; and in all their walks about the Holy City they find places and scenes illustrative of Holy Writ.

The school has about the same number as last year; twenty-two in the preparatory department, and eleven in the theological seminary. Among the new boys who have already arrived is one from Soviet Armenia; others are from the Near East Relief Orphanage in Nazareth.

The curriculum in the lower school is much the same as described before—a preparatory course in which much time is spent on languages, English, Arabic and Greek, as well as Armenian and French. The theological curriculum is admirably taught by the Patriarch and the Rt. Rev. Bishop Papken, Mr. Bridgeman and courses in practical theology, as well as English and literature. The course in physics, which is this year being given by Mr. Bridgeman, is being strengthened by improvements in the laboratory made possible by generous American friends of the school.

Physical training for the boys is still a serious problem. A playing field outside the city has been rented for a couple of years, and friends have made possible the purchase of much-needed equipment, but to secure a qualified instructor is difficult. There is hope that a local man

My Dear Brethren of the Clergy:—

On Good Friday let us be mindful of those who dwell today in the land where our dear Lord lived and gave Himself upon the Cross for the life of the world.

I earnestly request that you urge upon and receive from your people a special Good Friday Offering for the work of our Church in Palestine; and that full opportunity be afforded them to understand the need, so that they may contribute intelligently and liberally to it.

We are answering the call of the ancient Churches of the East and are helping them, "beginning at Jerusalem".

As in St. Paul's time, the Church in distant Galatia made "the collection for the saints" of the persecuted mother Church, I suggest that you do the same, and so will we "bring your liberality to Jerusalem".

Praying the divine blessing on all your work and ways, I am,

Affectionately yours,
John G. Murray,
Presiding Bishop.

New York.

can be secured for this year, but without doubt the best policy will be to bring in a qualified American or English teacher, who in addition to teaching English, can also take charge of athletics. This assistance is being urged upon the American Church as the greatest need facing the work here.

The Church Periodical Club is an ever ready friend of the school. Still more volumes and text-books added to the library attest its valuable aid. It is especially gratifying that books from the library of the late Ven. Eliot White, Archdeacon of Philadelphia, a life-long friend of Eastern Christendom, are among recent accessions.

Education in music is one of the essentials for an Armenian priest, as all of the services are choral. The excellent phonograph which has been presented to the school through the kindness of still another American friend will not only make it possible to illustrate the European and Armenian classics as performed by world-famous artists, but will add greatly to the happiness of the members of the school. Their first question on learning of the gift was as to whether there were records of Caruso. Friends who would be willing to share their albums of records with the school will give lasting pleasure and instruction.

Renovation of the buildings, new and enlarged quarters for the deacons, better textbooks and many minor improvements witness the steady growth of the Armenian Seminary. Indeed, there is a spirit at work which gives great hope for the future of the Armenian Church.

A FOLLOW-UP FOR THE CRUSADE

By the Reverend Nelson P. Dame

I SUPPOSE that every one who took part in the Bishops' Crusade, and perhaps many who saw the Crusaders at work, will have some suggestion to offer as to how the work may be better done in the future. All such suggestions, I am sure, will be heartily welcomed by the National Commission on Evangelism.

There is no question in my mind that the Crusade accomplished tremendous good, and the end is not yet. And I am convinced that it ought to be carried on in future years. The results were great; but they were not as great, nor do they promise to be as enduring, as they ought to be. I am persuaded that the trouble lay in the lack of efficient organization of the congregation as it exists everywhere in the Church today.

You know the difference between an armful of staves, and a barrel; between a pile of building material, and a house; between a number of persons who can sing or play well upon instruments of music, and a choir or an orchestra; between a hundred courageous young men, and a company of soldiers. The difference is one of organization. The same difference exists between the ordinary congregation, and the body which our Lord needs as His instrument for turning the world to God. He asks for a vessel that He may fill it with His Spirit; and we offer Him an armful of staves. He asks for a house, a habitation, built of "living stones", that He may dwell among us; and we offer Him a pile of building materials. He asks for a company of soldiers to oppose the organized forces of evil; and we offer Him an unorganized, untrained, undisciplined mob. He asks for a choir or an orchestra to "make one sound to be heard" in praising the Lord; and we offer Him a number of persons, each of whom sings or plays his own tune, in his own time, in his own way. We all prayed that " a fire of burning zeal might be kindled among us, and pass from heart to heart" until the whole Church was aflame with the fire of God. Everywhere the Crusaders went they found unlimited fuel for the divine fire, and it was set on fire in a hundred individual cases in each congregation; but there was no conflagration, because the fuel was unorganized, and so widely scattered that the fire could not "pass from heart to heart". You cannot make a fire with one stick of wood, or one lump of coal; nor with a hundred cords of wood, or a hundred tons of coal, if the separate pieces of fuel have no proper contact with each other. "If two be together they have heat, but how can one be warm alone?"

In every congregation in the Church there are numbers of Christians who are eager to live the Christian life, and who would be glad to make any sacrifice to help bring about the doing of God's will on earth. But the Christian life is largely social; it cannot be lived except in an organized company of Christians. The work of Christ cannot be done effectively, if at all, by any number of isolated individuals. It demands team-work, the cooperation of a number of people, organized to act together in obedience to one will for a common purpose. We find everywhere the individuals, consecrated men and women, each trying in isolation and separation to do the best he can; but nowhere do we find the organization of these individuals, or even the attempt to organize them, for corporate Christian living and corporate Christian service. They are trying to do singly what can be done only by an organized, trained and disciplined body.

This, I take it, is the cause of all the Church's troubles, and we are not going to get very far until this condition of things is remedied.

I believe that this situation can be remedied without any great difficulty.

Let us begin with the men. Suppose all the confirmed men of any given congregation were invited to meet at some convenient time and place. It would not be hard to convince them that their Church is not as effective and influential a body in their community as they would like to see it. Its services are not thronged by crowds seeking our Lord's help and blessings. They, themselves, do not get the help and inspiration from it that they ought to have. And yet their Church can be made a tremendous power for good and draw crowds to its services by a very simple process. Say to them in effect:

"When you became a Christian, in any Church, in any communion, you said you so believed in Jesus Christ that you would let Him direct and guide your life. You renounced the life of sin, self-will, self-guidance, and said that you would 'keep God's commandments and walk in His ways all the days of your life'. And you have been trying to do that, each of you, in your own way, according to your own ideas; each man for himself. And you have not gotten on very well in that effort, because you are trying to do the right thing in the wrong way.

"Our Lord's way of helping you to live the Christian life is to organize you into a little company of men, a society, a family, a brotherhood, the Body of Christ, a congregation of His Church; and He asks you to do together what you are now trying to do singly, separately.

"He promises that if you wil lassemble 'in His Name', as His Body, He will be personally present with you. Then if you will seek to know what He wants you to do, in the way that He provides, He will make His will known to you clearly and plainly; and He will give you, in His own prescribed way, the help you need to do it. In other words, He asks that you will form an organized body and let Him teach and train you in His way, as a company of soldiers, or an orchestra, or a choir is taught and trained.

"We are not suggesting that you form or join another organization; you are already a member of Christ's Society, and we do not need any other. Nor are we proposing that you shall assume any other obligation or make any other pledges or promises. You are already pledged to keep God's commandments and to walk in His ways. But we are proposing that you really set yourselves to do the things that you undertook when you became a Christian; undertake to do them in a body instead of singly, as you are trying to do now.

"You are not asked to take anybody's say-so as to what our Lord wants you to do; not mine, nor that of your rector or Bishop or anybody else; not even your own private opinion on that subject. Our Lord says that in such a body of earnest men, He will be personally present, and will teach you clearly what He wants you to know and do. He will deal directly with you as a body. You shall be really 'taught of God'.

"Now would you not be willing to join hands with the other men of this congregation in trying to do together, under our Lord's intruction, and with His help, what you are persuaded that He wants all His people to do? Would you not let Him train you as a company of His soldiers, a little body of His friends, and through you, demonstrate to the community around you the kind of life He wants all men to live? He says it will require some serious sacrifice on your part to do this; but you will thereby render the community a tremendous service that will eventually win you their warmest admiration and praise. This, He says, is the path that leads to glory and honor and immortality, and He is eager to have His friends walk in it. Won't you do it?"

I believe that such an appeal would bring a ready response from some men in any congregation of the Church.

Then, of course, one who sees the vision, one who is himself a surrendered man, must point out to them the way, not all at once, but little by little, and lead them in it step by step until faith gives place to sight.

If such consecrated group would follow up their prayers with definite plans for living the Christ life, by visiting the sick, alleviating suffering, finding companionship for the lonely, and actually putting service before self in their daily lives, it would undoubtedly have an enormous influence toward ushering in real Christianity.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE COMMUNITY

"The Kingdom Come, Thy Will be done on earth"

Edited by the Reverend R. Cary Montague

THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF SOCIAL WORKERS.

The following announcement has been issued from the National Department of Social Service:

"Every one interested is cordially urged to attend the National Conference on Social Service of the Episcopal Church, to be held in Des Moines, Iowa, May 11 to 15. An experiment is to be tried this year that promises to be popular, in having the sessions of the Church Conference dovetail into the sessions of the National Conference on Social Work, which is held from May 11 to 18. Hitherto the Church Conference has preceded the other. This year the Church sessions are scheduled for the afternoon of the first four days of the National Conference, which does not have afternoon sessions. This means that people attending the Church Conference will have ample opportunity to enjoy the other sessions also. Our meetings are held at St. Paul's Church, where the Rev. E. N. Owen is rector.

"The Very Rev. Howard C. Robbins, D. D., Dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York, is to be chaplain of the Conference and preacher on Sunday morning. There is a daily celebration of the Holy Communion. The president of the National Conference on Social Work is John A. Lapp, LL. D., who is also director of the Department of Social Action of the National Catholic Welfare Conference. Dr. Lapp is to address our Church Conference.

"A number of other leaders in social activities will be present to lead the discussions on various subjects of interest to the General Church. The complete program will be issued later.

Space has been spoken for at the Brown Hotel; room and bath, $3.50 a day without meals; sharing a room, $2.00. Reservations should be made directly with the hotel.

COMMENTS ON CHILD TRAINING.

By Mary Evelyn Brydon, M. D.

Article XIII.—The Ten Commandments.

(Continued.)

The Fourth Commandment—Rest (continued).

Teach your child to work for six days a week, and then to stop working and rest. There is no such thing as a perpetual motion machine. Many men have spent their lives trying to invent one, but so far none have succeeded. Every kind of machine will eventually run down. This applies to human machines as well as to those made of metal, wood, etc. Every man who owns a machine that costs money, recognizes the fact that if he wants it to give him the best service for the longest possible length of time he must let it rest with a certain amount of regularity. Work and rest—work and rest, and so the days go by and he finds that this procedure repays him in ultimate service.

Not so with his human machine, however. The manner in which he handles his human machine gives one the idea that he looks upon it as one that will never run down. This is non-intelligent, uneconomical. Even as the body needs rest, so does the mind. Work and rest and sleep. Sleep is something the inanimate machine does not need, but the body and mind do. The sooner we recognize these three needs of the human body the sooner will we begin to get the highest amount of efficiency out of it.

Work in the case of a man is earning his living; in the case of a woman it may be earning a living in a store or office, but it is usually earning it in the capacity of a home-maker. In the case of a child, until he is taught better, work is usually anything he dislikes doing. But this dislike is often brought about by the faulty way it is presented to him. We will speak more of this later.

But this Commandment deals directly with the use of time and its proper division between work and rest. Part of your time you must work and part of your time you must rest. One-seventh of the time of yourself, of your family, of your cattle and even of every visitor in your house, must be given to rest. This is settled definitely for us who are of the household of God. It makes no matter what our work is, we are to give a definite part of our time to resting. It remains for us to decide what our child shall do in his rest period.

It seems to me that there must have been an especial reason for putting the two ideas together: "Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy" and "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord, in it thou shalt not do any work". I think of Sunday as a rest day from all my regular work; and I think of my rest day as a day on which I may have time to do all the lovely things I should like to do for God, and for the children of God. This day must be planned as carefully for my restful occupations as my weekly work day.

No one should ever get the idea that rest is "doing nothing". No child, no, nor any one else, can sit absolutely still for any length of time doing nothing. Rest is change of occupation. When not working, we are lying down, or thinking, or sleeping, or eating, or dressing, or reading, or writing, or talking or engaging in some muscular activity, or playing, etc. There seems to be no end to the things we do in our rest time. Therefore in planning your child's rest period, take into due account first, his inability to sit still for long at a time; second, except when asleep, his mind or body or both must be doing something.

Last week I suggested a Sunday schedule in order that you may get in all the things for family living that usually fill up the Sunday of a Christian household. But even doing everything on this schedule will not fill up the twelve or more hours of a child's day. There are hours he may spend as he likes, though his parents should guide him as far as possible to see that this Sunday play means quieter play than on other days and that he plays at home if possible. But fill up a part of your child's rest day with doing lovely things for God and for His little children.

I like to think of the Fourth Commandment as one which gives us time to be neighborly. I would teach children from this Commandment to give a reasonable amount of their rest time to neighborly service.

Being neighborly, which is Christian social service, must be taught to children. It is easy to teach a little child to love his neighbor. The little child naturally loves everybody. When he is unfriendly, unsocial, shy, perverse, intractable, it is not his fault. He has not been taught to love his neighbor as himself. A few of the little things you might give your child to do in his resting time on Sunday, or any other day are suggested here, but whatever it is it must be something he does himself:

Taking some dainty, part of his own dessert, to a sick comrade.

Reading to a child who cannot read from his Sunday-school book.

Taking flowers he picked himself to a sick friend or to the hospital.

Taking a friend to drive.

Asking a comrade to join the Sunday walk in the woods.

Inviting a lonesome child (or orphan) to dinner.

Taking a child to Church and Sunday School.

BOOK REVIEWS

THE SCRIPTURES IN THE MAKING: By Abigail Pearce, M. A. The Macmillan Company, New York, N. Y. Pp. 205.

Miss Pearce is professor of English in the Michigan State Normal College, and says, in her preface that "this book is an outgrowth of the demand to know something of the history of the making of the Bible, the greatest Book in all literature. It is based on a study and comparison of the decisions of the best authorities and greatest research students. Its aim is to make teachers and pupils familiar with Bible history". There was a time when the Bible was looked upon as so sacred that its compilation and authorship were not considered a proper subject for secular study. Happily that time has passed, and a very much more intelligent interest in the sacred literature has developed. People want to know where the Bible came from, who wrote it, and why some books are in it and some not, who passed the final decision on these questions; when it was first translated into English, and many other questions of like nature. This volume discusses these subjects in an interesting and thoroughly scholarly manner. While taking a modern view of inspiration and interpretation, it is reverent and appreciative of the power of the inspired Word, and we cannot commend the book too highly to those who are at all interested in the subject. It is quite up to date, giving results of recent research in Egypt and Palestine. The last chapter, "Twentieth Century Versions", discusses the literary merits of the latest translations. It will fill a great need in this line of study, and we hope will have a wide circulation.

R. C. M.

THE RADIANT TREE: By Marguerite Wilkinson. The Macmillan Company, New York. Pp. 162.

The title of this volume of poems is symbolical, "The Radiant Tree", being the Cross of our Saviour, and the poems herein are selected with an eye to their bearing on incidents connected with the Crucifixion, and the preceding Lenten season. Excellent taste has been shown in the selection of material, the poems all being of a high order of literary merit, and appropriate in sentiment. This book would make a handsome Easter present, which would give pleasure throughout the year, and we are glad to commend it to our readers.

R. C. M.

REDEMPTION, An Anthology of the Cross: Collected and Edited by the Rev. George Stewart, Ph. D. George H. Doran Company, New York. Pp. 323.

It is unusual for a book of poetry to begin with an inspiring essay, but Dr. Stewart has used as a preface to this volume: "The Madness and the Exultation of the Cross," in which he interweaves appropriate verses with his own well-expressed and lofty ideas. Following this preface, we find a choice of the world's greatest poetry from the Psalms down to Ralph Chaplin and Carl Sanburg, which bears upon the Crucifixion of Jesus or the spirit of redemptive love as manifested on Calvary and in the heroic deeds of men. Among these are many rare and unusual verses, which have not heretofore appeared in published anthologies. This book is of an especially appropriate character for the present season.

R. C. M.

FEAR," the Autobiography of James Edward: By John Rathborne Oliver. The Macmillan Company, New York, N. Y. Pp. 364.

This book is so absorbingly interesting, so fascinating that it is hard to put it down, and the last chapter is a gem of beauty, so appealing in sympathy, love, and understanding of temptation and trial.

James Edwards is the type of the successful man one meets everywhere; superior, pompous, thrifty almost to stinginess—having worked hard himself, he had no mercy on his employees.

"After his success and his money had come, his wife changed somehow, and, while they had never seen much of one another, she had begun to complain, wanted to know why he did not join the country club and entertain."

She developed a "company accent", which he loathed. She had grown fat, or lazy; never got up for breakfast and lay down in the afternoons. But at night she was spry enough to go to the theatre and dances, when he was too tired to do more than read the newspapers and crawl to bed. He had not had time to be with his children. "Why he knew his clerks better."

When his great trouble came, he had no one to turn to, he was so helpless, so alone.

He had been rejected by an insurance company, and had received a great mental shock; he was sure he was going to die. James Edwards was poisoned, poisoned by fear. His fear began to poison his rest and his peace. He was afraid now to go to sleep. He had a sense of appalling oppression, he could not breathe—his heart was strangely irregular.

"Suppose that 'it' should come upon him while he slept!" To die alone, how horrible. He hated to turn out the light and face the long hours of the night. His clothes must be arranged a certain way on the chair. He had obsessive ideas about numbers, three and thirteen made him uneasy, but eighteen or nine gave him a sense of comfort. He touched each of his garments eighteen times, then he felt more peaceful. Sometimes he went downstairs four or five times before he was sure the house was locked up. He was building a fear-ridden life, encroaching more and more on his activities. It would take him over an hour to get to bed, but when morning came, his old fears fled to return with night-fall He was so utterly ashamed of his fear reactions, of his rituals, of his obsessions, that he never told his doctor the truth; they told him to travel, to rest, to go slow; there was nothing really the matter. So he went from bad to worse.

Doctors, nurses and clergymen are often appealed to by such persons and I earnestly urge the reading of this book. Many might be kept from insanity by sympathy and understanding of such suffering.

"One can't blame a man, who has slipped on a banana skin and broken his leg."

Who knows all the antecedent causes of heredity—all the interacting forces of environment?

The majority of strong people have no sympathy with nerves, nor have they any idea how to help heal the nerve-racked patient.

Mr. Edwards' experiences in the Sanitarium under the care of his doctor, the "Fear Hunter", is of absorbing interest. To know the "Fear Hunter" is to love him. He is the finest type of Christian manhood of whom I have ever read, and follows closely in the steps of his Master. He explained to his patient that the only real cure for this dark dread, is a real vital religious experience; that the only way to root out fear thoughts was to fill the mind with other thoughts.

"The river of God's presence flows close by. Give over with pretense; drink of its waters; and face your enemy. You shall find it a poor, weak thing after all. A snake, if you will, but a snake whose poison fangs have been drawn, and who has no longer any power to terrorize or harm."

"For, there be, indeed, thirsts many and grievous. But of all grievous thirsts most grievous is the thirst of fear."

M. M.

THE LIGHT OF THE CROSS: By Frank L. Vernon. Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee. Pp. 54.

The general subject of this little volume is "Is sin and failure irreparable"? The writer proves that only in the light of the Cross and by the power that emanates from it, sin can be reparable.

The book contains addresses on the seven words of Jesus Christ from the Cross, remarkably linked together.

"There is something spectacular about a fall. It arrests attention. It holds the imagination. The returns are not so spectacular." p. 16. But in the mind of the reviewer, rise from a fall is more spectacular and wonderful. This is the work of the grace of God. The writer says that "That burning love that goes down to the bottom of the heart of that wrecked man (the thief of the cross) and forgives him what the world declined to forgive." p. 18. This is one of the lights of the Cross—a forgiving beacon.

These addresses are rich in helpful suggestions and can be read profitably by both clergy and laity.

S. S. S.

THE TOUCH OF GOD: By E. Herman. George H. Doran Company, New York. Pp. 252.

This is a companion volume to the "Meaning and Value of Mysticism" by the same author who is a remarkable woman. The ability and personality of Mrs. Herman has been well introduced in this volume by Dr. James Black, of Edinburgh, Scotland, in his Appreciation which opens the volume. To those who have conflicts in their faith, we recommend this book as the most helpful to feel the Divine presence near, because it points to certain channels that to many people are either hindrances or unknown altogether. The chapters of "The Hidden Spring", and the "Ministry of Nature" are fascinating. To any one who has mental conflicts the chapter on "The Discipline of Thought" would prove stimulating. The style is clear and in many places poetical. The many poetical quotations from famous poets serve as illustration in each chapter.

S. S. S.

THE MESSAGES OF THE BOOKS: By F. W. Farrar, D. D., F. R. S. Dean of Westminster. The Macmillan Company, New York. Pp. 532.

An invaluable asset to a clerical library will be found in this volume. It contains an introduction to every book of the New Testament, beginning with the Gospel, and showing the background, or setting to each book, an account of all that is known of the author, both traditionally and authentically, and a thoughtful discussion of its contents. The style is pleasant and interesting. The material is arranged in the form of lectures, which makes it verp useful for preparing a series of Bible classes, or Lenten sermons, or expository addresses for other occasions. There are also a great many valuable notes and chronological tables like the following, prefacing the account of St. Paul's Epistles:

	A.D.
"Gaius" (Caligula), A. D. 37
St. Paul's conversion and martyrdom of St. Stephen..	37
St. Paul's visit to Jerusalem	39
Claudius, A. D. 41.
St. Paul summoned from Tarsus to Antioch	41
Famine. Second visit to Jerusalem	44
First Mission journey	45
Expulsion of Jews from Rome	49
Third visit to Jerusalem	51
"1 Thessalonians"	52
"2 Thessalonians"	53
Nero, A. D. 54.
Fourth visit to Jerusalem	54
"1 Corinthians"	57
"2 Corinthians"	58
"Galatians"	58
"Romans"	58
St. Paul at Rome	61
"Philippians"	62
"Colossians" and "Philemon"	63
"Ephesians"	63
Paul liberated	63
"1 Timothy"	64
"Titus"	65 or 66
"2 Timothy"	67
Martyrdom	68

R. C. M.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

ANSWERS TO MR. GALBRAITH.

Mr. Editor:

I trust you will give me space for a few words in answer to the inquiry from Mr. Galbraith in the Southern Churchman of March 12. He very naturally assumes that the word Missa is the perfect passive participle of the familiar Latin verb Mitto. In that case, we might assume that the word concio (perhaps, ecclesia), a Latin feminine noun, has been left out. The Century Dicionary brings this out very clearly and gives a concise statement as to the source of the term Missa. See under the word Mass: "The name Missa is usually said to be taken from the words, ite missa est, 'go, it is the dismissal, or go, dismissed' (the word concio, 'congregation', being unnecessarily supposed to be omitted), thought to have been used at that point of the Mass when the catechumens were dismissed, and the communion service followed; but it appears to have referred originally to the dismissal of the congregation at the end of the Mass, and to have been applied, by an easy transfer, to the service itself". In a word, the term Mass is from Missa (a Late Latin noun), which means dismissal. That is the position the Century Dictionary, which is overwhelmingly supported by the unbiased scholarship of the present day.

Some Anglo-Catholic manuals have been quoted as stating that Missa, the Latin word, is derived from the Hebrew Missah and that this Hebrew word means sacrifice. Unfortunately, there is no satisfactory evidence that the word Missah is found in Biblical Hebrew, either in the construct or absolute state. The one passage cited by these writers to support their contention is Deut. 16:10. But the word there used is Missath, which they have erroneously concluded to be the construct state of Missah, but it is an independent word meaning sufficiency. This is the meaning given by Drs. Driver (Oxford), Briggs and Brown (Union Theological Seminary, New York) and accordingly they give this as the translation of Deut. 16:10, "Thou shalt keep the pilgrimage of weeks according to the sufficiency of the free will offering of thy hand". See Gesenius Dict., p. 587.

GEO. C. ABBITT.

Hopkinsville, Ky.
March 16, 1927.

Mr. Editor:

The answer to Mr. Galbraith's question is, of course, that there are but two genders, masculine and feminine, in Latin, just as (differing from the English) there are three numbers in Greek. Euphony enters largely into the structure of all languages; more especially is this the case in Latin and French. It wouldn't sound nice, for instance, to the least cultured ear to hear "Missus est". Liturgics has therefore nothing to do with the use of Missa in preference to another form of the word in the service-books of the Roman Church. One might consistently take it for granted that the scholarly men who accepted the responsibility of arranging the Latin Mass did not, nor were intending to violate any rules of grammar or ethic of religion.

JOHN E. SHEA.

Ada, Oklahoma.

(We feel that the discussion of the origin of the word "Mass" has now been carried on so long that it will not be of further interest to our readers, and so we shall not publish any more communications on this subject.—Ed. S. C.)

PRAYER TO THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Mr. Editor:

Bishop Bratton, whose recent visit has made a deep impression upon the people of Richmond by his mid-day sermons at St. Paul's Church, uses the following prayer in his classes at Blue Ridge. By whom it was written, whether by the Bishop or some one else, we do not know, but it is well worthy of study. Many people feel that there is not enough thought of and worship of the Holy Spirit among Christians, though this was the great gift which our Lord promised to send into the world after His resurrection. We do not sufficiently feel that it is through the Holy Spirit of God that we can have and enjoy the blessings of our lives. He is Lord and Life, given everywhere, all around us. He was the Spirit which moved on the face of the waters, and still moves in many a beautiful sunset, or majestic storm, as all sea-faring persons can testify.

We need constantly to pray for power and love, and especially for a sound mind (which words are taken from the first chapter and seventh verse of Second Timothy, "Make us to know the things freely given us of God", is a prayer for recognition of and gratitude for the small, uncounted blessings and joys of our lives, which we so frequently simply take for granted, until sometimes they are taken away from us. Every one can develop that idea for themselves. All Bible students would like to have the "blessed Book" (as Bishop Bratton frequently called it), illumined for them, for each illumination makes the study of the Bible vastly more interesting. We often think of our Lord as our Saviour, but do we think as frequently of ourselves as His friends?

There must be two sides to every friendship: do we recognize our side of this obligation?

Any one who learns this prayer by heart, and uses it daily will find it grows in beauty and in influence over their daily lives.

JULIA PORCHER WICKHAM

Lorraine, Va.

Prayer to the Holy Spirit.

O Holy Spirit, Who art present as Lord and Life-giver, everywhere, all around us; Rest upon us the Spirit of Glory and of God; as the Spirit of power and of love and of sound mind; make us to know the things freely given us of God; Illumine for us Thy written Word; Teach us to know the Blessed Jesus as our Lord and Saviour, and ourselves as His servants and friends. We ask this through Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

APPROVAL.

Mr. Editor:

Allow me to congratulate you upon the excellence of your issue of today; especially the brave expression re the Military "Demon." Planned for the Mexican Border, and the statesmanlike editorial on "China for the Chinese".

JAMES L. SMILEY.

Annapolis, Md.

INTERESTING PAGEANT IN ST. JOHN'S CHURCH RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

IN Old St. John's Church, Richmond, Virginia, the rafters rang again with stirring, patriotic sentiment on the night of March 23, one hundred and fifty-two years after the meeting of the House of Burgesses, which under the spur of Patrick Henry's oratory, adopted the famous resolution of sympathy and support for the action taken in Massachusetts against the imposition of unjust taxation.

On this one hundred and fifty-second anniversary a pageant was given representing the meeting as it was held in the days of yore. The special interest for Church people in this event is found in the fact, not only that it was held in an Episcopal Church, and that its members were largely made up of Church of England Colonists, but that Thomas Nelson, represented by the Rev. G. M. Brydon, is the direct ancestor of more than twenty-five clergymen of our Communion.

It is exceedingly interesting to note that two of the clergy of the Established Church in Virginia were members of that Convention.

Prior to this time the House of Burgesses of the Colony of Virginia had never permitted a clergyman to be seated as a member. On two occasions the rectors of parishes were elected to the House of Burgesses. In 1653 the Rev. Robert Bracewell, of Isle of Wight County, was elected, but the House of Burgesses refused to seat him as being "unpresidential" (unprecedented?). About 1699 the Rev. John Waugh, the rector of Overwharton and St. Paul's Parishes in Stafford County, were elected and he also was refused a seat.

But in the Convention of 1775 the Rev. Peter Muhlenburg, the rector of Beckford Parish in Dunmore (now Shenandoah) County, and the Rev. Charles Mynn Thruston, the rector of Frederick Parish, Frederick County, were delegates from their respective counties, and were seated and acted as such. Both of these ministers later entered the war as active soldiers.

Parson Muhlenburg became Brigadier-General and Parson Thruston became a Colonel. Neither of them reentered the ministry after the war, but General Muhlenburg became very prominent in the civic and political life of Pennsylvania and Colonel Thruston later removed to the vicinity of New Orleans and was prominent in the life of his adopted home.

It was the law of the Church of England that any clergyman who bore arms as a soldier after his ordination thereby became irregular, and could not serve again in the active work of the ministry until this irregularity was removed by his Bishop. As there was no Bishop in Virginia from 1781 until 1790, there was no one to remove the disability in the case of these two ministers.

Another of our clergy who served in the army was the Rev. Adam Smith, of Botetourt Parish, who enlisted in the militia. We have no record of him after the Revolution and do not know if he returned to the work of the ministry or not.

The very large majority of the clergy of the Established Church were loyal to the American cause, there being only nine Tories among the seventy-three clergy whose sympathies are known. There are about twenty more of whose sympathies we know nothing at present. Of those loyal to the American cause a goodly number served as Chaplains in the Army, as members of the county committees of safety, or assisted in other ways.

The Rev. G. M. Bryon, Representing Thomas Nelson (left), R. Carter Beverley, Representing James Scott, the latter is the Ancestor of Judge R. Carter Scott, Chancellor of the Diocese of Virginia, and who has sat in many General Conventions.

Prominent men of Richmond took part in the pageant. George Washington was represented by the Attorney-General of the State, John L. Saunders, and Dr. Douglas Freeman, representing Patrick Henry, is the distinguished editor of the daily evening paper of the city. The speech in opposition to war made by George Bryan, representing Edmund Pendleton, was exceedingly well done, as in fact were all of the parts taken. Almost every one sitting in this imitation body was a direct descendant of those who took part in the real assembly.

All carried their three-cornered hats in their hands. All wore satin and brocade knee breeches, waistcoats and coats in a variety of pale and vivid color, lace ruffles, buckled shoes and powdered wigs. And all found their places in the pews, while the president of the Convention, Peyton Randolph, of Williamsburg, played by David L. Pulliam, mounted to the pulpit at the east end of the church and called, "The Convention will please come to order. The clerk (only he pronounced it 'clark') will call roll".

There was no one in the audience—which had, by the way, been asked not to indulge in demonstration of any kind during the celebration—which did not thrill while such names as Thomas Jefferson, Edmund Pendleton, Benjamin Harrison, George Washington, Patrick Henry, Francis Lightfoot Lee, Richard Henry Lee and Richard Lee were called by the clerk, John Tazewell, played by Littleton Fitzgerald, and answered to.

Then followed the prayer of the chaplain, the Rev. Miles Selden, read by the Rev. Dr. Hugh W. Sublett, in the role —a prayer for "our sovereign lord, King George", that he may "always incline to Thy will and walk in Thy way

. . . endue him plenteously with heavenly gifts . . . and grant him after this life to attain everlasting joy and felicity".

It was the "gentleman from Prince George", Richard Bland, played by Walker Cottrell, who then arose to present a resolution of appreciation for the efforts of the Assembly of the Isle of Jamaica in the interest of reconciliation between the Colonies and the Mother Country, a resolution which attracted some little discussion.

However, the resolution following this, offered by the "gentleman from Hanover", Patrick Henry, played by Dr. Douglas Freeman, and calling for the establishment of a free government and the preparation for war, became the storm center of the Convention, being immediately hailed with cries of "no, no", and "right, right", from the members of the Convention.

Henry Tazewell, of Brunswick, played by Tazewell Ellett, favored the resolution; Benjamin Harrison, of Charles City, played by Randolph Harrison, opposed it; Thomas Jefferson, of Albemarle, played by Edward C. Anderson, rose to say that the Colonists owed no allegiance to Parliament. It was Edmund Pendleton, of Caroline, played by George Bryan, who urged caution, praying the gentlemen of the Convention "to go slowly before you rush the country into war". He argued, "Are we ready for war? Where are our supplies, our army, our soldiers, our money, the sinews of war"?

He begged the Convention to remember the friends of the Colonies in England whom hasty action would estrange. But, when he stated that "the English army never marches except to certain victory", he was interrupted with loud cries of "Braddock, Braddock, Braddock", and "too prudent, too prudent".

Robert Carter Nicholas, of James City, played by Cary A. Nicholas, urged "peace, not war", and was followed by Thomas Nelson, of York, played by Rev. G. MacLaren Brydon, who was cheered when he proclaimed that he was "first a Virginian", and was ready at any moment "to drive the invader into the sea". On the heels of this came "Colonel Washington" of Fairfax, played by Attorney-General John R. Saunders, who pledged himself to raise one thousand men.

And then Patrick Henry, played by Dr. Douglas Freeman, was on his feet, beginning slowly and firmly with a logical argument for war, and breaking surely and swiftly into his impassioned plea for liberty, "War is inevitable and let it come . . . . the gentlemen may cry 'peace, peace', but there is no peace . . . . Is life so dear or peace so sweet to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? Forbid it. Almighty God, I know not what course others may take, but as for me give me liberty, or give me death"!

It was so admirably done, against the real setting of the real Convention, that many of the audience found themselves coming to with a start when "Colonel Washington" moved that the Convention adjourn, and the gaily bedecked gentlemen turned from their serious consideration of war of the Eighteenth Century to the moving picture camera of the Twentieth Century.

Church Intelligence

News From China.

The following cable from Shanghai was received March 25 "Miss L. H. Hammond, Miss S. E. Igo and Miss Lillian Harris arrived here. Nothing has been heard from C. L. Pickens and family. Telegraph line broken, cannot communicate with Hankow. We strongly recommend send women and children at Kuling School to America."

Miss Hammond was a missionary in Nanking. Miss Igo and Miss Harris were students at the Nanking Language School. The Rev. Claude L. Pickens, a Hankow missionary, was studying at the Language School. (Mrs. Pickens is a daughter of Dr. Zwemer, the authority on Islam.) While the cable states that nothing has been heard from the Pickens family, a private despatch from David Yui, the Chinese president of the National Christian Council, says generally that all Americans in Nanking have been accounted for.

The following despatch has been received by wireless, via Honolulu, from Bishop Roots: "Our own missionaries concentrated Hankow March 25 as a measure of precaution. Wu-Han quiet."

Kuling is 250 miles north of Nanking. The school personnel a short time ago had been moved into Shanghai because of troubled conditions.

Church Progress In The Canal Zone.

The Seventh Annual Convocation of the Missionary District of the Panama Canal Zone met in Christ Church, Colon, on February 22.

All the clergy of the District were present. Many lay delegates were also in attendance, practically every parish and mission being represented.

The opening service was the Holy Communion, Bishop Morris being celebrant, assisted by the Archdeacon, the Secretary of the District, and the rector of the parish.

In the course of the Bishop's address, delivered at this service, reference was made to the over-payment by a little more than $500 of the pledge of the District for the Church's Program for 1926.

The Bishop announced the gift of Mr. Minor C. Keith, of New York City, of a building site in Villa Vista for the Children's Home and an anonymous gift of $30,000 to the building fund. At present the children are quartered in a rented building of inadequate size, many being always on the waiting list The gifts of these two friends of this institution will greatly enhance its usefulness by making possible the immediate construction of a more commodious and durable building.

Mention was also made of the fact that Archdeacon Sykes had secured from interested Church people in the United States sufficient funds for the construction in New Christobal of a much-needed Archdeacon's house.

The Bishop also alluded to the contemplated erection in the near future of a Church in Gatun for the West Indian congregation. Through his efforts almost all of the required amount is in hand and the balance practically assured.

A fitting and touching tribute was paid by the Bishop to the memory of the late Very Rev. Frederick Charles Meredith, dean of the Cathedral of St. Luke, Ancon, who entered into rest on October 27, last.

After the celebration of the Holy Communion and the reading of the Bishop's address the Convocation went into business session. The Rev. A. F. Nightingale was, for the seventh time, elected secretary.

The Bishop announced the following appointments, viz.: The Council of Advice—Clerical, the Rev. E. J. Cooper, the Ven. J. L. Sykes; lay, Dr. D. P. Curry, Mr. L. S. Carrington.

Examining Chaplain—The Ven. J. L. Sykes, the Rev. Edward J. Cooper.

Committee on Publicity—The Rev. L. C. Melcher, the Ven. J. L. Sykes, the Rev. A. F. Nightingale.

Board of Missions—The Ven. J. L. Sykes, the Rev. E. J. Cooper, Mr. C. O. S. Howard, Mr. D. A. Osborne, Mr. George C. Gade, Mr. L. S. Carrington, Dr. D. P. Curry.

Committee on Church Schools—The Rev. L. C. Melcher, the Rev. A. F. Nightingale, Mr. L. S. Carrington, Mr. James Tracey.

Registrar—Mr. Robert Beverley.

Chancellor—The Hon. J. W. Blackburn.

Historiographer—Mr. H. H. Evans.

At the evening service the Rev. Morton A. Barnes, of Long Branch, New Jersey, delivered the sermon.

After the reading of the Minutes the meeting of the Convocation was closed with prayers and benediction by Bishop Morris.

The Eighth Annual Convocation is appointed to meet in the Cathedral of St. Luke, Ancon on February 22, 1928.

J. L. S.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

The College of Preachers: Endowment of Cathedral Services.

The Rt. Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander, D. D., Canon of Washington Cathedral, announces that two gifts of $10,000 each, to be used for endowment of the preaching services of the Cathedral have been recently received. This announcement came in connection with plans for the third annual Summer Conference of the College of Preachers to be held during the week of June 13.

Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock, of Washington, gave $10,000 toward the endowment of the College of Preachers in memory of her mother, Mrs. Snowden Andrews, of Baltimore. Until the College of Preachers has its own building within the cathedral close, the income from this offering and other gifts will be used to defray the expenses of those in attendance at the annual Summer Conferences, including the one to be held next June.

The second gift, also of $10,000, is from Miss Olivia Phelps Stokes, of Redlands, Calif., and Lenox, Mass., for the "Caroline Phelps Stokes Memorial Outdoor Service Fund". The income will be used for the present for the people's Evensong services which have been held at the Peace Cross for more than twenty-five years from Ascension Day in May to the Feast of St. Michael's and All Angels in September.

Miss Stokes has notified Cathedral authorities that she would be glad to have some of the income from the gift include expenses incident to the broadcasting by radio of the Sunday Choral Evensong services in Bethlehem Chapel.

General topics of the Summer Conference of the College of Preachers will be: "The Evolution and the Incarnation." The number of clergy attending the College of Preachers is necessarily limited, the number last year being forty-five members and ten of faculty, representing twenty dioceses. No charge is made to the members for board and lodging, this hospitality being extended by the Cathedral authorities. The National Cathedral School for Girls has been used for the accommodation of the members and for this reason it has been necessary to hold the conference late in the year, when the school buildings are available. A plan for the revival of Christianity through the power of preaching was approved by Cathedral authorities several years ago and the College of Preachers was organized to carry out this idea. It is expected ultimately to have a separate building for the College with ample quarters for faculty and resident candidates for special preparation in evangelistic preaching. The College of Preachers is under the direction of Bishop Rhinelander.

Women Workers of the Church.

The annual spring meeting of the Bishop's Guild in the Diocese was held on Friday, March 25, the Feast of the Annunciation, this being the thirty-first anniversary of the consecration of the first Bishop of Washington, the Rt. Rev. Henry Yates Satterlee, D. D. Holy Communion was celebrated by the Bishop of Washington in Bethlehem Chapel, and this was followed by a business meeting in St. Alban's Guild Hall. Reports were read from all the women's organizations of the diocese In every case reports showed gratifying evidences of progress and growth and were received with marked enthusiasm. Bishop Freeman described the work of the Cathedral and the Diocese generally and expressed special interest in the work of the various organizations reporting. The Bishop's Guild is composed of the women workers of the Church in Washington and the annual spring meeting provides a sort of clearing-house when every woman may hear of other branches of work than her own and also make known the needs and interests of her particular organization.

St. Paul's Church, Washington Circle is making much of its Wednesday evening services, and large congregations are resulting. The preachers at these services are men of distinction, being usually the same preacher who officiates at the noon-day services at Epiphany Church during the corresponding week. The entire parish, both geographically and otherwise, is being visited by groups of men and women, for the special purpose of arousing interest in these services, and conspicuously printed postcards are sent each week to every member of the parish, reminding them of the service. The preacher, on Wednesday, March 30, was the Rev. Frederic S. Fleming, D. D., rector of the Church of the Atonement, Chicago.

Poster And Essay Contest: A proposed poster and essay contest for the children of the Church in 1928 was announced by the Rev. George F. Dudley, D. D., chairman of the Field Department of the Diocese, at a recent meeting of the Diocesan Sunday School Institute. The posters and essays will be for the purpose of emphasizing the Children's Lenten offering for missionary purposes, and will be conducted in a way similar to that of last year when two hundred and ten children of the Church in the United States submitted posters. Of these, six were considered so excellent by the judges that they were all accepted upon the same basis and lithographed for use in connection with the fiftieth anniversary of the Children's Lenten offering. This contest, as will be the case of that held in 1928, was conducted by the National Department of Religious Education, and Washington children are invited to submit posters in competition with others.

M. M. W.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bisho

Rector Instituted at Salem.

At the morning service on Sunday, March 20, the Rev. Roland J. Moncure was formally inducted into the rectorship of St. Paul's Church, Salem. The Rt. Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, had Morning Prayer, following which he read the Office of Institution. In the absence of Mr. J. C. Terry, Senior Warden of the Parish, who was ill, Mr. W. A. Leighton, the Junior Warden, presented to the new rector the keys of the church. The Rev. Mr. Moncure preached the sermon and celebrated the Holy Communion.

T. A. S.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor.

Noon Day Services in Holy Week.

Noon day services are to be held during Holy Week in Old St. Paul's, Norfolk. Some years ago noon day services were held during Lent under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Later, they were taken over by the Tidewater Ministerial Association and then by the Norfolk Council of Churches; the services being held in a theatre downtown. The Rev. Dr. Covington, rector of Old St. Paul's, announces the following speakers: The Rev. Dr. Harrell, pastor of Epworth Methodist Episcopal Church; the Rev. Sparks Melton, D. D., pastor of Freemason Street Baptist Church; the Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, D. D., and the Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D.

Norfolk Clericus.

A very interesting meeting of the Norfolk Clericus was held March 21. Dr. Montgomery of the College of William and Mary, spoke on the present situation in Mexico. In a scholarly manner, Professor Montgomery traced the causes of the unrest in Mexico and sketched the characteristics of the leaders of Mexican affairs. The meeting was well attended; both Bishops and several visitors being present.

The Rev. H. H. Martens, pastor of Ocean View Baptist Church, is a Postulant in the Diocese of Southern Virginia. Mr. Martens was confirmed March 6 in St. Andrew's Church.

The Rev. Philip Tilghman, curate of Christ Church, Norfolk, is serving as minister-in-charge. Mr. Tilghman will administer the affairs of Christ Church until the vestry calls a rector to succeed the Rev. Dr. Steinmetz, who resigned March 1.

N. E. T.

ERIE.

Rt. Rev. Jno. C. Ward, D. D., Bishop.

The Centennial of An Interesting Parish.

St. Paul's, Erie, has just celebrated its centennial as it was on March 17, 1827, that the parish was founded—the result of the missionary efforts in 1926 of Rev. John Henry Hopkins, then rector of Trinity Church, Pittsburgh, who subsequently became Bishop of Vermont.

Conspicuous among the rectors who served the parish in these years have been the Rev. John S. Spalding, whose ministry extended over a period of twelve years, and was only terminated by his election as missionary Bishop of Colorado, Wyoming and New Mexico in 1873, during whose incumbency the present fine, gothic, stone church was built at a cost of $65,000, and his son, Franklin Spencer Spalding, who served from 1896 until his election, in 1904, to the See of Utah.

Bishop Boyd Vincent, of Southern Ohio, like the younger Spalding, was also a boy of the parish, his father, B. B. Vincent, having been for many years a prominent member of St. Paul's. It was here the consecration of these three as Bishops was solemnized.

Soon after the formation of the Diocese of Erie, and the coming to it of the late lamented Rogers Israel, as the first Bishop, the parish was made a cathedral.

The centennial exercises began on Monday evening, March 14, with a musical service, when the fine, large organ, just installed by the Tellers-Kent Company, of Erie, at a cost of $16,000, the generous gift of Mr. W. C. Beers and his son, Tracy, in memory of their wife and mother, was formally used, with the assistance of Harry Burleigh, a former member of the parish, who was sent to New York thirty-six years ago to study music (it being discovered that he had remarkable talent along that line) where he became so proficient he was made a teacher in the conservatory, and was soon after engaged as soloist in the choir of St. George's Church, which position he still holds, subsequently a composer of many songs, mostly those peculiar to his own race, and known as Negro Spirituals—his program being made up chiefly of such.

On Tuesday evening there was a large gathering at the parish supper when Miss Sarah Reed (who on March 18 celebrated her eighty-ninth birthday) gave personal reminiscences extending as far back as 1845; Turner W. Shacklett read an historical paper covering the one hundred years—one-half of which period had come under his own personal observation; and Charles H. English, Esq., a member of the Erie County bar, and a devout Roman Catholic, gave a fine address.

There has always been a close relationship existing between Park Presbyterian Church and St. Paul's since the elder Bishop Spalding, when rector married the daughter of one of its trustees, so it was quite appropriate, as a feature of the centennial exercises that the Rev. Harry Burton Boyd, the pastor, should preach the sermon on Wednesday evening.

Bishop Boyd Vincent was the preacher on Thursday evening, a sermon delightfully reminiscent of his boyhood experiences as a member of the parish.

On the Sunday morning of the octave the Bishop of the Diocese, the Rt. Rev. John Chamberlain Ward, preached, thus beginning the second century.

The Rev. Francis B. Blodgett, who came from the chair of Old Testament History in the General Theological Seminary, five years ago, is the Dean and is ministering with great success and acceptability. A new parish house is in course of erection; the adjoining residence to the church has been recently purchased as a rectory, and the acquisition a few years ago of a plot of ground with two commodious summer houses on the lake shore, nine miles out of town, for the use of camps for the boys and girls, are added features which give evidence of the splendid spirit of the congregation.

T. W. S.

SPRINGFIELD.

Rt. Rev. John C. White, D. D., Bishop.

U. T. O. Meeting.

An interesting service was held in St. John's Parish, Centralia, the Rev. R. Y. Barber, rector, on the Feast of the Annunciation, when at the invitation of the women of the parish all of the women in the parishes at Nashville, Salem, Carlyle and Mount Vernon, were invited to come to a celebration of the Holy Communion at 10:30 A. M. Then at twelve o'clock prayers were said by Miss Nellie Moore of St. Thomas, Salem; after which the women went to the croft of the church for a simple luncheon. Miss Nellie Smith presided and a report was requested from each United Thank Offering Treasurer. The speaker of the occasion was Mrs. E. F. Cushing, of Webster Groves, Md.

All of the parishes were well represented, except Trinity, Mt. Vernon. There were fifty women present for the service and the meeting was inspiring because it brought the needs of the Mission Work before them in a very definite way.

B.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. J. B. Cheshire, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, D. D., Coadjutor.
Rt Rev. H. B. Delaney, D. D., Suffragan

New Parish House of Southern Pines.

Services of Emmanuel Church, Southern Pines, on Sunday, March 20, were held in the new Parish House that has just been completed. The new Parish House is the first unit of a beautiful church edifice, of Ashler stone construction with slate roof and is built in a manner that will last through the ages. The completion of this beautiful building is largely due to the optimism and enduring faith of the rector of Sandhills Parish, the Rev. Alaric James Drew, who since his arrival at Southern Pines about eighteen months ago has worked to bring about this culmination of his hopes. He has received the hearty support of his parishioners and the people of the entire community who are keenly interested in the development of Emmanuel Church.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.

Laymen's League Formed.

On Monday night, March 21, at a meeting of the men of the four churches, held at Immanuel, Braddock, after an address on "Personal Evangelism", by Canon Anson Phelps Stokes, of Washington, a Laymen's League was formed to include the men of the neighborhood. Meetings are to be held four times annually. Dr. G. T. Klipstein was elected President; C. A. S. Sinclair, Vice-President, and Ward Boswell, Secretary and Treasurer.

The Rev. K. B. O'Ferrall, one of the National Crusaders in Alexandria, in February, was good enough, in connection with an engagement at Grace and St. Peter's Church, Baltimore, to preach in St. Paul's and Christ Churches, in Alexandria, on the nights of March 22 and 24. He was greeted by crowded congregations in both churches, even the galleries being filled. Mr. O'Ferrall will conduct a Crusade at The Plains in September.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D. Bishop

Christ Church, Williamsport, the Rev. Hiram R. Bennett, rector, is having its charter of incorporation amended to allow women to vote at the annual parish elections.

St. Mary's Church, Waynesboro, the Rev. Rowland K. Gimson, vicar, has been thoroughly renovated and repaired, and the church is now one of the most attractive in the Diocese.

Preaching Mission: Beginning Monday evening, March 21, the Rev. Paul S. Atkins, rector of St. John's, York, conducted a Preaching Mission at St. Andrew's, State College. Dr. F. L. Pattee, President of State College, invited the visiting missioner to speak at the College Chapel exercises on two days of the Mission.

A. A. H.

ALBANY.

Rt. Rev. R. H. Nelson, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. G. A. Oldham, D. D. Coadjutor.

To Endow St. Luke's Church, Saranac Lake.

A half century of the work of the Church of St. Luke the Beloved Physician, Saranac Lake, will be completed in January, 1928.

To mark this anniversary and to commemorate the devoted servants of the Church who have spent themselves in the work of healing at Saranac Lake, a memorial foundation is being made, the object of which is to endow the Church of St. Luke the Beloved Physician, enabling a larger staff to minister among the sick who resort to the sanatorium and cottages in Saranac Lake. The rector of St. Luke's, the Rev. Elmer P. Miller, has given himself unremittingly, as did his predecessors; and the needs of the sick require the services of an additional priest and some lay worker.

This endowment has the approval of the Bishops of the Diocese of Albany, and is endorsed by Bishops Murray, Brent, Manning, Stires and many others who know the heroic efforts and self-sacrificing labors of Dr. Trudeau and other physicians and clergymen in their fight against tuberculosis, as well as their earnest efforts to satisfy the spiritual wants of their patients.

NORTHERN INDIANA.

Church Club of Long Island. Forty

Church School Institute, South Bend District.

Methods of conducting drills, reviews, and examinations in Church Schools were discussed by Miss Vera Rooney, of South Bend in the afternoon session of the Teacher Training Class of the Church School Institute. The speaker stressed the importance of the true function of the examination, which is to organize knowledge gained in the class room. This presentation was given in the class session of the Church School Institute of the South Bend District, held at St. Thomas', Plymouth, Sunday, March 13. Members were present representing Elkhart, Goshen, Plymouth, and South Bend. "Making the Application" was the subject of the discussion in the evening session. "It is the mission of the Church School" stated the speaker, "to create within the pupil a sense of moral obligation, to train the pupil to Christian Social Service, and then to organize its trained recruits." Concrete examples as to how this might be done followed.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Conference of Parish Treasurers.

An interesting conference of parish treasurers was held recently in the Diocesan House upon the invitation of the Church Club of Long Island. Fourty-four men attended, treasurers of as many congregations. Mr. William H. Baldwin presided, and announced the purpose of the conference to be the discussion of the problems common to parish treasurers. He said this meeting would be followed by other conferences, in an effort to increase the efficiency of laymen in their various tasks in the Church.

The treasurer and the secretary of the diocese were present to answer questions, especially about the reports of parishes to the diocese. The feeling seemed to be general that the report blanks now used for financial reports from parishes might be simplified. It was suggested that the method used by the government in the income tax return forms might be adopted, using foot-notes to explain in detail what each item meant.

Several definite conclusions were reached: (1) That all parish treasurers should be bonded; (2) that treasurers of subordinate parish organizations should report to the parish treasurer; (3) that moneys in hand, not needed at once, might, if united by deposit with treasurer of the diocese, be invested to greater advantage than the two per

(Continued on Page 22.)

Family Department

April.

1. Friday.
3. Fifth (Passion) Sunday in Lent.
10. Sixth (Palm) Sunday in Lent.
14. Maundy Thursday.
15. Good Friday.
16. Easter Even.
17. Easter Day.
24. First Sunday after Easter.
25. Monday. S. Mark.
30. Saturday.

Collect for Fifth Sunday in Lent.

We beseech Thee, Almighty God, mercifully to look upon Thy people; that by Thy great goodness they may be governed and preserved evermore, both in body and soul, through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Miracles.

Thy miracles in Galilee
When all the world went after Thee
To bless their sick, to touch their blind,
O Gracious Healer of Mankind,
But fan my faith to brighter glow!
Have I not seen, do I not know
One greater miracle than these?
That Thou, the Lord of Life, shouldst
please
To walk beside me all the way,
My Comrade of the Everyday!

Was I not blind to beauty, too,
Until Thy love came shining through
The dark of self and made me see
I share the glorious world with Thee?
Did I not falter till Thy hand
Reached out to mine? Did I not stand
Perplexed and mute and deaf until
I heard Thy gentle, "Peace, be still"
And all the turmoil of my heart
Was silenced and I found my part?

Those other miracles I know
Were far away, were long ago,
But this, that I may see Thy face
ansformed allinetashrdetaocmfw puapu
Transforming all the commonplace,
May work with Thee, and watch Thee bless
My little loaves in tenderness;
This sends me singing on my way,
O Comrade of the Everyday!

—Molly Anderson Haley

For the Southern Churchman.

The Episcopal Church.

Rev. T. F. Opie, D. D.

With a heritage from the primitive Church and a history reaching back into the distant past, and with a spirit sensitive to the things of the new age, the Protestant Episcopal Church holds a commanding place in the Christian world of today. Rich in those things which have been peculiar to the Church from the first, she is truly "Catholic" for the truths of Christ and "protestant" against the errors of man.

The Episcopal Church mediates as between two extreme theories of the Church. It occupies mid-ground between extreme monarchical religion as expressed in the Church of super-sacramentalism and extreme democratic religion as expressed in the Church of super-sectarianism and individualism.

This Church has never lost the art of reverent worship. Its services are dignified, impressive, reverent. In these days of ritualistic ceremony in lodges and secret orders in which thousands of men of all denominations take active part, a great deal of the prejudice against formal religious services, with ornate and impressive ceremony, which has long characterized the Episcopal Church, has been dissipated. When one comes to know the significance of the symbolism and ceremony of this Church, his prejudice is easily shown to be unfounded, and his point of view is soon changed.

With the lives of men like Robert E. Lee, than whom America has not produced a finer type of Christian manhood; like Washington and Jefferson, than whom none was more useful in the founding of this great republic—and men like Pershing, who led the American forces against the enemies of God and the human race, and Bishop Brent, who served in the World War as Chaplain-in-Chief, and many other noble men who served their generation with singular distinction—Episcopalians have brought honor to the Church and have made Christianity a force in the world. Two-thirds of the signers of the Declaration of Independence were Episcopalians, as were the commander-in-chief of the American forces in the Revolutionary War and our first President, and the Chaplain of the first Continental Congress. So were also about one-tenth of all the ministers doing war work in the World War.. Leaders in Red Cross and community service activities among Episcopalians are numerous—in fact, considering its numerical strength this Church furnishes more active community and other leaders possibly than any denomination in America.

One of the interesting features of the Episcopal Church is that it observes a regular Church year, celebrating the great facts of the life of Christ chronologically, together with other facts, doctrines and incidents connected with the Christian religion, setting aside specific days for their observance. Every Sunday of the year and many week-days are thus designated for the consideration of some specific observance. This obviates monotony and sameness and gives systematic teaching on the fundamentals, especially with reference to the life of the Saviour.

Advent begins the Church year, coming a few weeks before Christmas, in which preparation is made for proper celebration of the Birth of Jesus. Lent precedes Easter and a seven-week season of revival serves to prepare the heart and mind for the observance of the great fact of the resurrection. The Ascension of Christ is later observed, followed by the feast of Whitsunday, at which time the coming of the Holy Spirit is fittingly observed, by special prayer, Scripture-reading, sermon and hymns. The great fact of the Trinity is celebrated through the longest season of the whole Church year and due consideration is given to the Epiphany season, commemorating the manifestation of Christ to the Gentile world, to the Annunciation, the Presentation of Christ in the Temple, the Transfiguration of the Saviour—and to various days devoted to a consideration of the lives of the Saints.

There is no superstition attached to these celebrations, and no adoration of the Saints—only a study of the events as they are recorded in the Bible and an opportunity to treat them chronologically and systematically—and thus to give important emphasis to the leading facts and festivals of the Christian faith.

Personal Evangelism.

We Americans are disposed to take grand stand seats and watch chosen teams play the game. We are tremendously interested, enthusiastic, willing to pay liberally and support our side with vociferous cheers and even magnanimously cheer the fine plays of the other side, then go home and live over the thrills of the game giving all details to any one who did not see but will listen. But we do not enter personally into the game. We have paid substitutes to do the work.

* * *

We do this same thing in the matter of the struggle of the Church for world salvation. Slower, maybe, to pay our money, and slower to become tremendously aroused and deeply interested in "sharing the good news" yet when interested we pay our money, even pray, and send encouraging messages to the selected substitute witnesses at home and abroad, laying the flattering unction to our souls that we have obeyed our Lord's commission and performed our duty.

* * *

This may be all right so far as ball games are concerned, but is all wrong in the matter of witnessing for Christ. Support of the "team", interest, no matter how great, in the plans of the "Board" or the mobilized army of Christian soldiers cannot take the place of personal evangelism. There must be individual as well as collective obedience to the great commission: "Go ye." We have our own world into which we are commanded to go personally as a witness for Christ. There are souls waiting for our personal testimony who will not be saved without it. We are commanded to support others who go, but it is none the less our own duty and privilege to do personal work for the salvation of others. For this there is no such thing as employing a substitute.

* * *

This method of individual effort was used by Jesus. Nineteen times, the record shows, He stopped to win an individual. He preached to the multitudes, but sought and saved the individual. Examples are found in the Woman by Jacob's Well, the Gadarene among the tombs. Zaccheus perched in the wayside sycamore, and the thief dying upon the cross beside Him.

This too was the method of the first disciples. John the Baptist preached to the vast multitudes that flocked to hear him, but it was his personal pointing finger and word to two disciples, "Behold the Lamb of God", that made those two seek and find the Saviour. Then one of these sought his brother and another sought his friend and "brought him to Jesus".

Then in the early Church, when scattered abroad, each became a personal witness, an individual evangelist preaching the Word.

* * *

With all our development of machinery and methods for winning men to Christ nothing takes, or can take, the place of personal evangelism. Preaching to the multitude is potent. Jesus ordained it. Multitudes have been and will continue to be brought to Christ through this agency. But after all the preaching that is most effective in winning men to Christ appears as a personal message to each one who receives it. The personal touch will ever be the touch of power. The Church of today needs above all things an individual passion for souls; needs individual response to the great commission; needs individuals working personally for the salvation of individuals.—Southern Christian Advocate.

For the Southern Churchman.

Dear Companion, Friend Divine.

Ormond Stone.

Saviour, let me walk with Thee,
At Thy side my footsteps be;
Let me hold my hand in Thine,
Dear Companion, Friend Divine.

Saviour, let me talk with Thee,
And of love our converse be;
All my thought respond to Thine;
Dear Companion, Friend Divine.

Saviour, let me work with Thee,
Doing good my labor be;
All my will be one with Thine,
Dear Companion, Friend Divine.

The Will To Live.

If we are not mistaken, it was Felix Adler who said that the youth of the time should be animated with such a will to live and to live heroically that if one of them should be in the midst of the sea with nothing to hold to but a straw that he would hold on to the fullest limits of endurance. And fortunately, as has been previously indicated in The Telegraph, when any one is committed to a task and to responsibilities that are worth while there is a strong holding on to life. It is when superficial intellectualism usurps the place of a quest for truth and solid living, whether in school or out of it, that one becomes an easy prey to the temptation to get out of life rather than to live life. It rarely happens that one with a worthy task who is doing his best with it ever desires to die.

One who has found his work and who accepts rather than evades responsibility is well shielded against the desire to run away from life.

Tolstoy says in his Confession that he found it very difficult to keep from destroying himself at one period of his life, but every time that he contemplated self destruction the thought of God would come to him and that the thought of God took away the desire to die. It finally became clear to him that, if the thought of God produced the desire to live and took away the desire to die, God Himself is life and that with this understanding and revelation the desire to commit suicide was removed, never to return. When Tolstoy's son lectured here some years ago, he said that until his father found what was to him the true religion in the life of the peasants and in the New Testament that the family found it necessary to keep out of his reach all instruments of self destruction; but with the finding of the true way, his life afterward was filled with much joy.

According to Christianity, the fundamental virtues are faith and hope and love, and everything that tends to increase these, increases life and the desire and will to live. They are the great antidotes to the desire to destroy. Everything that causes one to doubt the value and meaning of life and the high source and destiny of life is a temptation to get out of life. Doubt is death. Hope is life. Love is life, hate is death. —The Macon (Ga.) Telegraph.

His Preparation.

This incident is told by Mr. G. W. E. Russell in his biography, "Edward King, Bishop of London". An earnest but pessimistic priest visited the Bishop to talk about his parish, and was very troubled about his lack of success among the younger farm lads lodging at the various homesteads. "For example," he said, "there is one lad who gave me much trouble and I hoped an influence for good was getting a lodgment in his heart. But imagine my distress when I asked him what he had done in the way of preparation for his early Communion at Easter and all he said was 'I's cleaned my boots and put 'em under the bed'. It is sad indeed." "Well, dear friend," replied the Bishop, "and don't you think the angels would rejoice to see them there?" The signs of regeneration are more than theological and ecclesiastical. Clean shoes may symbolize a clean heart.—Exchange.

Respecting the Sanctity of the Child's Inner Self.

Usually wherever two or more mothers gather together conversation sooner or later drifts to some phase of child culture. Ever zealous for their children's welfare, they seldom fail to avail themselves of an opportunity for advice and counsel regarding this supremely important matter.

The motive is worthy and commendable, but a danger that should not be overlooked lurks in intimate discussions. There is something about a friendly interchange of ideas that begets garrulity, and never is this more apparent than when a group of mothers tell of their children's doings.

Mrs. A. ——— wishes advice about some fault of Anna's and relates incidents illustrating the manifestations of it in her daughter. Other mothers are reminded of similar or contrasting instances in their experiences, and recount them with the result that before the afternoon is over much that should never have been disclosed has been broadcast to the circle of acquaintance.

Aside from considerations of good taste, this loquacity may work an incalculable injury to the children.

Timid, shrinking, and highly sensitive ones suffer agonies of mortification on discovering that their privacy has been invaded, and their little secrets laid bare; while those already inclined to callousness or bravado are invariably coarsened by such knowledge.

A mother, above every one else in the world, should be a refuge and a retreat to her child, and its every thought should be able to repose safely in her. Its confidences, however trivial or unimportant they may seem, should be kept inviolate, and its little fancies never be made a subject of jest.

Anecdotes concerning the children should be selected with discrimination and general information given out sparingly. Never, in fact, is silence more golden than when dealing with the inner life of a child.

A mother in doubt about what may be wisely discussed regarding her child may ask herself some such questions as these: "Our places reversed, is this a matter I should like my child to mention concerning me?" "Is it delicate?" Is it kind?" "Is it necessary?" "Will it have a tendency to strengthen or to weaken the bond between us when my child has reached maturity?"

A mother had better shatter her choicest piece of china or crystal than cause or allow the slightest flaw to mar that priceless treasure, her child's faith and trust in her.—Leila K. Williams.

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of the Woozle Tracks.

I went to the home of the Daughter of Keturah and her husband, and in the Front Yard I found the little sister of the daughter of the daughter of Keturah. And she cried out when she saw me, and said, Come, Grandpa, and help me make Woozle Tracks.

And I went to her and took her hand, and walked beside her as she went around in a Circle in the Snow.

And I said, if I remember what I read in my Boyhood of Goldsmith's Animated Nature, there was no Woozle that came out of the Ark. The Menagerie of Noah must have been incomplete.

And she said, Grandpa, this is something that happened since.

And I said, I would not be of those who have learned nothing since the Flood. Tell me about the Woozle and his Tracks.

And she said, Once upon a time the Teddy Bear walked in the Snow. And he walked till he came back where he began, and started around again. And he did not know his own tracks, but he said, This that I have come upon is the track of a Woozle. And he walked around again, and found there were two sets of Tracks. And he said, The Woozle hath been joined by a Wizzle. And he walked on, but a Fear came upon him, for he said, How terrible it would be if I should overtake them, and both the Woozle and the Wizzle should pursue me.

And I said, This interesteth me, my little girl. And now, behold, we have come around and what do we find?

And she said, here are the Woozle Tracks and the Wizzle Tracks that I made myself, but what are these Large Tracks?

And I said, They be the Tracks of the Benevolent Whangdoodle, who doth protect Little Girls from Wizzles and Woozles.

And she said she would fear neither Woozle nor Wizzle if she had the protection of the Benevolent Whangdoodle. So we played in the snow, and A Good Time Was Had By All.

And I meditated much about this matter. And I said, I have friends, a considerable number of them, who perpetually chase the Woozle. They go around and around in circles, and they Create the Images of the Things that Give them Fear. And the Ark itself would not have contained the things they dread and Forever Chase. And they know not that they make all the Tracks themselves.

And I cried out unto all mankind, and said. Dearly Beloved, the Woods are Full of Woozles for the man of Fear, but be not one of them. If thou hast Courage to Meet Thyself Coming Back there is not much else from which thou art in danger.—Exchange.

There is a secret place of rest
God's saints alone may know;
Thou shalt not find it east nor west,
Though seeking to and fro.

A cell where Jesus is the door,
His love the only key;
Who enter will go out no more,
But there with Jesus be.

For the Young Folks

Prayer For A Little Boy.

Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray Thee, Lord, my soul to keep.
If I should die before I wake,
I pray Thee, Lord, my soul to take.
And this I ask for Jesus' sake.

But while I live, I want to be from quick and angry passions free,
With gentle thoughts, and happy face, and pleasant words in every place.
I pray, whatever wrong I do, I'll never say what is not true;
Be willing at my task each day, and always honest in my play.

Make me unselfish with my joys, and generous to other boys,
And kind and helpful to the old, and prompt to do what I am told.
Bless every one I love, and teach me how to help and comfort each
Give the strength right-living brings, and make me good in little things. Amen.

—Harper's Bazaar.

For the Southern Churchman.

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

The Magnanimity of Jesus.

M. L. G.

Magnanimity is a long word! Perhaps we can better understand it by two little stories that illustrate it. One is of an old wise man in Athens, whom the rough fellows of the town, not knowing how great he was, would mock and sneer at. But the old man walked along not noticing their taunts. "Master," said one of his friends, "seest thou how they insult thee?" "Yea," he answered, "but seest thou how I am not insulted?"

The other story is of our own General Lee. One of the officers of the Confederate Army was jealous of him, and lost no opportunity to injure him. But once when President Davis asked Lee to recommend an officer for an important post, the great and good man named, as a brave and faithful soldier this very man who had so injured him. "Do you not know," asked one who was present, "that Captain ——— has done all he could to hurt and defame you?" "Well," said General Lee, with a smile, "the President did not ask for his opinion of me, but for my opinion of him."

This greatness of soul—for that is what our long word means—was part of the very nature of our Best Friend. We cannot read a page of the Gospels without meeting it. With it He could accompany with publicans and sinners, not taking the taint of their evil, but giving them the sunlight of His presence and the saving power of His mercy.

Next week we will think of the last few days of His life before He was delivered up to death, and of how in those dark scenes His magnanimity shone like some great star at midnight.

The Prince and the Chorcoal Burner.

Long, long ago there lived a charcoal-burner. He was a poor man who made his living by burning the fallen branches and logs in the forest where he dwelt and selling the charcoal in the nearby village. There was not much money to be had this way, and the charcoaler might have had a sorry time of it had it not been for one thing. On long summer evenings or early in the morning when the little creatures of the forest are just greeting the rising sun, the charcoaler would sit on his doorstep and play his lyre.

No skilled teacher had taught him this art, but from the soft, intimate sounds of the forest itself he had learned to make his music. The rippling of the forest stream, the calls of the birds, the cries of tiny insects, the drone of the honey-laden bees, he could imitate so truly on his lyre that they could not be distinguished from the real forest sounds.

One day as this kindly man was sitting before his cottage, mending a pair of bellows, he heard in the forest the silvery blast of a bugle and the sound of a horse's hoofs crashing through the bushes.

Calling to his wife, the charcoal-burner ran to the edge of the clearing in which the cottage stood and peered into the forest.

Out of the forest rode a herald.

"Ho!" cried he to the amazed charcoaler. "I am heralding for the Prince. You know he must ever have some new amusement. If he is not writing verse or composing music for his lute, he is knocking about among the common people disguised as a ministrel or a peddler or what not. His latest fancy is to have a musical tournament at his father's place. Any one may enter, and any instrument may be played. The prize is as much land as ten men can plough and a bag of gold each year from the Prince."

Long after he had gone the charcoaler stood as one bewitched. Then his wife shook him by the arm, laughing gently.

"Dreamer," she said, "do you think that you could win a prize? Fie upon you! Get you to your honest labor and do not let your fancies tempt you."

But the charcoal-burner went into the forest, and when he came out there was new life in his step and in his eyes a light which men call Inspiration.

Now in the court of the King all was bustle and excitement. Pages in purple and gold ran hither and thither. Men and women, boys and dimpling maids, all in holiday dress, thronged the rooms of the castle and scattered over the grassy lawn like great flowers.

Suddenly the clatter and chatter ceased as three sweet notes on a trumpet were sounded and the crowd moved in little groups toward the throne room, for this was the signal that the tournament was about to begin.

Here the King and the Queen sat upon their thrones, and just below them sat the Prince. The contestants, all finely dressed and with highly polished instruments, were on the opposite side of the hall.

When all the guests had assembled the Prince arose and stated the rules of the contest. Then the Herald called out the names of the players, and each in turn came and played before the Prince.

At last the Herald came forward and whispered to the Lord High Chamberlain, who bent and whispered to the Prince:

"Your Highness, there is but one fellow left, a bold charcoal-burner. Does Your Majesty wish him called?"

"Most certainly," replied the Prince.

So the Lord High Chamberlain repeated this to the Herald.

And so it was that the charcoaler came and played before the Prince. When he played the fair ladies did not toy with their fans and murmur, "Wonderful! Marvelous! What a depth of feeling"! But the King leaned forward on his throne; the Queen leaned back and gazed at the player through a fringe of jetty lashes; the Prince looked through the palace windows to the blue, blue sky above where a lark was soaring, and a smile of wondrous sweetness came over his face; the court Fool sat serious for once and gently stroked the ears of a great hound which lay, chin upon paws, and watched the player with great brown eyes. For the charcoal-burner played the music that the greatest of masters composed, the song of the brook, and of the birds and the bees; the song of the summer breeze as it sings to the little wood-creatures at night; the song of the pines and the song of the rain on the sweet earth.

The last note died away. The King leaned back, awakened from his reverie; the Queen opened her eyes and looked at him through a rainbow mist; the Prince stood lost in his vision: the Lord High Chamberlain shook his heavy head; but the Fool laid his hideous head upon his knees and sobbed aloud.

Then the applause broke out, such as that land had never heard before. The King's very throne trembled from it, and the cook sent the scullery boy from the kitchen to see who had won the prize.

The Prince stepped down from his throne, and, walking to the charcoaler, he said: "The prize is yours, for few there are, indeed, who knows the music of nature, or the songs of the heart. Only those have learned it who have listened in the quiet of His temples and turned an open heart to His creatures."

—Youth's Companion.

For the Southern Churchman.

Fraid Cat.

Louis Tucker.

Little Girl had a cat named Saxaphone because of her voice, though Little Girl modestly called her "Fraid-cat", because even the littlest dog could chase her. Any cat can be 'scused for running from big dogs; but when little Muff, who was no bigger than Fraid-cat herself, yapped her all over the yard and up a gum tree, she lost her name of Saxaphone.

She got it back about a year later. Grip was the biggest of all the dogs and he had chased Fraid-cat under the house a hundred times. Then Fraid-cat disappeared for a couple of days and came back thin and wild-looking begging for milk. Grip made the mistake of sweeping in between her and the hole under the house before he dashed at her.

Fraid-cat did not run; or, rather, she ran the wrong way. She said all the things nobody ought to say and faced Grip. What happened next was too quick to see, but what happened after that was that Fraid-cat was on Grip's back with all her claws working. I think she held on with her teeth, but anyhow she held on. Poor Grip said everything he could think of under the circumstances. He said it very long and loud. He sang it clearly, and ran round and round in circles while he sang. At last, when he came pretty near the hole under the house Saxaphone jumped off and dived in, and Grip ran far away at once and licked his wounds.

Little Girl put a saucer of milk inside the hole and wondered a long while what had made Saxaphone so diffcrent. Next week she knew. Saxaphone came out and after her in single file came five kittens. Muff ran and Grip put his and Daddy said that enough responsitail between his legs and walked away; bility will make a heroince out of any one.

For the Southern Churchman.

Washing Dishes.

Helen Bailey Davis.

It isn't such a dreadful task
If one will think
Of something very, very pleasant
While standing at the sink.

Repeat a lovely poem, or sing
A favorite tune
While the swishing water hums
Its merry, splashing rune.

Watch the sunlight glinting on
Soapsuds, steaming
In the dishpan; even soapy
Rainbows set one dreaming.

. . For kitchen work I always wear
My prettiest smocks,
Because I love the folk for whom
I wash the pans and crocks.

The Runaway Feet.

Dorothy came running in from her play in the yard.

"Mother, where is Margaret going?" she asked.

"She is going over to play for an hour with Clara."

"May I go too," asked Dorothy. "Please, Mother, please say 'Yes'."

"You know, Dorothy," said Mother, "you are not allowed to go out on the street by yourself and Margaret is there by this time. You will have to stay with Mother now. Margaret won't be gone long, anyway. Run back to your play in the yard."

After a little while, Mother looked out into the yard, but there was no Dorothy there. Then Mother looked all through the house, but could not find Dorothy any place.

Then she went over to Clara's house and rang the bell; and, when Clara's mother came to the door, Mother asked, "Have you a little girl that does not belong here"?

"Why, yes," said Clara's mother, "a little girl just came." Then she turned and called, "Dorothy, your mother wants you".

Dorothy came to the door, and said, "Why, Mother, what do you want?"

"I want you, Dorothy. Come home with me," said Mother, and took hold of Dorothy's hand, and they started home.

On the way home, Dorothy talked as fast as ever she could, and she said, "Mother, why don't you talk? Why don't you say something to me?"

"Mother feels too bad to talk, dear. She is feeling bad because you let your feet carry you away when Mother told you to stay at home."

When they got home, Mother said, "I'll have to fix those feet, Dorothy, so they can't take you away again. Sit down in your little chair".

So Dorothy sat down in her little chair, and Mother got a piece of strong cord, and tied Dorothy's feet tightly together.

At first, Dorothy thought it was a new game, and she laughed. After her feet were tied, and she tried to stand up, she found she could move them just a little, and she started to walk.

"Here, here, that will never do," said Mother. "Your feet could take you away, tied like that. We must tie them more tightly than that."

So Dorothy sat down again in her chair, and Mother tied the cord so tight this time that Dorothy nearly fell over on her nose when she tried to stand up again. And she did not laugh any more.

"How long will I have to stay here, Mother?" she asked.

"I don't know, dear. You have to stay until you are sure you can keep your feet from taking you away again when Mother tells you not to go."

After a little while, Margaret came home. "Why, Dorothy, what are you doing, sitting there with your feet tied like that?" she asked. But Dorothy did not say a word. "Mother, why are Dorothy's feet tied?" asked Margaret.

"Because they made her run away this afternoon," said Mother.

Then Aunt Mae came home. When Dorothy saw her coming, she tried to pull her dress over the cord, so Aunt Mae could not see that her feet were tied. "Baby girl, why are you sitting there so quiet?" asked Aunt Mae.

But Dorothy did not say a word; and Aunt Mae looked at Mother, and Mother said, "Dorothy's feet made her run away this afternoon, so they had to be tied together".

"Oh, I see," said Aunt Mae.

And then Daddy came home. "Hello, what does this mean?" he said, when he saw Dorothy sitting so quietly in her chair, with her feet tied together. But Dorothy did not say a word. "Mother, why are Dorothy's feet tied together?" asked Daddy.

"They had to be tied because they made her run away this afternoon," said Mother.

So Dorothy sat there a long, long time. Then she called, "Mother, please come here".

And, when Mother came, Dorothy reached up and pulled Mother's face down close to hers, and whispered, "Mother, I know I can keep my feet from taking me away again".

"Are you sure, Dorothy?" asked Mother.

"Yes, I know I can," said Dorothy.

So Mother untied Dorothy's feet, and they never made her run away again.—From Stories New and Stories True, And How to Tell Them, by Bertha Baldwin Tralle. Fleming H. Revell Co., New York. (Copyright.)

Mr. March Wind.

Mr. March Wind shakes each little tree,
He blows my things away from me,
Down in the valley, by the old mill,
He's just as rough as up on the hill.
He chaps my lips and slaps my cheeks,
He pulls my curls, my ears he tweaks;
He's really very rude and rough,
And never knows when he blows enough.
He'll get punished some fine day,
'Cause Miss April will chase him far away.

The Light of a Girl's Candle.

Off the coast of one of the Orkney Islands there was a large rock jutting out into the bay opposite the harbor. It yielded no food or shelter for beast or bird, but had often caused shipwreck and death. They called it Lonely Rock.

There lived on this island with her father, who was a fisherman, a young girl named Margaret Freeman. Father and daughter were tenderly devoted to each other, as so often is the case where people are poor and dependent upon each other.

One wild, murky night the father sailed away in his frail fisherman's boat, leaving his daughter to keep house and to await his return on the morrow. She did her chores, and then took out her spinning wheel to while away the dreary hours. Every now and then she would look out on the dark, driving clouds and listen, tremblingly, to the shrieking wind and stormy sea.

The morning light dawned at last. She had kept an all-night vigil, and the hour was approaching when her father's boat could be seen coming up the harbor. At last, as she scanned the now calm and placid water of the bay, she could see only tiny specks in the distance, but her heart gave a great bound, for she knew they were fishermen's boats, and that her father's was one of the number.

They drew nearer and nearer until she could recognize each boat and its owner. It did not look like her father's boat was with them.

Bareheaded and full of wild misgivings, she hurried down to the shore, and was met by a kindly fisherman, who told her that they had never spent such a terrible night, and that in the darkness her father's boat had struck Lonely Rock and had gone down about midnight.

Dry-eyed she went back to their lonely cottage and hastily swallowed some food; then went back to the bay. She started to follow the shore, and one of the kindly fishermen neighbors feared she might be so overcome with grief as to follow her good father into the watery grave.

But no. She was not made of that kind of stuff. She was not gone more than half a mile when she discovered the body of her father, which the ebbing tide had left upon the shore.

She was now all alone, scarcely more than a child, poor, humble, and weak of constitution; but when she returned to the cottage after her father's burial she made a strange resolution. She said:

"I will not give up to grief and loneliness, but as long as I live no more boats shall be wrecked on Lonely Rock, if a light shining through my window will guide them safely into the harbor." Then, through utter weariness of body and mind, she slept all through the day.

When night fell she arose, and lighting a candle placed it in the window where the returning fishermen could see it and be guided by it safely into the harbor. She prepared and ate her evening meal. She sat by the candle all night and trimmed it, and sang. Then, when day dawned, after she had done her work, she went to bed and slept.

As many hanks of yarn as she had spun before each day for her daily bread she spun still, but did one more for the nightly candle.

How many lives she saved by this candle, and how many meals she won by it for the families of the fishermen that would have possibly starved if the boats had gone down, it is im-

Dollars For

The Lenten Mite Box

To the Young People of the Church, now planning ways to earn money to swell the annual Sunday School Easter offering, the SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN offers an opportunity for big returns at pleasant work, and lots of dollars for the mite box.

There are many Church people in your neighborhood who will willingly subscribe to the SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN if you ask them to do so. You will find the work agreeable, and you will be surprised at the results.

THE SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

is a national Church paper with departments of interest to all members of the family. Its weekly visits will bring pleasure to the young people as also to the mature. The subscription price is $3.00 a year.

$1.00 A SUBSCRIBER.

THIS IS OUR OFFER: For each new annual subscription sent us by a Sunday School scholar, or Sunday School organization, we will pay the sender ONE DOLLAR. Put the dollar in your mite box, and send us two dollars with the name and address of the subscriber. In this way your good work will result in double benefit, a joy to the subscriber and an increase to your offering.

We will furnish you subscription blanks, literature, and all information on request. Start your Southern Churchman club now, and see the dollars for the offering roll in.

Southern Churchman Co.

112 North Fifth Street,

Richmond, Va.

possible to say, nor how many dark nights the fishermen, depending on that light, went forth and returned in safety cannot be told.

For fifty years—through youth, through young womanhood, and on to old age—she turned night into day; and in snowstorms of winter, through driving mists, deceptive moonlight and thick, black darkness, that harbor was not once without the light of her candle.

There it stood as regular as a lighthouse, steady as constant care could make it. Always brighter when the nights were darker, the fishermen had only to keep it in view and they were safe.

How those poor people loved her! They would gladly have contributed from their scanty stores to help her buy those candles, but they knew it was a labor of love on her part, and to offer to help her bear the burden would have deeply wounded her.

When she began to grow old many a fisherman, as he brought his boat in by that light in the window, blessed the white-haired woman sitting at the spinning wheel, spinning away to pay for food and candle.

Often they would lay a number of their choicest fish on her doorstep, and leave a child to watch until she awoke. Sometimes their wives would drop in and spin a few hanks of yarn for her while she slumbered. Every kindness and gratification were shown her that the minds of those simple folks could devise.

One peaceful night when it was so calm that no contrary winds tossed the boats toward Lonely Rock, the fishermen who were coming into the harbor noticed that there was no light in Margaret's window. As soon as they landed they and their wives hurried to the cottage.

The candle had not been lighted. The tired old hands which had trimmed and kept it burning for more than fifty years were still. The faithful woman had gone to her reward.

All the children had been taught to pass her home noiselessly lest they wake her from her tired day-slumbers. Now the old folks, too, walked softly, and laid her body to rest beside that of her father.

She had no relatives. On a piece of paper she had scribbled, "Keep the light go—"

They did keep it going, for they made Margaret's small possessions the nucleus for a fund to build a lighthouse. They told the story to every incoming and outgoing seaman and stranger, so that the fund grew and grew until it shaped itself into the Margaret Freeman Lighthouse, showing Lonely Rock and its danger far out into the bay.—Exchange.

A Prayer.

O Thou whose very word is power,
Great Master of the mighty sea,
Grip Thou my will within Thine own,
And rule Thou me.

As Thou didst calm the winds and waves
That wrestled wild on Galilee,
Rebuke the passions that would slay,
And calm Thou me.

The arm of man availeth not
To snatch me from the fateful sea.
Stretch forth Thy strong and willing arm
And save Thou me.

—Thomas Curtis Clark.

THE EUROPEAN TRIP THAT SUITS YOU

A Lady who has lived in Europe, and also has taken the Mediteranean and World Cruises, has a few vacancies in her small party to Europe this Summer.

Moderate cost, References exchanged.

Itinerary sent upon request.

MRS. ROBERT BOWIE STODDERT

1526 Park Ave., Baltimore, Md.

MOTHER'S DAY—MAY 8th

Send Your Dear Mother a Remembrance

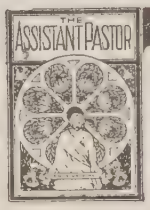
"Paying Mother"

the tribute beautiful, by Margaret H. McCarter; a simple, human story that every old-fashioned mother will love to read. Each copy in a gift box. Mailed, together with our Book and Magazine Catalog, to any address,

Postpaid on receipt of 75c

THE NEW YORK PUBLISHING COMPANY

25 Dominick Street New York, N.Y.



KEEP YOUR SKIN YOUNG

Tedious treatments unnecessary if the soap used for daily cleansing is

Resinol

BIG PROFITS

For Your Church Organization
The Handy Household Helper
Write for full information
METAL SPONGE SALES CORP.,
Lehigh Avenue and Mascher Street
Philadelphia.

PARISH PAPERS

Any church, school or class can publish a parish paper by using our co-operative plan. A parish paper fills empty pews, keeps community informed, speeds up church work.

Free Samples and Particulars.

Our plan provides a paper for your church without cost to you.

The National Religious Press
Grand Rapids, Mich.

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.

Richmond, Virginia

THE SAFE EXECUTOR

Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock $1,000,000.00
Surplus earned $1,500,000.00
Held in trust $30,000,000. (plus)

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

PIPE ORGANS.

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, INC., Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices. Particular attention given to designing organs for memorials.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 209 East Franklin Street. Richmond, Va.

ALTAR AND SURPLICE LINEN.

Sold by direct importer to Guilds, Rectors and others, by the yard, or piece, wholesale rates. New Specials 305, 54 inch, fine and heavy for Fair Linen. Surplice Linen 1800, 36 and 40 inch. Write for prices and samples.

MARY FAWCETT,
115 Franklin St., New York City.

ROOMS—WASHINGTON.

VISITORS TO WASHINGTON ACCOMMODATED with comfortable rooms in private home. Reasonable rates. Private bath. Mrs. W. A. Masker, 2751 Macomb Street. N. W.

BOARDING—WASHINGTON

MISS BOULDIN WOULD LIKE TRANSIENT friends after March 15th. Apartment 208, 1346 Park Road, Washington, D. C.

OLD ENVELOPES.

WANTED—Old Envelopes from letters written between 1845 and 1874. Do not remove the stamps from the envelopes Highest prices paid. GEORGE HAKES, 290 Broadway, New York.

CONFEDERATE STAMPS.

WANTED—Confederate Stamps, also United States Stamps used before 1870. Collections purchased. Higest prices paid. GEORGE HAKES, 290 Broadway, New York.

STAINED GLASS

JAMES POWELL & SONS (Whitefriars), Ltd., London, England—Stained Glass. Designs and estimates submitted on receipt of full particulars. Distributor ADRIAN A. BUCK, 665 Fifth Ave., New York City.

—CATHEDRAL STUDIOS—
Washington London.

Church Embroideries and Vestments, Silks, Fringes, Gold thread, Stoles with crosses from $7.60, Burse and veil from $15, Surplices and exquisite Altar Linens, Church vestments imported for the Churches free of duty.

MISS L. V. MACKRILLE,
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington. D. C. D. C. Telephone Cleveland 52.

EASTER CARDS.

IMPORTED RELIGIOUS CARDS FOR EASTER AND LENT. One Dollar packages. G. L. Bender, 7421 Boyer Street, Mount Airy, Philadelphia, Pa.

AN APPEAL.

WHO WILL DONATE, OR SELL, CHEAP, or on installment plan, to very poor Mission in real need, a set of Violet, or Red Eucharistic Vestments; also set, or part set, embroidered Stoles? Address "Mission", care of Southern Churchman.

SITUATION WANTED.

CHURCH WORKER.

INFORMATION DESIRED CONCERNING an opportunity in Church work where the services of a trained and educated layman are needed. No objection to traveling. Subscriber is at liberty to refer to the Bishop of the Diocese. Address "S-4" care of Southern Churchman

WANTED, BY REFINED, EDUCATED woman, with fifteen year old daughter, position in office, or home department, of some good accredited school, beginning September 1st, where daughter could enter until she graduates. Address 72341, care of Southern Churchman.

COLLEGE STUDENT WITH EXPERIENCE desires summer position as Governess. Address C-2, care of Southern Churchman.

COMPANION, ASSIST HOUSEKEEPING, Secretarial duties, chaperon grown children, or similar position, sought by young gentlewoman, about middle of June, with family spending summer months either seashore, mountains or West. Address "W-2", care of Southern Churchman.

WANTED — SEPTEMBER FIRST BY Churchwoman with experience, position as matron, house mother or proctor in school. References. Address "K", care of Southern Churchman.

Deaths

IN MEMORIAM.

EDWIN MORTON COATES QUIMBY.

Born April 17th, 1873.
Departed This Life March 18th, 1927.

The Randolph Society of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Suffolk, Virginia, desires to record the deep sense of the loss it has sustained in the death of MR. EDWIN MORTON COATES QUIMBY.

He was a charter member of the Randolph Society, at one times serving as Secretary. He was also a member of the Vestry of the Church at several different times and sang in the Choir for years. Endowed with a loyal sense of duty towards every work done in the society and his church, he took a keen interest in all its undertakings. It will indeed be hard to "carry on", feeling the loss of such an active co-worker. Better known as "Ned" to every member and blessed with a bright and happy disposition, he not only spread sunshine wherever he went, but having the honest integrity and loyalty of a Christian gentleman of the Old School, he has left an impression on our hearts that will stand as an everlasting memorial to his character.

The Randolph wishes this simple memorial sent to the family of Mr. Quimby, with the love and heartfelt sympathy of each member, also that it be published in the next number of the Southern Churchman, read at the next meeting of the Randolph Society and thereafter spread upon its minutes.

THE RANDOLPH SOCIETY OF ST. PAUL'S CHURCH.
By
MRS. HERBERT DARDEN,
MISS SUE W. RIDDICK,
MR. S. M. LAWRENCE,
Committee.

MRS. KATE CORBIN MARYE.

Died, January 20, 1927, KATE CORBIN, widow of John Laurance Marye, of Newport News, Virginia, and daughter of William H. and Fanny Nelson Dickinson. Born at Echo Dell, King George county, Virginia, her life was a noble example for the many friends and loved ones left behind. Four devoted children survive her: Nelson Corbin, Rebecca Farley and E. Spotswood Marye, of Newport News, and John L. Marye, of Calumet, Oklahoma. Interment in Fredericksburg, Va.

"One sweetly solemn thought
Comes to me o'er and o'er;
I am nearer my Father's home today
Than I ever have been before.

E. M. G.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

(Continued from page 16.)

cent which banks commonly allow on current balances.

Another Cornerstone.

Announcement was made in this column last week of the laying of the cornerstone of a new parish house for St. Simon's, Brooklyn. This week it is St. Gabriel's, Hollis, that lays a cornerstone. The new parish house is well under way, the exterior being nearly complete. Bishop Stires laid the cornerstone on Sunday, March 27, with the assistance of the rector, the Rev. Clifford W. French.

Actual Achievement in Lay-Evangelism.

Mr. E. R. Erland, under the direction of the Ven. Roy F. Duffield, Archdeacon of Queens and Nassau, has been giving a good deal of his own time to successful work such as the Bishop suggests. He has made house-to-house canvasses of several of the smaller villages in Nassau County, reporting the results to the rector of the nearest parish. As a result, Church people newly moved into a strange neighborhood have been brought into touch with the nearest Church; a number of unbaptized children reported to the nearest clergyman; and in one case a careful examination is being made with a view of establishing a new mission.

C. H. W.

The Rt. Rev. John G. Murray, D. D., Presiding Bishop, was the preacher last Tuesday night at the third of the united services of the parishes of the "Hill Zone" in Brooklyn. The service was held at St. Luke's, of which the Rev. Rush R. Sloane is rector. The rectors of the other parishes of that zone—St. James, St. Mary's, Messiah and Incarnation—were all in the chancel. The congregation numbered about six hundred.

Bishop Stires Preaches at Albee's Theatre: Albee's Theatre, the largest in the city, was about two-thirds filled on Tuesday last at 12:05 noon, when Bishop Stires was preacher at the first of the Lenten services of the Brooklyn Federation of Churches. The assembly seemed to be made up largely of people who had leisure at mid-day rather than business people; for though the service lasted fifty minutes, which is a long time to take out of one's "lunch hour", few left during the service. The proportion of men was not remarkable. The "Gloria Trumpeters" led the hymns, and also rendered two instrumental numbers. Bishop Stires, whose sermon was less than thirty minutes' long, emphasized the responsibility of lay members of the churches for the fact that there are sixty millions of people in the United States without Church affiliation of any kind.

The "Florence Nightingale Memorial Service", which has been held the past two years in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, in Manhattan, on the Sunday nearest Miss Nightingale's birthday (May 12) has drawn so large a congregation of graduate and student nurses that it was necessary last year to limit the number who could be admitted from any one school. On this account, with the entire approval of those responsible for the Manhattan service, a separate service of the same character will be held in Brooklyn this year, under the leadership of Bishop Stires, for the Nurses Association of the Counties of Long Island. The service will be held in St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn, on Sunday evening, May 15, and the preacher will be Bishop Stires.

C. H. W.

CONNECTICUT.

Rt. Rev. C. B. Brewster, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. C. Acheson, D. D., Coadjutor.

Death of Mrs. E. C. Mercer.

Mrs. Edward C. Mercer, wife of Mr. E. C. ("Ted") Mercer, the evangelist, died Saturday, March 5, from burns received while repainting the wood-work in the kitchen of her home.

As far as can be learned Mrs. Mercer was standing on a ladder near the kitchen range in which was a hot fire. She must have dropped the can of paint or spilled it on the stove, for a sheet of flame suddenly enveloped her. She was practically trapped on the ladder and could do very little to save herself.

The funeral was held at St. John's Church on Tuesday afternoon at two o'clock, and was conducted by the Rev. Henry J. Chiera, assisted by the Rev. G. E. Quaile, of Salisbury School, the Rev. Charles A. Brown of Bayside, L. I., and the Rev. Horace E. Clute of Brooklyn. The interment was made in Salisbury Cemetery.

CALIFORNIA.

Rt., Rev. E. L. Parsons, D. D., Bishop.

New Chapel For Grace Cathedral, San Francisco.

Ground was broken on Wednesday, February 23, for the second unit of Grace Cathedral, which will be the chapel adjoining the sanctuary and choir.

The chapel will be on the site of the former residence of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Crocker, California, and Jones Streets, which was destroyed in the fire of 1906. Later the ground was presented to Bishop Nichols as the nucleus of a Cathedral site and afterwards was added to by the gift of the whole block at the summit of Nob Hill by the Crocker family.

Mr. and Mrs. Crocker are erecting the chapel as a memorial; and the sanctuary, choir, and crossings, for which excavation is beginning, will be a memorial to the late Bishop William Ford Nichols.

The service of ground-breaking was led by Bishop Parsons and Dean Gresham, Mr. and Mrs. Crocker turning up the first earth with a silver trowel presented to them by the Cathedral chapter. Besides a large number of the clergy and laity of the diocese, among others there were present the Bishops of Athabasco, San Joaquin, Idaho, Arizona, and Utah.

Mid-day Lenten Services.

For the thirtieth year, Noon-day Lenten Services are being held in the Merchants' Exchange Building, San Francisco, under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. The services last only a half hour and are held every day except Sunday. Ministers of different denominations are the speakers, and, as announced by the committee in charge:

"In these Noon Day Services during Lent, Christians of many names unite. The services are a symbol of the Faith we hold in common. They show to the world our loyalty to the One Lord. They reveal to us what we often forget, how real is the Unity of all Christians in the Spirit. And thus they seem to call upon us daily with no uncertain sound to pray for the true expression of that unity in the charity of our own lives and in the ever closer fellowship of the Churches to which we belong."

The speakers for March have been the Rev. C. A. Ramm and Archbishop Hanna, of the Roman Catholic Church; the Rev. H. K. Pitman, D. D., the Rev. James C. Reid, D. D., the Rev. Lapsley A. McAfee, D. D., the Rev. Ezra A. Van Nuys, D. D., and the Rev. W. K. Guthrie, D. D., of the Presbyterian Church; the Rev. C. L. Bent, of the Methodist Church, and the Rev. Drs. D. Charles Gardner, Alexander Allen, W. R. H. Hodgkin, H. H. St. G. Buttrum, Bishops Parsons and Moreland, and Messrs. E. F. Gee, G. B. H. Wright, F. K. Howard and Richard M. Trelease, of the Episcopal Church.

For April, the speakers are all ministers of the Episcopal Church, as follows: Bishop Parsons, the Rev. Drs. W. H. Cambridge and Charles P. Deems, and the Rev. Messrs. A. W. Farlander, B. D. Weigle, W. W. Jennings, Leslie C. Kelley, H. H. Shires, W. M. Bours and Archdeacon Porter.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Samuel H. Sayre, who was ordained in St. John's, Hampton, Virginia, last year, has accepted a call to become sssistant rector of St. Paul's, Chicago, Ill. Mr. Sayre will enter upon his new duties May 1.

The Rev. Osee Celsus Fox, rector of the Memorial Church of the Good Shepherd, Parkersburg, West Virginia, has resigned from the active ministry on account of ill-health, and has taken up his residence at 828 West Woodland Avenue, Youngstown, Ohio.

The Rev. Arthur B. Rudd has resigned the rectorship of Emmanuel Church, Newport, Rhode Island, to accept a position on the staff of the National Cathedral, and should be addressed at the Cathedral Offices, Mount Saint Alban, Washington, D. C.

The Rev. Oliver F. Crawford has resigned as vicar of the Church of the Holy Cross, North East and St. Mary's, Lawrence Park, in the Diocese of Erie, Pa., and has accepted the locum tenency of Christ Church, Oil City, Pa., beginning April 1.

The Rev. Harry S. Cobey, formerly rector of Grace Church, Gainesville, Ga., has accepted a call to St. Paul's Church, Albany, Ga.

The Rev. Walter L. Loflin, formerly of Waco, Texas, has taken charge of St. Stephen's Church, Sherman, Texas.

The address of the Rev. Dewey Newton is changed from Lewisburg, W. Va., to Hitchins, Ky.

The Rev. Thomas A. Schofield, formerly of Brooklyn, N. Y., is now min-Uvalde, Texas, has accepted a call to be minister-in-charge of St. Mary's Church, Milton, Fla.

The Rev. Claude N. A. Pooley, formerly of Brooklpn, N. Y., is now minister-in-charge of Trinity Church, Trenton, N. J.

The Rev. Nicolo Accomando, at one time minister-in-charge of San Antonio's Italian Mission, Gary, Ind., has now taken up Italian work at Utica, N. Y., under Bishop Fiske.

The Rev. Frederick M. Clayton, formerly rector of the Church of Good Shepherd, East Chicago, Ind., has accepted the position as director at Lawrence Hall, Chicago.

The Rev. William S. McKay, formerly rector of St. Philip's Church, Syracuse, N. Y., has accepted a call to be rector of St. Augustine's Church, Camden, N. J.

ORDINATIONS.

On the Second Sunday in Lent, in St. Paul's Mission Church, North Arlington, the Rev. Harold N. Cutler was ordained priest by Bishop Lines, Archdeacon Ladd preaching the sermon with the presentation of the candidate by the Rev. William D. Mawhinney, Professor Denslow of the General Seminary and the Rev. William L. Griffin, Jr., of Paterson, assisting at the service. The church was crowded with interested parishioners and friends. This new Mission Church has prospered greatly under the care of Mr. Cutler and the large number of new homes about it gives promise of a useful parish in due time.

Word has been received from Jerusalem that the ordination of Mr. Bedros Hagopian to the diaconate was to take place on March 20, the Armenian Patriarch officiating.

Mr. Hagopian, it may be remembered, is an Armenian, a graduate of the General Theological Seminary, who studied for our ministry, but at the request of the Armenian Archbishop, on the advice of the Foreign-Born Americans Division and with the consent of Bishop Freeman, whose candidate he was, offered himself to the Armenian Church for service among his own people. Last year he was chosen rector of the Church of St. Gregory, New York, the leading Armenian Church in America. In order to perfect his training for the Armenian Church he was sent, by interested friends, to spend this year studying in the Armenian Seminary in Jerusalem.

In the Cathedral of St. Paul, Boston, on Wednesday, March 9, acting for the Bishop of New York, the Rt. Rev. Charles Lewis Slattery, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Massachusetts, ordained to the priesthood the Rev. Frederick W. Lightfoot, of the staff of St. Agnes' Chapel, Trinity Parish, New York. The candidate was presented by the Rev. A. W. P. Wylie, of All Saints' Church, Ashmont, who also read the litany. The Rev. C. R. Peck, of the Cathedral, read the epistle, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. F. C. Powell, S. S. J. E. A graduate of Hobart University, Mr. Lightfoot was a student at the General Theological Seminary.

On Sunday morning, March 13, the Rev. Ernest Victor Kennan was ordained priest at St. Mark's Church, Evanston, Ill., the Suffragan Bishop of Chicago, officiating. The Rev. J. R. Pickells, a former rector of Mr. Kennan, presented the candidate. The Rev. Dr. Arthur Rogers, rector of St. Mark's Church, preached the sermon, the Rev. A. D. Kolkebeck acted as chaplain and read the litany. Dean DeWitt read the epistle, the Rev. Dr. J. S. Stone read the gospel; and the Rev. F. C. Jewell assisted in the laying on of hands. Mr. Kennan is a graduate of the University of Chicago and of the General Theological Seminary, and is assistant at St. Mark's Church, Evanston.

We do not find the best; the best finds us. The things that count are, after all, not wages but gifts. We think we discover God, we find Him out, and we breathe the spirit of the age in thinking that; but what we forget is that ere we discover God, God, in His mercy, has discovered us.—George H. Morrison.

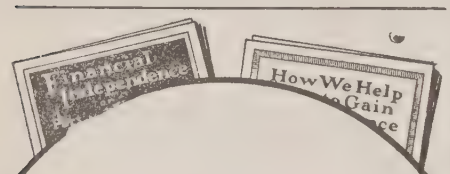
The Bell Book and Stationery Co.

ENGRAVED WEDDING ANNOUNCEMENTS
VISITING CARDS.
Fifth Street between Broad and Grace
RICHMOND, VA.

CHOIR SLIPS

With order for entries of Anthems and Hymns for Morning and Evening Service.

In pads of 100 each, arranged for carbon copies.



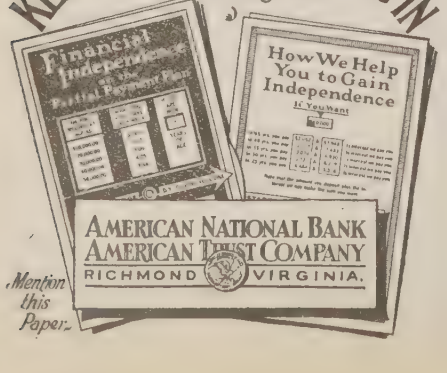
100 Slips	$1.00
200 Slips	1.75
300 Slips	2.50
500 Slips	4.00
1000 Slips	5.00

A copy for your rector, organist and each member of the Choir will help the service.

Order From

Southern Churchman Co.

Richmond, Va.



"TRY AN' BEAT IT!"

If you will deposit each week so small an amount as $5.00 in the American's Income Building Plan, in 25 years you will have $14,000.00 in prime First Mortgage Bonds yielding $72.00 per month and $96.10 in cash.

We will gladly explain this simple plan to you.

KEEP YOUR INCOME COMING IN

Ask for Booklet on Income Building Plan

Mention this Paper.

INCORPORATED 1832

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,398,462.62

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer
J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm . P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

A. Complete Store of shops and --- more --- an Institution

Miller & Rhoads

"THE SHOPPING CENTER"

Richmond - Virginia

QUALITY CHICKS

Chicks from winter laying, farm raised, mature stock, S. C. W. Leghorns, R. I. Reds, Barred Rocks, White Orpingtons, Anconas, Black Jersey Giants, White Wyandottes, White Plymouth Rocks, Black Minorcas, Pekin and Indian Runner Ducks; $15 per 100 up. Live Delivery guaranteed. Parcel Post prepaid. Hatching eggs $8.00 per 100 up. Several breeds rabbits. Circular free. Shipments will be made from one of our nearest associated hatcheries.

Glen Rock Nursery and Stock Farm, Ridgewood, N. J.

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC., 308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.

QUALITY—SERVICE

The South's Best Book Store

HUNTER & CO.

105 E. Broad Street
Richmond, Va.
Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen.
Prompt and Reliable Service.

SYDNOR & HUNDLEY'S STOCK REDUCTION SALE

Complete Suites and Hundreds of Occasional Prices at

25 Per Cent, 33 1-3 Per Cent and 50 Per Cent Reductions.

7th at Grace Richmond, Va.

The Lovely Gladiolus!—We have a good florist's mixture, all colors, early and later at 75c for 20, $1.62 for 50. $3.00 for 100, postpaid. These are not just blooming sizes, but large, full sized bulbs. Thousands more not mixed, sold under their own names. Drop card for list. Wakefield Floral Co., Charlotte, N. C.

A NATIONAL CHURCH PAPER FOR ALL THE FAMILY.

Southern Churchman

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., APRIL 9, 1927. No. 15.

VICTIM! beyond Thy gaze what shining rite
Doth God prepare to welcome home His own,
That for three hours He withholds the light?

Victor! what chanting of the angelic throng
Shakes heaven with surging triumphs, height on height;
Shakes earth with solemn requiems of song?

O blest translation of the bitter Cross!
That He who gave His Body to the tree,
Dying to rescue us from endless loss,

The Lord of glory and of life should be,
And turn earth's pain to bliss, earth's wealth to dross,
Making the accursed wood of heaven the key.

—Howard C. Robbins.

IN THIS ISSUE

A VISIT TO THE CAPITAL OF NATIONALIST CHINA
By the Reverend Edmund J. Lee

THE PULPIT SERMON
By the Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D.
Bishop-Coadjutor of West Virginia

EDUCATIONAL

The Virginia Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded.
Established 1892.
For terms and information address
MISS M. GUNDRY.

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-eighth year of this School for Boys opened September 15, 1926. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. Hoxton, B. A., Principal.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The Requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA,

prepares boys at cost for college and university. Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountians of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., Rector.

St. Hilda's Hall

Charles Town, W. Va.
Near Harper's Ferry.

Chevron School for Girls. Episcopal Junior College—four year' High School and two years' College Courses. Elective Music, Art. Business, Athletics. Limited numbers.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

The One Hundred and Fourth Session
Opened Wednesday, Sept. 15, 1926.

For catalogs and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria Va.

CHATHAM EPISCOPAL INSTITUTE,
Box 13, Chatham, Virginia.

College preparatory school for girls. Certificate privileges. Also two years of advanced Academic work. Special courses, Music, Art, Expression, Home Economics. Modern equipment. 15 Acres campus. Pool, Golf. Terms moderate. 33rd session September 22, 1926.

Bishop of Diocese of Southern Virginia President of Board.

For catalogue address
MABEL ELEANOR STONE
Principal.

The Divinity School of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia
42nd and Locust Streets.

Graduate Courses in Theology, Privileges at the University of Pennsylvania.

Address: The Rev. G. G. Bartlett, D. D., Dean.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY, Publishers,
112 North Fifth Street, - Richmond, Va.

LEWIS C. WILLIAMS.....President
REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Associate Editor
MISS FENTON WILLIAMSON News Editor
MISS SUSAN C. COOKE, Circulation Dept.
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00 Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful.....	4
Editorials	5-6
The Pulpit of the American Church	7
A Visit to the Capital of Nationalist China—The Rev. Edmund J. Lee	8
Our Duty to Our Jewish Neighbors —B. A. M. Schapiro	10
Christianity and the Community— The Rev. R. Cary Montague....	11
Memorial Commemorates Work of Texas Churchmen in Early Days	12
An Interesting Correspondence ...	13
Church Intelligence	14
Family Department	17
Children's Department	19
Personal Notes	23

St. Stephen's College

An Undergraduate Church College for men.

There are four curricula—Classical, Literary, Scientific and Social Scientific.

For tution $250.00 a year; foo a room furnished and heated $150.00 a year; for board in hall $250.00 a year; a total of $650.00.

Address: BERNARD IDDINGS BELL, President

Annandale-on-Hudson, N. Y. (Railway Station, Barrytown, N. Y.)

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesvile; St. Margaret's School, Tapphannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.)

(About gifts or bequests, address the Dean, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR BOYS.
Richmond, Virginia.

Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 60 pupils.

RATE $700.00.

Reduction to sons of Clergymen, teachers and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., Headmaster.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

St. Agnes' Episcopal School

Alexandria, Virginia.

Boarding and Day School for Girls on Braddock Heights overlooking the Potomac River.

On the interurban trolley and bus lines between Washington and Alexandria.

Athletics and open air life; sixteen-acre campus. Primary, Intermediate, General and College Preparatory Courses. Music.

For information apply to
THE PRINCIPAL.

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.
Affiliated with Harvard University.
For catalog address
The Dean.

HOBART COLLEGE, Geneva, N. Y

A Church College for men, founded 1822. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

"Palmer's book is a wonderful contribution to the subject," says Bishop Darst.

THE MINISTRY OF LAYMEN
A Plea for Lay Evangelism

By

LEON C. PALMER.

Over 2,000 copies sold before edition was off the press.

Postpaid: Single copies, 25c.; four for $1.00; nine for $2.00.

From

The BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW

202 S. Nineteenth St., Philadelphia.

Come Unto Me.

We labor and are heavy-laden. Where Shall we find rest unto iur souls? We bleed
On thorn and flint, and rove in pilgrim weed
From shrine to shrine, but comfort is not there.
What went we out into Thy desert bare,
O Human Life, to see? Thy greenest reed
Is Love, unmighty for our utmost need,
And shaken with the wind of our despair.
A voice from Heaven like dew on Hermon falleth,
That voice whose passion paled the olive leaf
In the dusky aisles, Gethsemane, thou blest
Of gardens. 'Tis the Man of Sorrows calleth,
The Man of Sorrows and acquaint with grief:
"Come unto Me, and I will give you rest."

Katherine Lee Bates.

For the Southern Churchman.

The Great Physician.

F. B. Stone.

O Pride! That shuts the Great Physician out,
The dear white Form, with face Divine!
Rejecting Him, you too reject the God
Who sent Him, made this child of thine.
Oh, blind! Oh, slow of heart to understand!
"You have no part with me unless
I wash your feet." My ministry receive,
If thou wouldst share my blessedness.

Like Peter, cry, with all your heart, My Lord,
Not only touch my sick one's brow,
But with Thy gentle pity touch and heal
His aching heart and body now.

O dear, warm heart, like Peter's bound with pride,
As with great ropes of steel, repent,
And seek now Jesus' healing power, yourself,
Whom God to you in love hath sent.

Pilate's Fourteen Questions at the Trial of Jesus.

By A. J. D. Haupt, Grand Forks, N. D.

1. What accusation bring ye? John 18: 29.
2. Art Thou the King of the Jews? Matt. 27:11; Mark 15:2; Luke 23:3; John 18: 33.
3. What hast Thou done? John 18:35.
4. Art Thou a King then? John 18:37.
5. What is truth? John 18:38.
6. Hearest Thou not, etc.? Matt. 27:13; Mark 15:4.
7. Whom will ye that I release? Matt. 27:17.
8. Will ye than that I release the King, etc.?—Mark 15:9; John 18:39.
9. Whether of the twain will ye that I release? Matt. 27:21.
10. What shall I do then with JESUS? Matt. 27:22; Mark 15:12.
11. Why? What evil hath He done? Matt. 27:23; Mark 15:14; Luke 23:22.
12. Whence are Thou? John 19:9.
13. Speakest Thou not unto me? John 19:10.
14. Shall I crucify your King? John 19: 15.

Shadows.

Leaf-shadows, tremulous and dim,
Falling around, enfolded Him
In their compassionate embrace,
Hiding the anguish of His Face
From the white moonlight; dark and warm,
They gathered round His prostrate Form,
So that no mortal eye might see,
Save through a twilight tenderly,
His Agony.

The Powers of Good and Evil met
Within that shadow: dripping wet
With cooling dews the grasses pressed
Against the throbbing Brow and Breast.
The night was still, and not a leaf
Stirred in the presence of God's grief,
Troubling the awful silence there,
Where God's Voice, broken, thrilled the air
With anguished prayer.

Sometimes through shadows close and dim
We draw a little near to Him,
Who cannot understand or guess
The burden of sin's heaviness
Which the pure Soul of God's own Son
Bore in the garden, all alone,
When in His Agony He strove,
Under the shade the small leaves wove,
In His great love.

Phillis Noble.

Bring back the Newness to all kinds and colors of Fancy Footwear
use Whittemore's
Bostonian Shoe Cream
ASK YOUR DEALER
Whittemore Bros. Cambridge Mass.

JUNIATA COLLEGE
HUNTINGDON, PA.
M. G. BRUMBAUGH, Ph.D., LL.D., President
(Author of "The Making of a Teacher")
A FULLY ACCREDITED CHRISTIAN COLLEGE
Solicits the patronage of Christian parents and earnest students
Large Faculty. Beautiful Location. Moderate Charges.
Summer Term Opens June 20.
Fall Term Opens September 13.
Accommodations are limited. Early application for reservations is urged.
Address The President.

SPECIAL SALE Hand-Made Handkerchiefs from the East
Made of fine linen with narrow handwoven lace edge or with drawn work design and hemstitched edge .... 3 for $1.00
Made of fine linen with plain hand-hemstitched edge ... 6 for $1.00
Your order will be appreciated
NEAR EAST INDUSTRIES (Dept. M)
(Near East Relief) 151 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.
SEND FOR CATALOGUE

Richmond Trust Company
3%
ON SAVINGS.
BANKING—TRUSTS—REAL ESTATE
Capital $1,000,000.00
Main at Seventh Richmond, Virginia.

JOCKO-HOMO HEAVENBOUND
A satire on the ape-man "Chrysalis" that was unveiled in a New York Church.
PUDDLE TO PARADISE
Discusses the pilgrimage of evolution and the tails our "ancestors" won and lost.
THE TOADSTOOL AMONG THE TOMBS
Showing that self-sufficient human brain may be a liability rather than an asset.
Parents: If they teach your children they are cousins of apes, six evolutionary hops ahead of a toad, you need these books. No books on this subject ever had more friends and enemies. We have hoped some leader among evolutionists would try to answer them. If your ancestors were all human, send for one book; you will want the others. They have 25 cartoons. Each book 20c. Six books (3 to read, 3 to loan) for $1, postpaid. Dollar bill or check will do. Do it before you lose this ad. Author's reply to Brisbane, "When Snakes Began to Nurse Their Young" and "100 Questions for Teachers of Evolution" (each 8 pages) free with $1 order. (Quantities at half price.)
HOMO PUB. CO. - - Rogers, O.

NELSON PRAYER BOOK AND THE NEW HYMNAL
Possess this beautiful new edition of the Prayer Book: use it in your devotion: enjoy its clear, readable type, its fine paper. This Prayer Book is published under certificate of approval from the custodian of the Standard Prayer Book.
Increase the joy of the service by the use of this beautiful new hymnal—the last word in satisfying book construction. The hymnal is authorized and approved for use by the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America.
Printed on fine white paper and thin India paper, they may be purchased singly or in combination. Prices 50 cents to $22.50. For sale by all dealers.
THOMAS NELSON & SONS 381-R Fourth Avenue New York

EVERYTHING FOR THE CHURCH

J. & R. Lamb
23-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED WOOD · METAL · ETC.

Dewey's
EST. 1857
MATURED
WINES
for Sacramental Use
Affidavit Blanks and Price Lists Mailed on Request
H. T. Dewey & Sons Co.,
138 Fulton St., N. Y. C.

WOODY ART GLASS SHOP
Art Stained and Leaded Glass
Church Windows a Specialty
402 East Marshall St.
Richmond, Va.

Church and Sunday School Furniture
THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY.
Hickory, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue.

We are Headquarters for CHURCH BOOKS
and
CHURCH SCHOOL SUPPLIES
Send for a copy of our Complete Catalogue
GEORGE W. JACOBS & COMPANY
Booksellers-Stationers-Engravers
1726 CHESTNUT STREET
PHILADELPHIA

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS
Largest stock in the South. We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival
The Couper Marble Works
(Established 79 years.)
294-296 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

THE INN
Located in Historic
CHARLES-TOWN, WEST VIRGINIA
In the beautiful Shenandoah Valley. Two hours from Washington on the National Highway. Large shady lawn; home atmosphere; Southern cuisine.
Address
THE INN,
Charles Town, West Va.
Mrs. John P. Briscoe.

R. GEISSLER, INC.,
56 W. 8th STREET, NEW YORK, N.Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS

XANTHINE
Hair Restorative
Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.
Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.
XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

CHURCH VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Surplices, Stole.
EMBROIDERIES
Silks, Cloths, Fringes.
CLERICAL SUITS
Rabats, Collars, Shirts.
COX SONS & VINING,
131-133 E. 23d St., New York.

Washington Cathedral
A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation
THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work Missionary Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.
Chartered under Act of Congress.
Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.
Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.
Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

CHURCH FURNISHINGS
Gold, Silver and Brass.
Church and Chancel Furniture
Write for Catalogue for Episcopal Churches.
W. & E. SCHMIDT CO.
308 THIRD ST. MILWAUKEE, WIS.

MOLLER PIPE ORGANS
three thousand churches. Every organ specially designed for the church and service in which it is be used and fully guaranteed. Specifications and estimates on request. Correspondence solicited.
M. P. MOLLER,
Hagerstown, Maryland.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Toil is the toll at the gate of success.

A good conscience is the best armor against calumny.

"God is in all that liberates and lifts,
In all that humbles, sweetens, and controls."

Not prayer after everything else falls, but prayer before anything else is undertaken.

No man will neglect the needs of his family who puts and keeps God's guidance above mere human judgment.

"What is faith?" asks John Wesley, and answers: "Not an opinion, neither any number of opinions put together, be they ever so true. It is the vision of the soul, the power by which spiritual things are apprehended."

"In the bonds of death He lay,
Who for our offence was slain,
But the Lord is risen today,
Christ has brought us life again.
Wherefore let us all rejoice
Singing loud with cheerful voice
Hallelujah!"

I have often been asked how I came to choose Labrador or the deep sea as a field for a life work. It is my habit constantly to ask God to teach me each day how rightly to use my faith. I have never had any doubt that He does so.—Wilfred T. Grenfell.

Joseph Parker used to say, "God has no time to make nobodies". God has made you and intended you for some fine, heroic and gracious manner of life. Do you know your own best ideals? Do not deem them fancy! Believe, rather, that they come from God. Be ever obedient to the heavenly vision."
—George A. Buttrick.

Still to Thee, whose love unbounded
Sorrow's deep for us has sounded,
Perfected by sorrow sore.
Glory to Thy cross forever!
Star that points our high endeavor
Whither Thou hast gone before.
—Frederick Henry Hedge.

Nothing can be clearer than that Jesus encourages men to think of prayer as a reality, a power which could accomplish results. He told them that God would act in answer to prayer. And He showed them in His own life the example of a man praying, and guided, strengthened, and upheld by prayer.—Robert E. Speer.

Cassocks
Surplices, Stoles, Altar Hangings, Bookmarkers and Embroideries Altar Linens, Materials, Rabats, Rabat Vests, Birettas, Collars, Cuffs and Shirts. Clerical and Custom Tailoring.
Moderate prices.
J. M. HALL, Inc.
9 East 35th St., New York
Tel. Caledonia 8648

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., APRIL 9, 1927. No. 15.

CHRISTIANITY TODAY.

THE GOSPEL RECORDS ABUNDANTLY SHOW why the week before Easter should be called and observed as Holy Week. At least one-third of all the writings concerning the life of Jesus is devoted to these last seven days. St. Matthew's Gospel has twenty-eight chapters, and he begins his account of this week with the twenty-first chapter. Of the sixteen chapters of Mark, six are given to Holy Week. St. Luke's account of the Saviour's life and teachings has twenty-four chapters, and the last five and a half of these are devoted to the final week. The Fourth Gospel is generally admitted to be written after the other three, and by one who had read them. St. John evidently thought that there had not been enough detail about this closing week, and so, of his twenty-one chapters, no less than ten, deal entirely with our Saviour's words and deeds, during the week that the Church is about to observe. Thus we find that of the eighty-nine chapters, in the four Gospels, twenty-nine and a half are given to this sacred season. Is it any wonder then that there should be daily, indeed, almost hourly, services for the contemplation of the gracious deeds and mighty words spoken by Jesus in these last tragic moments of His earthly life.

THE BREAK UP OF PROTESTANTISM" IS THE TITLE of an article in the March Atlantic Monthly that has attracted a good deal of attention. The author points out many reasons why Protestantism should break up, but very little evidence that it is doing so. The purpose of the article may be found in a single paragraph, where the author says, after pointing out the disunity existing among Protestant Churches:

"It is my conviction that the sooner Protestantism disappears from American life the better. Its narrow sectarian spirit, fostering division, incapable of a large synthesis of values, of unity, unfits it to represent our national religious life."

The writer of this article evidently belongs to that little group of clergy in the Protestant Episcopal Church who dislike the first word of the title of the Church they serve.

It is certainly regrettable that an article containing such sentiment and broad unsupported statements should come from the pen of a clergyman in the Protestant Episcopal Church. It is, however, most gratifying that the overwhelming answer to his assertions can be pointed out in the most explicit manner. For instance, in a large Southern city, a campaign is now on for "Every Church Evangelism". The services are not held in a huge tabernacle, or conducted by a spectacular speaker, with a national reputation, but each congregation is meeting in its own church. The result is well expressed by a layman, who is Vice-President of a large railroad company, and chairman of the Laymen's Committee in charge of the movement. He says:

"A series of services such as is now going on is just what we need at this particular time. I think it is bound to have an excellent effect on all who come into contact with it, especially those who are promoting it, and one of the great benefits is the fine effect it is having on Church unity. There has never been anything like it here before and I am truly glad to see it.

Indications are that almost everybody is going to Church and those who stay at home listen to sermons and hymns over the radio. Many are doing both. Enthusiastic reports come to the Committee from all parts of the city."

This does not sound much like a "break up". Of course, it may be said, it is merely local, but the fact that more than two thousand advance orders have been taken for Leon Palmer's Booklet, "Lay Evangelism", proves that there is still a considerable and growing interest in religion, among the men in our own Church. We might also point to the figures published a week or more ago, in these pages, showing the enormous demand among Protestants for religious literature.

ANOTHER EVIDENCE OF THE PRESENT VITALITY OF PROTESTANTISM comes from an unexpected source, namely the floor of the House of Representatives. In this august body, the Hon. Arthur M. Free, Representative from California, recently paid the highest tribute possible to the present effectiveness of Protestant Christian forces, when he attacked the Federal Council of Churches, and introduced a resolution, stating that it cooperates with the Anti-Saloon League, opposes military training, and that it lobbied for and put through the Senate resolution favoring arbitration of the difficulties with Mexico. It will be remembered that this resolution passed without a dissenting vote, and any body of Protestant Churches that can secure such action by the United States Senate is certainly not "breaking up".

The following tribute to the strength of Protestantism as represented by this organization was paid by the Chicago Evening Post in a recent editorial:

"The Federal Council of Churches is an organization to which twenty-nine denominations send delegates. It is an organization designed to represent the community of interest which exists among differing creeds and differing polities; to voice the faith of the Churches on agreed essentials and fundamental principles.

"Of course, the accusation that it is an instrument of propaganda is wholly true. Propaganda is the business of the Christian religion. 'Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel,' was the marching order of its Founder. To charge the Federal Council with efficiency in propaganda is to pay it high tribute. The trouble is that some people are necessarily disturbed whenever the Gospel is preached with practical application to human problems. If these Christians would confine their exercises to praying, singing, and sermonizing in the abstract, nobody would object. It is when they begin to put in practice what they preach that they become dangerous.

"Of course, also, the accusation that the Federal Council is pacifistic has some foundation, if by pacifism be meant opposition to war and the spirit of war. 'Resort to war or threat of war should in no case be considered, except in actual self-defense against actual invasion,' is a sentence ascribed to a statement said to have issued from the Council. We assume this is its attitude. It would be difficult to show that, being a Christian body, it could take any other attitude.

"The Federal Council is endeavoring to educate the thought and spirit of the American people away from war, away from reliance upon force. That can not be done without running counter to those who regard such a movement as futile; those who believe that war is inevitable, and that the germ of violence is ineradicable from the blood of nations. But so to believe is to deny the faith which the Christian Churches of America profess."

VIGOROUS PROTEST AGAINST THE ADOPTION OF THE NEW PRAYER BOOK IN ENGLAND is being made by a large number of Churchmen. We read that on the night of March 30, one hundred clergymen in their vestments, marched through the West End of London, carrying banners, inscribed "We will not have a compromised Book". They belonged to the "Protestant Parson's Pilgrimage".

We have referred to the new Prayer Book in past issues, pointing out that its changes are not radical, except in so far as it provides for a reservation of the Sacrament to be used for the sick only. The fact that it is producing such lively opposition proves that the militant Protestant section of the Church of England is very numerous and very alert. The former Bishop of Manchester is quoted as saying, "We cannot accept a corrupt Prayer Book as a means for reconciling differences, for a corrupt Prayer Book is bound in the end to accentuate them".

A MORE CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY POLICY

Recent developments, both in Mexico and China call for serious consideration of a new missionary policy.

In Mexico the Government has taken steps against the Roman Catholic Church, largely because so great a proportion of the priests were of foreign birth, and representatives of foreign countries, that it was felt that their presence and their teachings were a menace to the Mexican Government.

In China the missionaries may drag us into war, not intentionally of course, but by reason of the fact that they may be killed for their zeal and faithfulness to what appears to them to be their duty, and it is a matter of international law and usage that a Government is supposed to protect its citizens. The newspaper headline, "U. S. To Demand Full Payment From the Chinese", is typical of what is being printed everywhere.

We should hesitate to criticise men and women for courage and faithfulness, but we cannot help feeling that those missionaries who persist in remaining at their posts, after they have been warned by their Government officials to leave, are both unwise and unchristian. Death at their posts of duty will be of no advantage to the work they love, but, on the other hand, may involve China and the United States in such international disputes as to set back the course of Christianity for many years.

Will it not be wise to have our Mission Boards adopt the policy for the future of only sending men and women to foreign nations, who are willing to become citizens of those countries. If they are going to represent Christ, should they not also trust Christ, and not look to a machine gun or a cruiser for protection?

Perhaps this would be too drastic, but certainly outgoing missionaries could go through some ceremony of expatriation that would relieve their native country, both of the responsibility and excuse for intervention in the event of casualities to them. It is bad enough to have the flag follow the Dollar without having it follow the Cross also.

We believe that the announcement of such a future policy by our Boards at this time, would do much to restore confidence in the missionary effort, both at home and abroad.

THE WEEK'S CONTRIBUTORS

THE RIGHT REVEREND ROBERT EDWARD LEE STRIDER, D. D., was born in Jefferson County, West Virginia. After graduating at the University of Virginia, he attended the Theological Seminary of Virginia, and finished there in 1911. His career in the ministry has been almost meteoric. He served Emmanuel Church, Keyser, and other mission churches, forming together a small parish, supported largely by the missionary effort of the Diocese, for four years, and was called from there to St. Matthew's Church, Wheeling, the largest parish in the Diocese. After eight years of service in this parish he was elected Bishop-Coadjutor of West Virginia, and was one of the youngest Bishops in the Church when consecrated. He is a brilliant speaker and a forceful and effective writer.

THE REVEREND EDMUND J. LEE was born in Shepherdstown, West Virginia. After going through the University of Virginia and the Theological Seminary at Alexandria, he went to China in 1902, where he has remained ever since, except for the usual furloughs. His article, giving us a close-up view of conditions as they were about a month ago, and written with an experience of a quarter of a century in the Orient, is of special interest at this time. It is interesting to note that the Pulpit Sermon and this article both come from clergymen born in Jefferson County, West Virginia, a rural county, which has sent at least five men into the Episcopal Ministry, all of whom are prominent in their Diocese.

MR. B. A. M. SCHAPIRO was born in Poland of Jewish parents and came to this country when he was nineteen. Being converted to Christianity he at once joined a Brooklyn Church and began Christian work among his own people. He has since connected himself with St. Thomas', New York, and is a licensed lay reader in that Diocese. He is director of the Hebrew Christian Publication Society, and the author of many tracts, which he publishes in English, Polish, Russian and Yiddish, being master of all these languages. His literary masterpiece, however, is the translation into English of Abraham Mapu's Hebrew classic, "The Shepherd Prince". His article expresses forcibly our responsibility to our Jewish brethren in this country.

THE PULPIT OF THE AMERICAN CHURCH

THE GLORY OF THE CROSS

By The Right Reverend R. E. L. Strider, D. D.

God forbid that I should glory save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ.—Galatians 6:14.

IT IS easy to allow oneself to become so absorbed in the incidental details of the Christian Religion that its main issues go neglected and forgotten. We play gingerly with the fringes of the robe without much attention to the living, pulsating heart which beats beneath it. We linger satisfied and careless in the outer courts while the drama of the ages is being enacted out of sight within the inner shrine. We pay tithes of mint and anise and cummin and omit the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and faith. We lay tremendous stress upon a word, a formula, or a ritual act, while forgetful of the truth of which these are but imperfect symbols. It is always easier to play with a truth than to come to grips with it. The Christian Religion is more frequently talked about and praised in its superficial aspects than thought through and acted upon in its essential principles. Every human life is guilty at times of revolving more or less remotely around the Christian Religion, like a planet around the sun, instead of leaping upon it like a meteor to be fused in its central heat.

But as one meditates before the Cross on Good Friday one finds it utterly out of the question to be satisfied with superficial thinking. Here we stand in the presence of Truth nailed by falsehood to a cross, yet undismayed. Here is hope radiant in the face of tragedy and death. Here is God dying in His dear Son for the sins of men. It is possible to penetrate no farther into the mysteries of existence. The Cross goes deeper than sin, deeper than pain, deeper than death. The Cross reveals the heart of God bared and bleeding. The Cross shames. It humbles, challenges, melts. It condemns, exalts. At its foot men bow down, flimsy trappings stripped from minds and souls, sinners all, lost but for that salvation offered by the Father through the sacrifice of the Eternal Son. Indeed, the most significant experience man can know is to bring himself squarely before Good Friday's Cross, and humbly, prayerfully seek to penetrate its essential meaning.

I.

The Cross reveals the worth of a human soul in the sight of God. God died for us in Jesus Christ because He loves us. Only love can explain what happened on Calvary. In spite of our disobedience and wickedness He somehow sees in us that which answers to His love. Our sins have not placed us beyond the pale of His dear outreaching. No sheep from the great, human fold can stray so far away that the Good Shepherd's love is unready to go forth to seek and save. I gaze upon the Cross. I try to measure in terms of my own thought its shame and pain. Down through the twenty centuries that intervene something of the awful tragedy of it comes to me. I cannot but ask, What induced the Father to send His Son to that, yes, that for me? What could have induced the Son to die like that for such as me And the only answer I can give my questions is that, somehow, incredible though it seem, He thought my brethren and me worth dying for. He believes my sins, though deadly, are no essential part of me. He knows that if I could but be separated from my sin the best, most normal, most divine part of me would remain and grow in the blessed sunshine of His redemption. He died for me because I, and all my human brothers and sisters, are divine. He looks upon me clothed in all my frailty, and catches the same glint of hope He caught in Mary Magdalene, Zacchaeus, the Sons of Thunder, and many other sinner met as He walked the earth clothed in the garments of His flesh.

We speak of man's faith in God: Moses', Hosea's, Paul's and Francis'. It is a noble thing. Yet even the sublimest human faith in God is weak and puny measured against God's boundless faith in man. God believes in us. He speaks to that potential good which He knows is in us all. He searches for possibility of amendment. He bases His Gospel of Salvation upon our essential kinship with Him, and upon the fact that sin is a foreign importation into human nature. He possesses so great faith in us that He gives His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in Him may not perish, but have everlasting life. Calvary and the Cross are deathless pledges of God's faith in men. And how men need the stimulus of that divine truth so readily forgotten! The most tremendous happening that could take place in the Church, or in the world, would be for us to come to believe in ourselves, in our fellows, and in God as the Cross teaches God believes in us.

II.

Again, the Cross stands for the eternal distinction between right and wrong. Men and women, especially young people, are deeply perplexed today over the changing character of our moral standards. It would seem to them that fashions in morality change as men and other fashions change. Acts considered right in ages gone are wrong today; while standards of conduct recognized now may be as utterly out of date as the ox cart to our descendants five thousand years hence. Our young people are asking whether the morality of their elders possesses more binding sanction than any set of merely human conventions; if not, then the younger generation, like the older, are perfectly competent to fix their own standards.

The situation is complicated by the fact that moral conduct does not "pay" like unmoral or even immoral conduct. Good people suffer and evil people prosper. All of which leads minds that are morally confused to ask how a righteous God can permit such a situation in a moral universe. Moreover, having grown doubtful of any universally valid distinction between right and wrong, it is perilously easy to slip into doubt whether there be a God at all, or if there be a God to attribute to Him complete indifference in all moral matters.

Just here the Cross of Jesus Christ enters the argument. That Cross stands for the eternal character of the distinction between right and wrong. It dissociates morality from all considerations of fortune or expediency, and makes it right in itself because the universe is a moral order and God a God of righteousness. Right and wrong, says the Cross, are not passing human fashions, but distinctions wrought from the beginning into the fabric of things. Men change, and men's opinions change, but right and wrong, good and evil, stand forever opposed. It is always better to do right than to do wrong. It is better to do right than wrong though one die by reason of his choice. It is the paradox of the Cross. Yet it is a paradox vindicated by the moral judgment of history and by the moral judgment of the noblest men.

You my brother! With whom would you exchange places if you were compelled to choose: with Jesus, bleeding to death nailed to a cross-armed tree, forsaken, despised, spat-upon; or with the skeptical Pilate safe within his perfumed palace, his only god the mortal man who temporarily wore the purple robe of imperial Rome! You would change places with Jesus, of course, because you know He was right and Pontius Pilate wrong.

You my sister! With whom would you exchange places if you had to: with the Blessed Mary, her heart pierced by the sword of grief, weeping at the foot of Calvary; or with the mother of Judas slinking through the back-alleys of Jerusalem, his pockets bulging with new-made silver! You would exchange places with the Blessed Mary for her Son was eternally right though He died, while the other's son was eternally wrong though he went scot free.

Do right no matter what happens to you, says the Cross to a morally bewildered age. And if you do not know what is right take Jesus Christ for your guide. To live as He lived is to be right. To depart from His way is to be wrong.

III.

And finally the Cross is the complete and sufficient answer to all the deep desires of the heart of man. Philosophy, literature, art, science, religion, each has its answer to the quest of the human heart, and each offers man its own particular truth as that which is able to fill the yawning chasm of his need. But each has failed to satisfy, though each has helped. The only key that satisfactorily fits the lock is the Cross of Jesus Christ. The heart finds there the answer to all its puzzles and the goal of all its quests.

Peace, or as the philosophers have called it, "happiness" is one of man's age-old, instinctive ends. In what does it consist? Does knowledge give it, or success, or money, or worldly honor? No, says the Cross of Christ, only one means can bring happiness: the opening of the personal life to God. Jesus possessed the peace which passeth understanding, which even Calvary could not disturb. There can be no doubt that He found it in His oneness with the Father. There was no other road for Him. We believe there is no other road for us. The way of happiness is the way of that Cross which leads men ever closer to the heart of the Heavenly Father.

Men, also, desire power. They have always done so. They seek power through position, through success, through wealth; but power so attained carries in itself the seeds of decay and dissolution. The way of the Cross is that which leads to the power that endures and is sufficient: power over self, pain, failure, disappointment, even death. Power won in any other way is weak. He who would be strong needs the Cross which links the weakness of men to the sufficiency of Almighty God.

And men desire permanence. In the midst of an ever-changing universe we seek an anchorage which cannot be moved. Everything changes: the hills, the streams, the stars, the firm-set earth, man and all his works. All we see and know bears marks of impermanence on its face.

> The cloud-capp'd towers, the gorgeous palaces,
> The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
> Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve,
> And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
> Leave not a wrack behind.

And now the Cross speaks of that which alone endures. The only permanence is God and the only reality which can survive the dissolution of the universe and the death of all things physical is personal character in which dwells the Living God. All else moves in endless flux. It is Jesus Christ who is the same yesterday, today and forever.

Thus the Cross, as each succeeding Good Friday comes and goes speaks its mighty message into the ears and hearts of men. We flock in multitudes to our Good Friday services because our modern hearts so sorely need it. Let us exalt that message. Let us live continually in the light of it. Let us make it completely ours. God forbid that we should glory save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ.

A VISIT TO THE CAPITAL OF NATIONALIST CHINA

By The Reverend Edmund J. Lee

I HAVE recently returned from a brief visit to Hankow and Wuchang. It was most interesting to see the capital of Nationalist China and breathe the atmosphere of revolution.

The trip to Hankow was to attend a meeting of the Board of Managers of the Kuling American School. This Board is responsible for a hundred American children, who were scheduled to assemble in a few days on a mountain close to Kiukiang, one of the centers of war and labor agitation. Our meeting was to decide whether the risk was justified.

Steamer travel on the Yangtse River is just now full of uncertainty. Many steamers are not running and all schedules have been dislocated. It was only after nearly two days' waiting at the river that I finally caught an up-river boat.

We reached Kiukiang some ten hours later and it immediately became apparent that the Kuling School would not reassemble this spring at Kuling. The British Concession was entirely in Chinese hands. The Nationalist flag was flying from the consulate and the Concession Foreigners were all on vessels anchored in the river. A friend, who came abroad from the American gunboat, told me that only three foreigners were left at Kuling, fifteen miles away. He further said that the last ones to come down the mountain had an extremely difficult time and were forced to pay outrageous prices, to coolies and soldiers to get out.

After an hour's delay we weighed anchor and continued our journey, reaching Hankow late the following morning. We did not dock, as is the usual custom, but anchored off the Japanese Concession, a mile down the river. From there we went in the company's launch to the British Concession, where our Mission offices are located.

It was certainly a much changed Hankow that met our eyes when we finally got ashore. Banks and business houses were closed. Khaki-clad Chinese soldiers filled the places of the Sikh policemen with their brilliant turbans. Crowds of Chinese wandered along the broad sidewalk of the river front, formerly reserved exclusively for foreign use.

I found the Board of Managers of the Kuling School already in session at Bishop Roots' office. After some deliberation we decided to reopen the School in Shanghai for the spring term in the hope that by autumn conditions will have stabilized enough to enable the School to return to Kuling.

At Bishop Roots' lunch table that noon a Chinese guest present told us of the widespread suffering caused in the city by the cessation of business and the doubling of wages forced on employers by the labor unions. Many native banks, he said, were on the verge of bankruptcy and some business men had taken refuge in suicide.

That evening I crossed the river to Wuchang with Dr. Sherman and spent the night with him at Central China University. On the streets we were plentifully be-foreign-deviled, but had no real trouble. Ricksha men offered to take us to the University for two dollars, where the rate was formerly twenty cents. Every house displayed a Nationalist flag and the walls were papered with thousands of posters, for the most part setting forth the iniquity of British imperialism.

At the University I attended that evening an assembly of the college students. It was interesting to see the front seats occupied by co-eds in attendance this term for the first time. The students had a meeting at the close of the assembly and the lady in charge of the girl students told us that this was the sixth student meeting her girls had attended that day. Earlier in the day the students had been obliged to attend a memorial meeting to commemorate a number of Russian communistic heroes. One of our Anking students at Boone told me that there were so many meetings and demonstrations that he feared they would not have much time this next term to study.

One may ask why the University authorities allow such frequent meetings. The answer is that it is because the students are encouraged to identify themselves with the Nationalist movement, that the University has been able to carry on, while almost all other Christian colleges in the area controlled by the Nationalist government have had to close. This has been due in a large measure to the wisdom of Dean Wei, the acting president, backed by Dr. Sherman and his other associates. The Nationalist government relies more upon propaganda than upon battles to further their cause and their policy is by meetings and demonstrations to keep the zeal and enthusiasm of their party at white heat.

The University and private families as well, are facing a serious difficulty from the activities of the organizers of workers' unions. Such a union was formed among the employees of foreigners, the servants being forced to join it. The union leads in Hankow then formulated demands which were forced through by threats of a strike coupled with violence. According to these terms, in addition to a large increase of wages, an extra month's wages at the China New Year is required and three months' wages in case a servant is dismissed or an institution closed. The extra month's wages involves an immediate additional outlay of $1,000 for the University, which the authorities are quite at a loss where to secure.

The next morning I attended the regular morning assembly of the University. This, on Mondays, is a memorial service to Dr. Sun Yat Sen. That day, being Saturday, the subject was a review of current events in China and the world.

Immediately after the assembly, morning prayers were conducted by one of the clergy of the University staff. This was an entirely voluntary service, yet only one of the students left before it began. Apparently, the making of religious services voluntary has not injured the cause of religion in the University. I was told of one student, who, when it was the rule for students to attend services made a point of never going. When, however, this term, chapel was made voluntary, he began attending regularly. When asked for an explanation, he said: "I have no objection to religious services. In fact, rather like them; but I will not go to them, if I am compelled to do so!"

Dr. Sherman returned with me that morning to Hankow. As we passed out of the city gate, he pointed out that work had been already begun at tearing down the city walls. It is hundreds of years old and it is to be hoped that sections of it will be preserved for its historic interest. The wall was responsible for the terrible suffering of the people of Wuchang in the recent siege, as they were cooped up inside and had no way of escape. They do not propose to be caught that way again.

We stopped for a few minutes at St. Andrew's Church in a suburb close to the river. The buildings have recently been completed and are very beautiful. They are a highly successful adaptation of Chinese architectural forms to church use by the mission architect, Mr. Bergamini. We were told that during the recent bombardment by the Southern batteries from the Hanyang hill across the river, a Southern general inquired what those buildings were on which their fire was being directed. When told, he said it would be a pity to destroy such beautiful buildings, and instructed his gunners to spare them. It was probably due to this that the buildings were not seriously injured, though some thirty bodies are said to have been removed from them when the bombardment was over.

After crossing the river Dr. Sherman and I with Bishop Roots and Mr. Stone, the principal of the Kuling School, called by appointment, at the office of Mr. Eugene Chen, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Nationalist Government. We waited for our interview in a room with a Russian gentleman, who was at the time unknown to us. I now feel quite sure, having seen his photograph, that he was no less a person than Borodin, the famous adviser of the Nationalist Government, whose advice is said to have had much to do with their phenomenal success.

Nothing could exceed the courtesy and cordiality of our reception by Minister Chen and his secretaries, and yet nothing could have been more business-like. We stated our business and received an immediate and favorable decision. Orders were given the secretaries and in a few minutes we were given the official permit we were seeking. It was a striking contrast to the dilatory methods of old Chinese officialdom.

Again that day at Bishop Roots' lunch table the political situation was discussed and the experienced men present agreed that the success or failure of the Nationalist enterprise depended on their being able to control the radical elements of their party. There was no doubt that most of the responsible leaders were in favor of a moderate and reasonable policy and desired friendly relations with Western powers. There is, however, the radical left wing, strongly imbued with communistic doctrines. This element has been useful to the Movement at certain stages and the moderates are using them. The question is will they be able to control them adequately when they desire to do so, or whether in giving them rein they are creating a Frankenstein, who will ultimately destroy them.

The most interesting features of my visit were conversations with prominent Church leaders on the subject of the problems confronting the Christian Church in China. The Chinese leaders are involved in serious difficulties. On the one hand they are bound to missionaries by ties of gratitude and personal affection, as well as by the fact that much the larger part of the support of the Church comes from the Missionary Boards in the West. On the other the pressure of public opinion in the National Movement is utterly insistent that there shall not be foreign domination of any kind in China. In the effort to meet this situation representative groups of the Chinese Church have put forth proposals to their Home Boards, of which the following may be regarded as fairly typical:

First. That the center of authority shall be transferred from the Board of Missions to the Chinese Church.

Second. That all clergy shall be recognized or appointed by the Chinese Church.

Third. That all mission property which the Board of Missions is willing to turn over to the Chinese Church shall be registered by the Board, with the Government, and then loaned to the Chinese Church, until such time as the Church can secure the status, under the Government, of a body licensed to hold property.

Fourth. The Board of Missions to continue to render such aid as they are willing to give in workers and money to the Chinese Church with the understanding that the consent of the Board must be secured in the expenditure of all funds granted by them.

This may seem on the face of it to be very revolutionary, but the last clause of the last article largely negatives the force of all that goes before. The fact that in our own Mission, at least three-fourths of the expenses of the Church are provided from America and as the consent of the Department of Missions must be secured in all matters financed by them, leaves the Church to a large extent where it was before. I pointed out to my friends of the Hankow clergy that a freedom which left the Church financially dependent on the Church abroad was a fictitious freedom.

We should, however, find in the present movement, with its demand for an indigenous Church and self-determination, a powerful leverage for the development of self-support, and this is to my mind one of the most important gains to be hoped from the revolution.

On the way down river the next day there were some eighteen young Nationalist officers with me in the saloon of the Japanese steamer. I was anxious to get them to talk freely with me and with that idea in mind brought out a copy of Dr. Sun Yat Sen's "Three Principles", a book which is almost the Bible of the Nationalist Movement, and is a required part of the curriculum of all schools in the area controlled by them. I started reading this book with these young men around me and it was no surprise to me when the man next to me asked me whether I agreed with Dr. Sun's theories, my reply was that I had been only reading the book five minutes and it was a little early to say. This was not quite satisfatcory and it was evident that the young patriot expected me to take Dr. Sun, as we sometimes did our trading as small boys "sight unseen". The ice was broken, however. Others of the group gathered around us, and for an hour and a half we discussed religion, unequal treaties and Western imperialism. The discussion was always friendly and at Kiukiang we parted with expressions of good will and mutual esteem.

There is no doubt of the earnestness of these young men, who come from all parts of China. The accounts of recent campaigns are full of stories of their heroism and self-sacrifice. There are, of course, men in the Movement who are in it for what they can get out of it; but taking it as a whole there is probably as high an order of patriotism among them as in our own American Revolution.

Since my return to Anking, two of our Anking clergy have paid a visit to Hankow. They told us yesterday on their return that they had attended there a dinner at which prominent Nationalist leaders were present. The principal address was made by the Minister of Justice of the Nationalist Government. He is himself a Christian and stated in his speech that while there were anti-religious elements in the party the government had absolutely no anti-religious bias. He further stated that his own conviction was that the revolution would be a failure without the ethical standards and the spiritual dynamic of Christianity.

Here in Anking we have been entirely peaceful all through the autumn and winter. People have been more than usually friendly and our work has made encouraging progress. We have been nominally on the Northern side though the loyalty of our military governer to the North has been very doubtful. It now seems certain that he has thrown in his lot with the Nationalists and we expect in a few days to have them take over the city and inaugurate their system. We may then have quite a different story to tell, but taking the situation as a whole, I find much to justify a persistent optimism.

PRAYER FOR CHINA.

Bishop Slattery has set forth the following prayer for use in the Parishes of the Diocese of Massachusetts:

Almighty God, whose kingdom is everlasting and infinite; Look with compassion, we beseech Thee, upon the people of China in this hour of their awakening; give to them leaders who shall guide them into freedom and peace; protect, for their sake, the messengers of thy love; grant to the nations patience and wisdom, that they may help and not hinder the unity of a great people; and bring to the whole world the blessing of fellowship with thy Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

OUR DUTY TO OUR JEWISH NEIGHBORS

By B. A. M. Schapiro

THE Lord has brought over three million of these wanderers to our very doors. He has not brought them here to despoil you, for the Jew has been a blessing commercially and artistically, and yet some regard the Jews as interlopers, and wish to see them suppressed.

Whether welcome or not, the Jew is here, and here to stay. He votes in the same booth and drops his ballot in the same box as yourselves. His children and yours attend the same schools. He cannot be interned or isolated. The Church (in New York and other large cities) is surrounded by many evidences of his presence. Yet, it would appear that she desired to forget the fact. History reminds her of it, the Old Testament repeats it, the Apostles re-echo it, and still the Christian Church shrinks away. It is true that we pray for the Jews on Good Friday, but the collection goes to keep up an Armenian Monastery.

It is also true that the individual Christian is aware of the existence of that historic race. But he is aware of it in only one way, and that is, to be on his guard against the Jew in Wall Street, on the Exchange, and in the financial world. He finds him a keen competitor in the professional world, in the studio, in literature, but he seems to forget that the Jew, whom he encounters in his daily avocations, has a soul to save; he forgets that there is not salvation outside the name of Christ; alas! above all else, he forgets his duty, a duty imposed upon him by the love of God, by the laws of gratitude, and by Christian charity, to carry that salvation, in its most attractive form, to the Jewish heart.

The proximity of the Jew not only gives to the Church an opportunity which she should be quick to use, but also places her under the strongest obligations. This obligation is to the Jew, to the country and to God. Unevangelized, the Jew is a menace. A visit to the courts of New York, or of any other city with a large Jewish population, will prove that we are not putting up a man of straw in order to knock him down. Crime is on the increase among my people, but we must here qualify this statement. These cadets, white slave traders, gunmen, and these perjurers are not such because they are Jews, but because they have no religion, because they have cut themselves off from their ancestral religious moorings. The free American air which they breathe is not conducive to the observance of Judaism. In Russia, Poland, Austria, and Roumania, the religion of Moses will bloom, flourish and develop sterling manhood, and will keep pure the sanctity of the home and give respect for one's oath, even if it be to "one's own hurt"—Evangelized and converted to Christ the Jew will be a great blessing.

Embittered by contempt, and crushed for centuries by oppression in the countries from which they have come, they look upon any form of law as tyranny, and their only conception of liberty is license. The spirit of extreme socialism and anarchism prevails among many of them to an alarming extent. Every patriot, every philanthropist, as well as every Christian, must see the importance and the necessity of bringing these people into sympathy with the best American thought and life; of helping them to forget their past; of encouraging in them a spirit of respect for law, even if it is irksome, and the responsibilities of good citizenship.

The attitude of the Christian Church—of our Church especially—toward the Jew has been too long one of neglect. She has remembered too persistently the fact that they are Jews, and has forgotten that they are sinners for whom Christ died. She under-estimates their spiritual needs and has yielded all too readily to the notion that they are inaccessible by the Gospel.

May I mention something that is uppermost just now in our minds? Leon Trotsky, former War Minister of Russia, whom the speaker met several times while he was in this country, often told us that the Christianity of New York City reminded him more of "exclusive clubs than of anything else". The exclusiveness of Churchmen are felt keenly and noticed by the foreigners, especially by those of culture. If the Church had shown more interest in the salvation of the Jewish Russian Immigrant, we Americans and the Allies might have had a different story to tell, and a less difficult problem to face. What consideration has the Church shown for the Jew? We do not refer to commercial or political preferment; for temporal prosperity and corporal well-being are not all of life. What have we for the newly-arrived Jew? We are showing him the seamy side of our noble country. If Mr. Trotsky had been attracted to the Church, Russia would have had another story to tell—he could no more have been brought by Prussian gold than could Spinoza, or any other Jewish idealist. Disraeli, who made Queen Victoria Empress of India, is a type of the prophetic fulfilments, which are in store for the Jewish people.

If the Church had been true to her high calling and to the Jew, such social reformers as La Salle and Marx would have been won to Christ, all race hatred and oppression would long ago have been swept like chaff before the wind. And if the Church will now be really interested in bringing this about through spreading the Gospel of Christ her Lord and Redeemer, she will do all in her power to bring this blessed Gospel of light and liberty to the Jews. It is the best investment that the Church can make. Surely she has gained much by the conversion of so many eminent sons of Israel. For the names of such see my tract, "Gethsemane in Our Lives".

The Jew has needs which should appeal to every Christian heart. Besides his cares, burdens and sorrows, he has intellectual and spiritual difficulties. He has been trained in the synagogue; he knows something of the morality of the "Torah and the Talmud". While the books of the latter contain much rubbish, they hold precious pearls. Yet the Jew is stunted in his spiritual growth, and dwarfed in his moral development. The rapid progress of the modern Jew does not have its source in the Ghetto, in the Synagogue, nor in the Talmud-Torah schools, but in Christian institutions. This, the Rabbis fail to recognize.

Where shall they gain spiritual knowledge? They have the synagogues, the law and the prophets. Yes, they have the law and the prophets, but not the means of making them well known among the younger generations. The reason for keeping young Jews in ignorance of the prophets is obvious. More than one Israelite has accepted Jesus the Messiah after a careful study of these writings. On carefully comparing the prophecies of the old with the New Testament he cannot but see that Jesus is He "of whom Moses and the prophets did write", the Messiah of Israel, and that He whom their fathers have rejected, is their only Redeemer.

The prevailing opinion that Jews are not accessible by the Gospel is not correct. Many of them are hungry for the truth as it is in Jesus Christ. Will you Christian men and Christian women help to propagate among them the Gospel of Jesus Christ? Will you tell your Jewish neighbor that not a Chinese, nor a Hindoo, but a Jewish Messiah, is your Saviour and Redeemer?

If you feel incompetent to do this, will you not give him a tract such as is issued by the Hebrew-Christian Publication Society? Do not forget our Lord's last words: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." Many say, "Our Church is not interested in the Jews". Your Messiah was interested in them enough to die for them, and His Church should share His love for them. Perhaps you are interested in foreign missions. If the four million five hundred thousand Jews in America were in some island of the Pacific, would not our Church consecrate Bishops, and build schools for their benefit? Does that justify you in neglecting your Hebrew neighbor? Through Moses the great Jewish Law-giver, you have received the Ten Commandments, the foundation of all law, moral and civil. You chant Jewish Psalms, you quote the proverbs of Solomon, you learn patience and submission to God's will from the patriarchs, you grasp faith's deepest meaning from Abraham, the father of our people. Your souls are borne heavenward by the writings of Jewish prophets.

When you turn from the Old Testament to the New, you find that the Life of Christ as recorded in the Gospels was written by Jews. The Epistles also were written by them. You get your theology from a Jew, St. Paul; and you catch your clearest glimpses of the world to come through the sublime apocalyptic vision of a Jew.

Gentile Christians ought to realize the enormous religious debt they owe to the Jews. They are indebted to them for the Bible. The holy men of old who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, were Jews.

The first Christian Church was composed of Israelites. They obeyed Christ's command—"Go ye and disciple all nations". They planted the precious Gospel seed in Europe. They were willing to be crucified with their head downward for your pagan ancestry, and you reap the benefit. Yet you neglect to share it with the Jews within your reach. Is this your gratitude?

It is time also that our people should awaken to a knowledge of their glorious future and destiny; time that the true, unadulterated Gospel be proclaimed in the by-ways, without hindrance or fear. We have not the slightest doubt that true, consecrated Christians will honestly try to comply with Christ's last command. This will be a test of your loyalty. What part will you have in this grand work?

Upon whom does the duty of evangelizing the Jews devolve? Clergy and laity should cooperate. Preachers, superintendents of Sunday Schools must instruct the people as to the importance of this work. (Literature on the subject can be obtained from the Hebrew-Christian Publication Society, 405 Bible House, New York City.)

The subject of Jewish evangelization is often misunderstood by well-intended people. These people are very ready to treat the Jew on the popular ground of "Hail fellow, well met", and emphasize from press and pulpit to the Jew that religion does not enter into the Jew question. A so-called latitudinarian will never accomplish the important task of bringing Israel into the fold of the Good Shepherd. Theologians that stand ready to sacrifice principle for popularity, that speak lightly and vaguely; as if there were no difference between one and the other —between Judaism and pure Christianity, as if it were at the uttermost merely a matter of taste, or the result of environment—such a view of the Jewish question will not restore Israel to its rightful place as a nation endowed with a mission and message not only for themselves, but also for the world at large. This work requires men and women of earnest, zealous consecrated Christian lives, who keep in close communion with the Lord, and who realize that the words of the Master—"He that believeth not shall be damned", are true today, as they were when uttered. The laity are not excused from participating in this enterprise. If they cannot do the work personally, they can contribute to the support. Some may be unable to help in this way, but may serve in the highest of all ministries, which is intercessory prayer.

Now a few practical suggestions: Special appeal to the Jews is necessary. They are a peculiar people, with peculiar lineage, customs, manners and habits of thought, social temper and religious belief. They refuse to mingle with Gentiles. Their clannish proclivities are intensified with hereditary prejudices, by traditional faith, and by the centuries of neglect and persecution. They cannot be persuaded to attend promiscuous religious meetings. Indeed they would not understand Christian terms and expressions.

The Hebrew-Christian Publication Society supplies tracts to missions which need literature for free distribution among intelligent people. Appeals are coming for tracts from all over the world. Will you help?

CHRISTIANITY AND THE COMMUNITY

"The Kingdom Come, Thy Will be done on earth"

Edited by the Reverend R. Cary Montague

VACATIONS.

Vacation time is coming. Recreation is essential for the clergy, as well as for the laity. In fact, it is good for the congregations that the preacher should have the opportunity to rest and re-load his mind with new material.

There is no way that this can be done so effectively, as a trip to the Holy Land. The time spent on the boat affords a rest that is of the most effective kind, because it is easiest to do nothing, when there is nothing to do. Seeing the sacred places, coming in contact with ancient customs and watching Oriental peoples in their native costumes, that can not be estimated until experienced. To stand, for instance, on Mar's Hill and read the seventeenth chapter of Acts, gives one a thrill that will last a life time.

Of course, the natural reaction to these suggestions will be that the average minister might as well think of a trip to the moon as to the Holy Land, but travel is much cheaper than it used to be, and all sorts of tours are now offered at prices that bring them much nearer within the reach of the clergy than they were in years gone by. We can commend, from actual experience, the Wicker Tours, and many readers of this page may perhaps remember our accounts of interesting and sacred places written while traveling under their auspices. No parish can make any better investment for themselves and their rector, than to help him to get the advantages of such a trip.

COMMENTS ON CHILD TRAINING.

By Mary Evelyn Brydon, M. D.

Article XV.—The Ten Commandments.

(Continued.)

The Fifth Commandment—OBEDIENCE (continued).

Discipline—Punishment.

"I whipped her."

"Why?"

"She disobeyed me."

"She is only three. Did she realize what she did, do you think?"

"Yes, I told her not to step off the asphalt walk, and when I came down ready for our afternoon drive, there was Genevieve sitting in a puddle of water, shooting water from the hose all over her lovely new embroidered linen dress! Her dress was a wreck! So I took her upstairs and spanked her."

"You spanked her because you were mad at her for ruining her dress, not because she disobeyed you?"

"How can you say that? I told her not to move."

"If she had moved on the grass and had not ruined her dress, would you have spanked her?"

"Well—er, probably not."

"It seems to me the real culprit is yourself. You have several counts against you:

1. She had played with the hose all morning, dressed in her bathing suit. You failed to explain the difference between bathing suit and clean dress.
2. You neglected to put the hose away after she played with it. She is too young to put it away herself.
3. You put her in the way of temptation.
4. You punished her because you were provoked
   (a) At the postponement of your pleasure.
   (b) At the extra trouble to you in dressing her again.
   (c) At the damage to the new dress.

You were guilty of temper, selfishness, false pride, procrastination, negligence and failure to think through your problem. Somebody had to be punished for all these delinquencies, so you punished the child."

A terrible indictment, isn't it?

Here is another one:

"Do you whip the boys in your school?" I asked the head of a school for incorrigible boys, a kindly, gentle-eyed minister.

"When I came in as the new head," he replied reminiscently, "I made a vow to myself that I would win my boys by love alone, so I devised all sorts of measures to maintain discipline short of corporal punishment. All went well for a while. The boys seemed on their good behavior. But gradually there came slips, and things began to get pretty bad. I traced the disturbances to their source and found that a big boy, who had come from a notoriously bad section of a large city, was apparently responsible. I tried every means short of expulsion to bring him to reason, and I knew that expulsion would mean ruin for me as a disciplinarian. It would mean in the eyes of the boys that I couldn't handle them. One day he flouted me to my face. "Try to make me," he said, and added, "you little snipe," and I knew in a flash what the trouble was. He thought that I was not strong enough to thrash him, and his ideal of a man was courage and strength. He showed that he had the greatest contempt for what seemed to him my weakness and cowardice. In other words, he thought that he was "the bigger man".

"I prayed about it, waited for twenty-four hours and then having started all the boys, except him, out for a hike, I sent for him."

"Bill," I said, "I have tried in every way I could think of to help you to be a good boy. There is only one thing else to try and I am going to do that right now. I am going to thrash you so thoroughly that you won't want to sit down for a week, and when I get through YOU ARE GOING TO BE A GOOD BOY."

"Oh, you are?" and Bill raised his eyebrows, stilled a slight quiver of the lips, stuck his hands in his pockets, and assumed a defiant attitude.

"Take off your shirt." He obeyed, and I thrashed him. That was the first time I had ever whipped a boy, and I felt like a brute; but it was the best job I ever did in my life. There was good in the lad. He neither cried nor whined, though the welts stood out on his body. He stuck his hands in his pocket, stood up and said, 'I didn't think you could do it, sir'. I held out my hand and he grasped it. I had won him and also won a friend. Today he is a rising young lawyer in his native city. I rarely have to whip them now, but when I do I always save the boy and win a friend."

I agree with the Headmaster that whipping should be the last resort; but when the last resort comes do an honest job of it. Better to whip a child when he is young than to let him grow up to have to enter a reform school or the penitentiary.

All children of strong character need at times to be disciplined, but not all children need to be whipped. Be sure in your own mind that the offense calls for punishment. If possible, the punishment fit the crime for instance, in my opinion to be deprived of the drive in Genevieve's case was a more logical punishment than spanking. Get clear in your mind the difference between a mistake or an error of judgment, and a sin. This isn't easy to do by any means, but try to do it anyway. Genevieve showed a lack of judgment in getting her dress wet at the wrong time. Bill showed deliberate disrespect for authority. The one called for carefully-placed discipline; the other was only controlled by corporal punishment. Discipline and punishment must definitely teach self-control, obedience, respect. If these lessons are not learned the punishment has failed.

If you do not discipline your child, life will do it all the more harshly, and how pathetic if it finds him soft and unable to endure its penalties! The world of men has no place for a slacker, a quitter, a coward, or a weakling. They all go under sooner or later. Therefore prove your child while he is young and watch him grow up strong brave, a bearer of burdens and a self-respecting citizen.

A few helps by the way to guide you in the matter of discipline:

1. Be sure the child deserves the punishment; try to find out why he did wrong. Maybe you failed to make things clear to him.

2. Never punish a child without explaining why.

3. Wait a reasonable time after the misdemeanor before punishing.

4. Never punish when "mad".

5. Never punish in the presence of other people.

6. Never threaten. If you promise to punish, do so if it becomes necessary.

7. Never call him a "bad" child. This does no good and may cause him to take pride in being bad.

8. After the punishment never refer to it again. This is important.

9. As soon as possible after the punishment reinstate the child in your affections. Never let him go to bed unforgiven.

10. Never under any circumstances use fear as a method of discipline—"I'll call a policeman" or, "the doctor will get you" or "the bogyman" or a "lion", are all wicked threats to use. You may cause him to go through life hating the guardians of our lives and property and health, and, moreover, your child may develop a phobia which may cause him trouble later on.

11. Whenever you punish wrongly, go quickly to him and apologize. Your child will respect you tenfold for thus acknowledging a wrong-doing on your part.

12. Try going to Jesus with your child about all your joint problems. Prevention is better than punishment. Plan in your daily schedule a time to discuss the day's happenings with the child. Little confidences between mother and child are a tremendous help towards understanding the child's point of view. "What was in your mind," you might ask, "when you stepped off the walk?" Genevieve at three can understand simple English, therefore get in the habit of talking over with her such perplexities and problems as well as pleasure that come up in the daily life. Such procedure will be productive of untold benefit to you both and doubtless punishment will be found to be jointly agreed upon as necessary, or else found by you to be unnecessary.

MEMORIAL COMMEMORATES WORK OF TEXAS CHURCHMEN IN EARLY DAYS

RECENTLY there has been installed in the end of Grace Church, Cuero, Texas, a triple memorial window in loving memory of the first Bishop of West Texas, the Rt. Rev. R. W. B. Elliott, First Senior Warden, Judge H. Clay Pleasants and first Junior Warden, Mr. C. C. Howerton.

The central window, which symbolizes the Bishop, depicts a large figure of the Good Shepherd, those on either side, represent a cross topped with a crown; each has the name inscribed and "In Loving Memory by Grace Church Sunday School".

(The following are excerpts from the Rev. F. R. Godolphin's sermon):

"The Rt. Rev. Robert Barnwell Elliott was born in Beaufort, South Carolina, in 1840. . . . He fought in the War Between the States, and at its close, he studied for the ministry, was made deacon in 1868 by Bishop Quintard and ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Beckwith in 1871. He served in New York for a short time, but returned to Georgia to become rector of St. Philip's Church, Atlanta, where, in 1874, he was consecrated Bishop of West Texas by the Bishops of Texas, Alabama, Tennessee, Georgia and South Carolina. At the time of his election, he was suffering from the wound in his head received during the War Between the States. Against the warning of his physician and advice of friends, he deliberately accepted the most uninviting field in the whole country where nothing but the hardest work could be expected, where his life was often in danger and where he knew that his labors would most probably be fruitful in no apparent result during his life time. He came to a wilderness with scarcely a consecrated church in his whole jurisdiction. His first service was held in Luling, Texas, in a passenger car (in the fall of 1874), and there to the accompaniment of pistol shots from "cowboys" shooting up the town, he reasoned of "righteousness, temperance and judgment to come". Only those who remember the nature of the country he traveled and the various sorts and conditions of people with whom he had to deal, can have the faintest idea of his experiences in both bodily and mental strain. 'He served as Bishop of West Texas for thirteen years and laid down the burden of life on August 26, 1887—His life of toil was not in vain, his name has become a household blessing, his memory a benediction and all who came under the sweet influence of his fearless Christian course, remember with undying affection and gratitude him, who was verily a Prince in God's Israel.'

Judge H. Clay Pleasants was a man of sterling worth, deeply religious and firm to a marked degree, 'always exhibiting a kindly tolerance for the offender, patience with the foibles of the aged, respect for the opinion and beliefs of his fellow creatures, an all-embracing charity for the world and an abiding belief in a Supreme Being ruling over and guiding our destinies'. (He was born in Goochland County, Virginia, in 1836), 'but it took the soil, atmosphere and the spirit of Texas to bring him to his full fruition. He possessed a tactful, philosophic way about him, that brought things to pass." A splendid type of manhood, he belonged to that stalwart generation of cultured Southern gentlemen, where character counted above dollars. He died in Galveston in the year, 1907.

(Quoting from the History of the Church in West Texas, written by Bishop R. W. B. Elliott.) About the year 1886:

"At Cuero I found upon my first visitation (January, 1875), the frame of the church that had been erected at Lavaca. . . . Bishop Gregg upon the application of the wardens and vestrymen, gave consent to the transfer of this building to Cuero. There was no missionary in charge, but a faithful layman, Mr. C. C. Howerton, maintained a Sunday School, the only one in the place. In the beginning of 1875 Cuero was a town given up to the feud between two factions. In the fighting more than thirty persons were slain and traveling after night fall was dangerous. . . . It was in such a stormy period that the Christian brother, but now mentioned, gathered Sunday after Sunday the children of the town and amid scenes of bloodshed and the recital of crime opened unto them the Scriptures and spake unto them of Christ. It was a noble consistent and lovely witness in those dark days." (He was born in Halifax County, Virginia, April 5, 1832, and died in Cuero, Texas, February 6, 1907.) "About the beginning of 1876 Judge H. Clay Pleasants was elected Judge of the District Court and at the imminent peril of his life succeeded in bringing the ring leaders of the disorder to justice. . . . It is with pardonable pride that I add that Judge Pleasants who rid the country of the assassins who terrorized it, is at this time the Senior Warden, and Mr. C. C. Howerton, the Sunday-School Superintendent during the days of bloodshed, where he taught the children and ably assisted in controlling the lawless, is the Junior Warden of Grace Church."

This triple memorial window was installed on March 22, 1927, contributed by Grace Sunday School and a friend.

Mrs. Lelia Seeligson.

AN INTERESTING CORRESPONDENCE

281 Fourth Avenue, New York.

Office of the Presiding Bishop
28 March, 1927

"Sent to the Rev. Dr. Clattenburg for Publication:

I consider the following statements of the Rector and Rector Emeritus of St. John's Church, Cynwyd, Pennsylvania, the most important information that has been published in connection with the origin of our Sunday-School Lenten Offering, and feel that it will add to the success of the Jubilee Offering in a very marked degree.

Personally, I am glad to get the information contained therein, and officially, sincerely hope that it will be read by every member of the Church, old and young, and believe that it will contribute very materially to the interest in and augmentation of our great Jubilee Offering.

JOHN G. MURRAY,
Presiding Bishop."

Cynwyd, Penn., March 25, 1927.

"Rev. A. Edwin Clattenburg, D. D.,
St. John's Rectory,
Cynwyd, Penn.

My Dear Rector:

I have been particularly interested in the various articles which have appeared in the religious press, bearing upon the coming Golden Jubilee of the Lenten Offering.

It was my privilege to be associated with Mr. John Marston, the originator of this remarkable movement, for nearly fifteen years, and to hear from his own lips, not only the story of its beginning, but also of his rejoicing at its ever-increasing bounty to the missionary funds of the Church, and to learn from him what he thought was the offering's greatest value.

Mr. Marston was a man of vision and courage and faith. His vision saw great possibilities in his venture of faith, and his courage, born of faith, led to the inception of the Lenten Offering. St. John's Church was scarcely able to meet its own financial needs when his proposal to give the proceeds of Lenten self-denial to missions seemed to many a visionary, sentimental project, with but little promise of value to the work of the Church at large.

Its first year was confined to the Sunday School, of which he was superintendent, and the unexpected and surprising result of $200 for general missions led to consultation with other zealous advocates of missions, with the result that the following year found many schools adopting the promising plan. Mr. Marston's story of his conference with Mr. George C. Thomas is an interesting one. These two men were in the habit of taking lunch together at a modest restaurant near their places of business. On this particular occasion of conference the lunch consisted of a fifteen-cent bowl of oyster soup for each. And out of this conference, over this modest meal, came the extension of the plan of the Lenten Offering until now it has covered the territory ministered to by our Church.

Mr. Marston was a man of vision and he looked confidently forward to what we are privileged to see, an army of half a million Sunday-school teachers and scholars learning the value of self-denial, the joy of giving to the needs of others, the power of cooperation, and, above all, a practical interest in the extension of the Kingdom of God. And these lessons of Christian discipleship have been learned by untold numbers, who, during the fifty years of this united effort, have passed to their reward.

The child of fifty years ago who put his savings, from his acts of self-denial, into the little mite-box is the parent of today, and his children are gladly following his example and teaching.

Our own Sunday School, which fifty years ago started this great movement with an offering of $200, will probably, in this Jubilee Year, give ten times that original amount. Perhaps it is safe to assume that the increased offering for general missionary work, not directly associated with the Lenten Offering owes its stimulus largely to the teaching of the children of the past fifty years by this concerted effort.

All of this goes to prove that Mr. Marston's estimate of the value of this movement was correct when he placed its educational importance above the gathering of these special funds for the work of the Church. The Church is today reaping bounteous harvests from the fifty annual seed times of the Lenten Offering. "It was an eventful day in the history of the Church in the United States when the movement of Sunday-School offerings for missions was begun by a layman of this parish," said Bishop Whitaker, at the laying of the corner stone of the new St. John's Church. And the Bishop went on to tell how the movement was soon vibrating through the Church all over the country. 'Well may we have faith in God,' said the good Bishop, as he spoke of the wonderful results of twenty odd years of this Offering, reaching, as it had at that time, the grand total of about one million dollars.

'Well may we have faith in God,' to repeat the words of saintly Bishop Whitaker, as we now in this Jubilee Year note the increase of the Offering from year to year and learn that more than six million dollars have been put into the treasury of God by this means! And it has all been for the extension of God's Kingdom.

Little beginnings, with faith in God, have led to the great results we see in this year of grace.

You, my dear Rector, are privileged to see in this Parish of this venture of faith, the fulfilment of the promises of Holy Writ. Bread cast upon the waters returns after many days. St. John's Parish, at the time of the inception of the Lenten Offering, had a property valued at less than $8,000. Today, fifty years later, it rejoices in a noble group of buildings upon which a recent appraisal placed a replacement value of $340,000. This represents a long pull on the part of a few people, for today you cannot say that you have a large Parish, or a wealthy congregation. Verily we reverently say, 'What hath God wrought'? Praying for God's further blessing upon the Parish and upon you in your every endeavor, and wishing success in every good work, I am,

Fraternally yours,
HENRY A. F. HOYT,
Rector Emeritus of St. John's."

As Rector of St. John's Church, falling heir to such a great heritage, I feel bound to give all the honor due to those who in the past have done their best to make this Parish strong in the Kingdom of God. Mr. John Marston not only originated the Lenten Offering, but he insisted from the first that it be used only for the extension of God's Kingdom. He also did his full share in building up the fabric that we now have here, contributing the Tower and Sanctuary, which for years formed the "new Church". Dr. Hoyt's vision, patience, and courage, ought to be mentioned also when one is speaking of this present Parish. My debt to him is increasing as the days go by. I trust that all the saints who have labored here, who labor today, and those to come, will remember and think of one another, the true communion of Saints, and in that remembrance and thinking have vision and courage and faith to go on from strength to strength.

Faithfully yours,
A. E. CLATTENBERG.

Church Intelligence

Gift To Washington Memorial Chapel, Valley Forge.

A bust of Martha Washington was unveiled Wednesday afternoon, March 30, in Washington Memorial Chapel, Valley Forge, Pa., as the gift of students, alumnae and faculty members of the National Cathedral School, Mount Saint Alban, D. C., who come from Pennsylvania. It was sculptured by Mrs. L. MacD. Sleeth, head of the Department of Art and History of Art in the School and is a duplicate of the bust which now stands in Memorial Continental Hall in Washington. Mrs. Sleeth won the competition held among sculptors for this honor.

The suggestion that the bust be presented to Washington Memorial Chapel was made following the recent visit to the school of the Rev. Dr. W. H. Burk, who has been in charge of the building and furnishing of the chapel since it was first conceived. He was impressed with the replica of the bust which stands in the study hall of the National Cathedral School Building, and he entered heartily into the plan for its being made available to the thousands of patriotic pilgrims who visit Valley Forge annually.

The pilgrimage of the Cathedral School group included fifty under the leadership of Miss Jessie C. McDonald, Principal of the School, and Mrs. Sleeth. The program was arranged by Miss Mary Dixon Palmer, daughter of former Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer, and president of the Pennsylvania Club among the undergraduates.

Mrs. Sleeth is a pupil of James McNeill Whistler and a member of Mark Hopkins Institute of Art in San Francisco.

Latest Cables From China.

Cables received from Shanghai, April 2, give the following information:

The following members of the Hankow Mission have arrived in Shanghai all well—the Rev. A. M. Sherman and family, Mr. R. A. Kemp and family, Mr. E. P. Miller and family, Miss Henrietta Gardiner.

All members of Anking staff are en route to Shanghai. (We assume that this statement does not apply to Dr. Harry B. Taylor, as the New York Times press cable of April 1, stated that the only American missionary refusing to leave Anking was Dr. Harry B. Taylor, of St. James' Hospital.)

Mr. and Mrs. Philip B. Sullivan sail from Shanghai April 9 on the Steamer President Pierce, due in Seattle April 25.

The following sailed April 3 on Empress of Canada, due in Vancouver April 17—Miss Alice M. Clark, Miss C. A. Couch, Miss J. C. Wilson.

The following property has been seized by soldiers—St. Paul's Church, Kiangwan (near Shanghai), Mahan School, Yangchow.

The following property has been seized by students—Trinity Church, Yangchow.

John W. Wood.

The visit of Dr. John W. Wood and Bishop H. St. George Tucker to China is postponed at least until June.

Dr. Wood and Bishop Tucker were asked to serve on the commission appointed by the Department of Missions at the request of Bishops Graves, Roots and Huntington, to confer with them regarding the problems facing the Church in China.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

The Church Service League.

Miss Frances H. Withers, a Secretary of the Department of Religious Education of the National Council, in charge of the service program of the Church, was the speaker at a meeting on Friday, April 1, at Diocesan House, called by Miss Abbott, Diocesan Director of the Church School Service League of Washington. All Church School leaders and workers, clergy, superintendents and other Sunday-School officers, were invited to this meeting. Miss Withers explained the plans of the department of Religious Education in connection with the service program.

The principal activities of the service program in its nation-wide aspect are the Christmas boxes, the children's Lenten offering, the birthday thank offering. Christmas boxes are sent to all the mission stations of the Episcopal Church and the details are so arranged that each of the eight provinces of the Church in the United States sends to a different field each year.

There was also a discussion of ways and means of bringing the work of the service program to the attention of the Church people during the meeting in Washington of the General Convention in 1928. Among suggestions offered were a mass meeting for the presentation of the Birthday Thank Offering, an exhibit and study classes for leaders.

Rear-Admiral Cary T. Grayson has been appointed General Chairman of the General Convention of the Church to be held in Washington in October, 1928, according to announcement made by Bishop Freeman at a meeting of Convention Committeemen held recently at Diocesan House. Admiral Grayson will have as aides, Mr. Hugh Nelson as Secretary, and Mr. H. L. Rust as Treasurer, and chairmen of sub-committees are as follows: Entertainments and pageants, Dr. Geo. W. Atkinson; luncheons, Dr. L. W. Glazebrook; registration, the Rev. George F. Dudley; hotels and hospitality, H. K. Boss; arrangements, the Rev. Z. B. Phillips; motor corps, Gen. George Barnett; ministerial supply, the Rev. Robert Johnston; services, the Rev. C. T. Warner; music, the Rev. Z. B. Phillips; transportation, M. O. Chance; publicity, Newbold Noyes.

The Executive Council of the Church in the Diocese of Washington is scheduled to meet in Diocesan House on Friday, April 8. This will be the last meeting of the Council, before the opening of the Diocesan Convention to be held in Ascension Church in May.

The Executive Council is charged with the preparation of estimates for all phases of Church work in the Diocese which are maintained by Convention assessments. It must prepare a budget to be submitted to the Convention for approval. It is also expected to make an annual report to the Convention, describing its work during the year and recommending measures to be adopted by the Convention for future operation.

Under the canon adopted by the Convention of 1926, twelve members of the Executive Council are elected by the Convention each year. Certain other members are chosen annually in other ways, making a total membership of twenty-five.

"The Man of Nazareth," a sacred cantata by John H. Rogers, will be rendered by the choir of Christ Church, Georgetown, on the evening of Palm Sunday. This cantata is not so well known as some of the others often heard at this season of the Church year; but is rarely beautiful. The rector of Christ Church, the Rev. E. Pinkney Wroth, Jr., will sing with the choir taking some of the tenor solos.

M. M. W.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. H. St. Geo. Tucker, D. D., Coadjutor.

Death of the Rev. J. F. Ribble, D. D.

The Rev. John Francis Ribble, D. D., rector of St. Andrew's Church, Richmond, died Wednesday morning, March 30, in St. Luke's Hospital, after an illness of several months.

Funeral services were conducted Friday morning in St. Andrew's Church by the Rev. W. D. Smith, D. D., rector of St. Mark's Church. Members of the vestry of St. Andrew's Church were active pallbearers, and the honorary pallbearers were the clergy of Richmond. Interment was in Hollywood Cemetery.

Dr. Ribble was born in Norwood, Nelson County, April 15, 1867, and was a son of Dr. W. H. Ribble and Fannie Archer Goodwin Ribble, of Wytheville. He was a nephew of the late Rev. R. A. Goodwin, for many years rector of old St. John's Church, Richmond, and of the late Rev. Dr. E. L. Goodwin, a former editor of The Southern Churchman. He was educated in Norwood School and received the degree of M. A. at Roanoke College. He was ordained deacon from Virginia Seminary in 1892 by Bishop Randolph, of Southern Virginia, and to the priesthood in 1893 by Bishop Whittle.

He was awarded the degree of Doctor of Divinity from the Virginia Seminary in 1918. Dr. Ribble served in Cassanova, Va., St. Paul's Church, Newport News and St. John's Church, Petersburg, and for eight years he was professor of the Bishop Payne Divinity School, Petersburg.

Dr. Ribble was examining chaplain of the Diocese of Virginia since 1914, and president of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education since 1913, and in the latter field he aroused much interest in Sunday-school and educational work. He was the founder and leader of the Summer School of Religious Education, held first in Charlottesville and then at Sweet Briar.

He has been rector of St. Andrew's Church, Richmond, since 1913, devoting much time and attention to the parochial school and recreational work. In the death of Dr. Ribble not only the Diocese, but Richmond, has lost a leader of spiritual vision and great missionary spirit.

Dr. Ribble is survived by his widow, nee Miss Bessie Goodwin, of Santa Rosa, Cal., and five children.

The Evangelistic Movement In Richmond.

Before the Ministerial Union of Richmond adjourned for last summer it was arranged to plan a simultaneous preaching campaign in the white Protestant Churches of the city. The period of Lent was chosen and the Rev. Thomas Semmes, of South Richmond, was elected Chairman of the General Committee.

At the first meeting of the Committee in June a strong ally was secured in the Christian Business Men's Evangelistic Club, the president of which is Mr. W. H. Stansell, manager of the Postal Telegraph Company. This club aided by Mr. R. E. Magill, of the Presbyterian Committee of Publication, has done splendid work in arousing religious interest in the city. The period chosen for the intensive work of the churches was March 27 to April 10. Seventy-five Churches entered the movement. Twelve Episcopal Churches decided to do follow-up work of the Bishops' Crusade and nearly all are now engaged in every night services. A number of parish missions are going on and a great spiritual revival will result. The noon-day services at St. Paul's Church were adopted by the general committee for the two weeks' period of the campaign as the community midday service and Mr. Stansell procured the gift of a broadcasting service through WRVA, so that about ten thousand homes and business places can "listen in" to this service. Mr. Magill has filled the windows of the city homes and the street cars with cards and secured very valuable poster and signboard notices for a nominal sum, which was paid by a prominent layman of the Episcopal Church. The newspapers and every agency approached by the committee have responded cordially and helpfully in putting forward the movement.

For St. Paul N. and I. School, Lawrenceville.

At a meeting held in Richmond recently, and sponsored by the Episcopal Churches of the city, a plea for funds to carry on the work of the St. Paul Normal and Industrial School, of Lawrenceville, Va., was heard, and addresses were made by Archdeacon James S. Russell, founder of the school; B. A. Lewis, Commonwealth's Attorney of Brunswick County, and the Rev. Robert W. Patton, director of the American Church Institute for Negroes.

A book dedicated to Archdeacon Russell and containing the names of faithful Negro servants of the old South is now being made.

Contributors to the school fund will have their names in the book, and the names of the former slaves or servants in whose memory the donations are made. These names will later be inscribed upon a bronze tablet to be placed in the St. Paul School, it was announced. Every person who makes a donation of $500 or more will have his name placed on the memorial.

Inspired by the work of the campaign, Dr. John Scott and his sister, Mrs. Emma Scott Taylor, have offered to finance the construction of an administration building not to exceed $15,000, and many other contributions have been made, it was said.

Albemarle Convocation.

The spring meeting of Albemarle Convocation will be held in St. Paul's Church, Ivy Depot, Tuesday, April 19, to Thursday, April 21. All members will please take notice of this change in date of meeting. Please notify the Rev. F. W. Neve, Ivy Depot, of the time you intend to arrive for the meeting as he is desirous of completing all arrangements for Convocation's entertainment.

Piedmont Convocation.

The one hundred and nineteenth semi-annual meeting of the Piedmont Convocation will be held in Emmanuel Church, Braddock Heights, Alexandria, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, May 2, 3 and 4, 1927.

Mr. B. A. M. Schapiro, Director of the Hebrew Publication Society for reaching and Christianizing the Jews, addressed the Richmond Clericus on April 4, making a favorable impression, and appealing for a part of the Good Friday Offering to further his work. Bishop Brown has authorized the clergy of Virginia to use part of this Offering for that purpose if they so desire.

The Rev. F. D. Goodwin conducted a successful Crusade Mission in St. James' Church, Leesburg, the Rev. Peyton Craighill, rector, closing with an impressive service of rededication. Several clergy were present and renewed their ordination vows, and the congregation did the same, with their baptismal and confirmation vows. Bishop St. George Tucker presided.

In Zion Church, Fairfax, the Rev. W. C. Marshall, rector, another successful mission was held. Beginning on Sunday night, March 27, when Dr. Bowen, head of the Laymen's League of Washington, D. C., was the speaker, services were held each night through the week, with the Rev. R. Cary Montague as the mission preacher. The church was crowded to its capacity at every service, and a notable feature of the mission was the children's service on Friday afternoon, at which more than two hundred children of all denominations, were present.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

Crusade Mission In Roanoke.

From March 27 to April 1, a great mission was conducted in Christ Church, Roanoke, the Rev. G. Otis Mead, rector. The preacher was the Rev. Churchill J. Gibson, D. D., of R. E. Lee Memorial Church at Lexington.

Dr. Gibson's sermons created a deep impression upon his congregation. An attractive feature of his addresses, and one which added a great deal to their effectiveness, was his habit of illustrating important points by references to his experiences with the soldiers during the World War and especially his intimate association with the cadets of the Virginia Military Institute and the students of Washington and Lee University, both at Lexington.

The Rev. Mr. Mead and committees of his parish had done excellent work in preparation for the mission, and the deepest interest was manifested through the crusade.

While in Roanoke, Dr. Gibson made several other addresses, to the men in the N. & W. Shops at noon hour, to the students of the National Business College, etc., and he also conducted services at Catawba Sanatorium.

Mr. Franklin A Guest In Roanoke.

On Friday, April 1, Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, Vice-President and Treasurer of the National Council, was a visitor in Roanoke, en route to Memphis, where he was scheduled for a series of addresses during the following week. At six in the evening he was guest at a supper in the Parish House of Christ Church with Bishop Jett, the Roanoke clergy and the Rev. Dr. Gibson, the members of the vestry and the associate vestry of Christ Church and the members of the vestry and the officers and group leaders of the Men's Service League of St. John's.

After supper Mr. Franklin gave an interesting talk on the history and accomplishments of the Nation-Wide Campaign and the elimination of the General Church Deficit.

He then spoke of the present situation in China, bringing the latest information from the New York office relative to the Episcopal missions and missionaries there.

T. A. S.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. J. B. Cheshire, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, D. D., Coadjutor.
Rt Rev. H. B. Delaney, D. D., Suffragan.

Unusual Communion Service Given Trinity Church, Scotland Neck.

Trinity Church, Scotland Neck, has recently come into possession of a very beautiful and unusual communion service, left it in the will of the Rev. John G. Hatton, who died in Portland, Oregon, in September, 1926. The chalice and patten are of gold, made from jewelry belonging to Mr. Hatton, his family and a number of friends. The chalice is studded with carbuncles and topaz, and a cross made of emeralds, rubies and pearls is beautifully wrought on it. At the time of his death Mr. Hatton was the beloved chaplain of the Good Samaritan Hospital in Portland. He was a native of Suffolk, Va. His sister, Mrs. W. E. Smith, is a communicant of Trinity Church, Scotland Neck.

New Church at High Point.

Excavation has begun for the new St. Mary's Church, High Point, which is to be erected at a cost of $100,000. It is expected that the edifice will be completed by Thanksgiving. The church is being built on a new and more desirable site, the old site having recently been sold for business purposes. The congregation in High Point is not large, but the church is being built to meet the eventual demands of a rapidly growing city.

Parish House For the Church of Good Shepherd, Raleigh.

Announcement has been made that the Church of the Good Shepherd, Raleigh, will have a drive soon after Easter to raise $100,000 for the erection of a parish house. This parish has a large and growing work among the young people, and the vestry is anxious to provide adequate facilities for instruction and recreation. The Easter offering will be devoted to this purpose.

The Rt. Rev. Joseph Blount Cheshire celebrated his seventy-seventh birthday on Sunday, March 27, by taking part in four services, including an early celebration of the Holy Communion and confirming a large class in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Raleigh, in the evening. He received many felicitations from friends on his birthday. While Bishop Cheshire is now being assisted by a coadjutor and suffragan, he still makes many visitations and retains an active interest in all affairs of the diocese.

T. P., Jr.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. A. S Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, D. D., Suffragan.

University Students.

One of the most encouraging things which has occurred for a long time is the forming of a group of Church students at Teachers' College, Columbia University, for the purpose of keeping in closer touch with the Church while they are in New York. The initial move came from them. The first meeting was in February at Whittier Hall, at which Chaplain Knox and Miss Louise E. Rich were invited to speak. Such meetings will be held each month with outside speakers, including the Rt. Rev. Arthur Selden Lloyd, D. D.; the Very Rev. Howard C. Robbins, D. D.; the Rev. John W. Suter, Jr.; the Rev. Robert W. Norwood, D. D.; and the Rev. Almon Pepper. A Corporate Communion for these students was celebrated on Sunday, March 20, in the Cathedral.

The Corporate Communion of the National Church Club for Women will be held at the Church of the Incarnation on Wednesday, April 20, the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D., Presiding Bishop, being the celebrant. The service will be followed by breakfast at the annual meeting at the Waldorf-Astoria, when the speakers will be: the Presiding Bishop, the Very Rev. Howard C. Robbins, D. D., Dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, the Rev. H. Percy Silver, rector of the Church of the Incarnation, and Mrs. Samuel Thorne, President of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Diocese of New York.

The Rt. Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D., delivered an address at the dedication of the new Park Avenue Synagogue on Sunday, March 27, in which he said, in part:

"Whatever our present differences in faith, let us never forget that we are all children of one Father, and all created in His image and likeness. Catholics, Protestants and Jews, we all worship the God of Abraham, we all acknowledge the laws of life as set forth in the Ten Commandments; we all hear the voice of God in the Hebrew Prophets and in the law of love to God and our fellowmen declared in the Golden Rule."

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Helfenstein Confirms Large Numbers.

Since his elevation to the Episcopate, about the first of January, the Rt. Rev. Edward T. Helfenstein, Bishop Coadjutor of Maryland, has confirmed five hundred and thirty-four people. As a result of the Bishops' Crusade at least six churches have asked for supplemental Confirmation Visitations.

At his recent visitation, in the newly organized Chapel of St. Augustine of Canterbury, North Linthicum, Bishop Helfenstein blessed a handsome communion service, the gift of Mrs. Charles Linthicum, who, with Congressman Linthicum, has been especially interested in the growth of the Church in this community. At the time of the service, at which the Bishop confirmed ten persons, the church was filled, there being a large number of men present This work is under the care of the Rev. O. W. Devenish, of Mt. Calvary Parish.

J. A. M.

EAST CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop.

Memorial Window Presented Church at Black Mountain.

The Bryan children, of New Bern, recently placed in St. James' Church, Black Mountain, N. C., a beautiful window to the memory of their mother, Mrs. Henry R. Bryan. The window is of handsome stained glass with figure of the Good Shepherd. Mrs. Bryan and her family occupied for many years their cottage at Black Mountain, and always took a vital interest in Church affairs.

Miss Venetia Cox returned on March 24 to her home in Winterville, N. C., from Hankow, China, where she has been serving as missionary from East Carolina. She sailed from Shanghai, January 1, for Port Said, Egypt, and spent two months visiting Palestine, Sicily, Italy, and other interesting points. Miss Cox has made a distinct contribution to the Church in China by translating Church music into the Chinese language.

Bishop Darst will conduct the Lenten services in the Garrick Theatre, Philadelphia, from April 11 to 15. He has conducted these services for several years with gratifying results.

The Rev. James E. W. Cook, rector of St. Paul's Church, Greenville, conducted a successful week's mission in the Church of the Advent, Williamston, beginning March 28.

Volunteer workers have just finished a new roof for the vestry room of Holy Innocents' Church, Lenoir County, the second roof since the church was built in 1889.

The Diocesan Convention of East Carolina will meet in Elizabeth City, May 4 and 5, and among other important matters will consider the state of the Church in East Carolina, particularly the fact that two hundred and fifty names were dropped from our communicant lists in 1925, and that 2,000 names have been dropped during the past ten years.

The Rev. Wm. J. Herritage, retired colored priest, died at his home in Edenton, N. C., March 7, 1927. He was the first colored priest ordained in East Carolina, and the first colored minister to be buried within the Diocese.

G. F. C.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland D. D., Bishop.

Moblizing The Man Power of the Parish.

In the Church of St. John the Evangelist, in the growing suburb of Lansdowne in Delaware County, announcement was made Sunday, April 3, by the rector, the Rev. Charles E. Tuke, of the club's decision to mobilize the manpower of the parish in an effort to match the women of the Church in service and also of the men's purpose to enter more fully into the life of the community as a service unit.

Many of Lansdowne's prominent citizens are included in the membership of St. John's Men's Club. In many religious circles there has been a growing impression that too much emphasis has been placed by organizations of men on "food" and "after dinner speeches". In his address yesterday, Dr. Tuke said that upwards of eighty men have already pledged themselves to give greater emphasis hereafter to "personal service" than to "smokes and sandwiches".

The men have decided to assume the responsibility of making visitations to the men of the parish to interest them in increasing the influence of the Church in the community. They will call upon all men of the many new families that have moved, or who may move into Lansdowne and bid them welcome in the community. Members are to furnish automobiles for all special occasions or to bring any aged and infirm persons to church.

"Under the old regime," Dr. Tuke said, "while we fully expected our women's organizations to perform the service for the church, we felt quite satisfied if our men would meet under church auspices merely for the purpose of consuming smokes and sandwiches.

"Under the new plan the attendance at Men's Club meetings has doubled, and there is a new spirit apparent in the members. For the last meeting, for instance, every man in the parish was called upon by a member of the Club with an invitation to attend the meeting for the purpose of securing men willing to work for the Church, with the emphasis upon the work. On the night of the meeting the 'rain descended and the floods came', but in spite of this the increased attendance was one hundred per cent."

(Continued on page 22.)

Family Department

April.

1. Friday.
3. Fifth (Passion) Sunday in Lent.
10. Sixth (Palm) Sunday in Lent.
14. Maundy Thursday.
15. Good Friday.
16. Easter Even.
17. Easter Day.
24. First Sunday after Easter.
25. Monday. S. Mark.
30. Saturday.

Collect for Sunday Next Before Easter.

Almighty and everlasting God, Who, of Thy tender love towards mankind, hast sent Thy Son, Our Saviour, Jesus Christ, to take upon Him our flesh, and to suffer death upon the cross, that all mankind shall follow the example of His great humility; Mercifully grant, that we may both follow the example of His patience, and also be made partakers of His resurrection; through the same Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Collects for Good Friday.

Almighty God, we beseech Thee graciously to behold this Thy family, for which Our Lord Jesus Christ was contented to be betrayed, and given up into the hands of wicked men and to suffer death upon the cross: Who now liveth and reigneth with Thee, and the Holy Ghost, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

Almighty and everlasting God, by Whose Spirit the whole body of the Church is governed and sanctified; Receive our supplications and prayers, which we offer before Thee for all estates of men in Thy holy Church, that every member of the same in his vocation and ministry, may truly and godly serve Thee; through Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

O Merciful God, Who hast made all men, and hatest nothing that Thou hast made, nor desireth the death of a sinner, but rather that he should be converted and live; have mercy upon all Jews, Turks, infidels and heretics; and take from them all ignorance, hardness of heart, and contempt of Thy Word; and so fetch them home, blessed Lord, to Thy flock, that they may be saved among the remnant of the true Israelites, and be made one fold under one Shepherd, Jesus Christ Our Lord, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Spirit, one God, world without end. Amen.

For the Southern Churchman.

O Holy Cross!

M. G. B.

Thrice blessed sign of mercy infinite.
Soft through the dimness gleams Thy golden light,
Where, hushed to adoration, men upraise
Their thankful faces, daring prayer and praise
Because Thou speakest love.
When brutal war
Brings held to earth, when pain and cruel loss
Darken the light of heaven, blood-red, O Cross,
Thy sign is given
To those who come with healing, unfraid,
With Thee our babes are blessed; and 'neath Thy shade
We lay our dead to rest.
Yet not alway
Hath glory crowned Thee; once Thy light was dark,
Men shuddered, Thee beholding grim and stark
Against the sky. Thy name, the name
That plumbed the depths of human shame,
Was spoken with a curse.

Then for love's sake,
Through mystery of grace no man may know,
One took upon Himself Thine awful woe,
Suffered Thy death,
And thereby conquered death. Transfigured now,
Emblem of love that knows no bounds art Thou,
The Cross of Christ.

Dear Lord, to Thee
I yield the hidden sorrow of my heart.
I pray not that Thou bid its pain depart,
But make me free
From bitterness. My darkness turned to light
Through sacrifice, my weakness changed to night,
O Love Divine
Hide Thou my cross in Thine!

The Supremacy of the Cross.

I turn to the Old Testament and discern there mountainous characters. Nearly everything which upraises and enlarges human nature is to be found in such representative Israelites as Joseph and Moses, David and Job, Isaiah and Jeremiah, Hosea, and Amos. It is somewhat difficult to discriminate between their respective excellencies. I turn to the New Testament and there again is a portrait gallery of devout, holy and sacrificial men and women among whom a right-minded individual loves to linger.

But you have no problem whatsoever in separating all alike from the Shepherd and Bishop of their souls. He stands forth like Fujiyama in the East or Shasta in the West; in His graciousness, tranquility, speech, reticence, indulgence and forbiddance of others, absolutely and eternally incomparable. If you would apprehend what is the nature and what are the purposes of the Everlasting Father go beyond lawgivers, psalmists, prophets, saints, apostles, and do not stop till you have realized the preeminence of Christ on His Cross.

Moreover, His presence on it meant divine pardon for us all. I am well aware that this statement makes some shrink. Many can not conceive the justice of the innocent suffering for the guilty, and not a few resent the idea that they need pardon at all. As if the innocent did not suffer for the guilty always and everywhere! As if the felt need of pardon were not next in human aspiration to the cry for justice!

The Court House of an old Egyptian city is the scene of as adorable an act of forgiveness as this world knew before Christ came to save it. The Viceroy is enthroned in his robes of state. Secretaries and military guards stand near. A group of Hebrew shepherds, scorched and blistered by the desert heat, are hurried in before the potentate's jurisdiction. The Viceroy is the Hebrew lad whom these shepherds had sold into bondage years before. Though they were his own brothers they had infamously trespassed against him. Yet he forgave them, even though one had counselled his murder. He made himself known to them with exquisite delicacy and tact and mingled his tears with theirs. It would be hard to rival that Old Testament picture of fraternal grace and tenderness.

Nevertheless, Joseph had for months previously played the part of a harsh and inexorable autocrat. He had kept Reuben and his brothers on the rack. They themselves tasted the misery into which they had once plunged him. Up to the point of his self-disclosure it had been an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth. Besides, Joseph was the virtual ruler of the civilized world. From his regal heights he could afford to be benign toward these humiliated nomads who had been jealous of his youthful pride and his father's favoritism.

But Christ's forgiveness was accomplished from a far different elevation and in a totally different way. Before He came into the noonday splendor of His risen omnipotence He was emptied of everything but Love Divine, in order that such Love may evoke the praise, the gratitude and the homage of the race. He forgave when He was betrayed, taunted, scourged, crucified and while robed in the crimson mantle of His offering. He did not tantalize nor torture the objects of His clemency. Hanging in utter agony of the flesh, His spirit leaped to meet the penitent thief's contrition, and bestowed on him the assurance of his acceptance with God.

Sometimes we quote Moses as a type anticipatory of our Lord. Certainly Moses was the prince among princes, notable for his meekness; the leader who surrendered a palace, culture, social distinction and royal influence to identify himself with a race of slaves. In old age he took on a forlorn hope, and guided a querulous and disaffected mob through the wilderness, bearing with their murmurings and rebuking their idolatries. He was ready to be accursed from the Jehovah of the covenant and pass beneath His mysterious ban if He would but spare the offending people. Yet blemish bespots his life's oblation, and its symmetry is marred by the impatience of Moses. Some shadows rest on his disinterested and magnanimous career. In contrast, the moral qualities of the Divine Sufferer are of sapphire-like purity. His forgiveness sprang from depths of spontaneity foreign to the human heart. His intercessory acts are stamped and sealed with the imprints of a Higher Power.

These are the underlying reasons for the Supremacy of the Cross. The One who died there was the sole concern. With mortals passing out momentarily, we have to find why the single death of an obscure Jewish peasant should have revolutionized the religious life and thoughts of civilization. Get behind the accidents and details of this tragic scenery, and there, in the interpretations given by Christ's conduct and by His earliest followers you come to the secret strength of the Crucifixion.

It is comparatively easy to forgive the dead. No manly spirit wars on them. It is possible to forgive the living when vengeance has laid them low. But Jesus forgave the world while its maledictions were heaped on Him. His wealth of meekness, long suffering and pardon was lavished on all and sundry. Those who stood beneath the Cross and mocked Him were no more accepted into the Divine favor than you or I. For every one of us He poured out His life.

And so we are still confronted two thousand years after this historic event with the incomparableness of the Sufferer and of His Sacrifice. He alone united perfect example with perfect expiation. I care little enough about earthquake, eclipse, rent vail and exhumed dead. I care very much about the spirit, the motive, the nature and the purpose of the Crucified One. He enlists me for anything I can render. If I must own to my hidden convictions as a Christian believer I am bound to depend upon what Christ did for me. The Faith is far more than a way of life as I see it from Calvary. It is a means of life, of life regenerated, obedient, hallowed.

I have no theory I would push at the expense of the rest to explain the Cross. I do not attempt to define it in these descriptions and comparisons which I have put before you. But I find myself as the years gather more inclined to trust what God has done for me in Christ than I am to trust what I can do for God or for Christ.—Rev. S. P. Cadman. In Christian Herald.

Calvary.

The Women stood and watched while thick, black night
Enclosed the awful tragedy. Afar
Three crosses stood, against a single bar
Of crimson-glowing black-encircled light.
No hint of Easter dawn. In all the height
Of that dark heaven, not a single star
To whisper:—Love and Life the victors are.
It seemed to them that wrong had conquered right.

O ye who watch and wait, the night is long.
A curtain of spun fire and woven gloom
Across the mighty tragedy is drawn.
But soon your ears shall hear a triumph song,
And golden light shall touch each sacred tomb,
And voices shout at last, The Dawn! The Dawn!

—F. O. Call.

Good Friday.

Good Friday, the day of His death! He might have built Himself a mansion by a single word, yet He moved among us as one who had not where to lay His head. He might have summoned irresistible legions of angels, yet He chose to suffer alone. He emptied Himself of the pre-historic glory which He had in heaven with His Father, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Today we remember how He whom angels adore was blindfolded, crowned with thorns, buffeted, spitted upon, stripped naked, and crucified as the price of our redemption. Subdued and solemnized we follow along the Via Crucis until we come to Golgotha. Here we stand beholding while they nail His hands and feet to the shameful tree and lift Him up between two thieves. They number the Holy One among transgressors! Our hearts grow sick at the sight, our eyes swim with tears—He is praying for us! With trembling lips we echo His prayers, "My God, why hast Thou forsaken Him!" "Father, forgive me, For I knew not what I did in sinning against Thee." "Lord, remember me when Thou comest into Thy Kingdom." Even after He is dead they rudely assail Him! It is not enough for His enemies to execute Him as a criminal—they must pierce His heart with a lance! That action is symbolic of our heartlessness when we deny Him.—Rev. Paul Roth, in The Lutheran.

The Roman Soldier.

Who goes there? A Roman soldier. And he is a Roman soldier who has learned, from his Roman soldier-life, a faith such as Jesus had not found in Israel! You can see what this faith is. It is a Roman view of the world which sees it as a great order. The world is not (what Bishop Butler sorrowfully admits that it sometimes appears to be) "a wild and disorderly scene". It is not a world of chances and mischances. It is an empire; and there is an Emperor. It is a legion; and there is a Commander of it. The centurion is accustomed to live as though this were so. This attitude towards life has become habitual to him. It is not only something he assents to, mentally. It is something which has become part of himself. His bones obey, almost of themselves, the word of command. The thing has been drilled into him: and that, not only on the parade ground; it is the element he lives in, day in, day out. It is above and below him.

He puts the obeying first, but the experience of being obeyed helps too. I am under authority having soldiers under me . . . To feel he is obedient gives moral strength to a man. And then, again, to find yourself obeyed is a very steadying experience. This man has a great respect for Life, and a great self-respect. He is not like the Lawless Men, alternately hunted and hunting. He is obedient and obeyed; respectful and respected.

Those Roman soldiers of the New Testament are men whom we honor with a very human-kindly respect. This disciplined man, with his rather hard face, a face with the strong lines in it, comes before us concerned about his soldier-servant. And look how courteously and considerately (Acts 23:19) the "chief captain" took the agitated nephew "by the hand" and spoke to him "by himself". These are gentlemen, respected by and respecting their fellow-men.

And, somehow, these steady, self-disciplined men, whose world is a world of obedience, have escaped the monotony which we associate with military order. They are not unimaginative men. If civilians wish to insult a building and to say it is dead with an ugly kind of deadness, they call it a Barrack. If we want to say a life is soulless routine, we compare it to military duty, or talk of the redtape of the War Office.

But soldiers, in the New Testament, are not unimaginative, mechanical, monotonous. They are alive with a loyalty to the living men in authority over them and the living men under their authority. This centurion recognizes, in an instant, the Voice of Command of Jesus—as though this soldier soul had seen his spiritual Caesar and sprung to the salute. His eyes saw Who He is.

The moral which has caused this soldier's memory to live on in the Gospels of St. Matthew and St. Luke, is one which aimed against the Jews. Perhaps the Jews, for all their attempts to bring their life under the discipline of the Law, had never come near a discipline like that of a soldier's life. Their little rules about eating things that chewed the cud and parted the hoof were inferior, as discipline, to being cheerfully content, on the march, with the legion's rations. Their self-righteous obedience to the traditions of the Scribes left much (our Lord says so; Mark 12:38) of greed and pride undisciplined in them. They won an ugly distinction by formal obediences. The Roman's whole life was in his obedience. And he did not win distinction by it. He took it for granted. (A colonel was asked, after an attack, for names of men who had distinguished themselves. "All of us do our duty here," he said. "A man does not distinguish himself in this regiment by doing his duty . . ." The scribes were a long way below that.)

Perhaps, for us, the centurion reappears as Mr. Kipling's non-commissioned officer. Certainly there are many to whom obedience is not now a native element. The reader may be left free to choose for himself how he will breathe, once he gets out into this keen, pure bracing air. But the moral for both Jew and Greek, barbarian and Scythian, is that a change of air into this obedience, this obeying and being obeyed, is a sure cure for debility of faith. Faith chokes for want of this air. The Roman saying was that he who cannot obey orders cannot give them, is the way which leads to belief. He who "won't obey no orders unless they is his own", whatever his calling or age or education or temperament or circumstances, is relaxing his faculty of Faith. He is throwing into confusion his own view of a world which is a great order, obedient to God, such as the centurion saw.—J. M. C. C., in The Guardian (English).

The Master Musician.

Once upon a time, in an ancient church, there was a great organ on which the people had not yet learned to play. One after another tried the instrument, drew out its stops and wakened some of its harmonies; but none of them dreamed of the wonderful music which lay hidden there. Then one day came the Master, sat like other men before the organ, and began to play; and the people below hushed themselves and whispered: "Is this the organ which we have owned so long—this which first sighs and weeps, and then thrills with passion and joy?" From that day the hope of their worship was to reproduce the music which was then revealed, and when the best of them did his best, they said: "This makes us think of the Master's playing." Just such an instrument is human life, with its complex mechanism, its possible discords, its hidden harmonies, and many a philosopher and teacher has drawn from within it some of the music which was there. Then one day comes the Master. He knows, as the Gospel says, what is in man, and bending over human life, reveals the music of it; and from that day forth, the hope of the world has been to reproduce the harmony; and when the best of men do their best, we say: "This makes us think of the Master's playing."—Professor Peabody.

The Holy dies, the just and upright truly;
The sinner lives, unrighteous long, unruly;
Man, death condemned, goes free; by all forsaken,
God's Son is taken.

For the Young Folks

Simon the Cyrenian Speaks.

He never spoke a word to me,
And yet He called my name;
He never gave a sign to me,
And yet I knew and came.

At first I said, 'I will not bear
His cross upon my back;
He only seeks to place it there
Because my skin is black".

But He was dying for a dream,
And He was very meek,
And in His eyes there shone a gleam
Men journey far to seek.

It was Himself my pity bought;
I did for Christ alone
What all of Rome could not have wrought
With bruise of lash or stone.

—Countee Cullen.

For the Southern Churchman.

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

The Magnanimity of Jesus.

M. L. G.

"They bound Jesus." When we read these words we cannot restrain a feeling of anger—at Judas the traitor, at the scheming Pharisees, the merciless soldiers, all those whose hands hurried our Lord to the Cross. We see very plainly why Peter drew his sword and smote one of them. He could not really help, but he must strike! Then Jesus asked of the soldiers a moment's release of His hands, and in that moment gave healing to His captor. Now, dear children, we understand what magnanimity means!

Or look at Jesus later, when this same Peter whose courage had flared in the Garden, felt it flicker and go out. Jesus was not very near Peter, probably He could not hear the words of denial, the curses, the cowardly "I know not the man"! But He knew what was in man; He knew what was in Peter, and had told before that Peter would thrice deny Him. He turned from those who were trying to amuse themselves with mocking Him until the Sanhedrin should meet for a formal trial. He turned and looked upon Peter. And Peter, meeting in that look a love that went deeper even than his sin, fled into the darkness outside, to weep bitterly.

Or see Jesus on the Cross, and hear those words that have lighted the blackness of that most dreadful hour, through all the centuries since: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Children, if you ever feel tempted to turn from a friend with an angry, unforgiving heart, stop thinking about the injury he has done you, and turn for a moment to the Best Friend, whose way you are pledged to make your way.

A Victory In Defeat.

"Who will be picked for second base this season, do you suppose? Ned or Barney? It will probably be one of them," speculated Jack Grover to the group of boys assembled before the front door of the Brookside High School one morning in March.

"Barney," asserted one of the boys confidently.

"No, Ned!"

"No, Barney!"

"Ned!" "Barney!" vociferously yelled the boys, the choice being evidently very evenly divided between the two.

"Well, I suppose we'll have to wait until morning to find out. But we'll know then all right, for the names of the team are to be posted tomorrow," averred Grover.

"Anyway, we are very sure who our shortstop will be, aren't we, fellows?" young Bates demanded slyly.

"You bet," shouted the rest of the group, all eyes focusing upon the tall, slim, graceful figure of Robin Fenwick.

Rob smiled a trifle complacently, as with a slightly deprecatory gesture he replied.

"Oh, you never can be sure about anything in this world. "There's many a slip, you know," he quoted nonchalantly.

Yet it was only too clear that Rob did not quite believe his own words, or if he did, he did not consider that in this particular instance they would be applied. For Robin Fenwick was very certain in his own mind who would be chosen shortstop for the Brookside High School baseball team.

Therefore the next morning Rob gave merely a casual glance at the posted list, while sauntering leisurely toward his classroom, just as the first bell broke up the noisy, excited group of boys clustered about the bulletin board. As his eye quickly scanned the list, to his surprise and dismay, however, he found his own name missing from it. Aghast he stopped and stared, unable for a second to believe his own eyes. Yet all too plainly was printed in the place of shortstop the name of Lewis Morton. Only by summoning all his pride to his aid was Rob able to gather together his shattered forces sufficiently to stride into the room and sink into his accustomed seat.

Automatically he went through the morning's routine, stern and white-faced, utterly oblivious to the curious glances cast at him by his mates. When recess at length arrived, he set forth immediately in search of Angus MacKenzie, the captain of the Brookside nine, with the express purpose of having it out with him.

Just as he was entering the gymnasium, however, he heard the voice of Mr. Wylie, the English professor, and Rob's favorite teacher, exclaiming in a surprised way:

"I was truly amazed, Angus, this morning not to see Fenwick's name on your team list. I'm not much of a baseball fan, but I had always understood that Rob was one of your star players."

"He is, Professor Wylie," Rob heard Captain Mac soberly and earnestly reply. "One of the best players in the school, best batsman and our safest shortstop, and a mighty fine chap in the bargain, one of the very best. But he's a bad loser. A lost game with him is never fairly won by the other fellow, and he disputes every ruling of the umpire unfavorable to his side. I was so ashamed last year at that final game when we lost the cup, and Rob cut up so badly, accusing the winning team of cheating, and the umpire of partiality, when, as a matter of fact, a fairer set of fellows never existed than that bunch. We were licked honestly and aboveboard, simply because their team was the better one. When Rob wins, though, he's generous enough, never crows, or anything like that; but it's his attitude when he loses that hurts so badly the standing of our team, and of our school. It gives us the name of being welshers, whiners, poor sports; and that is the reason why I dropped him from the team, although I hated to do it," concluded Captain Mac. "I expect a bad time of it though when he comes to demand my reason," he groaned.

"I'm very sorry, indeed, to hear this about Fenwick," ejaculated Professor Wylie. "Very sorry, for I both like and admire Robin. I fear, however, you're right, Angus. The reputation of being a poor loser is a bad one for any boy or man to earn. I may not be much of a sportsman, but I do know no one has learned the first rules of sportsmanship until he has learned how to lose, that the important thing isn't the fact of whether you win or lose a game, but how you play it."

And Professor Wylie with a grave shake of his head walked slowly away.

Although Mac was now at liberty to be approached, Rob did not take advantage of this fact. He did not need to question Mac for he had received his answer. Instead he slunk quietly away in order to be by himself to think over a bit the astounding events of the last few hours.

During the next few days Rob had all he could manage to keep from showing to his comrades just how hard the blow had hit him. To Captain Mac's surprise, however, he never came to demand a reason for his non-appointment. Moreover, he was as friendly as ever with Mac.

Rob at first had naturally been very angry and had considered himself badly used by Angus, but he had gradually brought himself to see the justice of the captain's ruling.

How he now longed, though, for the chance to prove himself a good sport to his mates, and to win back Professor Wylie's respect and esteem which he feared he had in some measure forfeited.

Therefore, a week or so later, when he was rather diffidently approached by the captain of the scrub team, who rather feared a snubbing, with the request that he play shortstop for them, to the great surprise and delight of all the boys, he gladly accepted. Rob now strove hard to learn this secret of losing, to learn to prove his mettle by trying to accept defeat, when it did come, in a manly way. During their practice games with the regular team he endeavored to show no resentment at any ruling against him, nor when his team was licked. It was hard, up-hill work, of course, and very often he broke out into a torrent of angry abuse against the umpire, but gradually he succeeded in getting his quick temper under control, and these outbursts grew fewer.

During the regular games, however, as Rob stood, an outsider, watching his team win or perhaps go down to defeat, many times through the muffed balls of his successor, an almost uncontrollable longing to be playing there in his old place filled his boyish soul. For Morton was proving himself a very erratic player. While he often played a brilliant game, oftener still he lost his head, especially in an emergency, and made numerous errors, showing himself a regular butterfinger with the ball. Rob, however, wisely avoided making unpleasant comments on Morton's playing, nor did he side in with his mates in their bitter denunciation of his rival's deficiencies. Thereby, unconsciously, he won, by his reticence, their deep respect.

At length came Rob's chance to redeem himself. During a grilling game, in which the Southgate High School scored up run after run on the Brookside team, Morton had the misfortune to break a finger. The harassed captain in this emergency instinctively turned to his dispossessed shortstop. Summoning Rob to him he beseeched him to go into the game in Morton's place.

"Do help us out, Rob, and save the honor of the old Brookside High, will you, old man?" he implored.

Here would have been Rob's chance had he been a small-minded chap to mortify Captain Mac and thus get even with him by scornfully refusing before the other players his former captain's request. Fortunately, however, Rob was not small-minded, but a big-hearted, generous boy, who really loved his team and his school.

"Of course, I will, Mac, and play my very best," replied Rob heartily.

Under Rob's skillful batting and clever fielding the score crept up, up, up, until it stood at only seven to six in favor of the Southgate High. The excitement was intense at the beginning of the ninth inning when the Southgate boys came to the bat. But their half was eventless, and they left the field without having scored. Rob had first turn at the bat. Strike one was a beauty, almost a home run. When the dust of battle had cleared away with the ball finally recovered, Rob was safe on third. The cheers and shouts of the Brookside rooters became almost deafening. For with a man on third and no one out, they saw a chance to tie this game, perhaps even win it.

Luck, however, did not seem to be with them, for the next man at the bat struck frantically three times at the ball, each time fanning the air wildly. The next man was also struck out, then Captain Mac himself came to the bat. Two strikes were called on him also before he succeeded in making a hit. At first the ball appeared to be very cleverly fielded. All but the shouting would then have been over had not the ball bounced out of the fielder's hand. Although he quickly recaptured it, again he dropped it, and as he tried to retrieve it, he hit it with his toe.

While the fielder was making all these errors, Rob, in an almost superhuman effort to tie the game, was galloping to the plate. He dropped and slid just after the Southgate outfielder redeemed himself by a beautiful clean throw straight into the hands of the pitcher, who whirled quickly and threw the ball to the waiting catcher. Rob's hand missed the plate by a bare half inch when the catcher touched him with the ball.

"Out!" shouted the umpire.

Rob sprang up, red-faced and irate, ready to dispute the decision with all his old-time vim, when suddenly he remembered. Suppressing the fiery torrent of words he brushed off his clothes and meekly trotted to his bench.

The game was over and the Brookside High School had lost. Yet out of this game Robin Fenwick had won a signal victory.

That day Rob was the first boy, after his captain, to congratulate Jim Dark, the captain of the winning team, on their triumph. As the Southgate captain shook Rob's hand he exclaimed heartily:

"Well, anyway, you fellows are a fine bunch of sports, and the best losers I ever saw. That was a fine bit of sprinting, that last run of yours, Fenwick. Tough luck, I call it! You certainly deserved to win."

The following day Rob was officially appointed to his old place on the regular team for the remainder of the season. And when the next spring arrived, Rob had the great honor to be unanimously chosen captain of the Brookside nine in place of Angus, who had graduated the summer before.—Youth's World.

Nicolette's Jewels.

In a gray city of the North lives the Princess Nicolette. The summers in that northern land were short, the winters long and bitter cold. Perhaps it was because the city was so dreary that the princess was especially fond of playing with colored things. All round her were gray stone houses and gray pavements, and most of the time gray clouds covered the sky. But Nicolette managed to have color always about her. It was a pretty sight to see her in the courtyard tossing up red, blue, green, and yellow toy balloons. She had kites of many colors, too, and all her dolls wore gay-hued dresses.

Most precious of all her playthings were her jewels. Besides the royal jewels she had a box of precious stones, which she played with as other children play with pebbles. But much as Nicolette loved colored things she had never seen a flower of any kind.

"Flowers are too common for my daughter," the king used to say. "Besides, there is no room for gardens in the city."

The king's dislike for gardens was so well known that none of his town subjects dared to have one. And so Nicolette knew flowers only by name.

One day while snow was falling fast Nicolette sat by the fire in the nursery with her jewel playthings spread on a table near by. Her old nurse dozed in one corner. The little princess was gazing out at the storm. She fancied that she saw through the swirling snow a figure in a long gray cape and a pointed hat. She ran quickly to the window. The figure moved nearer across the broad veranda and knocked softly on the pane. It was an old man with a long white beard.

"Your Royal Highness," he cried, "will you let me in?"

Nicolette opened the window, and the stranger entered. He hastily set a long narrow box on the table and signed to Nicolette to open it.

At sight of the contents she gave a cry of delight. "Oh," she breathed, "what jewels! Rubies, corals and pearls, all larger and lovelier than any I have ever seen before!" She leaned a little nearer. "How strange," she said. "They have a fragrance!" Presently she looked up eagerly. "I, too, have jewels. They are not so marvelous as these, but there are more of them. Will you not exchange with me?"

She gathered up her own gems and held them out. "Give me your jewels for mine!" she begged.

Again the old man shook his head. "Mine are not for sale," he told her. "But," he added, "they are for you. Care for them well; pour water on them daily and keep them in the sunlight; that is all."

As he turned to step over the sill the grateful little princess pressed closer and, quickly pulling open one of the pockets of his long cape, emptied her jewels into it.

The old man did not know what she had done. "Remember," he said, "plenty of water and plenty of sun." And with that he disappeared into the storm.

The drowsy old nurse wakened just then; when she found out what had happened she raised a hue and cry.

The king was dreadfully angry when he found that for a few paltry blossoms set in earthenware pots his daughter had given away handfuls of priceless gems.

"But the old man's jewels are far prettier than mine!" Nicolette sobbed.

She was so woebegone that at last the king forgave her.

"Have your foolish flowers if you must," he said, "but do not expect to be trusted with any more jewels."

Nicolette opened her eyes wide. "Flowers!" she said. "So these are flowers! I do not care if I never see a jewel again."

She set the little earthen pots in a row in a sunny window and tended them faithfully.

And from that day the dreary palace was like another place. Nicolette took slips from the little plants, and in a short time beautiful geraniums were everywhere. As time went on the whole gray city bloomed, for the king, softened by so much beauty, changed his mind about gardens, and Nicolette sent for all kinds of flowers and gave them round, but geraniums were always called "Nicolette's Jewels".—Youth's Companion.

An Indispensable Part.

If Christ is the door, you are the doorkeeper, to open or close it for others. If He is the light of the world, you are the bearer of that light to the end of the earth. If He is the vine, you are the fruit-bearing branch that draws life from that vine. If He is the bread of life, you are to break it to feed those who hunger. If He is the truth, you are the truth-bearer, the interpreter of the truth. If He is the bright and morning star, you are to brush aside the clouds that veil His beauty from the world, that humanity may see and live forever. Oh, glorious Truth that we are an indispensable part of the great plan and program of the Father.—Rosalie Mills Appleby.

Lights.

The Eskimos burn wicks in oil,
Some folks light candles bright
So they won't have to go to sleep
As soon as it is night.

The Japanese hang lanterns gay
That swing from door and tree;
The sailors carry lamps with oil
To light their ships at sea.

The firefly has his little light
Tucked safe beneath his wing,
To guide him o'er the grassy marsh
Where sleepy green frogs sing.

The outdoor things have sun by day,
At night the stars and moon,
Wee stars like little twinkling fires
The moon, a gold balloon.

In my own room the 'lectric light's
Turned off when I'm undressed,
Because God sends the kindly dark
So all the world can rest.

—The Evening Bulletin.

SOUNDNESS FIRST—
SIZE AFTERWARD

Here at the First and Merchants we first seek sound accounts—size is a secondary consideration after we have satisfied ourselves that they measure up to our standards of quality.

This policy means safety to all our depositors.

Our large resources enable us to meet the demands of sound business in the Southeast—Transportation, Manufacturing, Jobbers, Retailers and Personal accounts.

FIRST AND MERCHANTS
NATIONAL BANK OF RICHMOND

JOHN M. MILLER, JR., President.

CAPITAL, SURPLUS AND UNDIVIDED PROFITS, $6,300,000

AGENTS WANTED

To sell song books, Bibles, Testaments, wall mottoes, and religious literature. Liberal commissions allowed. No experience necessary.
Send for free catalog and price lists.

JNO. T. BENSON PUBLISHING CO.
Nashville, Tenn.

THE PILGRIM SHIP

By KATHARINE LEE BATES

Dr. Henry Van Dyke says: "It is a fine vessel with a rich cargo. Here are the treasures of a very simple faith in Christ and a very happy love for humanity and beautiful pictures of the land that we call Holy." $2.00

THE WOMANS PRESS
600 Lexington Ave.
New York

Would you be interested in a monthly PARISH PAPER FOR $24 A YEAR? If so, get terms, samples, and particulars from UNION BIBLE SEMINARY, WESTFIELD, IND.

SOUTHWESTERN PRESBYTERIAN SANATORIUM

Annuity Bonds
From 6% to 9%

A WAY to help in the crusade against tuberculosis

A MEANS to help a Christian institution.

AN OPPORTUNITY for a large yet safe return on your investment.

Details on application

REV. HUGH A. COOPER, President
Albuquerque, New Mexico

BIBLE EDUCATION FOR WORLD-WIDE GOSPEL PROCLAMATION

National Bible Institute

340 W. 55th Street, New York City

DON O. SHELTON, LL.D., President
B. ALLEN REED, B.A., Registrar
HUGH R. MONRO, Treasurer

COURSES OF STUDY

I. THEOLOGICAL
II. MISSIONARY
III. CHRISTIAN WORKERS' BIBLE
IV. CHRISTIAN SERVICE MEDICAL
V. CHRISTIAN PEDAGOGY

As an essential part of their preparation, students are given regular practical work assignments.

The Resident School and Headquarters Building is situated at the heart of New York City. Tuition free. Room and Board at reasonable rates. Opportunities for self-help.

Catalogue and further information, on request

Friends visiting New York can find attractive accommodations at the Institute.

JOHNSON'S FOOT SOAP
ON MARKET 50 YEARS
Borax Iodine & Bran
ACTS LIKE MAGIC
ON TIRED, TENDER, SMARTING, SWOLLEN, SWEATY FEET
25 CENTS—ALL DRUGGISTS
Thomas Gill Soap Company 711 Kent Ave. Brooklyn, New York

Somewhere there is a man

Somewhere, possibly in your own congregation, there is a man to whom Easter, 1927, will be a day of ineffaceable memory.

Guided by this advertisement, he will, on Easter Day, picture his church with the added charm of Golden-Voiced Chimes. In his mind the tower will cease to be a "silent finger pointing to the sky" and will become, instead, a gloriously militant voice—vibrant with the spirit of Easter; alive with the joy of the arisen Christ.

Inspired by the picture his mind has created, this man—either individually or in combination with a group—will take steps to make his dream a reality. Chimes will be installed as a memorial to a departed one, as a tribute to a beloved pastor, or as an investment in happiness.

Week after week as the song of the chimes casts its salutary spell over the community, he will be reminded anew of his beneficence. The peace and solace that the age-mellowed hymns hold for the aged; the persistent but sweetly musical appeal that they make to the wayward; the renown that they bring to the church, and the joy that they carry to all, will each be a reminder of the thought born on Easter Day, 1927.

And when the donor begins to realize that year after year the blessings of the chimes continue—that generation after generation they extend the same soft, sweet, musical invitation to the church—his will be the joy of a philanthropy well conceived, of a good work well done!

Standard sets of Deagan Chimes, $6,000 and up. Literature, including beautiful memorial booklet, on request.

J. C. Deagan Inc.
EST. 1880
112 Deagan Building
CHICAGO

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week on which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

A STATEMENT

From St. Andrews' Mountain Mission, Piedmont Parish, Marshall, Va.

Just a little more than a year ago, we began sending out appeals for funds with which to purchase property, adjoining our Mission Chapel, to be known as St. Andrew's Mission Home. The response was really remarkable, when one considers the many appeals within the church and out of it, that flood the press and the mails. From north, east, south and west —from far away Japan, came subscriptions, large and small; from old friends and entire strangers; from various branches of the faithful Woman's Auxiliary, Section B, and the Juniors.

For this great help we are truly grateful. We thank God and take courage. We have now raised a little over $3,000.00 and have nearly $4,000.00 more to raise. Some of the equipment has been bought and installed, we have moved into the property, and find it a great convenience to the work. We are very anxious to pay off this indebtedness as soon as possible, and save 6 per cent interest on deferred payments.

It looks like imposing on good nature to again appeal to our kind friends, old and new, but we must raise these funds somehow from somewhere. If you could just peep into the work room of St. Andrews' Mission Home and see the faithful women making rugs and quilts, if you could see our dear little girls sewing, basket making, etc., and the ingenious little boys at their woodwork, you would realize that it is all well worthwhile.

Who wants to help to raise the next $1,000.00? If ten persons will subscribe $100.00 each, or twenty persons $50.00, or forty persons $25., or one hundred persons $10.00, we will have the $1,000.00. Subscriptins can be paid in full or in instalments at convenience of donor. Any amount at all will be much appreciated and gratefully acknowledged.

Yours for the Master's Kingdom in the mountains of Virginia,

REV. W. B. EVERETT, III., Rector.
Piedmont Parish. Marshall, Va.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

PIPE ORGANS.

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, INC., Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices. Particular attention given to designing organs for memorials.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 209 East Franklin Street. Richmond, Va.

CHURCH LINEN.

PURE IRISH LINEN at wholesale prices for Church Guilds, Rectors and others. Samples on request.

MARY FAWCETT.
115 Franklin St., New York City.

ROOMS—WASHINGTON.

VISITORS TO WASHINGTON ACCOMMODATED with comfortable rooms in private home. Reasonable rates. Private bath. Mrs. W. A. Masker, 2751 Macomb Street. N. W.

OLD ENVELOPES.

WANTED—Old Envelopes from letters written between 1845 and 1874. Do not remove the stamps from the envelopes Highest prices paid. GEORGE HAKES, 290 Broadway, New York.

CONFEDERATE STAMPS.

WANTED—Confederate Stamps, also United States Stamps used before 1870. Collections purchased. Higest prices paid. GEORGE HAKES, 290 Broadway, New York.

STAINED GLASS

JAMES POWELL & SONS (Whitefriars), Ltd., London, England—Stained Glass. Designs and estimates submitted on receipt of full particulars. Distributor ADRIAN A. BUCK, 665 Fifth Ave., New York City.

EASTER CARDS.

IMPORTED RELIGIOUS CARDS FOR EASTER AND LENT. One Dollar packages. G. L. Bender, 7421 Boyer Street, Mount Airy, Philadelphia, Pa.

AN APPEAL.

WHO WILL DONATE, OR SELL, CHEAP, or on installment plan, to very poor Mission in real need, a set of Violet, or Red Eucharistic Vestments; also set, or part set, embroidered Stoles? Address "Mission", care of Southern Churchman.

BOOKS.

THE LORD ABIDETH. A helpful book on the Bible. Inspiration, Criticism. Highly endorsed. $1.00. Longmans, Green & Co., New York.

FOR SALE.

SUMMER HOME IN SOUTHWEST PART OF VERMONT. Modern seven room frame house. Slate roof. Double garage; fruit trees; private bathing and fishing. Address L. E. LACKEY, Winter Park, Florida.

SITUATION WANTED.

CHURCH WORKER.

INFORMATION DESIRED CONCERNING an opportunity in Church work where the services of a trained and educated layman are needed. No objection to traveling. Subscriber is at liberty to refer to the Bishop of the Diocese. Address "S-4" care of Southern Churchman

WANTED, BY REFINED, EDUCATED woman, with fifteen year old daughter, position in office, or home department, of some good accredited school, beginning September 1st, where daughter could enter until she graduates. Address 72341, care of Southern Churchman.

WANTED, BY CULTURED WOMAN OF twenty-seven, a position for the summer. Would prefer a trip helping in caring for elderly person, or semi-invalid, or children; but would accept any suitable work at summer camp, or elsewhere. Address "M-1", care of Southern Churchman.

WANTED — SEPTEMBER FIRST BY Churchwoman with experience, position as matron, house mother or proctor in school. References. Address "K", care of Southern Churchman.

HELP WANTED

YOUNG LADY, WHO CAN RUN FORD CAR, as housemother in country home. Two children, 8 and 11 years. $50.00 per month. Write with references to Mrs. Romulus Griffith, University Apartments, University Parkway, Baltimore, Md.

Deaths

QUIMBY: Entered into Life Eternal, on Friday morning, March 18, 1927, in Suffolk, Va., EDWIN MORTON COATES QUIMBY, for several years vestryman of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. He is survived by his wife, who was Mary Wrenn Jordan, and one son.

HAGER: Entered Paradise, at Max Meadows, Virginia, March 18, 1927, MRS. ELDRIDGE HERBERT HAGER, nee Cornelia Bolling Claiborne, daughter of Sterling B. Claiborne, of Amherst county. Blessed are the pure in heart."

ADDISON: Died, at Great Falls, Montana, on March 26, 1927, JOHN MERCERON ADDISON, aged 4 years and 9 months.

He was the only son of John and Mary Merceron Addison, formerly of Virginia, and a great-grandson of the late Edmund B. Addison.

CHAMBERLAYNE: On March 20th, at the residence of her brother, Mr. R. S. Chamberlayne, Sr., REBECCA, youngest daughter of the late Edwin Harvie and Sarah Madison Chamberlayne, of Richmond, Virginia.

"Asleep in Jesus; peaceful rest!
Whose waking is supremely blest."

RESOLUTIONS OF SYMPATHY.

Adopted March 30, 1927.

"Whereas God has called from his earthly labors and activities, to a higher life, EDWIN M. C. QUIMBY, a former member of the Vestry of St. Paul's P. E. Church, of Suffolk, Virginia, who served as a Vestryman of said Church for several different terms, always discharging his duties, as such, faithfully, unselfishly and well:

And whereas, this Vestry fully realizes that the Church and community have suffered a distinct and real loss in the passing away of Mr. Quimby. He was a consistent, faithful and loyal member of the Church, and a man of deep religious convictions. His activities in works having for its objects the uplift of humanity and the salvation of souls were not confined to the Church alone, but extended to and in the community in which he lived, where he lived his religion in his business and social relations with his fellow men, in sincerity and truth;

Now therefore, be it Resolved, by the Vestry of St. Paul's P. E. Church, of Suffolk, Virginia, that our sincerest sympathy be, and the same hereby is extended to the family and other loved ones of Mr. Quimby in their great loss and deep sorroy; and further, that while we feel deeply the loss from our midst of our deceased brother, yet we bow in humble submission to the will of Almighty God, Who doeth all things well: and we pray that God's healing sympathy and tenderest compassion will be vouchsafed the bereaved ones, particularly the devoted wife, and son and sisters; and that He will speak to them, heal the wounds, comfort their sorrowing hearts and give them peace.

Be it resolved further, that a copy of these resolutions be entered in the minutes of the Vestry, copies thereof be sent to the family of the deceased, and a copy thereof be published in the Southern Churchman."

VESTRY OF ST. PAUL'S P. E. CHURCH, OF SUFFOLK, VIRGINIA.
By W. E. HINES,
J. T. WITHERS,
S. M. LAWRENCE,
Committee.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

(Continued from page 16.)

The Clerical Brotherhood is meeting in the Church House, Philadelphia, every Monday morning during Lent. The speakers and topics for the April meetings are as follows:

April 4—Professor Twitmeyer, Ph. D., of the University of Pennsylvania. "Some Psychological Aspects of Religious Experiences."

April 11—Holy Week—No meeting.

April 18—The Rev. Professor J. A. Montgomery, S. T. D. "A Chinese Monk's Mission to the Land of the Franks in 1287."

April 25—Professor Guy W. Sarvis, Ph. D., of the University of Nanking, China. "Helping Toward an Understanding of China in these days of Great Confusion and Tension." Dr. Sarvis has held the chair of Sociology in China for more than twenty years.

R. R. W.

UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D. Bishop.

Crusade in Spartanburg.

A successful Crusade was conducted in the Church of the Advent, Spartanburg, the Rev. W. H. K. Pendleton, rector, from March 13 to 21, by the Rt. Rev. Theodore DuBose Bratton, D. D., Bishop of Mississippi. Bishop Bratton was formerly rector of this church. Indeed, the Church of the Advent was his only rectorate, for after serving his diaconate in missionary work in the diocese he came to this church upon his ordination to the priesthood in 1888. In 1899 he was elected rector of St. Mary's School, Raleigh, and resigned charge of the Church of the Advent to accept this position. In 1903 he was consecrated Bishop of Mississippi. The ties that bound him to his "only Church" were, therefore, tender. The friendship and affection of his former parishioners and their pride in the distinguished career of their former rector accounted in part for the enthusiastic welcome accorded him.

Thorough preparation in advance had been made for the Crusade, by the Rev. W. H. K. Pendleton, and the Crusade Organization headed by Mr. W. S. Manning, who has served the Church for many years as vestryman and warden. The week immediately preceding the Crusade was observed as "Intensive Week", with a well attended daily service called the "Morning Watch", from 8:15 to 8:30 A. M., designed for business men on the way to their offices and students and teachers on the way to school. In addition to this there were numerous other services and prayer meetings and frequent celebrations of the Holy Communion.

Each day of the Crusade was begun with the early celebration of the Holy Communion and services were held at 10 A. M. and 8 P. M. Morning and evening subjects were arranged in a series. The morning addresses were simple and directed primarily to members of the Episcopal Church, and dealt with subjects particularly interesting to them, but these services also were attended by many members of other congregations who were attracted by the ripe scholarship, the liberal and sympathetic attitude and the deep spirituality which pervaded them.

The subjects for the Sunday services and for the evenings were designed to apply "the fundamentals of Christianity to the religious life of personal evangelism".

The interest and attendance constantly increased, and on the closing Sunday the Church, which seats about five hundred and sixty people was so crowded that chairs had to be brought in to accommodate the congregation.

Many cards of rededication were signed by members of the congregation. These will be used by the rector and his organization in their efforts to conserve the results of the Crusade.

The newspapers of the city, the Herald and Journal, morning and afternoon papers, were most generous in the space devoted to the Crusade. On the closing day the morning paper, the Herald, expressed the appreciation of the city and paid tribute to the Crusade in a gracious and forceful editorial.

LOUISIANA.

Rt. Rev. Davis Sessums, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Wise Does Valuable Work In Shreveport.

The noon-day Lenten services in St. Mark's Church, Shreveport, the Rev. James M. Owen, D. D., rector, were opened this year by the Rt. Rev. James Wise, D. D. The value of his contribution to the work of the Church in the section of which Shreveport is the center is shown by the fact that he never had less than three hundred in his congregation and the attendance ranged as high as four hundred and forty in spite of the fact that the church is half a mile from the business center and people had to come largely in automobiles. Besides the large congregations that heard him daily, his addresses, published in the three daily papers of Shreveport, reached a reading congregation of forty thousand people. In spite of the large noon-day congregations, the attendance at the regular parish Lenten services was exceptionally good. The value of Bishop Wise's missionary efforts was deepened by the fact that he preached at Marshall, Texas, and at Mansfield, Louisiana, in addition to his work at Shreveport.

O.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Lenten Observance.

Lenten observance in this Diocese seems to be unusually intensive, and, so far as can be learned, unusually effective.

Several "Community" efforts have been referred to in previous letters. Of these, the noon-day series at Holy Trinity Church is reported to be drawing larger congregations than in previous years. The service is broadcast daily by WBCC, and many favorable reports from those listening in have come, some from as far as Baltimore. An organ recital is given on Tuesdays at the close of the service.

Of the noon-day services at Albee's Theatre very good reports are given. These meetings are under the auspices of the Brooklyn Federation of Churches, and Bishop Stires was the preacher at the first service. The series began a week earlier than usual (this is the sixth year) and the attendance has been better than heretofore. It is said that the devotional part of the service has been more effective than in previous years.

In Flushing, community noon-day services on Wednesdays and Fridays are being held in St. George's Church, the Rev. George F. Taylor, rector, for the third year, and the effort made last year to appeal especially to the business community, in the midst of which St. George's is located, is being repeated with increasing success. A devotional solo is sung while the people assemble; prayers are read by a local denominational minister as "chaplain", using the late Dean Rousmanier's compilations. The address is by one of our own clergy. Boxes for offerings are provided and the gifts are received for the support of the Hospital at Fort Yukon, Alaska. This offering will probably support this hospital for the forty days of Lent, at its reported average expense of $10 per day. The Lion's Club and other two orgaizations have attended the service in a body, and a committee of business men has been formed to advertise the service.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Ross Harrison Flanagin, rector of St. Paul's Church at Oaks in Upper Providence Township, Montgomery County, Pa., has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Luke's Church, Newtown, Bucks County, and will assume his new charge on May 1. Mr. Flanagin succeeds at Newtown the Rev. G. H. Dennison, who is a member of the clergy staff of St. Mark's Church, Philadelphia.

The Rev. Harry J. Stretch, formerly of the Diocese of Long Island, and now of the Holy Cross Mission in Liberia, has been home on furlough for several months, after three years' service in Liberia. He is now preparing, after a satisfactory physical examination, to return to Liberia June 1. While in this country Mr. Stretch has been connected with Donaldson School, Ilchester, Md., and recently has been in charge of St. Albans' Missions, St. Albans, L. I.

The Rev. J. C. Wagner, rector of the Good Shepherd Memorial Church, Petersburg, Va., has resigned his cure and will minister to the vacant churches in the Diocese of Southern Virginia. Mr. Wagner will begin his new duties immediately after Easter.

The Rev. George R. Savage, of St. Albans, Glenburnis, Md., has resigned to take effect April 30, and will reside in Annapolis, Maryland.

The Rt. Rev. Hiram R. Hulse, D. D., Bishop of Cuba, will assist Bishop Stires in Long Island for two months from April 3.

The Rev. Dr. William Bartlett Beach, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Scranton, Pa., has accepted a call to the Church of Our Saviour, Jenkintown, Pa. He will succeed the Rev. Dr. Robert B. W. Hutt, who resigned four months ago to accept a position as assistant professor of philosophy at Trinity College, Hartford, Conn.

The Rev. Robert A. Mayo, who was for twenty-five years rector of Christ Church, West River, Md., is living in Alexandria, Va.

The address of the Rev. W. L. Botkin is changed from Cimarron, Kansas, to 313 South Eighteenth Street, Parsons, Kansas.

The Rev. J. R. Marley Cass has resigned as rector of St. Peter's Church, Ellicott City, Md., effective March 31.

The Rev. Walter E. Bently, of New York City, has been holding a week's preaching mission in St. Luke's, Norfolk. Mr. Bently held a successful mission in Trinity Church, Portsmouth, in January of this year.

The Rev. Clarence Stuart McClellan, Jr., rector of Calvary Church, Fletcher, near Asheville, N. C., is planning a trip around the world within the near future, and will spend much time in the Holy Land.

ORDINATIONS.

On Friday, March 25, in All Saints' Church, Lakeland, Fla., the Rt. Rev. John D. Wing, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of South Florida, ordained G. L. G. Thomas as deacon. The candidate was presented by the rector, the Rev. G. I. Hiller; the sermon was preached by the Rev. Frank M. Brunton, of Bartow, and the litany was read by the Rev. James H. Davet, of Winter Haven.

In Grace Church, Estherville, Iowa, the Rev. Wallace Essingham was advanced to the priesthood on Tuesday, March 8, by the Rt. Rev. T. N. Morrison, D. D., Bishop of Iowa. The Very Rev. Marmaduke Hare, D. D., Dean of Trinity Cathedral, Davenport, was the celebrant and the Rev. Cuthbert F. Hinton, rector of St. John's Church, Mason City, was the preacher. The Rev. E. H. Rudd, S. T. D., of Iowa Falls, and the Rev. John E. Flockhart, of Dubuque, acted as presenters, and the Rev. Alan O. Birchenough, of Harlan, read the litany.

The Rev. Mr. Essingham was a former Congregational minister and was confirmed in Trinity Cathedral, Davenport, February 9, 1926, and ordained deacon there September 5. Since last Whitsunday he has been in charge of Grace Church, Estherville, and continues there as priest in charge. He has also been appointed by the Bishop to raise money to build the church at Ames, where the Iowa State College is located.

The Bell Book and Stationery Co.

ENGRAVED WEDDING ANNOUNCEMENTS
VISITING CARDS.
Fifth Street between Broad and Grace
RICHMOND, VA.

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.

Richmond, Virginia

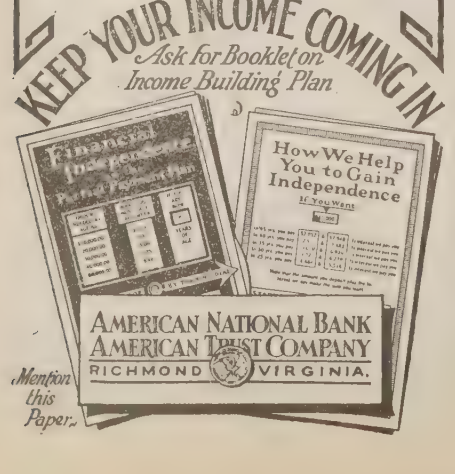
THE SAFE EXECUTOR

Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock $1,000,000.00
Surplus earned $1,500,000.00
Held in trust $30,000,000. (plus)



EARN $25 WEEKLY SPARE TIME
Writing for newspapers, magazines. Experience unnecessary. Details FREE. Press Syndicate, 1303 St. Louis, Mo.

"TRY AN' BEAT IT!"

If you will deposit each week so small an amount as $5.00 in the American's Income Building Plan, in 25 years you will have $14,000.00 in prime First Mortgage Bonds yielding $72.00 per month and $96.10 in cash.

We will gladly explain this simple plan to you.

INCORPORATED 1882

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,398,462.62

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer
J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm . P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

A Complete Store of shops and --- more --- an Institution

Miller & Rhoads

THE SHOPPING CENTER

Richmond - Virginia

QUALITY CHICKS
Chicks from winter laying, farm raised, mature stock, S. C. W. Leghorns, R. I. Reds, Barred Rocks, White Orpingtons, Anconas, Black Jersey Giants, White Wyandottes, White Plymouth Rocks, Black Minorcas, Pekin and Indian Runner Ducks; $15 per 100 up. Live Delivery guaranteed. Parcel Post prepaid. Hatching eggs $8.00 per 100 up. Several breeds rabbits. Circular free. Shipments will be made from one of our nearest associated hatcheries.
Glen Rock Nursery and Stock Farm, Ridgewood, N. J.

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC., 308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.
QUALITY—SERVICE

The South's Best Book Store

HUNTER & CO.

105 E. Broad Street
Richmond, Va.
Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen.
Prompt and Reliable Service.

Clear The Pores Of Impurities With Cuticura Soap

Soap, Ointment, Talcum sold everywhere.

SYDNOR & HUNDLEY'S STOCK REDUCTION SALE

Complete Suites and Hundreds of Occasional Prices at

25 Per Cent, 33 1-3 Per Cent and 50 Per Cent Reductions.

7th at Grace Richmond, Va.

A NATIONAL CHURCH PAPER FOR ALL THE FAMILY.

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS FRUSTRA NISI 1835

The Empty Tomb

"He is not here,---he is risen as he said :: Come, see the place where the Lord lay."

"Because I live, ye also shall"
O word transcending earthly bliss!
He lives,---and I with Him shall live
Can any joy be more than this?

Now sweeps through all the world, a prayer:
"Come Lord!---and Life anew shall bloom;
As first the Easter morn was fair
When Mary saw Thine empty tomb."

—Martha E. Pettus

EDUCATIONAL

The Virginia Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded.
Established 1892.
For terms and information address
MISS M. GUNDRY.

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-eighth year of this School for Boys opened September 15, 1926. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. Hoxton, B. A., Principal.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The Requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA.

prepares boys at cost for college and university. Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountians of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., Rector.

St. Hilda's Hall

Charles Town, W. Va.
Near Harper's Ferry.

Chevron School for Girls. Episcopal Junior College—four year' High School and two years' College Courses. Elective Music, Art. Business, Athletics. Limited numbers.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

The One Hundred and Fourth Session
Opened Wednesday, Sept. 15, 1926.

For catalogs and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria Va.

CHATHAM EPISCOPAL INSTITUTE,
Box 13, Chatham, Virginia.

College preparatory school for girls. Certificate privileges. Also two years of advanced Academic work. Special courses Music, Art, Expression, Home Economics Modern equipment. 15 Acres campus Pool, Golf. Terms moderate. 33rd session September 22, 1926.

Bishop of Diocese of Southern Virginia President of Board.

For catalogue address
MABEL ELEANOR STONE
Principal.

National Cathedral School

A Home and Day School for Girls.
The Bishop of Washington, President Board of Trustees. Jessie C. McDonald, M. S., Principal. Helen L. Webster, Ph. D., Academic Head. Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY, Publishers,
112 North Fifth Street, - Richmond, Va.

LEWIS C. WILLIAMS.....President
REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Associate Editor
MISS FENTON WILLIAMSON News Editor
MISS SUSAN C. COOKE, Circulation Dept.
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00 Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful.....	4
Editorials	5-6
The Pulpit of the American Church	7
A message from Shanghi Christians	8
The Church and the Young People's Work—The Rev. Karl M. Block, D. D.	9
Christianity and the Community—The Rev. R. Cary Montague	11
Letters to the Editor	12
Church Intelligence	12
Family Department	17
Children's Department	19
Personal Notes	23

St. Stephen's College

An Undergraduate Church College for men.

There are four curricula—Classical, Literary, Scientific and Social Scientific.

For tution $250.00 a year; foo a room furnished and heated $150.00 a year; for board in hall $250.00 a year; a total of $650.00.

Address: BERNARD IDDINGS BELL, President

Annandale-on-Hudson, N. Y. (Railway Station, Barrytown, N. Y.)

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesvile; St. Margaret's School, Tapphannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.)

(About gifts or bequests, address the Dean, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR BOYS.
Richmond, Virginia.

Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 60 pupils.

RATE $700.00.

Reduction to sons of Clergymen, teachers and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., Headmaster.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

St. Agnes' Episcopal School

Alexandria, Virginia.

Boarding and Day School for Girls on Braddock Heights overlooking the Potomac River.

On the interurban trolley and bus lines between Washington and Alexandria.

Athletics and open air life; sixteen-acre campus. Primary, Intermediate, General and College Preparatory Courses. Music.

For information apply to
THE PRINCIPAL.

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University.

For catalog address
The Dean.

HOBART COLLEGE, Geneva, N. Y

A Church College for men, founded 1822. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

Saint Mary's School

A Junior College.
Rev. Warren W. Way, A.M., Rector.

An Episcopal School for Girls. Four years High School and two years College Courses. Accredited. Special courses: Music, Art, Expression, Home Economics, Business.

20 Acre Campus, Gymnasium, Field Sports New, Indoor, Tiled Swimming Pool

Advent session opens September 14, 1926. For catalogue address

A. W. Tucker, Bus. Mgr.,
Box 19. Raleigh, N. C.

St. Albans

The National Cathedral School for Boys

Thorough Preparation for Leading Universities splendid equipment, unexcelled location on Mt. St. Alban overlooking Washington.

Eight years' course. Athletics for Every Boy.

Address:
WILLIAM H. CHURCH, Head Master,
Washington D. C.

The Life Eternal.

The teaching of the New Testament about immortality is not quite what many people seem to think. Its main emphasis is not on survival after death, going on with our personality unimpaired after the shock of dissolution, but upon experience of a kind of life over which death has no power whatever because time has none either. It is the life eternal, the changeless abiding fullness of good which is the life that God lives, the life that transcends all the vicissitudes and illusions of sense. To obtain this life now, at least in some measure, is the very object of the faith and self-surrender whereby we commit ourselves to Him who has brought life and immortality to light. It will not be a new life that awaits us on the further side of death, but the life we already enjoy in communion with Him, only fuller, sweeter, infinitely more glorious to our enlarging vision. "Wherefore comfort one another with these words."—Church of England Newspaper.

A Family Prayer.

Lord, behold our family here assembled. We thank Thee for the place in which we dwell, for the love that unites us, for the peace accorded us this day, for the hope with which we expect the morrow; for the health, the work, the food, and the bright skies that make our lives delightful; for our friends in all parts of the earth. Purge out of every heart the lurking grudge. Give us grace and strength to forbear and to persevere. Offenders, give us the grace to accept and forgive offenders. Forgetful ourselves, help us to bear cheerfully the forgetfulness of others. Give us courage and faith and the quiet mind. Spare to us our friends, soften us to our enemies. Bless us, if it may be, in all our innocent endeavors. If it may not, give us strength to encounter that which is to come that we be brave in peril, constant in tribulation, temperate in wrath and in all changes of fortune, down to the gates of death, loyal and loving one to another. As the clay to the potter, as the windmill to the wind, as children of their sire we beseech of Thee this help and mercy for Christ's sake.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

Richmond Trust Company

3%

ON SAVINGS.

BANKING—TRUSTS—REAL ESTATE

Capital $1,000,000.00

Main at Seventh Richmond, Virginio..

THE "CHRISTIAN LIFE" SERIES

SUNDAY SCHOOL LITERATURE

Unsectarian and True to the Fundamentals of the Christian Faith.

THE QUARTERLIES are real helps—comparing Scripture with Scripture, enlightening on spiritual and dispensational lines.

THE PAPERS are interesting and spiritual. They bring messages of life, comfort, and blessing. Well Illustrated.

Helps for Teachers and Scholars

Samples of the Full Line sent FREE on request

UNION GOSPEL PRESS, Box 680, Cleveland, Ohio.

CHRIST IS RISEN!

The flowers, the birds, the grass and trees are bursting with gladness because of this fact.

It is Easter time, the time of hope and the time of promise. At Easter, if at any time in the whole year, every Christian should think of His supreme sacrifice, and its glorious consummation in the Resurrection.

How grateful every heart should be!

The Near East is the land of Christ, and the Resurrection—and today, where He lived, died and rose again, are thirty-five thousand orphan children in America's care. Their parents died because of their allegiance to Him. Will you help to keep their children alive? They have no friend but you.

In gratefulness for the Resurrection, mail your Easter check to Near East Relief, OLIVER J. SANDS, Chairman, Southern Headquarters, 309 American National Bank Building, Richmond, Virginia.

BURNS and SCALDS

Stop the throbbing and smarting at once with a soothing touch of

Resinol

"Palmer's book is a wonderful contribution to the subject," says Bishop Darst.

THE MINISTRY OF LAYMEN

A Plea for Lay Evangelism

By

LEON C. PALMER.

Over 2,000 copies sold before edition was off the press.

Postpaid: Single copies, 25c.; four for $1.00; nine for $2.00.

From

The BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW

202 S. Nineteenth St., Philadelphia.

BIG PROFITS

For Your Church Organization

The Handy Household Helper

Write for full information

METAL SPONGE SALES CORP.,

Dept. G, Lehigh Ave, & Mascher St.,

Philadelphia.

A PARSON AT LARGE

Being an Account of Mason Locke Weems, George Washington's Quaint Biographer, and his Relation to the American Episcopate

BY JERRY WALLACE

"It is splendid."—Bishop Murray.

"A real contribution to the literature about Parson Weems."—Walter B. Norris.

"I hope it will be read by a great many people."—Lawrence C. Wroth.

"It will help to correct many errors with regard to the late Mason Locke Weems."—Albert Bushnell Hart.

"A little book of value."—William E. Barton.

PRICE, 50 CENTS

Coe Bros., Book Dealers,

Springfield, Illinois.

EVERYTHING FOR THE CHURCH

J. & R. Lamb
23-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED WOOD · METAL · ETC.

Dewey's
EST. 1857
MATURED
WINES
for Sacramental Use
Affidavit Blanks and Price Lists Mailed on Request
H. T. Dewey & Sons Co.,
138 Fulton St., N. Y. C.

WOODY ART GLASS SHOP
Art Stained and Leaded Glass
Church Windows a Specialty
402 East Marshall St.
Richmond, Va.

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS
Largest stock in the South. We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival
The Couper Marble Works
(Established 79 years.)
204-296 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

Real Estate Loans
REASONABLE RATES AND TERMS
SOUTHERN BOND AND MORTGAGE COMPANY, INC.,
627 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.

R. GEISSLER, INC.,
56 W. 8th STREET, NEW YORK, N.Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER
FABRICS + WINDOWS

Church and Sunday School Furniture
THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY,
Hickery, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue.

WINSTON-INTERNATIONAL
BLACK FACE TYPE BIBLES
The Only Self-Pronouncing Black Face Type Bibles Published
Best for Young and Old—Home and School—Teachers and Students
Send for Illustrated Catalog
THE JOHN C. WINSTON CO., Publishers
American Bible Headquarters
455 WINSTON BUILDING PHILADELPHIA

XANTHINE
Hair Restorative
Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.
Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.
XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

The Sargent Camps For Girls
Peterboro, New Hampshire
Exceptional equipment for riding, boating, tennis and all other outdoor sports. Sargent Club for young Woman over 20. Come and stay for two weeks or more. Number limited. For booklet address
MRS. C. L. SCHARDER, Director,
38 Everett St., Cambridge, Mass.

Washington Cathedral
A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation
• • •
THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work of Missionary Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the Cathedral Church.
Chartered under Act of Congress.
Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.
Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.
• • •
Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

Church Furniture
Pews · Pulpits · Chancel Furniture
Sunday School Seating
American Seating Company
General Offices 1029 Lycton Bldg., CHICAGO.
Catalogues on Request.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"He is risen from the dead, and lo, He goeth before you."

Personal glorification will decrease, even to the vanishing point, as we increase in glorifying God.

It is a great thing to be taken out of the miry clay, but it is a better thing not to fall into it.—R. R. Salliens.

"The earth would be still a paradise if we had the art of enjoying it, and did not turn it into a curse to ourselves by our sins and passions."

I look unto the radiant face of Jesus,
For there my heart can rest, my fears are stilled;
And there is joy, and love, and light for darkness,
And perfect peace, and every hope fulfilled.
—Selected.

The prime evidence of that Resurrection is not in books, not even in the Gospels. It is in the patience of the Christian martyrs, in the undefeated joy of Christian mourners, in the supernatural holiness of Christian lives. Jesus Christ is not a dead hero. He is a living Lord. This is the day that the Lord hath made. We will rejoice and be glad in it!—The Living Church.

The secret of happiness in human relations is the steady cult of the good points in our loved ones and the systematized atrophy, in relation to them, of our critical powers. It is only in our Divine relationships that we can turn the fullest gaze upon the Object of our love and be content.—Selected.

"In Christ God found men, and in Christ men found God." Let a man once discover that for himself, and there is no traditionalist in the land who can speak with more commanding authority, with freer spiritual assurance, and to greater spiritual conclusions than he."—Dr. Raymond Calkins.

It is a great thing for every child of God to learn and fully understand what it means to be one of many; not the one, but only one. When we come to understand that God has millions of lives just as necessary and just as precious as ours, then we shall learn to give place to our brethren and keep rank in the host of God.—A. B. Simpson.

Behold the Lamb! Ye heavens ring exulting!
Behold Him, only Lord of Life and Death.
Behold Him now! The grave bands rent asunder!
Behold Him, mighty King of Heaven and Earth.
And all this glory our Redeemer beareth—
That e'en was with Him ere the world began,
Whose, whose shall also be that glory with Him?
God grant it shall be yours and mine!

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., APRIL 16, 1927. No. 16.

THE GROWING EASTER MESSAGE

THE OBSERVANCE OF EASTER IS NO LONGER CONFINED TO CHURCHES, and strictly religious bodies. The cut appearing on this page is taken from a railroad magazine and was used by the General Passenger Agent, on the page on which he sent a message to his subordinates. These evidences of the entrance of Christianity into every-day business affairs are becoming more and more frequent, and the message of Easter is perhaps the most important for the business life of the world, because the significance of this season is the linking together of life and death. It was felt by St. Paul that the outstanding feature of Christianity was the Resurrection, to use his own words, "If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain, yea, and we are found false witnesses of God". The world today needs more than ever to have impressed upon it the continuity of existence. We believe that the appalling numbers of suicides, especially among young people, is due to the feeling that death ends all. It was the death of Christ, and the proof of His continuing life, that made Christianity. It is that conquest of the grave that keeps it vital today, and it is certainly encouraging to see this thought carried to the employees of a great railroad system by one of their officials.

All hail this joyous Easter morn,
When earth arises newly born.
The daffodil has left the mold
To praise the Lord with lips of gold;

The butterfly its coffin rends
And to the sunlit sky ascends;
And every bush and tree and clod
Uplifts an offering to God.

Salute this glorious Easter day
When angels rolled the stone away,
And from the dark and lowly door
The Lord arisen, came of yore,

His feet among the lilies white,
His garments aureoled with light,
And in His hands for thee and me
The gift of immortality.

—Minna Irving.

THE DERIVATION OF THE WORD LENT is puzzling to many good Church people, who search for it in some religious practice. It is quite amazing that the most important of Church seasons should have a name that has no connection whatever with anything ecclesiastical. Lent was the old English name for Spring, being derived from the same root as "long". The similarity between lengthen and Lenten is readily seen. The application of this name to spring comes from the lengthening of the days at that season. The observance of a fast preceding Easter is of very ancient origin in the Church, dating back to the second century, although the period in early times was of much shorter duration than at present. The Easter season, as well as the Feast of Pentecost (Whitsunday) were the favorite times for baptisms, and a preceding fast was especially enjoined upon the candidates for this Sacrament. It was not until nearly the middle of the Christian era that Lent acquired its present number of days.

IT IS THE IRONY OF FATE IN THE HANDS OF A MOB that one of the victims who suffered death at Nanking should have been Dr. John E. Williams, because he was the acknowledged leader of those who would have had the Chinese placed in control of Christian enterprises of all sorts without delay. He had been one of the chief advocates of this mission policy for many years. It is, however, one of the tragedies of riots, that they orten sweep away the best defenses of the people, whom they think they are serving. It is just this fact that made it so important for the missionaries to obey the calls of the government officials and proceed at once to a safe place. Dr. Williams' voice, while living, could do much for Christian policy toward China, but his dead body is the strongest kind of argument for military intervention, and it might easily have been the same with others, had they not left their posts in time. The fate of China is hanging in the balance and missionary activity will certainly have to be suspended for months to come, and it will be a wise policy of the Church to study the conditions carefully before making future plans.

It is announced by the Presbyterian Mission Board that they hope no indemnity will be asked of China, for the death of Dr. Williams. This is in accordance with the policy of this board. In their statement on the subject, they say that such indemnities are usually collected from innocent persons, and do the missionary cause far more harm than good.

THE SAVIOUR'S COMMAND TO HEAL THE SICK as well as to preach the Gospel is sometimes forgotten by many Church people, although it is distinctly included in the Commission given to the twelve apostles. In the second verse of the ninth chapter of St. Luke's Gospel we read: "And He sent them to preach the Kingdom of God, and to heal the sick." With such words from the lips of our Lord before our eyes, every attempt to wipe out disease becomes a religious adventure, as well as a scientific experiment. For this reason the report from Paris that an "ultra-violet ray sun that is never clouded shines on an artificial sand beach, in a basement of Paris", for the benefit of tubercular children, has a significance for the Christian world. Tuberculosis is a devastating disease of today that is like unto leprosy of old, and any steps that will relieve its ravages should have the prayerful consideration of Christian people. There is a Prayer League whose members pray daily for God's wisdom, in guiding scientific research to a successful victory in the continual war that is going on against this plague. Any one may join The League by adding to their daily prayers such a petition.

THAT JOSEPHUS REFERRED TO JESUS OF NAZARETH in his great work on the Jewish people has been a matter of doubt ever since the discovery in Esthonia, about twenty years ago, of a copy of his writings in Greek, containing this reference. The best pinion on the subject has been that what he said of Jesus was an interpolation by some Christian copyist. Now Dr. Vacher Burch assumes the theory that Josephus first wrote in Aramaic, and had the reference to Jesus in his original work, but that when it was copied for Roman consumption he omitted this portion. There is some argument for this viewpoint, since it would naturally have made his writings unpopular in his time to have expressed any belief in Jesus. More light may be thrown on this subject by discoveries that are likely to be made in the next few years in Palestine.

THE DESPAIR OF THE FIRST EASTER DAY

Today when we begin the happy celebration of a joyous Easter with the early Communion services, it is hard to realize that the first Easter was a day of doubt and despondency to that little group who had been scattered by the arrest in the Garden of Gethsemane on the previous Thursday night.

The empty tomb that was found early in the morning of the first day of the week had no re-assuring significance to those startled women who first saw it. The only thought that came to their mind was of another grief. Not satisfied with scourging, scoffing and crucifixion, the enemies of their Lord had now stolen the body, so that they could not even pay the last homage to the dead! So thought Mary Magdalene as she stood weeping outside the empty tomb, and asked the supposed gardener the despondent question, "Sir, if thou hast borne Him hence, tell me where thou hast laid Him and I will take Him away". The revelation which followed convinced her of the Saviour's risen presence, but she could not convince others, as we see from the conversation carried on by the unknown disciples late that afternoon, while they walked on the Emmaus road and were joined by the Stranger with the question, "What manner of communications are these that ye have one to another, as ye walk and are sad"? When one reads the conversation that follows, it is easy to feel the sense of gloom that overhangs those two friends, and it tis evident that they had abandoned all hope in that Messiah in whom they had "trusted that it had been He which should have redeemed Israel". They are leaving Jerusalem in despair in spite of the fact that "certain women, also of our company, made us astonished, which were early at the sepulchre when they found not His body they came saying that they had also seen a vision of angels which said that He was alive. And certain of them which were with us went to the sepulchre and found it even as the women had said, but Him they saw not".

It was not until after these two disciples had retraced their steps to Jerusalem, some seven miles or more, and joined the eleven at supper, where Jesus made His appearanc beyond all doubt, that any real Easter joy took possession of His followers. The day had been one of hurrying messengers back and forth with doubtful tidings of fear that a horrible robbery had been perpetrated and the state of mind of His followers was such that the Saviour's first words to them at the evening meal were, "Peace be unto you", to restore their confidence and calm their shattered nerves.

The very fact that we so readily assume that the glorious celebration of the resurrection began with the first hours of Easter Day is proof of the termendous strides that have been made by the thought of the conquest of death. Through nineteen centuries of Christian teachings we have been accustomed to the idea of a resurrected Lord, and unless we pause to think carefully upon the events of that first Easter and the mental attitude of those who shared in it, we do not realize that it was a day of despair, rather than of triumph.

THE WEEK'S PREACHER

THE RIGHT REVEREND CLINTON S. QUIN, D. D., is one of our younger Bishops. He was born in Louisville, Ky., received his school and college education in his native city, taking a B. L. degree from the University of Louisville, he went from there to the Theological Seminary of Virginia, where he graduated in 1908, and was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Woodcock. He served churches in Kentucky for nearly ten years, first at St. James' Church, Pewee, Valley, with adjoining missions, and then at Grace Church, Paducah. He was called to Trinity Church, Houston, Texas, in 1917, and was elected Bishop-Coadjutor the following year. He might be termed one of our preaching Bishops, as he is especially fond of holding missions and has a great gift for making them successful. He has been particularly active in furthering the Young People's Movement in the Church, and for the past few years has had charge of Young People's Conferences, first in his own Diocese and then at the Sewanee Summer School. He is a man of great energy, and of athletic tastes. A few years ago the Alumni of the Virginia Seminary played a match game of baseball with the undergraduates and beat their younger brethren with Bishop Quin "in the box".

THE PULPIT OF THE AMERICAN CHURCH

PONTIUS PILATES OF TODAY

By The Right Reverend Clinton S. Quin, D. D.

"And the voices of them and of the chief priests prevailed. And Pilate gave sentence that it should be as they required." —Luke 23:23.

THERE is no better known fact in history than the fact of the Crucifixion of the Lord Jesus Christ. Almost any audience could be interrogated concerning their knowledge of the fact of the crucifixion, and would no doubt acclaim unanimously such knowledge. If we are inquired of the same group as to their familiarity with lesser instances in our Lord's life, or with the significance of the crucifixion, there would not be as ready a response. This is not to be wondered at, for is it not the tragic things in life which catch our attention first and seem to hold it longer? The newspaper headlines telling of a big death list due to a mine disaster, or other accident, are remembered long after the next day's edition, which says first reports of the accident were greatly exaggerated. So I am assuming that you are perfectly familiar with the fact that Jesus Christ was crucified. You ought also to know the reason for this crucifixion, for I believe the same reason is responsible today for the recrucifying of those standards of life which Jesus Christ died to make real and permanent. I think it was an attitude of mind and not a race, that crucified Jesus Christ, and that the same attitude of mind crucifies the truth and right and honor over and over again, and is the greatest menace I know to happiness and worth-whileness.

It was, of course, Pontius Pilate who, lacking the courage of his convictions, gave sentence that it should be as they required, and in that act we find the attitude of mind which I contend perpetuates the crucifixion of the Christ.

His first attitude was an effort to escape personal responsibility. He did everything he knew how to evade the issue. He gave Him a change of venue, he examined Him no less than three times, saying: "I find no fault in Him," and though it is not written in the record, I can believe that he even agreed to find Jesus guilty, electing to choose Jesus, according to the Roman custom, as the prisoner to be released on the Feast day. But all of this was to no avail, if he dared not have the courage of his convictions.

Do you see that same attitude today? Is it not in the politician who disclaims responsibility for certain loose or corrupt practices in public affairs? Students disclam any responsibility for the standards of conduct on high school or university campus. Parents disclaim any responsibility for the acts of their children, and you have heard mothers and fathers exclaim in despair: "I have done everything I know how for my child, and look at the results." Church people disclaim personal responsibility for conditions which ought not to exist in any respectable community, and even though the Christian people do not predominate in number, they certainly do in influence.

We need to have the courage of our convictions regardless of the outcome. This Bishops' Crusade is an effort to get our own Church people to bear witness.

I am perfectly aware that no effort is ever made to face personal responsibility, but what there comes in mind the question of personal liberty. We are quite familiar with that clause in the Declaration of Independence where it says all men are created equal, and that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, and that among these are the rights to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness", and the guarantee of liberty always strikes a responsive cord in the human heart. Quite rightly so, for the very foundation of all law lies in the protection of those rights. Our system of jurisprudence in this country, with its criminal and civil courts was established to protect us in these rights, but there has never been made a guarantee of government, or a guarantee of God, giving us rights and privileges, but what in turn there has been exacted of us a corresponding responsibility. Being born into a family, into a neighborhood, or into a nation, we become responsible for the way we live in relationship to the people who make up that neighborhood, that family, and that nation. My personal liberty stops where it begins to interfere with your personal liberty. The ability to live presumes the liability to live right. Of course, I may refuse to exercise my right of citizenship, but it does not at all follow that I can thereby escape the responsibility of citizenship. As a matter of fact we do not, any more than the man who refuses to vote, and thus permits an unfit officer of government to be elected, escapes being governed by such an official. What I tolerate through ignorance or indifference or defiance, I permit just as certainly as if I had consented. We can no more escape the responsibility of good citizenship by refusing to live it, than Pontius Pilate could escape the responsibility for the death of Jesus Christ, by having his poor wife come out on the judgment seat pouring out the basin of water, and he then washing his hands, having the mob say that they would take the responsibility for his lack of courage.

This is a present-day menace, and it behooves you and me who profess and call ourselves after the name of Christ to accept our personal responsibility as witness bearers of His life, His cause, and His kingdom.

Now the second element entering into Pilate's judgment was one of fear. He might offend his superior and thus be demoted. He was afraid of ridicule. He was afraid of losing social prestige, and he was afraid of failure. Do you see any of these symptoms in modern society? Take the fear of not being socially acceptable. Some people will do as much today to get into a certain society as a slacker would have done in war-time to escape conscription, and I fail to see that one is any more reprehensible than the other. Business discriminates between a class of people whose society it covets, as against a class of people whose society it does not want.

The compromise by parents, and by sons and daughters, of right and propriety, indicates that the fear of not pleasing the crowd, weighs more with them than the turning of Jesus Christ's standards over to the mob to recrucify and destroy.

Does the fear of being considered prudish or peculiar interfere with our living up to our best? People say it does. A student inquirer said after visiting some of the larger colleges in the East, that the fear of being called a prude was the controlling factor in student morals. I do not believe this, but it is a statement to reckon with.

We can carry this element of fear into hundreds of avenues of experiences and we do not have to go back to our childhood to remember things we have done, because we were afraid to do otherwise, and things we have left undone because of fear. Would you and I have had the courage to face honest judgment on Jesus Christ? I believe this is a real issue of modern day life.

I am not using this story of Pilate to frighten anybody into goodness. God deliver us from that kind of religion. I am not thinking of the rewards or the punishments of a hereafter. I am not as familiar with hell as some preachers are, but I do know that there is nothing worse than the consciousness of having compromised the truth or the right, simply because we did not have the courage to do otherwise. It drives people into the mad house, it keeps them awake at night, it sends them to an early grave; it unfits them for balanced decisions in life. I simply want to put the character of Pontius Pilate before us in the light of our common experience, and then ask in all fairness which character do you admire the most, the character who lacked the courage of his convictions, or the character who rather than lift one finger to save himself, bowed his head and went to his death?

Is it possible for us to be so strong that we can have the courage of our convictions? I believe it is. I think we undertake the living of too much religion in too limited a space of time, and I am proposing a rather homely, but nevertheless practical method of building up courage.

I propose for example that we try telling the truth just for an hour a day. If you honestly try that you will find it more difficult than it sounds. Then let us not gossip about anybody, or say anything ugly or unkind about any person, unless we know it is true, and it will do some good for us to tell it. Try that for thirty minutes. If we can do it thirty minutes today, take on fifteen more minutes tomorrow. If we can't stand thirty minutes, let's make it twenty minutes tomorrow. Let us try living out the golden rule as it applies particularly to public service corporations, employees of the gas company, the electric light company, and the transportation companies, the butcher, the ice man, and the telephone girl, those people who are so awfully irritating when we are so easily irritated.

Now here is what I am after, no athlete goes into any kind of a contest to do his best, training just a few minutes before, or the day before. He trains for days, and weeks, and months getting ready. What do we Christians do? Some people go to Church once a week, some people go at least once a month, some people never fail to go to Church on Easter Day, they always go once a year, God bless them for their piety! What kind of training is that, for a man or a woman who is entering the biggest contest that has ever been staged, the contest for the right against the wrong, the clean against the unclean, for God against the forces which make life so much less than God meant it to be? I think this is what St. Paul meant when he said in training a new Christian congregation, that he could not feed them with meat, but that he would feed them with milk as babes in Christ. We undertake the living of too much religion in too limited a space of time, and without training, and if we want to build up in us the courage of our convictions, if we want to do away with the present-day attitude of trying to escape personal responsibility and the attitude of fear which hurts our witness bearing, and if we want to make real and practicable and livable the standards of Jesus Christ's life—we can do it, Christian people, if we only will make the honest effort, and may God bless us as we try.

Let this be our Easter resolution.

A MESSAGE FROM SHANGHAI CHRISTIANS

I.—The Situation.

CHINA is at present going through a gigantic upheaval, the main characteristics of which can be summarized as follows:

1. A struggle for a stronger and freer national life.

2. A struggle for a fuller and richer content in the life of the masses.

3. A struggle for a more worthy place in the family of nations.

4. A struggle towards a new cultural expression which will unite the best in our intellectual and spiritual life with the best in the modern scientific civilization.

This four-fold struggle has penetrated every phase of Chinese life today and in its onward sweep profoundly affects every form of organized effort in the country. We, Chinese Christians in Shanghai, feel acutely the challenge of this present hour. Already among us two definite trends have been greatly accentuated.

1. More than ever before, there stirs in the heart of the Chinese Christian Church the desire to find its own soul and to live its own life.

2. More than ever before, the Chinese Christian Church is experiencing a compelling sense of obligation to assume responsibility for carrying on the Christian movement in China, even though its leaders are fully conscious of their unpreparedness for the task.

II.—Our Attitude.

Christian workers in China have reacted to the present situation in various ways. Some regard this upheaval as a temporary manifestation of unrest which will soon pass away. These believe it will then be possible again to resume their life and work very largely under the conditions which prevailed before. Others have been so discouraged by the continuance of one trouble after another that they have become extremely pessimistic and can see no hope for the future. But there is another group whose hearts, while frankly filled with anxiety and perplexity, nevertheless, are moved also with hope and with a spirit of adventure because they have seen the guiding hand of God in the present situation. The future of the Christian Movement in China will depend very largely upon whether this small group of Christians will be able to maintain a faith, courage and wisdom equal to the superhuman demands of the hour.

In this crucial experience through which we are passing, we need the continued cooperations of the older Christian communions of the West and of our missionary co-workers in China. None better than ourselves realize our unpreparedness to carry on a Christian movement which thus far has been fostered largely by the Churches of the West.

In this cooperation, may we share with you our convictions as to the spirit in which we are called upon to undertake our common service.

1. As followers of Christ all of us should persistently endeavor always to let our love triumph over any sense of being misunderstood or unjustly treated, over considerations of national prestige or personal safety, over differences of opinion and over pride and prejudice.

2. Whatever happens to our institutions and programs of work, we stand still in need of your best contribution which is the sharing with us of your deepest personal experience of God through Christ.

3. We invite you to identify yourselves fully (1) with the Chinese people, in accepting the risk involved in the voluntary surrendering of your extra-territorial status and (2) with the Chinese Church, by merging your present mission organizations with it, thus bringing directly to the Church the gift of all your knowledge and experience.

4. As followers of Christ, the Prince of Peace and Goodwill, shall not missionaries and Chinese Christians unite in undertaking the ministry of sympathy, understanding and reconciliation in the midst of strained relationships of all kinds?

Above all, let us unite before God in a humble and penitent spirit and examine ourselves as to:

1. How truly Christian our own individual lives are and

2. How well prepared we are to make a worthy Christian contribution to the great human needs around us today.

III.—Some Practical Suggestions.

1. The Christian Church, if it is to make her contribution to the unfolding life of the Chinese people at the present time, must have in its own fellowship that triumphant spiritual life which is rooted in a vivid consciousness of God through Christ. Shall we not see in this period of forced interruptions to our normal work, an opportunity and call to find for ourselves, individually and in groups a deeper experience of God?

2. In the midst of these profound political, social and economic charges now going on in the country, we feel greatly perplexed as to what constitutes for us the Christian way of life today. Can we not in the coming year come together all over the country in little groups which will in a spirit of prayer and fearless inquiry seek an answer to this all important question?

3. Extraordinary occasions in life call for prompt and adventurous adjustments. The whole Christian movement in China is today facing such an occasion. We, therefore, urge

(1) That immediate representations be made by missionaries, either through deputations going back to their home countries or through other means, calling for an immediate readjustment in treaties with China on the basis of economic equality and mutual respect for each other's political and territorial sovereignty.

(2) That the mission boards send immediately representatives to China to work out with Christian leaders in this country definite measures for the placing of all branches of Christian work under the administrative charge of Chinese Christian bodies.

(3) That responsible missionary and Church leaders in China, in the meanwhile, get together to work out ways and means toward this transfer of responsibility.

4. Should not a meeting of responsible Christian workers in China, be called immediately to study the present situation and fearlessly examine into their work with a nation-wide perspective and across denominational lines, in order to determine which enterprises within the Christian movement should at all costs be mantained, with a view to the concentration of our resources in men and money on those enterprises which are making the most vital contributions to the life of the Chinese people.

In concluding this word to our missionary co-workers, we wish again to express to them our deep appreciation of the noble work which they have been carrying on in China, to assure them of our continued trust and affection, and to record herewith our conviction that they have a permanent and fruitful place in the service of Christ among our people.

THE CHURCH AND THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK

Edited by the Reverend Karl Morgan Block, D. D.

AT THE Fifth Annual Conference of the Young People's Fellowship in the Diocese of Western New York, the closing address was made by Mr. James T. Gunning. It concerns itself definitely, with the implications of the four central foundation principles of the Young People's Societies of the Church.

At this Conference a Preparation Service for the Corporate Communion was conducted by Bishop Brent and Group Conferences were held on the subject of Worship, Service and Organization.

Another special guest was the Rev. Herbert Hawkins, Order of the Holy Cross, who made two addresses, one on "Renewed Allegiance", and the other on "Liberia".

The address of Mr. Gunning is quoted in full:

"GO FORWARD."

We have now come to the final meeting of the conference and in a very short while will bid one another good-bye and the Fifth Annual Diocesan Conference will be over, and will have become but a memory. For two days you have been exchanging ideas and talking over methods; you have been hearing what other Fellowships have done and what they plan to do in the future. I trust that each of you have high hopes and plans for the year that lies ahead, all as a result of what you have seen and heard and experienced here. For a conference does just that—sends us away with eager hearts and minds and souls, with fresh courage and new resolve, sends us forth, as our conference theme expresses it—"With Renewed Allegiance".

I have been asked to talk to you at this closing session on the topic, "Go Forward". As I have thought about it, I have been wondering what you would want me to say before you return to your homes, where, as the program suggests, "An opportunity not a task", awaits you. And I have felt that perhaps the best I could do would be to ask you to consider with me very earnestly and yet very honestly and sincerely, OURSELVES—You and I—First as individuals and then as members of this great movement which we call the Young People's Fellowship.

Will you let me be personal for a few minutes? What I shall say to you comes out of my own experience. I wouldn't venture to suggest anything that did not result from what I myself have tried and tested. Please, then, when I say I, it is not because I am egotistical, but it is because I want you to know what has helped me with the thought that what has helped me may be of some assistance to you.

First of all then, looking at yourself as an individual and yet as a member of the Young People's Fellowship, ask yourself this question, "Am I in sympathy with the purpose of the Fellowship"? What is the purpose of the Fellowship? We might spend an hour discussing how we would express the purpose, but I think if we narrowed it down and yet left it sufficiently broad to be all inclusive, we could phrase it something like this, "To help young people live a Christian way of life", or as some of our Southern young people's organizations put it, "To increase our knowledge of Jesus Christ, so that we may be the better able to follow His perfect example".

Now with that purpose in mind will you proceed to answer my question for yourselves: "Are you in sympathy with the purpose thus expressed? Are you trying to live a Christian way of life? Are you trying to know Jesus, as well as know about Him? Are you trying to increase your knowledge of His life and teachings? Are you trying to follow His example so that you may live as He lived and as He would have you live—at home, at school or work; at play, in private life as well as in the public view: every day in the week and not alone on Sundays.

Are you in sympathy with that purpose? Your answers to that question determines largely, I was about to say wholly, your relationship to the Young People's Fellowship and especially to your own particular Fellowship. If you are in sympathy with this purpose, you will strive to realize it, first in your own life and then in and through the lives of your comrades, because you and they together form your parish Fellowship.

And then you face another question, "How can I realize that purpose"? What can I say, do and perform that will help me live a Christian way of life? And to that question the Fellowship has an answer, an answer which comes out of the experience of many groups of young people all over this country. What is it? Haven't we found right out of our own experience here in Western New York during the last five years that the Fellowships which have been most helpful are those which have used Prayer and Worship, Study, Service and Fellowship, in a balanced program of activities Prayer and Worship, Study, Service and Fellowship if we consider these four, if we consider Prayer and Worship as one, we might term the Four Horsemen of the Fellowship, because, like the Horsemen, they point us to a Christian way of life.

We talk of these very glibly in connection with the corporate life of the Fellowship. You heard these words, no doubt, many times yesterday during the conferences. This afternoon for just a few minutes, however, will you turn your thoughts to the use of Prayer and Worship, Study, Service and Fellowship in your own individual lives as we consider the answer to that second question which I suggested, "How can I realize the purpose of the Fellowship in my own life"?

Prayer and Worship, is the first of our Four Horsemen. Dr. Cabot in his great book, "What Men Live By", says this about Worship: "Whenever beauty overwhelms us, whenever wonder silences our hopes and worries, whenever awe inspires us, we are close to worship, so, unless we are blind to beauty, deaf to the call of truth, incapable of awe and wonder, we are always in danger of falling into worship as the tired mortal falls asleep."

Falling into worship—all of us have had that experience. In Church as we have listened to the organist playing perhaps Handel's Largo with its exquisite beauty; or perhaps as we have joined with the others in the congregation in singing hymns which we love; or perhaps while listening to a sermon which was particularly helpful.

Dr. Cabot also says that an analogy to public worship and what it can mean can be found in our feelings on Commencement Day of school or college. What feelings well up within—gratitude, loyalty, enthusiasm, all fostered by what we term the "school spirit". So it ought to be—so it can be with our Church. Worship and Prayer are outlets for aspiration. They renew our strength and refresh our tired souls as sleep refreshes the tired body.

Through Worship, in our hymns of praise and thanksgiving, which might be compared to our school songs, we show our gratitude and deepen our loyalty and throw wide open the doors of our souls that God may enter and find therein a temple wherein He may dwell. The great Roosevelt Dam in Arizona holds back millions of gallons of water and keeps this water from flowing naturally on its way. It is not beyond possibility that some day that dam might burst and cause tremendous damage, but the builders didn't refuse to build it on that account. They were not thinking of what the Dam would do if it broke—they were thinking of the thousands of acres which would be changed from desert to a marvelously fertile countryside. So it is with you and I, if only we would use those instincts and emotions which God has given us, expressing them rather than repressing and holding back. Wonder, awe, beauty, worship when expressed in our lives, make it much more easy to find and know our God.

And then there comes Prayer. There is no only way for all of us. Each must find out for ourselves the way most helpful—you may require a stated time, like Daniel of old, and a book of prayers and a quiet place for meditation. St. Augustine calls prayer "the holy experiment" and it is that—an experiment which all must make some time or other if we would have the experience of talking with God. "The ways to God are different, but not longer ways, and there is a way for every one".

One thing has helped me—or rather let me tell you of two helps. The first is this—before you pray, kneel down or lie down and speak or say nothing for a moment or two, but collect your thoughts and fix them on God, or if you can't do that, fix them on the one thing that helps you most. Dr. John R. Mott told a friend of mine, who thought she had lost her faith, to take the few things, or perhaps only the one thing she did believe, and act as though that were true, and she would come out all right. And she did, and I know of no more Christ-like life than that which she lives today. So as you get ready for daily prayer, before you utter your prayer, concentrate all your thoughts on what you do believe and you will find yourself in a frame of mind which makes praying easier. Perhaps repeating the words of a familiar hymn will help do it. You will find out by trying what helps most.

And then the second way that has helped me is to pray in the morning before I get up. Is it better to ask God for grace and wisdom and strength as we go forth to our daily occupations, or to come home at night and tell Him of our weakness that day? You are saying both, but of the two the morning watch is much more helpful.

Prayer and Worship is our first horseman. Study, or as it has been expressed Study and Thought, is our second Horseman, pointing out the way of a Christian life. Study. When Jesus gave us the new Commandment He said, "Thou shalt love the Lord Thy God with all Thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind". With all thy mind, and through study and thought we learn to love God with our minds. This opens a vast field. Yesterday afternoon in your conferences you found many suggestions for programs and topics to take back to your Fellowships that the way of study might be used. But it is about study and thought in our personal life that we are thinking now. I want to offer two suggestions and the first is that you read at least one book a month that deals definitely with religion—one religious book, and I suggest two only because I have already spoken of the two authors. "What Men Live By—Work, Play, Love and Worship," by Dr. Richard C. Cabot, of Harvard University, and a little pamphlet which you can buy for five cents from either the Y. M. C. A., or the Y. W. C. A., written by Dr. John R. Mott, called "The Morning Watch". Dr. Cabot's book was given to me by the Principal of the High School from which I graduated as a Commencement present and I still go to it and read when I am discouraged and wonder what's the use. Dr. Mott's little pamphlet on prayer, "A Morning Watch", changed my whole outlook on life and came to me at a time when I needed a new outlook.

And so my first suggestion is to read one religious book a month. My second suggestion has to do with the reading of the Bible. There was a time when the Church suggested the way to read the Bible was to start at the beginning and read right through. You have seen, as I have, tables that told you what to read each day. I started to read the Bible this way many times as a boy, once I think I got into Exodus, but the other times I did not get beyond the first ten chapters of Genesis. The Bible isn't a book to be read from cover to cover as you read a novel. It is a library of books, some of which are better than others. I want to suggest that you read a book about the Bible, like Hunting's "Story of Our Bible", and then when you have learned how the Bible was written and compiled, and you know, Mr. Hunting so graphically describes them in his delightful book, some of the men and women of the Bible, you can go back to your Bible and select the books by some other means than their names, and then the Bible will be indeed, "A lamp unto your feet and a light unto your path".

Well, Prayer and Worship, Study and Thought are two of our Four Horsemen. The third is Service and I am not going to say much about that, for it is the easiest of the ways by which we can learn to live a Christian way of life. Service is learning by doing. Some one has said that service is the rent we pay for our place in the world. Think that over. I listened a few weeks ago to Judge Cropsey, of Brooklyn, as he pinned a medal for life-saving upon the breast of a fifteen-year-old Boy Scout, who had saved the lives of two men by dragging them out of a burning garage. Judge Cropsey said something like this—"All life presents one continuous opportunity for service. You may never again be called upon to save life as you did in this case, but every day of your life you are called upon to save others, not at a cost of physical life, but at the cost of yourself—to save others by your example and your influence". Yes, "service is indeed, the rent we pay for our place in the world.

And the fourth Horseman is Fellowship. There are many ways in which we can have Fellowship with one another. Good fellowship is what each of us wants to have. I want you to think for just a minute or two of fellowship within the circle of our immediate parish Fellowships. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link. A Fellowship is no stronger as a Fellowship than its weakest member and, unless and until the weakest member has the opportunity of making his contribution to the Young People's Fellowship, it does not have the highest and finest spirit of Fellowship within itself.

You have a meeting and invite some one to speak or lead the meeting who can do it splendidly, and everybody comes and enjoys the meeting and gets much out of it. You have a meeting and the leader is not the most capable person for leading a meeting and you stay away that night or come and by the way you sit and the way you act just plain discourage instead of encourage the leader, and in contrast to the other meeting you get nothing out of it and you contribute nothing toward it.

Fellowship is that quality within us that makes us respond to the best in our companions, your attitude, your sympathetic attitude toward those less fortunate in equipment than you, less able to express themselves than you is what really determines whether you are using fellowship as one of the four Horsemen that point us toward the Christian way of life. That kind of fellowship is what I would have you strive for and attain and when all of us practice it in our meetings and in our contacts with one another we will find ourselves well on the way to Christian living.

There came a time in Jesus' life when he was compelled to choose between going up to Jerusalem or remaining in Galilee. Before he made the choice He took Peter and James and John up on to a mountain top. You know the story, the story of the transfiguration, how they beheld Jesus as the Collect for Transfiguration Day describes it, "wonderfully transfigured in raiment white and glistening". Peter, James and John never forgot that vision on the mountain top. Long afterwards in one of the Epistles, Peter writes: "We know these things to be true, because we were with Him on the Holy Mount."

You too, have been on the mountain top these last two days. This conference, with its visions of possibilities for the new year that lies ahead, makes us say, like Peter, James and John, "Lord, it is good for us to be here". But also like Peter and James and John we must retrace our steps and return into the valley, we must go back home to our daily round of common tasks. We cannot always live on the mountain top, but we can carry with us as we return the vision of the mountain top, carry it with us until our own lives are transfigured and we experience in the daily round of life something of the beauty and the grandeur of the transfigured Christ.

There is a poem which has been running through my mind as I have been thinking of what I wanted to say this afternoon and with it I will close. It is written by a Mr. W. J. Dawson and is entitled "How He came".

How He Came.

When the golden evening gathered on the shore of Galilee,
When the fishing boats lay quiet by the sea,
Long ago the people wondered, though no sign was in the sky
For the glory of the Lord was passing by.

Not in robes of purple splendor, not in silken softness shod,
But in raiment worn with travel came their God.
And the people knew His presence by the heart that ceased to sigh
When the Glory of the Lord was passing by.

For He healed their sick at even, and He cured the leper's sore,
And sinful men and women sinned no more,
And the world grew mirthful-hearted, and forgot its misery.
When the Glory of the Lord was passing by.

Not in robes of purple splendor but in lives that do His Will,
In patient acts of kindness He comes still
And the people cry with wonder, though no sign is in the sky
That the glory of the Lord is passing by.

O God, who on the mount didst reveal to chosen witnesses, Thy Son, Jesus Christ, wonderfully transfigured, in raiment white and glistening. Grant that we, too, may behold the King in His beauty, and beholding daily endeavor to follow in His footsteps who is indeed the Way, the Truth, the Light. Amen.

The stone is rolled away!
The rock tomb open lay,
Death's terrors past:
Look in ye sons of men,
O tremble not as when
Ye viewed it last.

While black the Darkness lay,
Upon that lifeless clay,
God's Angel wrought,
Almighty in His Power,
That Resurrection hour
The Gospel taught.

—W. M. Trivett.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE COMMUNITY

"The Kingdom Come, Thy Will be done on earth"

Edited by the Reverend R. Cary Montague

COMMENTS ON CHILD TRAINING.

By Mary Evelyn Brydon, M. D.

Article XIV.—The Ten Commandments.
(Continued.)

The Fifth Commandment—Obedience.

"Honor thy father and thy mother that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

Teach your child to be obedient.

"Honor" in the dictionary sense means to hold in high esteem, to manifest respect, reverence; for the purpose of these Comments I use it in a lesser meaning as yielding obedience to those in authority, and in a higher meaning showing respect for all law.

I have found it hard to get people to express exactly what they mean by "honor". However hazy the meaning of the word may be to them, parents seem to agree that it includes obedience and respect. We shall, therefore, discuss this Commandment from these angles: Showing (1) obedience to authority, (2) respect for law. The one should include the other, however.

To the little child the father and mother represent the ultimate authority, their word the highest law. They know nothing but this until they are old enough to leave home and mingle with children from other households and find that these small playmates have authority and law to observe different from their own. Then conflicts begin.

It is in the home therefore, where the father and mother are the first instructors, that obedience to authority and respect for law must first be taught. If you do not teach your child obedience when you have the opportunity the day will inevitably come when he will be punished by society for your failure to do so. Your heart may break with remorse, but he will pay the penalty, and you must stand by and see the punishment without being able to do anything to avert it. For society demands of all its members obedience to law and also to certain fixed conventions; and society gets what it demands or punishes those who refuse to comply.

Probably the outstanding thing that you want for your child is happiness. Then you must study what the child must do to be happy. You will find that one of the first requisites that will confront him in relation to his being happy is the degree to which he conforms to the demands of the society in which he will live. Let us see what society demands of its members.

Society is not particularly concerned with the individual; it deals with the group. It is when a member fails to conform to what contributes to the happiness of the group, that society interests itself in the individual member. There are three outstanding factors that every member must recognize as society's right to demand of him:

1. He must so act as to keep reasonably within the law.

2. He must live peaceably with his neighbor.

3. He must conform to recognized conventions.

Three "musts". When society says must we are compelled to obey. You may hold a difference of opinion and may talk learnedly about self-determination and about developing individuality, but all theories fail ignominiously before society's "must".

How much better then for you to begin at an early age before the child is out of your arms, to develop in him a dependableness of character that will enable him to cope with society's law and conventions in order that he may use them for his future happiness! To do this you must teach him to obey and he must learn to obey. He must learn the rules of the game, for he can never hope to live happily in a world whose rules he does not know.

One of the tragedies of life is a spoiled child. I am repeatedly distressed by hearing a mother or grandmother say proudly that her child is "spoiled". It is not a case for pride, but for humiliation and deepest regret. Little do such parents know what is happening to their child. Turn to the dictionary and see: "SPOIL: to impair or injure the disposition or character of, as to spoil a child." If you proudly spoil your child you now know what is happening to him, to his disposition, to his character. Do you really want this to happen to him? Think about it and see. You can do little with a spoiled child; society can do little with a spoiled child grown up. You will be lenient and forgiving; society will demand the utmost penalty with a relentless hand. Choose which you will have for your child; obedience or disobedience; respect or disrespect for law; conformity or non-conformity to convention. It is for you to say; and you begin to say it from the moment the child is born. Upon what you say your child's happiness will depend.

Whether or not your child learns obedience depends therefore upon you, his parents. To be compelled to do things he does not want to do is irksome to him and he will early make attempts to resist discipline if he can do so. Normally bright children are usually keen-eyed and prone to follow one idea at a time. Your child therefore will be far more on the alert than you are, and will discover the weak spot in your dealings with him long before you recognie it yourself. He will instantly take advantage of it, too: and you will soon find yourself cornered. "Wait till she forgets and ask again," whispered one little boy to his smaller sister. "Aw, gee! Mom! You said 'yes' yesterday," exclaimed another contemptuously.

To learn to "mind" Mother is the first thing to set out to teach a child, but if you delay too long he may have formed the habit of getting his own way long before he can walk or talk. Regularity, and having a consistency in his daily schedule will be your opportunity to start him right—not only in health habits, but in obedience.

These are a few suggestions for beginning soon after birth to inculcate in a child the lesson of obedience:

1. Feed him regularly on the minute.

2. Have a regular bed-hour, and stick to it.

3. Do not take him up because he cries. He will soon learn to cry whenever he wants to be taken up.

If you encourage his crying at odd hours, he will become the "boss" of the family, and you will eventually find that you are minding him instead of his minding you.

As he grows older, keep him strictly to a regular feeding time, bathing time, play time, sleeping time. Then as you gradually introduce rules for the comfort of the household, such as punctuality at meals, at prayers, at school, etc., you will find that the battle to secure obedience was won long ago and lack of conformity to the rules will not be a fault to be overcome later.

After you have started a regular routine for the baby do not weaken when it comes to regulating the child's life. Keep going. Permit no laxity on your own part. The child will adopt any routine good or bad, that is set for him. He will not know any difference. However, if you become lax and careless his routine will become disorganied and sooner or later the need for discipline and punishment will arise. But the fault will be yours, not his.

Next week we will discuss punishment as a means of securing obedience.

Bibe Readings:

April 10—Phil 2:5-11.
April 11—Isaiah 53:1-12.
April 12—Psalm 22.
April 13—Mark 15:16-32.
April 14—1 Cor. 11:23-34.
April 15—Matt. 27:29-38.
April 16—Matt. 27:57-66.
April 17—Col. 3:1-7.
April 18—Ezek. 37:1-14.
April 19—John 11:1-45.
April 20—Luke 15:11-24.
April 21—John 10:22-30.
April 22—1 Thess. 4:13-18.
April 23—Luke 24:13-35.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

ADVOCATING A NEGATIVE CHURCH.

Mr. Editor:

As a subscriber of The Southern Churchman for a good many years, and a reader of it since I was a boy, I want to express my disapprobation of the semi-political editorials on the Mexican and Chinese situation. In the first place I don't think such editorials have any place in a Church paper, and in the second place I don't think it possible that you can be as well informed as the men whose business it is to study those questions. You ought to realize that irrespective of the Secretary and Assistant Secretaries of State, who may change with different administrations, there are in the State Department men who devote their lives to the study of the foreign relations of the United States.

R. F. WHITEHEAD.

Washington, D. C.

FINANCING THE LAUSANNE CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor:

Several months ago a committee of prominent laymen was organized to help raise the funds required for the World Conference on Faith and Order, to be held at Lausanne, Switzerland, next August. Since no religious movement of our time has a wider appeal, we hope that financial support may come from a very large number of persons and may include contributions from the members of churches in every part of the United States.

Five hundred representatives of more than one hundred nation-wide self-governing churches will assemble at Lausanne. The American representatives, either personally or through the Churches which send them, are taking care of their own expenses, but it will be necessary to defray the expenses of many of the foreign representatives, especially those from the Orient. Clerical work, printing, interpreters and other routine of the Conference, covering a period of nineteen days, and the world-wide circulation of reports of the meetings will represent a considerable cost if adequately done.

Careful estimates show the effectiveness of the Conference will be hampered unless the sum raised for these expenses reaches $200,000. At present less than two-thirds of this amount is in sight. Between now and the assembling of the Conference we must raise at least $75,000 more.

Through the industry and devotion of the men in active charge of arranging and conducting the Lausanne Conference, the work is being done efficiently and economically. It has involved an enormous amount of painstaking labor, world-wide correspondence and the holding of preliminary meetings and conferences in almost every civilized country. But the fruits of many years of careful preparation will be lost if funds are not available to carry out the Conference itself on a scale appropriate to the scope and importance of the ideals behind it.

May I ask you, therefore, to publish this letter so that your readers may know of our financial needs and participate in this great movement to bring the Christian Churches closer together in their work of advancing God's kingdom throughout the world?

Contributions may be sent to George Zabriskie, Treasurer, World Conference on Faith and Order, 49 Wall Street, New York.

CHARLES E. HUGHES,
Chairman North American Committee.

Church Intelligence

News From China.

Cables from Shanghai received April 6, contain the following information:

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Taylor and Miss Coral Clark sail from Shanghai April 7 on the Tenyo Maru, due in San Francisco, April 29.

Miss Margaret Roberts is safe and well at Seoul, Korea, in care of the Presbyterian Missions. She was studying at the Peking Language School when it became necessary for women to leave. It was evidently impossible for her to get to Hankow or Shanghai. She, therefore, took the railroad from Peking via Mukden to Seoul.

The following missionaries from Anking have reached Shanghai safe and well: Miss Bertha M. Beard, Miss M. S. Capron, Miss Meta Connell, Mr. M. C. Fellows and family, Deaconess E. E. Fueller, Miss Irene Gehrling, Miss Alice H. Gregg, Miss Goldsborough, Bishop Huntington and family, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. S. Lee, Rev. E. J. Lee and family, Dr. R. H. Meade and family, Miss B. M. Myers, Deaconess K. E. Phelps, Miss L. B. Pingree, Miss Lila Stroman, Dr. Harry Taylor and family, Mr. and Mrs. L. Tompkinson, and Miss E. L. Cummings.

Miss Helen Ginrich, of the Kuling School, is now safe in Shanghai.

The Central Theological School of the Church in China, at Nanking, has not been damaged. The buildings are temporarily occupied by troops of the Southern Government. The Rev. T. M. Tong remains in charge of the property.

Our information indicates that all our missionaries are now in Shanghai with the following exceptions:

1. Those whose sailing to this country has been reported.
2. Those Hankow missionaries whose names were given in Bulletin No. 32, as remaining in Hankow.
3. Those whose names have previously been given as having gone to Japan.
4. Miss Margaret Roberts, as above.

No decision has as yet been reached with regard to sending missionaries now in Shanghai, to this country. The Department of Missions stands ready to take whatever action the Bishops in China may find to be necessary. As they know the local situation at first hand they are better able to judge what should be done. Meanwhile, officers of the Department of Missions regularly confer with officers of other mission boards with regard to any plans by which the welfare of the missionary staff of all communions and the welfare of the work of all Communions in China may be furthered.

All communications for missionaries should be addressed to: Care of Mr. M. P. Walker, 20 Minghong Road, Shanghai, China.

Cables from Shanghai received April 8, give us the following information:

The following members of the Hankow staff have arrived in Shanghai safely and well:

Mr. Theodore Hobbie and the Rev. T. P. Maslin and family.

The following missionaries, nurses at St. James' Hospital, Anking, sail from Shanghai, April 9, on the President Peirce, due in Seattle April 25:

Miss E. L. Cummings and Miss Meta Connell.

Bishop Huntington asks authorization to provide outfit allowances for fourteen single members and thirteen married members of the Anking staff now in Shanghai. They have sustained heavy personal losses as all of Anking institutions and residences have been occupied by soldiers of the Southern Army. About $12,000 will be necessary to provide these outfits.

St. Paul's School, Anking, is still open under a Chinese Headmaster.

John W. Wood.

Not So Good.

During the first three months of this year the Dioceses have paid to the National Council $2,544.93 less than they did for the same period a year ago.

There are sixteen Dioceses that have paid or overpaid the minimum amount due to April 1, as against ten Dioceses in 1926.

At the present time we are focusing our thoughts for the next three months to come with the hope that with the Easter Offerings and the Children's Lenten Offering, we may be able to go well on into the summer without loans from any source.

With greeting from the Church's Headquarters and in the name of the "Pay as you go" policy,

Faithfully yours,
Charles A. Tompkins,
Assistant Treasurer.

Building Fund Progresses.

One of the encouragements of the March Meeting of the Trustees of the Church Building Fund was the announcement that the waiting list had been caught up. This was the result partly of the patience of applicants and partly of the increase of the Fund in 1926, and places the work on its usual schedule with good prospect for an increase in the total business of the year This is a step in advance. Further progress will be made of course with the growth of the Fund, which has already made a good showing for the three months of 1927.

Charles L. Pardee,
Corresponding Secretary.

Death of An English Missionary Bishop in China.

The death, in Shanghai, of Bishop Charles Perry Scott, formerly of North China, brought a deep sense of loss in the Chinese Church. He was Bishop Graves' oldest friend in China. He was born in England in 1847, consecrated in 1880, and resigned in 1913.

He was led to offer himself for missionary work in North China after the first special Day of Intercession for Foreign Missions, and in 1874 he and the Rev. Miles Greenwood left England together for China. They were first sent to Chefoo, to study the language, and lived in the house of the American Presbyterian missionary, Dr. Nevius, who helped them greatly and took them in turn on tours into the interior. The great famine of 1878-79 called Mr. Scott to take part in relief work provided from foreign sources in Shansi and Honan.

The endowment for a missionary bishopric for North China was provided in 1880, and the Archbishop of Canterbury chose Mr. Scott as first bishop. He held that position until his resignation in 1913, suffering the loss of all his possessions in the Boxer uprising. He was married in 1889 to Miss Frances E. Burrows of Oxford, who died in 1909.

After Bishop Scott's resignation of his charge he lived in Pekin at Ch'ung Te School, lending assistance to the work of the Church in many ways. He was on his way to England once more, when sudden illness seized him and he died at St. John's University on February 13. His grave is in the plot of ground in Shanghai which is reserved for members of the Mission.

Passion Play Given at Berkeley Divinity School.

Hugh Benson's passion play, "The Upper Room", was given by members of the Berkeley Divinity School, Middletown, Conn., during Passiontide. The performance of the play made a deep impression upon large audiences. So much was this the case that the play had to be given three times in succession.

The success of the play was largely due to the interest and organizing skill of Mrs. Carpenter, wife of the Rev. S. C. Carpenter, the visiting English lecturer at Berkeley this year. Benson's play was somewhat modified and Roman accretions to the Gospel story eliminated. Mr. Carpenter himself played the part of Peter, Professor Hedrick of the Berkeley faculty that of Judas, Mrs. Hedrick that of Mary Magdalene, Mrs. Ladd helped in the singing, the part of the Blessed Virgin was taken by Miss Raftery, and the other parts by students in the School.

The whole action of the play takes place in the Upper Room, between a time taken as Thursday evening, shortly after the Last Supper, and a corresponding time on the evening of Good Friday. The characters are Achaz, the landlord of the house; Samuel, his boy and servant; Joseph of Arimathea; Mary Magdalene, the Madonna, Judas, John, Peter, and the Centurion who stood by the Cross. The boy, Samuel, plays the part which in Greek tragedy is assigned to the Messenger. He tells the story of what he has seen at the Last Supper, in the Garden of Gethsemane and before Pilate's Judgment seat.

No one could have seen the play without learning afresh that the Cross is in itself a healing tragedy, a redemption.

Notice.

A man about thirty-five years of age, light brown hair, light blue eyes, sallow complexion, prominent teeth, using the names Ralph Hale, Ralph Howard, and other names, is soliciting funds from the clergy of our Church, and using letters purporting to be from me or some other worker at Calvary Church.

This man has served a term recently at Hart's Island Penitentiary for the same charge of obtaining money under false pretenses, and I want to warn the clergy against him and to say to them that we cannot be responsible for any promises of financial aid in his behalf supposedly authorized by this church.

S. M. Shoemaker, Jr.,
Rector Calvary Church, New York City.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

Opening of the New St. Columba's Church.

A congregation of about five hundred people worshipped for the first time in the new church building of St. Columba's, the Rev. William R. Shearer, rector, on Palm Sunday morning. This was the opening of the new church which has been in course of erection during the past year and great enthusiasm was expressed for the new building in all of its appointments. The sermon at this service was preached by the rector. An afternoon service was held on the same day, when the preacher was the Rev. Z. B. Phillips, D. D., rector of Epiphany Church, and when other clergymen were especially invited to be present. An evening service was held at which the Very Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl, dean of Washington Cathedral, and the Rev. Charles T. Warner, rector of St. Alban's Church, delivered addresses. St. Columba's holds a special interest for these two clergymen, one a former rector and the other the present rector of St. Alban's Church, because St. Columba's was until recently a chapel of St. Alban's Parish, having received its full parish independence only a few years ago.

The Rev. William R. Shearer, now rector of St. Columba's and formerly vicar, has done a splendid piece of work in this field and has built it up to its present proportions from a very small beginning. This parish is situated in an outlying section of the city and there is every prospect of its continued growth.

The new church has a seating capacity of about six hundred. All the elements of traditional Anglican Church building are incorporated in the design of both the exterior and interior. The interior is lofty in character, with tinted rough art plaster walls having little adornment except in the chancel, which is decorated, the golden decorated reredos, a gift from the old St. Matthew's Church; the large built-in pipe organ, and a multi-colored sanctuary window which depicts Christ enthroned in Glory. The seats are all of the cathedral type, while the floor aisles are of composition cork and are noiseless.

One of the most attractive features is the stained glass imported windows.

Anniversary Meeting of Associated Charities.

A general invitation was extended to all Church people to attend the anniversary meeting of the Associated Charities on April 4, and a large number of interested people responded. The special speaker of the occasion was Dr. William Mather Lewis, President of George Washington University.

Two Unusual Easter Services.

In addition to all the Holy Week and Easter services arranged by the churches, it is interesting to note two services of a more general character: An Easter Eventide service will be held on the Monument grounds from five to six, April 17, under the direction of the Community Bible Readers League, and an Easter Sunrise Service under the auspices of the Washington Federation of Churches will be held Easter Sunday at seven o'clock, on Temple Heights, Florida and Connecticut Avenues. Secretary of the Navy Wilbur will preside and the U. S. Marine Band will accompany the outdoor singing. Dr. J. R. Sizoo, pastor of New York Avenue Presbyterian Church will deliver an address.

The Diocesan Council of the Girls' Friendly Society in Washington held a meeting in Epiphany Parish Hall, Friday evening, April 8. A conference of diocesan and parish branch officers was held and plans for the annual May Week of the Society were discussed.

M. M. W.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland D. D., Bishop.

Laymen Visit Church Institutions.

The Church Club of Philadelphia, comprising in its membership hundreds of laymen of the Diocese, made a Visitation to three Episcopal Church Institutions engaged in doing public welfare work, Saturday, April 9.

For a number of years the Church Club has made it an annual custom during the season of Lent to visit such institutions. The institutions visited this year were The House of the Holy Child at Ambler, which takes care of dependent Colored girls; The Home for Consumptives at Chestnut Hill, conducted by the Philadelphia City Mission, and the Sheltering Arms, West School Lane, Germantown, which cares for babies and their mothers. At the Home for Consumptives the club members and their guests were shown the successful operation by heliotherapy or "sun cure" of children suffering from tuberculosis.

An Unusual Record.

Prof. Albert T. Gardner celebrated his fifty-second anniversary as organist and choirmaster of St. Matthew's Church, Philadelphia, the Rev. C. Herbert Reese, rector, Palm Sunday. It is said that no other organist in the country has so long a record of continuous service at one church.

Many talented singers have been produced by St. Matthew's choir in the more than half a century that Professor Gardner has been director.

R. R. W.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

A meeting of the National Council of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew has been called by President E. H. Bonsall for Saturday and Sunday, April 30-May 1, preceded by a meeting of the Executive Committee the evening before. A number of important matters, including plans for the fall conference and for the 1928 National Convention, are to come before the Council for action. Plans for cooperation in the follow-up of the Bishops' Crusade, and for the development of the newly-authorized "Crusade Chapters" will be discussed. It is expected also that a definite plan for the assignment of territorial responsibility to Council members will be presented, with a view to stimulating a healthy growth in Chapters. Reports for the past two weeks, it is said, have shown an increase both in number of Chapters and Chapter membership; and it is the aim of the national office to continue and accelerate this growth.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. H. St. Geo. Tucker, D. D., Coadjutor.

Mid-Day Services at St. Paul's, Richmond.

The mid-day Lenten services at St. Paul's Church, Richmond, the Rev. B. D. Tucker, Jr., D. D., rector, culminated during the week of April 4, with the Rev. Hugh Black, D. D., of the Union Theological Seminary, New York, as the special preacher. The attendance at these services has been unusually large through Lent, the church being practically filled almost every day. The attendance at Dr. Black's services was so large that every available space in the church was filled, and on some days numbers of people were turned away.

Additional Property Purchased for St. Margaret's School.

The Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia have purchased for St. Margaret's School, Tappahannock, the property of the late Major B. B. Brokenbrough. This property consists of the acres of land, adjoining the present acroes of lanld, adjoining the present property of St. Margaret's, and faces, as does the School, upon the Rappahannock River.

The purchase of this property will enable the School to undertake a much needed enlargement, as for the past several years the applicants for admission to the School have been more than could be received.

Miss Edith Latane, B. A., has just taken charge as Principal. She is a daughter of the late Bishop Latane and a sister of Dr. John Latane, formerly Dean of Johns Hopkins University, and Professor of American History there. Miss Latane for twelve years was head of the History Department of Mary Baldwin Seminary, Staunton, and collaborated with her brother in the publication of an American History for Juniors.

Notice.

Miss Page Williams, of 1514 Park Avenue, Richmond, Chairman of the Finance Committee for the Annual Meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese, which will be held in St. Paul's Church, requests that all donations for the luncheon will be sent to her at the above address.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. J. B. Cheshire, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, D. D., Coadjutor.
Rt Rev. H. B. Delaney, D. D., Suffragan

The Rev. M. A. Barber's Twentieth Anniversary.

On Sunday, April 3, the Rev. M. A. Barber, rector of Christ Church, Raleigh, celebrated the twentieth anniversary of his connection with that historic parish. Following a brief period as curate Mr. Barber was called to be rector, and his long ministry has been unusually fruitful. He has seen the completion of one of the most beautiful church plants in the South, and a growth in communicant strength from two hundred and forty to six hundred and eighteen. Under his ministry this parish has given conspicuous support to all of the undertakings and institutions of the Church.

Successful Preaching Mission.

Trinity Church, Statesville, the Rev. T. L. Trott, rector, has completed extensive alterations to the church edifice which makes it most attractive, and better suited to the needs of the Church in this rapidly growing North Carolina city. The completion of the church building was marked by a Preaching Mission conducted by the Rev. W. W. Way, rector of St. Mary's School, Raleigh. Large congregations heard Mr. Way, and enthusiastic reports have been received of the interest manifested.

Interesting Missionary Exhibit.

St. Martin's Parish, Charlotte, the Rev. John Long Jackson, rector, which has been characterized a "model parish" by Bishop Cheshire, has had a most interesting missionary exhibit during Lent. The exhibit in its parish house has been in the form of diminutive towns and communities of thirteen home and foreign mission fields. Dr. John W. Wood, who recently made a visit to that parish and addressed the congregation, was so much impressed with the exhibit that he had pictures made for Church publications.

Gift to St. Augustine's, Raleigh.

The General Education Board of New York has recently announced that it will give $40,000 of the $120,000 required to build a much-needed dining hall and Domestic Science building, and Girls' Dormitory for St. Augustine's School, Raleigh. An effort will be made to secure the balance at an early date. St. Agnes' Hospital, which serves the school and the Negroes of Raleigh, is being rebuilt, following the destructive fire of some months ago.

T. P., JR.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. S Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, D. D., Suffragan.

Grace Parish.

The 1927 Year Book of Grace Parish, the Rev. Dr. W. R. Bowie, rector, has just been issued, a volume of two hundred and eighty-one pages, illustrated by many photographs of the parish buildings and its personnel. The report of this parish includes the record of the worship and the activities at Grace Church itself, at Broadway and Tenth Street; at the Choir School, the oldest of its kind in America, at which the twenty-eight boys of the famous Grace Church Choir of boys and men are taught and trained; the Neighborhood House and the Day Nursery; the Chapel and the Hospitals on East Fourteenth Street; and the Fresh Air Work of the summer. To support this work the parish received in the year 1926 $184,307 from its endowment of pew rents, and its people gave in their offerings $128,209. Of this amount more than thirty-five thousand dollars went to the missions of the Episcopal Church, outside of the parish; and more than one hundred thousand was spent for the maintenance of the religious and social work of the chapel, for the maintenance of Grace Hospital, the Day Nursery, and the Fresh air Work.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Lenten Privileges For Children.

Some interesting Church work for children has been done along unusual lines in this diocese during Lent. In St. Mary's Church, Brooklyn, the Rev. J. Clarence Jones, rector, a very successful mission for children has just been concluded, under the direction of the Rev. Albert Aune, assisted by the rector. The Mission lasted eight days. The sessions were forty-five minutes long. There were prayers, hymns and questions and answers, a five-minute instruction, reviews and a five-minute story-sermon by the rector. An informal atmosphere was skillfully preserved by the leader through rapid questions and conversations with the children and adults. There was reverence, devotion, faith, earnestness, humor, and serious purpose, leading to a true climax at the closing session. The fundamentals of the Faith of the Church were dwelt upon and learned by heart. There is so much enthusiasm that it is expected that the mission will become an annual event. An occasional flash of unconscious humor livened the proceedings as when the children, being provided with a leaflet of prayers for various occasions, were asked when they would need to use the "Prayer in time of Danger" and one of the boys replied, "When a fellow has to wash the dishes for his mother".

In St. George's, Flushing, the rector reports much larger attendance at children's services than heretofore, and attributes the increase to the fact that this year he has arranged separate services, one for boys and one for girls. The response of the boys to this plan has been very satisfactory.

In St. Paul's, Flatbush, where a children's Service of Holy Communion has been held every Sunday at 8:30 for more than two years, attendance has reached its highest point during this Lent. Sunday, April 3, there were one hundred and forty-nine communions at this service. A special choir of forty girls, under the direction of the parish organist, Mr. Ralph A. Harris, A. A. G. O., sings. The children of this school have adopted a single specific missionary object for their efforts, the support of a particular mission station in Liberia; they hope that their offerings during the year will be sufficient to maintain this mission wholly.

Parishes Combine for Lenten Services.

The inter-parochial Lenten services are also meeting with much success. The united service of the parishes of the "Hill Zone" in Brooklyn was held this week in the Church of the Messiah. The preacher was the Rev. Phillip J. Steinmetz, D. D., of Philadelphia, and the sermon confirmed his reputation as an unusually able preacher.

The cooperative services of the parishes on the Heights—Grace, St. Ann's, and Holy Trinity—are said to be well attended. These three parishes combine on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday afternoons at 4:30, two days in Grace Church; two days in St. Ann's; and once a week in Holy Trinity a children's service is held for the three congregations. On Wednesday nights a joint service is held at St. Ann's; the preacher March 30 was the Rev. Frank W. Crowder, D. D., rector of St. James' Church in Manhattan; and on April 6, the Rt. Rev. G. Ashton Oldham, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Albany, formerly rector of St. Ann's, Brooklyn.

Two missions were held recently. One was in St. Paul's Church, Clinton Street, Brooklyn, where the missioner was the Rev. Roland F. Palmer, Superior of the San Francisco House of the Society of St. John the Evangelist, and rector of the Church of the Advent, San Francisco. The other was in the Church of the Nativity, Flatbush, where the Rev. Canon Osborn Troop, rector emeritus of St. Martin's, Montreal, was the preacher. Both of these missions began Sunday night, March 27, and terminated Sunday night, April 3. Both report large congregations and much interest.

More than a hundred women attended the Quiet Day held in St. Paul's Church, Clinton Street, by the Rev. Mr. Palmer, S. S. J. E. It was unfortunate that this and the Quiet Day under the auspices of the Church Mission of Help, held at St. Ann's by the Rev. Frederick W. Fitts, of Roxbury, Mass., should have been arranged for the same day. Both, however, were well attended, and good results are reported.

C. H. W.

WEST TEXAS.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Capers, D. D., Bishop.

Extending The Church's Influence In The Diocese.

Through the past several months there has been considerable activity throughout the Diocese in the interest of extending the Church's influence in established communities where the Church has been for many years and also in communities where the Church is making its first appearance. St. Mark's Church, San Antonio, the Rev. Rolfe P. Crum, rector, has just dedicated one of the units of its $185,000 parish house. This unit is the Educational Building, a three-story structure that provides for eight hundred Sunday-school children and a most commodious and well-appointed gymnasium. The second unit which will provide for the Department of Administration and the social life of the parish is now well under way, and it is expected that it will be completed in full time for the meeting of the Synod, of the Province of the Southwest, in San Antonio, October 18, 19 and 20 of this year.

A campaign for the enlargement of St. Philip's Normal and Industrial School for Negro Girls, San Antonio, has just been completed with the Bishops of the Diocese as Honorary Chairman and with the Rev. R. P. Crum as General Chairman and Mr. John E. Mitchell, the son-in-law of the late Bishop Johnston, as Campaign Director. The goal of this campaign was $16,540, and it was slightly over-subscribed. Added to this amount is $3,000 pledged by a group of earnest-minded Negro women belonging to various Christian organizations among their own people; and to this must also be added a legacy of $6,000, which the late Alexander Joske, a Jew and a distinguished citizen of San Antonio, bequeathed to this school upon the condition that friends of the school would raise another $6,000. The parishes and missions of the Diocese of West Texas, outside of San Antonio, are expected to contribute $16,500, which, with the present pledges on hand, will aggregate $41,844. With this amount an industrial building will be erected in memory of the late Rt. Rev. James Steptoe Johnston, D. D., the first Bishop of the Diocese of West Texas and the founder of the school. The erection of this memorial building upon the present property of St. Philip's Normal and Industrial School will give to the Diocese of West Texas a splendidly equipped institution for the Church's work in behalf of Negro girls.

In the Rio Grande Valley, where the population is multiplying at a tremendous rate each month through emigration from the States of the Northwest, the Bishop has succeeded in building a commodious brick church at Pharr. This work has largely been accomplished through the splendid agency of the Rev. R. O. Mackintosh, rector of the Church of the Advent, Brownsville. Mr. Mackintosh has been shepherding, unassisted, the people of a large area of this Valley and his labors are now being rewarded.

At Corpus Christi the down-town church property has been sold and a beautiful new property has been bought on a bluff which overlooks the Bay of Corpus Christi. A handsome new rectory has been built. The old church is being used temporarily until the new church is built. This church is to cost $50,000.

NEWARK.

Rt. Rev. E. S. Lines, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, D. D., Coadjutor.

Church Building Projects.

A number of church building projects are in preparation or in progress in the Diocese—St. Paul's Church, Morris Plains; Christ Church, Totowa Borough; the great parish house of Calvary, Summit, the Church of the Redeemer, Morristown, and Grace Church, Newark; the new residence for the Diocesan Secretary in Newark; the Nurses' Home at Christ Hospital, Jersey City.

Large Confirmation Classes.

Among the large classes presented recently for Confirmation are: St. Paul's, Paterson, sixty-six; St. Mark's, West Orange, forty-four; Christ Church, Bloomfield, forty-six; St. Paul's, Hoboken, twenty-six; Trinity Church, Newark, thirty-seven; Grace Church, Union City, thirty-one; St. John's, Union City, thirty-two, and St. Stephen's, Jersey City, one hundred and four.

The removal of the Rev. Philip P. Werlein from Newark to new work in San Francisco is greatly regretted by those with whom he has worked in the Diocese from his ordination.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.

A Notable Rectorship.

One of the most notable rectorships in the American Church came to a conclusion when the Rev. Peregrine Wroth, D. D., for over fifty-one years rector of the Church of the Messiah, Baltimore, announced his retirement from the active exercise of his office, to take effect June 5. The vestry has elected him rector emeritus, with a fixed salary and the use of the rectory. The Rev. Jas. A. Mitchell, who has been associate rector of the parish for the past two years, will automatically succeed Dr. Wroth.

The Rev. Dr. Wroth was born July 19, 1848, near Chestertown, on the Eastern Shore of Maryland. He received his theological training at the Virginia Theological Seminary, and was ordained to the priesthood in 1873 by Bishop Whittle, of Virginia. His first work was in Kingston Parish, Mathews County, Virginia.

In 1876 the Rev. Dr. Wroth came to what was then the new Church of the Messiah, located at that time on the corner of Gay and Fayette Streets, as assistant to the Rev. C. C. Penick. The next year the Rev. Mr. Penick was elevated to the Bishopric of Liberia, and the Rev. Mr. Wroth was left alone in charge of work of building up this down-town congregation. He identified himself closely with the life of the city and became an important factor in its spiritual, social, and intellectual development. He emphasized the Sunday School; and he supplemented its work by establishing a Saturday afternoon school of sewing, the first of this branch of social service established in Baltimore. He instituted the first noon-tide Lenten services for business men in the United States, with the possible exception of Trinity Church, New York; and these services were maintained for thirty years.

The Church was in the path of the great fire of 1904 and was completely destroyed. Dr. Wroth set to work immediately, however, and soon provided his congregation with another house of worship. This building was used for fifteen years; but in 1920, it was found that only twelve members of the congregation lived in the square mile of which the Church was the center, business having displaced the others. So it was deemed best to go to the corner of Harford Road and White Avenue, in the suburbs of Baltimore, where Dr. Wroth supervised the erection of the present Church of the Messiah, and Parish House, one of the finest group of church buildings in the city.

Dr. Wroth, who is especially beloved by the entire Diocese, has held practically every important office in the gift of the Convention. He has been a member of the Standing Committee, Deputy to the General Convention, Secretary of the Convention, and Archdeacon of Baltimore. He is now Dean of the Convocation of Baltimore and Vice-President and Agent of the Corporation for the Relief of Widows and Children of the Clergy of the Diocese.

The Rev. Mr. Mitchell, who succeeds Dr. Wroth, was born in Centreville, also on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, thirty-four years ago, the son of the late Rev. James A. Mitchell, who was for twenty-nine years rector of St. Paul's Parish, Queen Anne's County. His scholastic work was done at Trinity College, B. A., Yale, M. A., and the Virginia Seminary, B. D. From 1915 to 1918 he served on the staff of St. John's University, Shanghai, and during the war gained his commission in the Field Artillery. He was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Davenport in 1924, and, after a year in All Hallows' Parish, Snow Hill, Md., came to the Messiah in 1925.

Chaplain Niver Retires.

The Rev. Edwin B. Niver, Chaplain U. S. N., was retired from active duty in the Corps of Naval Chaplains, April 2, with rank of Commander, after ten years of service. In view of his retirement, he was the recipient of a number of gifts and tokens of respect and esteem from those with whom he has been associated at the Marines' base at Quantico.

Commander Niver was for a number of years rector of Christ Church, Baltimore. While in this city he became interested in the Maryland Naval Militia, of which he was made chaplain in 1901. An act of Congress transferred him to the regular forces of the United States, at which time he became rector emeritus of his parish.

Dr. Remsen's Funeral.

Funeral services over the ashes of the late Dr. Ira Remsen were said in Christ Church, Baltimore, April 6, by the rector emeritus, the Rev. E. B. Niver, who was rector of the parish when Dr. Remsen was an active member of it. Dr. Remsen died at Carmel, Calif., March 4, and the body was cremated, the ashes having been brought to his old home in Baltimore for their final resting place.

Dr. Remsen was one of the most notable scientists and chemists of his day. He was the last survivor of the original faculty of Johns Hopkins University gathered by the late President, Daniel Coit Gilman, a group that gave Johns Hopkins a world-wide reputation for the teaching of science. Dr. Remsen himself was president of the University from 1901 to 1912.

The Mid-day Lenten Services at St. Paul's, Baltimore, which stands on the edge of the Central business district of the city, have been more largely attended than in previous years. The congregations have numbered from nine to twelve hundred daily. Among preachers from out of town who have filled their engagements are Bishop Strider, Dr. Bernard I. Bell, Dr. George Craig Stewart, and the Rev. Arthur Lee Kinsolving. The series will be closed by Bishop Fiske, and the Rev. S. C. Hughson. The rector, Dr. Kinsolving, will preach the Three Hours' Commemoration of the Passion.

NEW JERSEY.

Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. W. Knight, D. D., Coadjutor.

Diocesan Assembly of The Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

A meeting of the Diocesan Assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, including both Junior and Senior branches, was held at St. John's parish house Friday evening, April 8, with a gratifying attendance from the various chapters. National Councilman J. W. A. Smith presided over the meeting, which opened with a supper served by the ladies of the parish.

Following the supper an address on "The Spiritual Power of the Brotherhood" was given by Leon C. Palmer, of Philadelphia, the new General Secretary of the National organizations. Plans were discussed for the extension of the work by means of the organization of "Crusade Chapters".

NORTH DAKOTA.

Rt. Rev. J. P. Tyler, D. D., Bishop.

The Crusade.

The Rt. Rev. Walter T. Sumner, D. D., of the Diocese of Oregon, and Rural Dean Tull, of Torrington, Wyoming, were the Crusaders at All Saints' Church, Minot, N. D., and at St. George's Church, Bismarck. Fine crowds gathered for all the services and conferences, and great enthusiasm was manifest.

The Bishops' Crusade was held at St. Paul's Church, Grand Forks, N. D., with the Rev. Robert Flockhart, of Sioux City, Iowa, and the Ven. William Burrows, of the Diocese of Indianapolis, as the Crusaders. The Rev. Mr. Flockhart was the preacher at all services and Archdeacon Burrows was the conference leader. Splendid congregations attended all services and conferences. The same Crusaders conducted a similar mission in Gethsemane Cathedral, Fargo, N. D. Here the same keen interest was apparent.

The Forty-third Annual Convocation of North Dakota will convene in Gethsemane Cathedral, Fargo, beginning Sunday morning, May 15, and ending Wednesday evening, May 18. The program includes conferences conducted by leaders from the Church Missions' House, New York. The Annual Rally of the District Branch of the Girls' Friendly Society will be held on Saturday afternoon and evening before Convocation. The meeting of the District organization of the Woman's Auxiliary and Guilds will meet Monday afternoon, May 16. Mrs. J. P. Tyler of Fargo will preside over this meeting.

H. R. H.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor.

New Parish House For Trinity Church, South Boston.

The contract for the new parish house for Trinity Church, South Boston, the Rev. T. Carter Page, rector, has been signed and the work will begin at once.

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

The Round Table Fellowship.

The Round Table Fellowship, held on Monday evenings of Lent, came to its close and climax Monday, April 4. The address, given by Dr. Lynn Harold Hough, of the Central M. E. Church, Detroit, was one of the most stimulating utterances ever heard at the Cathedral. Taking as his subject "Expanding Horizons", Dr. Hough sketched, in an autobiographical strain, the story of growing appreciation of various schools of religious thought. Cradled in Methodism, and still devoted heart and soul to its ministry, Dr. Hough said that the great communion to which he belonged stood for the supreme importance of religious experience. During the years of his development, however, Dr. Hough had found that there were other religious values. So, Congregationalism stands for independence of thought; Presbyterianism stands for definite and carefully-argued conviction; Anglicanism for the worship of God in the beauty of holiness; and Romanism for the ideals of corporate solidarity. Even there the speaker did not find that his expanding sympathies stood still, but went on to speak of the meditative charm and deep spiritual values in the life of Gautama Buddha, and experienced by many of his followers. Last of all he paid an unexpected tribute to Mohammedanism, which he said stood for the active and positive doing of the will of God; a salutary off-set to the passive, resignation-attitude to that will. The Round Table Fellowship, under the direction of Mr. E. E. Piper, Diocesan Superintendent of Religious Education, have gathered together, week by week, about two hundred men, studying the problems of devotional life, the adjustments of human relationships and science in modern life.

New Church Building For St. Peter's, Detroit.

St. Peter's Church, Detroit, is in the midst of an eight-day campaign to raise $75,000 for a new church building. St. Peter's is one of the oldest churches in Detroit. For seventy years its work has been conducted upon the same spot. Once an outlying parish of little old Detroit, it now finds itself a down-town church. Since the coming of the Rev. Robert Kimber to take charge in 1925, the church has constructed and equipped a three-story parish house. The second unit is being provided for in the present campaign. The third unit will be

(Continued on page 22.)

Family Department

April.

1. Friday.
3. Fifth (Passion) Sunday in Lent.
10. Sixth (Palm) Sunday in Lent.
14. Maundy Thursday.
15. Good Friday.
16. Easter Even.
17. Easter Day.
24. First Sunday after Easter.
25. Monday. S. Mark.
30. Saturday.

Collect for Easter Even.

Grant, O Lord, that as we are baptized into the death of Thy Blessed Son, Our Saviour Jesus Christ, so by continually mortifying our corrupt affections we may be buried with Him; and that through the grave, and gate of death, we may pass to our joyful resurrection; for His merits, Who died, and was buried, and rose again for us, Thy Son, Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Collect for Easter Day.

Almighty God, Who through Thine only begotten Son, Jesus Christ, hast overcome death, and opened unto us the gate of everlasting life; we humbly beseech Thee that, as by Thy special grace preventing us, Thou dost put into our minds good desires, so by Thy continual help we may bring the same to good effect, through Jesus Christ Our Lord, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

For the Southern Churchman.

The Holy Spulchre.

Lillian F. Lewis.

Exultant tomb, whose boasted Guest
The Man of Galilee,
The Christ of Calvary
Hath risen as He said—
Thine angel embassies attest
He lives! There are no dead!

Thus cheered, all Christendom can sing
A paean glorious
Of life victorious
Anew each Easter day;
And cry, "O death where is thy sting?
O grave, how brief thy sway"!

Now Is Christ Risen.

So says the empty tomb. That Jesus was dead when He went into the grave those in charge of His crucifixion certainly believed. Doubtful Pilate required direct testimony from the centurion to that fact. But now the body is gone. How came that tomb to be empty? But two explanations have been attempted. That the disciples stole the body and thereafter went to death in support of that deception breaks down of its own weight. There is but one other conclusion—He arose from the dead.

So say the angelic attendants. "He is not here. He is risen." is the refrain of their testimony. At His birth they sang of His coming; at His grave they told of His triumph.

So say the re-inspired apostles. When the grave closed over His form their hopes expired. "We had trusted that it had been He who should have redeemed Israel!" was the climax of their faith after Calvary's dark tragedy closed. They were ready to go back to their homes and business, carrying a memory that still remained precious but as lifeless as it was dear. Then something happened and they became like different men. A great consecration controlled them. They rejoiced that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for His name. Life itself was not withheld at the demands of loyalty to His cause. They explained that this change was wrought because they had seen Jesus alive from the dead. Who shall gainsay that testimony sealed with blood?

So says the miracle of Saul of Tarsus. A very fury of persecution, he pursued Christians to their death, going even unto strange cities. Suddenly, totally unexpectedly, his whole course diametrically changes. The foremost of the disciples in labors and in sufferings he henceforth becomes. He attributes the transformations to the fact that he saw Jesus in the way, not in the habiliments of death but in the vesture of life. Christ's decaying body would have confirmed his scorn and made jubilant his hate; His transfigured form changed his whole life and made exultant his imperishable love.

So says the Christian Church. In a very true sense it arose out of His tomb. A dead Christ could never have called it into being. Prophets might die and the cause live on of which they had told. But Christ is Christianity. "I am the way, the truth, the life, the light, the bread of life. My flesh is bread indeed and my blood is drink indeed. Except you eat the flesh of the Son of God and drink His blood you have no life in you." Other religions were founded by men. Christianity is built on Christ. These founders may perish and their religion survive. But when Christ fails Christianity goes down with Him into ruin. No cunningly devised fables could avail to prolong its life. Disciples might tell about a risen Saviour but unless there was something in experience to answer to that testimony it would have been but a vain word. "If you can testify that Christ died I can testify that He is alive, for I have talked with Him today"—so said Bishop Thoburn. Something akin to that word must have spoken in the experience of multitudes of other men or the Church would never have run its conquering way. Many may not have felt it so vividly as he. Most would not have expressed it so confidently as he. But the reality of it has been present or Christ could not have triumphed across the years. There is nothing more certain than this—the Church believes that Christ is alive, and believes it not chiefly because of the testimony that comes from the distant days but primarily because of the assurance that sings in its own heart at the present moment.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate

Let Us Keep the Feast.

This is the Easter call of our Church. We have heard that call from earliest childhood and our hearts leap up in ready response. There is no joy like the Easter joy. It changed the calendar; for every since the day on which Christ rose has been called the Lord's Day and it superceded in the Christian Church the ancient Jewish Sabbath. Every Sunday, then, is a weekly feast of the Resurrection, but on Easter that which has been accumulating all the year is summed up in one great burst of joy and praise.

The great festival reaches out in three directions and is a power to bind us to the past, unite us in the present as well as to reach forth with glorious and living hope to the future.

With what strong links does Easter bind us to the past. Year by year on this glad day, across the interval of nearly twenty centuries, we rejoice over again with the company of the first disciples. Year by year we make our pilgrimage to the Garden of Joseph of Aramathea and take our stand near his rock-hewn tomb. As the grey light is streaking the sky, we see those who have loved the Lord coming with their spices and all the while doubting the wisdom of their visit, for how will they roll away the stone. We see them filled with surprise on finding the stone rolled away and we note the awe that spreads over their faces, at the almost unbelievable news told them by the two angels. We watch them hurry back with the tidings, their feet and tongues far too slow to suit their eager hearts. Our Church still leaves us by that tomb while Peter and John, advised by the women, come speeding to the place. John looks in. More fleet of foot he has outstripped Peter. But Peter enters the tomb. More bold of heart, he will not be satisfied with a distant look. He sees the linen clothes lying as if the body were still in them except that they had fallen flat. Indeed the evangelist uses a word regarding the napkin which seems to refer rather to the head—it was a rolled round napkin. All this arrested Peter's eye. No man's hand had done it; it had been done by the mighty power of God. Then John went in also and he saw and believed. Deep in thought the two withdraw. We linger near the tomb till Mary Magdalene returns. She had been there among the first but returns and lingers. Wonderfully is she repaid and honored. First the angel speaks so tenderly, "Woman, why weepest thou"? And then the great honor, the first revelation of Himself to this poor woman out of whom He had cast seven devils. He calls her by name. It is the old familiar voice and tone. At once she is at His feet in worship. Let us leave her there. Thus year by year Easter takes us back to the garden and the rock-hewn tomb and links us with those Apostles and those women who first heard the glad news which transformed their gloom into radiant gladness, which has transfigured sorrow all down the centuries and today fills our hearts with joy.—Canadian Churchman.

For the Southern Churchman.

Easter at St. John's.

H. J. C.

The Lenten season was drawing to a close. There had been unusual interest in the daily services; as well as in the sermons and addresses of the white-haired rector. And the new bishop was coming on Easter Day; this first visitation was an event to which all were looking forward, none more eagerly than the rector himself. Good Friday had come and gone, followed by Easter Even, with its service of Holy Baptism.

Then the afternoon and part of the evening were spent in decorating the church for the great festival. It was in the days before this good work was left to the florist and the sexton. Choicest plants and fragrant blooms were brought from various homes, and tastefully arranged, as a personal offering to the Risen Lord. Willing hands had nearly completed their task. Pure white lilies and hyacinths were on the altar; the chancel was banked with flowers, the perfume of which pervaded the whole edifice.

Before the lights had been turned out one of the ladies noticed a visitor in the last pew of the church. A little boy, of perhaps ten years, had entered unobserved, and was watching the proceedings with intense curiosity and interest. Evidently, the whole thing was new to him. Seeing the church lighted, he had first ventured to look in. Then he stepped inside, and took a seat near the door. Who he was, whence he came, how long he had been there, nobody knew. His clothing, coarse and much darned and mended, indicated that he was from a home not destitute of care, but wanting the luxuries and even the comforts of life. He was sitting, when discovered, directly before the font—though he did not know what it was—and a lamp, hanging near the vestibule, shed a soft light upon the curly, flaxen hair; his blue eyes were large and bright, his whole expression one of genuine interest in what was going on; and, if one could have looked into the soul, there was a feeling of something deeper and more reverent than mere curiosity. It was a beautiful picture of young life; of a lamb all unconsciously seeking the Fold and the Good Shepherd.

Many were the glances toward the font, while the last touches were making the King's "daughter all glorious within".

"I must speak to that child"; said the chairman of the altar committee. Had you known her, this action was just what you would have expected. She was the special friend of children, ever on the lookout to show them kindness, to help them over hard places, and to gather them into the Church. Here, tonight, might be an opportunity for just this kind of service; and it was an opportunity. In the corner of the pew there, full of wonder and delight at a new scene of beauty, was one of Christ's own, waiting for the call of the Master. That call came, as it has so often come, through the lips of a Christian woman.

Naturally, this stray lamb was timid and shy. He thought himself unobserved, as there was but a single lamp in this part of the church. It seemed dark to him, in contrast with the bright lights in the chancel. As the lady came down the long aisle, Claude would have run away, if he could have done so. But, before he could open the heavy door of oak, some one stood beside the boy. A hand was kindly laid on his, and friendly eyes were looking into his own. A sweet motherly voice said:

"Don't go; come and sit down by me, and look at the flowers. Tell me what you were thinking about."

It needed a little time to overcome the timidity and bashfulness of the little boy. After a while he was able to answer.

"My name is Claude Melnotte. What lovely flowers! I wish mother could see them."

"Perhaps she can; where is your mother, my dear?"

"Oh, she is in the brown cottage, near the mill, down on the edge of the town. And she is sick." And the blue eyes were filled with tears. It was easy, now, to get the story—the old, familiar story of hardship, poverty, sickness. The father of French origin, had gone to Canada, and there worked for a lumber firm in the woods. He had married, and there were two children of whom Claude was the older. During the winter the father was fatally injured by a falling tree; and he died after weeks of suffering. The company had been kind to him and the family, but there was little left, when all was over. The mother and her children had come to the States in hope of finding a near relative; but he had moved from the neighborhood and no one knew where he had gone. The poor dwelling had been rented for a nominal sum and the widow had managed to care for her family until her health gave way. Some of these facts were gathered from the lad, and the rest later on, from the mother herself.

"We will go and see your dear mother tonight; and wouldn't you like to take her a flower?"

"Oh, if I might; mother loves flowers."

So a bunch of lilies was put into the little hand, and Claude's new friend took him in her car which was waiting. Stopping on the way, an ample basket of things immediately necessary was bought, and they were soon at the cottage door. Claude was told to go in first and give the flowers to the sick woman.

"O Mother! see what I have got! A kind lady gave them to me, and she is here herself."

Mrs. Patterson had followed him, and now came to the bedside, and took the hand extended. The widow could only look her gratitude, at first, so great was her surprise at this most unexpected visit. It was evident that the invalid needed nourishment, which was soon provided. Both mother and child were greatly cheered by the meal and still more by the presence and kind words of her who had furnished and prepared it for them. After making the family comfortable and promising to come again soon, Mrs. Patterson returned home. Before going, it was agreed that Claude should attend the morning service and sit with Mrs. Patterson. He was also to stay to the Sunday School which followed.

The little fellow could hardly sleep for joy; for he had hardly ever before been inside a well-appointed church. Just what it meant to this child, whose life had been mostly spent in the woods, few of us can imagine.

Morning came at last, and Claude, with radiant face, was one of the large congregation. His ears drank in the words of the service, and the joyous Easter music filled his heart with gladness. He inhaled the fragrance of the flowers, feasted on their beauty, and wondered at the vestments. And when a boy about his own age sang a solo, Claude could scarcely contain himself. The Confirmation Class made a deep impression on the young stranger. There were flowers in the Chapel placed there by the Sunday-school teachers, and Claude was too much taken up by what he saw and heard, to notice that he was not as well dressed as the rest of the boys in Mrs. Patterson's class; and to their credit, they did not seem to notice it either. The beautiful Easter carols delighted him, and he wished he could join in the singing. He was able to do this later, for he was endowed with unusual musical gifts, though he was unaware of this, and only knew that the music here and in church filled his heart with joy, and the Resurrection Story seemed so different in this place of worship; for though the boy said his prayers, and had heard the Gospel Story from his mother's lips, attendance at church had been impossible, when they were living far from civilization.

He went home from his first morning at St. John's with many new thoughts and visions, most of which were realized as the days and years went by.

In the afternoon Mrs. Patterson called again at the cottage. She was pleased to find Mrs. Melnotte much better already; food and sympathy had both a share in her improvement. The same things were destined, with God's help, to complete the cure, for other ladies of the parish took an interest in the household, and did much to make them comfortable and happy, as time passed.

Claude had one more pleasure in store on that day long to be remembered, for his mother agreed to let him go with Mrs. Patterson, to the evening service; he was anxious to do this, for he not only wanted to hear the choir again, but also to see the whole of the church lighted.

It was all so much beyond his expectations, that later he dreamed of the church and the flowers and lights, and that he was among the white-robbed choristers—as indeed, he was, not long after.

So ended that Easter Day at St. John's; to one, at least, of the worshippers, it was a beginning. Twenty-five years later, Claude was ministering in his own parish church, and looked back with deep and tender gratitude to his first Easter at St. John's.

That Final Easter.

As time passes the links between this Easter and the great final Easter grow fewer and shorter. The majority on the shining shore grows ever greater. Perchance our dear ones swell the throng, and on Easter they seem to come nearer the old life, or is it that we draw nearer that new life, for Paradise seems to open and we catch a glimpse. For some that is the one note of Easter that lingers in the heart, lingers, refusing to be stilled for love is stronger than death. Easter links us in three directions, but for most of us the strongest, sweetest link is to the future. Our hearts look onto that final Easter, the last and brightest Easter. Our chief gladness is an expectant one "for with the morn those angel faces smile which we have loved long since and lost awhile".—Exchange.

For the Southern Churchman.

Our Emmaus.

F. B. Stone.

As on the road to Emmaus,
That first great Easter day,
Unknown Christ walked and talked with two
Disciples on their way;
So often now He walks unknown
With each of us today,
Like theirs, our blinded eyes can see
No Christ upon our way.

O let our hearts reach out to Him,
Our yearning love to show,
And He will manifest Himself;
His presence we shall know;
Our hearts will burn within us, too,
As theirs did on their way,
And set from ours some other hearts
Afire this Easter Day.

For the Young Folks

Easter Hymn.

Easter flowers are springing,
From their winter's rest;
Easter bells are ringing,
"Risen Christ confessed".
Where the Victor Saviour
Leads His Hosts to fight,
Christians, keep your Easter,
Rise, and do the right.

Bells, loud Alleluias,
Ring this Easter Day.
"Christ is Risen," always Christians be your lay.
Through the toil and darkness,
Tread His Victor way,
March with Him in gladness,
To your Easter Day.

—George Boursfield.

For the Southern Churchman.

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

The Resurrection of Jesus.

M. L. G.

All night the soldiers had watched. Perhaps, if the dark hours were chill in Joseph's garden, as they had been two nights before in the High Priest's court, they lighted a fire and drowsed before it, or told rough stories, yarning with weariness at so quiet a task.

"Strange work for soldiers!" one might have said, "guarding a tomb. I'd rather have been at Golgotha, where there was work."

"Yea, and have drawn by lot a robe as one did there. It would be well, this cold night."

"What are we here for, anyway?" the first might say, watching the sparks flicker up into the dark of the olive trees.

"Some tale of the priests, I believe. They feared the friends of this fellow who lies here, might take away His body, and claim Him risen."

"Risen? A dead man? What mean you?"

"Foolish enough, I grant you. But the tale is He foretold His death, and said that on the third day He would rise again."

"And for such a story Roman soldiers must keep guard o'er a tomb! Well, I will sleep, for this is drowsy work. And dawn breaks—or what is that?"—

For the sky was shattered into a million points of light. The earth quaked. Some strange being stood beside them rolled away with a flash of his great arm the stone, breaking Caesar's seal they were set to guard. Fear, unknown to Roman soldiers, came upon them, and they fell to the ground before the empty tomb.

For the tomb was empty. What indeed, had Romans to do with guarding an empty tomb? Before that flash and that rending earthquake, the Lord Christ had risen from His three days' sleep of death and brought to earth an eternal springtime, the end of death's power, the certainty of life glorious and everlasting, to every friend He ever should have.

This is His Easter gift to each one of us. Alleluia! For the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth!

For the Southern Churchman.

The Lost Cross.

A Christmas and Easter Story Founded on a True Incident.

A Hospital Visitor.

It was Sunday afternoon and 'Liza Ann, seated in her rolling chair, was resting her lame leg after making the rounds of the many white beds of the University Hospital ward, filled with the sick of all ages, from the wee baby to the grey-haired old lady, for, as yet, there was no children's ward in the hospital.

'Liza Ann's home was way back in the Blue Ridge mountains where there was no day school or Sunday School, and the little girl's life of ten years had been a hard one. It was when she had climbed to the top of a cherry tree and was reaching out for a tempting bunch of cherries that she had lost her balance, and, falling to the ground, had broken her leg. As several days passed before she could be brought to the hospital, over the rough roads in a farm wagon, the poor little leg had become infected, and that meant many months of treatment.

That first night in the hospital had greatly frightened her, separated from all her home people, with everything so strange, even her bath, the clean nightie, and the spotless bed. The figures in white moving around in the dim light seemed to her to be ghosts.

'Liza Ann's eyes were watching the door for Miss Fanny who had mothered her ever since that first dreadful night. Many were the goodies she had brought her and pictures and toys, and had delighted her heart, as Christmas was nearing, by telling of the wonderful Christmas tree that would be in the ward, all covered with bright balls of every color and with things that glistened and sparkled like sun on the snow. On every branch would be tiny lights and at the foot of the tree presents for every one in the ward. At the top would be a shining star, and then, for the first time, 'Liza Ann heard the Christmas story of Jesus being born in a stable, of the visit of the Shepherds and the gifts of the Wise Men, and how those who loved Him gave gifts to others on His birthday, because Jesus had said, "If ye do it for these, my children, ye do it for me".

Christmas Day in the hospital had been the happiest of days for 'Liza Ann for she received so many nice gifts, and she often now wondered what Daisy and Polly would say when they saw her "shut-eye doll with sure 'nough hair", and its little brush and comb and looking glass.

Before leaving the ward on each of Miss Fanny's visits there would always be a heart-to-heart talk with 'Liza Ann —of Jesus' love for little children, how they could talk to Him and how they might show their love for Him who had done so much for them.

Great was Miss Fanny's joy and surprise then when, on entering the ward one day 'Liza Ann greeted her by telling of her many good deeds since last they parted: "I gave Johnny a drink of water and found his ball," she said, "and let Mary hold my doll after the Doctor had dressed her arm, it hurt her so: I brought Mrs. Brown her brush and comb and helped her to dress! and I helped Mrs. Shiflett to the bath, letting her put her arm on my shoulder whilst I hopped along, and I done some other things, too." Like a bird with one wing, the patients said, 'Liza Ann had flopped from bed to bed on her errands of mercy.

"That's fine," exclaimed Miss Fanny, patting 'Liza Ann on the head, "and you shall have a silver cross that you can wear always to remind you for Whose sake you do your loving deeds."

So that was why this Sunday afternoon 'Liza Ann was eagerly watching the ward door, for she knew that Miss Fanny was going to bring the promised gift; and the little face with its stamp of suffering, blue eyes and upturned nose, fairly beamed as Miss Fanny took from a white box and pinned on her a little silver cross on which was engraved "In His Name".

"Ain't it grand, Miss Fanny," said 'Liza Ann, "to have such a lovely cross? I'm going to show it to Pop and Mommy when I goes home and tell them how Jesus died for them, too, and maybe Pop won't get drunk and fight anymore, and Mommy won't fuss and call him bad names. I just loves this little cross, and if I starts to pull Polly's hair when she teazes, or twist Dick's ear when he jerks my plait, I'll look at my cross and say, 'For Jesus' sake' and run away. You calls that winning a battle, don't you, Miss Fanny?"

Some weeks after this happy event, Miss Fanny noticed on entering the ward that instead of 'Liza Ann limping with joy to meet her, she had hidden behind one of the beds, and when Miss Fanny, with her arm around her, lifted the little bowed head, there were tears in the child's eyes, and burying her head in Miss Fanny's dress, she sobbed out: "I have lost my cross! I just went to the swing and to gather a few buttercups, and when I came back it was gone. I done told Jesus about it, and do you think, Miss Fanny, that He heard me, and that He will let me find it?"

Miss Fanny soothed the distressed little girl by telling her that, although Jesus didn't always give us what we asked for, since some little folks might then only be good for what they would get, she was sure her prayer was heard and in some way our dear Lord would answer.

The time flew by very fast and Miss Fanny and 'Liza Ann were counting the days till Easter. There would be pretty baskets filled with bright colored eggs and funny little rabbits and wee yellow chickens—all, Miss Fanny said, telling of the new life and how, after Christ's death on the cross, He lived again.

It was the afternoon before Easter Day that a most surprising thing happened. The postman brought Miss Fanny such an interesting looking letter on the finest of papers, engraved with a crest, and to Miss Fanny's amazement she found it to be from a real live Princess, not a fairy one like in story books. In it the Princess said she had heard of the lost cross and remembered what a distress it would have been to her when a child to have lost her little prized cross, she was sending to Miss Fanny for the little girl another cross. The Princess' cross was larger than 'Liza Ann's lost one, and was hung on a chain with a safety catch, but "In His Name" was engraved on it and, best of all, the Princess had written the sweetest of notes, "To the little girl from the mountains who won and lost a silver cross", saying how glad she was to hear that she had begun as a little child to serve the Lord Jesus.

On Easter Sunday afternoon, just after the children of St. Paul's Sunday School had marched through the wards, headed by their rector, singing their Easter carols and distributing their Church flowers, 'Liza Ann's cup of joy was full to overflowing when Miss Fanny, standing amidst the snow white beds, surrounded by the little children of her Sunday-school class, clasped around 'Liza Ann's neck the gift from the Princess and read to her the Princess's note. "Now, dear, say for the children your memory verse," asked Miss Fanny, and 'Liza Ann repeated as best she could, "Whosoever shall give a cup of cold water to one of these in Jesus' name, shall not lose their reward".

There were smiles and tears on the faces of those near by, some of whom had never heard

"The wondrous story of the Christ Who died for me,
How He left His home in glory for the cross on Calvary."

"Miss Fanny," whispered 'Liza Ann very softly, "did Jesus tell the Princess to give me this cross?"

Miss Fanny was silent, but on her face was a smile of joy, for she knew that her teaching had not been in vain.

For the Southern Churchman.

An Easter Song.

Mary Davis Reed.

My heart is singing a glad Easter song
Unto the risen Lord.
Sweet, joyous notes are trilling
From every winging bird.
Warm sunbeams and gently falling showers
Have called again to sing
All living things, from Winter's sleep,
In welcome to the spring.
Hyacinths, narcissus, and jonquils
Perfume the balmy air;
And a soft green carpet covers the earth
So lately brown and bare.
New buds and leaflets all unfold
'Neath touch of sun and rain;
And bell-shaped blossoms everywhere
Peal forth their low refrain.

"I am the Rseurrection and the Life,"
Those were His words sublime.
O soul, awake! And raise thy song
This glorious Easter-time.

The Caterpillar's Easter Gown.

One morning in early August Mr. Caterpillar slowly made his way across an old-fashioned garden.

"Good morning," said Mother Earth, "Isn't this a delightful morning!"

"I don't see anything delightful about it," grumbled Mr. Caterpillar.

"It is so cool, so comfortable," added Mother Earth.

"Maybe it is for you, but if you had on this tight coat you might not talk about 'delightful mornings'." So saying, Mr. Caterpillar made his way up a blade of grass.

"What's the trouble?" asked the Grass, "you seem to be out of sorts this morning and it is such a delightful one."

"Oh," replied Mr. Caterpillar, "may be if I had a dress of soft green instead of this tight coat and could sit still all day and get my food without working, I might say 'delightful morning'."

"But," answered the Grass, "my dress was not always so softly green"—Mr. Caterpillar interrupted, "Anyway, you haven't to wear the same tight coat"—"and," continued the Grass, "you will slip out of your coat later. Besides"—but Mr. Caterpillar turned his back, climbing the garden fence.

A golden Sunbeam smiled down upon him. "Isn't this a delightful morning!"

"Another one," sullenly replied Mr. Caterpillar. "Here you skip about all day, dressed in gold, telling about delightful mornings to me who must crawl along burdened with this tight coat.

The sunbeam glowed more brightly. "My dear Mr. Caterpillar, don't you know that if I hid behind a cloud I too would seem dull and gloomy Surely you know you will change that coat you are so conscious of and skip about even as I."

"Such foolishness! I skip about! I'll not stay to hear such silly talk! Up that old apple tree maybe I'll be safe from such chatter." Up he crawled almost to the top.

"Hello!" said a Little Bird. "Isn't this a delightful morning; I'm so happy I've almost burst my throat. You know how it is on such a morning.

"Oh, they're everywhere!" thought Mr. Caterpillar. Aloud he said: "May be if I had a fine dress, a glorious voice, and could fly through the air, visiting all the beautiful places, I might prattle of delightful mornings, but with this tight coat, forced to crawl and work for every bite I eat—oh, how weary you make me!"

The Little Bird cocked his head on one side. "Why, Mr. Caterpillar, you must know I had to learn to fly, and at one time had not enough clothing to cover me. You will soon have a garment much finer and handsomer than this, and fly where you like."

"Nonsense," snapped Mr. Caterpillar. "Don't talk such nonsense! I won't listen!"

"You needn't go," chirped the Little Bird. "I'm going down to visit Mother Earth," and off he flew.

Oh, if it was only true—what they had told him—but of course it was not. "I don't believe a word of it! I'm all tired out with their prattle and so sleepy. I'll spin me a hammock, go to sleep, and forget all about their foolishness."

"What a long nap I've had! I think I'll get up!" He began to stretch. "How stange I feel! Where's my old coat? Oh, Mother Earth, the Grass, the Sunbeam and the little Bird did know! It is a delightful morning! I have a new garment! I feel like flying! I believe I can!"

Over the garden he fluttered. "Isn't this the most delightful morning!" he whispered to Mother Earth.

Mother Earth smiled brightly. "I've seen so many delightful mornings—thousands and thousands of them—but every time one of our folk comes into his kingdom, as you have today, that seems the most delightful one."

The Butterfly moved his wings in and out. "My kingdom! Have I a kingdom?"

The Grass seemed to beckon him, so he flitted over to her. "Isn't this the most wonderful morning!"

"Isn't it?" answered the Grass. "I know how you feel. I felt so when I first entered my kingdom."

"Oh," exclaimed the Butterfly, "do we all have a kingdom? Is it the same one—but of course it couldn't be."

The Grass fanned herself softly as she thought. "Yes, and no. We are in separate kingdoms, yet we are all in one big one under a Wonderful King."

The Butterfly couldn't quite understand, but his heart beat with joy as he flew up to the Apple Tree.

"Come up under my canopy," invited the Tree.

The Butterfly settled down and looked about him. "Isn't this a delightful morning!" The little leaves turned to listen.

"It was such a morning as this," mused the Apple Tree, "when I entered my kingdom. I have been so small that I was afraid that I would be destroyed, lost, or forgotten—and then I fell asleep—but you know the joy of finding your kingdom."

A Little Bird joined them. The Apple Tree greeted him lovingly: "Come right in. I'm so glad you stopped this morning, for the Butterfly is here and you will enjoy him. We were talking of our kingdoms."

"Isn't this a delightful morning, Little Bird?"

The Little Bird sang several notes, stopped, then repeated them. "Yes," he replied, "so many have found their kingdoms this morning, that the day is overflowing with joy."

The Butterfly looked surprised. "How did I know you had entered?" chirped the Little Bird. "Why, Butterfly, you have on your Easter gown."—Exchange.

Why Some Pansies Are Purple-in-the-Face.

It was good-night-time in Pansyland, but the jolly old Sandman must have been in a hurry that night, for he had certainly missed the pansies' street, and not a single little blossom was sleepy—nor even the teeniest bit drowsy.

"Mother dear, won't you please let us play out tonight?" coaxed seven wistful little voices. "Please do mother," coaxed Pleady Pansy before her mother could find time to answer. "Mother, mother, do let us play, we'll come home 'fore break of day" sang Poet Pansy, who always talked in rhymes.

The mother smiled down into the eager little faces upturned to hers. "Was there ever such a beautiful family?" she thought fondly. Every single face was a lovely golden yellow, as bright and as beaming as the dancing sunbeams.

"No, my dears, you can not play out tonight," she said.

"But, mother, you know nights when folks are asleep is the only time we can run about and play," argued Perty Pansy. Perty was the oldest child.

"No, Perty," said mother in a tone they well knew, "you romped all night last night, and you may play out tomorrow night, but now you must sleep, or tomorrow you will be tired and fussy."

Pouty Pansy's bright little face clouded and she poked out her sweet lips in a very ugly way, then great tears began to roll down her cheeks. Her real name was Precious, but she was the baby, and was so spoilt and pouted so much, that the children had nicknamed her Pouty. Mother went right on with her task of tucking the blossoms in, as though she did not see the tears at all. Then, placing a large oak leaf at the foot of each bed, she kissed her children and left the room.

"Say, fellows, I dare you to play out tonight," called Perty in a loud whisper as he kicked back the covers and bounced up on the foot of the bed.

"I'm with you there, I'll not take a dare," sang Poet Pansy, hopping out of his bed.

"Me, too," said Pleady. "Come on, Playful. Aren't you game?"

Playful Pansy only snuggled down deeper under the warm covers as she answered, "No, Pert, and you ought to be ashamed to disobey mother like that."

"Goody, Goody," sneered Perty, "Come on, Pleasant, you will, I know."

"No-o-o-o-o," refused Pleasant, slowly. "Mother wouldn't like it."

"I'm tummin," said Pouty who wanted to do everything Perty did. "I think Muvver might let us play out eve'y night."

"Well, hurry, Pout," and four little pansies, shoes in hand, tip-toed out of the door.

"Wait, why don't you?" called Pokey Pansy, rolling out of his bed and feeling around for his shoes. "I'm coming, too."

"Come on then, Pokey, you're as slow as a snail," said Pleady, coming back to wait for the fat little Pansy, who was always late everywhere. "Now let's run and catch up with the others."

In their haste, they forgot about the pool of water left by the rain of the night before, and fell sprawling, up to their necks. My, how they squalled! They yelled and they screamed and they screamed and they yelled, until Perty and Poet and Pouty came rushing back and helped pull them out.

"I'm going straight home to my m-m-m-mother," sobbed Pokey.

"And spoil our fun! No, you won't!" said Perty.

"Ouch, Ouch, Ouch, something's on my neck!" screamed Pleady. "I just know it's old Cuttey Cut-Worm. Ouch! I can feel him gnawing my head off right this minute," and Pleady danced up and down in terror.

"Stand still! Stand still. I tell you and let me see," said Perty, trying to be brave. "Be still now. No, it isn't the cut worm, it's just old wiggley earth worms who got on you I guess, when you were crawling out of the mud."

"Well, I'm going on home to m-m-mother," sniffed Pleady. "Come on, Poke."

"Go on, then," said Perty, glad to be rid of two such sand raisers. "Slip in the back door and don't wake mother. And away ran Pleady and Pokey.

"Let's race to the park," called Pouty, and across the lawn sped three little run-a-way pansies, jumping and laughing in glee.

Half way to the park, Poet felt the earth move under him. He was sure of it.

"Perty," he called, "Perty, I felt the ground shaking, and my knees are q-q-quaking."

"Aw, No! No! No!" jeered Perty. Then, sure enough, all of them felt it. Underneath them, the earth seemed to rise and fall, and the frightened pansies had a time keeping their balance.

"Oh, I know what it is now," said Perty in a relieved tone, for he was beginning to be frightened himself. "It's the magic lilies coming np. They grow so fast that they move the ground when they start to come through."

But before their frightened little hearts could stop their wild pitter-patter, they heard something bounding across the grass. Lipperty-lip, lipperty-lip, it came, and stopped right at them. Then the terrible big white thing began browsing around. They could feel its hot breath on their little faces and it actually bit a plug out of Poet's ear. My, it was hard to be still, but they dared not scream for fear the big thing would eat them right up.

Finally, it moved on off and the little pansies ran for home, screaming "Mother, Mother, Mother", at every step.

Of course, she heard and ran to meet them.

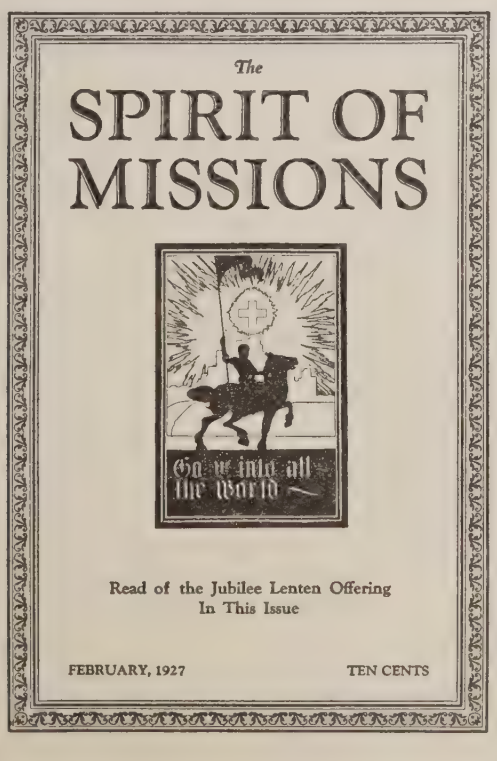
"Why, Perty! and Poet! and Pouty! what does this mean?"

"Mother, Mother, we want you. Come quick. Please do," screamed Poet, and Pouty screamed until mother was afraid she'd go into convulsions.

"I guess it must have been the big rabbit who frightened you," she said, when Perty had told her all about it.

Then she put the tired, dirty, naughty little blossoms to bed just as fast as she could. But their little faces were purple from fright and screaming, and purple they have been ever since.—Christian Index.

For the Southern Churchman.



Easter.

Alice J. Conklin.

A budding flower, a singing bird;
A tender thought, a kindly word;
A lifted heart, a sacred chime;
A risen Christ! 'Tis Easter time.

Christ's followers are those who are seeking to become what He is, His disciples are the men who are trying to learn the art of right living from Him. —Dr. G. A. Gordon.

Subscribe to THE SPIRIT OF MISSIONS

Essential information about the missionary work of the Church, at home and abroad, told each month in picture and story

Only $1.00 a year

Subscribe now through the children of your Church school, through the Woman's Auxiliary of your Parish or send direct to

THE SPIRIT OF MISSIONS

"The Best-Loved Magazine"

281 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

PIPE ORGANS.
If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, INC., Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices. Particular attention given to designing organs for memorials.

ANTIQUES.
WE PAY THE HIGEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 209 East Franklin Street. Richmond, Va.

CHURCH LINEN.
PURE IRISH LINEN at wholesale prices for Church Guilds, Rectors and others. Samples on request.
MARY FAWCETT.
115 Franklin St., New York City.

ROOMS—WASHINGTON.
VISITORS TO WASHINGTON ACCOMMODATED with comfortable rooms in private home. Reasonable rates. Private bath. Mrs. W. A. Masker, 2751 Macomb Street. N. W.

OLD ENVELOPES.
WANTED—Old Envelopes from letters written between 1845 and 1874. Do not remove the stamps from the envelopes Highest prices paid. GEORGE HAKES, 290 Broadway, New York.

CONFEDERATE STAMPS.
WANTED—Confederate Stamps, also United States Stamps used before 1870. Collections purchased. Higest prices paid. GEORGE HAKES, 290 Broadway, New York.

STAINED GLASS
JAMES POWELL & SONS (Whitefriars), Ltd., London, England—Stained Glass. Designs and estimates submitted on receipt of full particulars. Distributor ADRIAN A. BUCK, 665 Fifth Ave., New York City.

EASTER CARDS.
IMPORTED RELIGIOUS CARDS FOR EASTER AND LENT. One Dollar packages. G. L. Bender, 7421 Boyer Street, Mount Airy, Philadelphia, Pa.

FOR SALE.
SUMMER HOME IN SOUTHWEST PART OF VERMONT. Modern seven room frame house. Slate roof. Double garage; fruit trees; private bathing and fishing. Address L. E. LACKEY, Winter Park, Florida.

—CATHEDRAL STUDIOS—
Washington London.
Church Embroideries and Vestments, Silks, Fringes, Gold thread, Stoles with crosses from $7.60, Burse and veil from $15, Surplices and exquisite Altar Linens, Church vestments imported for the Churches free of duty.
MISS L. V. MACKRILLE,
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington, D. C. D. C. Telephone Cleveland 52.

TRAVEL.
SOUTHERN LADY, RETURNING TO VISIT relations, England and Continent, for summer, will chaperon small party. References Virginia and England. Address "Chaperon", care of Southern Churchman.

BOOKS.
THE WORD ABIDETH. A helpful book on the Bible. Inspiration, Criticism Highly endorsed. $1.00. Longmans, Green & Co., New York.

SITUATION WANTED.

CHURCH WORKER.
INFORMATION DESIRED CONCERNING an opportunity in Church work where the services of a trained and educated layman are needed. No objection to traveling. Subscriber is at liberty to refer to the Bishop of the Diocese. Address "S-4" care of Southern Churchman

HELP WANTED

YOUNG LADY, WHO CAN RUN FORD CAR, as housemother in country home. Two children, 8 and 11 years. $50.00 per month. Write with references to Mrs. Romulus Griffith, University Apartments, University Parkway, Baltimore, Md.

Deaths

IN MEMORIAM.

MRS. EDLEY HOBSON CRAIGHILL, for many years a devout member of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, of Lynchburg, Virginia, departed this life at her home in Lynchburg, on March 5, 1927, in the eighty-fourth year of a life replete in Christian idears, abundant loving usefulness and an assured faith in her Heavenly Father.

It is, therefore, Resolved by the Service League of St. Paul's Episcopal Church:

That while by the death of this beloved woman our hearts are filled with sorrow, we do rejoice in the memory of a beautiful friend whose personal charm and loving kindness were bountiful and never failing;

That though this League has suffered the loss of her wise counsel and faithful help in its service of the Church, we are fortified for greater endeavors by the glorious example of a complete and joyful consecration throughout a long life;

That notwithstanding the Church's cause has been by death deprived of a fearless and constant champion, its cause is strengthened by the knowledge that in the face of death this valiant child of Christ went in a happy and perfect confidence to her Father's Home.

It is ordered that this memorial be spread on the records of the League, that a copy thereof be in loving sympathy sent to the bereaved family, and that this memorial be published in the "Southwestern Episcopalian" and the "Southern Churchman".

MRS. S. V. KEMP.
MRS. GEORGE D. WITT.
MRS. DUDLEY HOLT.

JOHN HENRY MINOR.

Died in Tampa, Florida, March 2, 1927, JOHN HENRY MINOR, youngest son of Caroline Christian and Dr. George Gilmer Minor, of Virginia, in the sixty-eighth year of his age.

Like most men of his age in the South, he felt the privations of the reconstruction times and, while he was denied the privileges of a college career, his own study was a substitute for that and these same privations built up in him a sturdy manliness and resourcefulness which made him a wise and successful business man. He married Miss Evelyn Gilliam, of Richmond, and in 1894 went with his young wife to Florida, which, except for a short period, became their permanent home.

His greatest love was for God's out-of-doors, and his interest in seed time and harvest shaped much of his life. For years at his father's farm, Clarendon, near Richmond, and later in the fertile land of Florida, he planted and reaped and today the garden he tended to the very last of his life, is giving forth the reward of his care

Close to his love for Nature was his love for little children, and their love for him. They recognized intuitively his young heart which made for him, in his own home and in the home of his adoption, many friends who cared for him with a strong affection.

He was brought home and in beautiful Hollywood, at sunset, the final blessing was said and the last desire of every true Virginian was fulfilled,

"Take me back and let me lie,
Close where the James goes rolling by,
Down in Virginia".

REV. JOHN FRANCIS RIBBLE, D. D.

REV. JOHN FRANCIS RIBBLE, D. D., the beloved rector of St. Andrew's Church, Richmond, Virginia, for nearly fifteen years, entered into the more abundant life Wednesday, March 31, 1927, after a lingering illness. He will ever be a sweet example to all who knew him, and I feel that we will whisper, "Blessing he is, God made him so". Oh, may we catch the inspiration of his unselfish life, as he caught the vision of his Master's, "Who went about doing good". The radiance of that cross was ever his beacon light, and he drew others to taste and see that the Lord is good". May our Saviour comfort those that were nearest to him with His sweet healing touch, and make them strong in His love as they go back to life again, and bless us all with the benediction of His peace.

ELLEN L. LACY.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

(Continued from page 16.)

an endowment building, at Trumbull and Michigan Avenues. Consisting of stores and offices, it will provide a permanent income for the settlement and community work to which the Church must look forward.

Memorial Chapel For Camp Frisbie.

As a tribute to the late Dr. Frisbie, who married her, and was a preceptor of her youth, Mrs. Henry Ford has given a sum of money for the erection of a memorial chapel at Camp Frisbie, the boys' camp of the Diocese of Michigan. In keeping with its surroundings the chapel will be of beautiful rustic design. It will seat about one hundred and fifty persons, and will be equipped with a comfortable conference room for the use of the chaplain and camp directors for personal interviews with boys, and conferences of various kinds.

Diocesan Camp.

About two years ago the Diocese of Michigan purchased a beautiful property of about one hundred acres at Point Au Gres, Michigan. The property has a half-mile of shore line on Saginaw Bay. It is the intention of the Diocese to develop this property for camp and conference purposes. A movement has been set on foot recently to press for the completion of this scheme.

The Cranbrook School.

The buildings of the Cranbrook School for Boys are nearing completion, and the school will open in September of this year. For the present only boys of the seventh, eighth and ninth grades will be admitted. Provision is made for day scholars for whom the charge is $450 per annum. The full charge for room, board and tuition is $1,250.

"The Function of Research Education."

Of great educational value was an address given by Dr. S. A. Courtis at the April session of the Detroit Church Normal School. Dr. Courtis is the research supervisor of the Detroit School, and the Department of Education of the University of Michigan. Speaking on the subject of "The Function of Research in Education", Dr. Courtis reviewed the progress of educational science from the time of Galilee to the present.

He showed how emphasis in education had passed through the various phases of inspiration, imitation, the appeal to authority and the appeal to nature. He remarked that science gives a precise record of facts. The interpretation of these facts is another matter. He felt that the most striking discovery of the last educational science was that individuals differ, and that children respond to educational situations in terms of their own natures. In the past education has put its trust in authority and curricula; but from now on the emphasis must more and more be on the study of the individual child, with the object of relating him, with all his peculiar gifts and wants, to the society in which he lives.

McE.

Personal Notes

The Rev. W. K. Chidester, of Holy Trinity Church, Manistee, Mich., has accepted a call to be rector of Trinity Church, Niles, Mich., and will enter upon his new duties May 1, 1927.

The Rev. William Tutton, of the Diocese of Western New York, took charge of St. John's Church, Dickinson, N. D., and St. Matthews' Church, Beach, March 1.

The Rev. J. J. Preston, rector of St. Peter's Church, Tecumseh, Michigan, has assumed charge of the parish of All Saints', Brooklyn, Michigan. This will be in addition to Mr. Preston's work at Tecumseh and Clinton.

The address of the Rev. Corwin C. Miller is changed from Salina, Kansas, to Trinity Church, Owensboro, Ky.

The Rev. L. W. Blackwelder, rector of the Church of the Incarnation, West End, Atlanta, Ga., has accepted a call to St. George's Church, Griffin, Ga., and will take up his new duties June 1.

The Rev. E. A. Edwards, formerly rector of Trinity Church, Lawrence, Kan,. has accepted a call to be student chaplain of the University of Oklahoma and priest-in-charge of St. John's Church, Norman, Okla.

The Rev. William Page Dame, rector of the Memorial Church, Baltimore, has been called to be rector of Christ Church School, Middlesex County, Va.

The Rev. Oliver F. Crawford has resigned as rector of the Church of the Holy Cross, North East and St. Mary's, Lawrence Park, in the Diocese of Erie, Pa., and accepted the temporary charge of Christ Church, Oil City, Pa.

The Rev. Malcolm J. van Zandt, formerly rector of St. Matthew's Church, Kenosha, Wis., has accepted the call to be rector of Trinity Church, Detroit, Mich.

Chaplain Edward H. Earle has returned from the U. S. War Veterans Hospital, Palo Alto, Calif., to his present residence, 3215 Aurora Street, El Paso, Texas.

The Rev. H. E. Martin, formerly in charge of St. Elizabeth's Mission, Floral Park, L. I., N. Y., has accepted a call to St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Seaford, L. I., N. Y.

The Rev. J. L. Langhorne, formerly in charge of St. Paul's Mission, Martin's Ferry, Ohio, has accepted a call to St. Phillip's Church, Northside, Cincinnati.

The Rev. Clarence H. Parlour, formerly assistant of St. Martin's Church, Radnor, Pa., is now rector of St. James' Church, Dillon, Mont.

The Ven. Adelbert McGinnis, of the Northern Archdeaconry of Harrisburg, has accepted a call to be rector of St. James' Church, Muncy, Pa.

ORDINATIONS.

In St. Andrew's Church, Lawrenceville, April 8, the Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Southern Virginia, ordained to the priesthood the Rev. William Robert Moody, deacon. He was presented by the Rev. Norman F. Marshall, rector of Grace Church, Purdy, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Calvert E. Buck, rector of Christ Church, Washington, D. C. The Rev. James S. Watt assisted in the laying on of hands. The Rev. Frederick A. Sapp, deacon, of Kenbridge, Va., was also present and took part in the service.

The Rev. W. R. Moody will continue his work as rector of St. Andrew's, Lawrenceville, Emmanuel, Callaville, St. Mark's, Cochran, and Trinity Church, Brunswick County. He was ordained deacon at the Virginia Seminary by Bishop Tucker in June, 1926.

Since the first of the year, there have been four ordinations in the Diocese of Alabama by the Rt. Rev. Wm. G. McDowell, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Alabama, as follows:

The Rev. Samuel H. Livingston, Ph. D., of Jacksonville, Alabama, was ordered priest on the Feast of the Epiphany at the Church of the Advent, Birmingham. Bishop McDowell preached the sermon, the candidate being presented by the Rev. James M. Stoney, Executive Secretary of the Diocese. Joining in the laying on of hands were the Rev. Messrs. P. N. McDonald, Charles Clingman, A. D. Ellis, Joseph W. Fulford, Edmonds Bennett, Carl Henckell and G. W. Ribble.

On the Feast of the Annunciation, the Rev. Edgar R. Neff, Assistant Rector of the Church of the Advent, Birmingham, was ordained priest in that church. Mr. Neff was presented by the rector, the Rev. Charles Clingman. The Rev. A. D. Ellis, of Tuscaloosa, preached the sermon. The Rev. Messrs. Clingman, Ellis, and Ribble joined in the laying on of hands.

On March 30, at St. Luke's Chapel, Sewanee, the Rev. Ralph J. Kendall was made deacon, presentation being by the Rev. Charles L. Wells, Ph. D. The preacher was the Rev. George B. Myers. The ordination took place in the presence of the faculty and students of the Sewanee Theological School.

A further interesting ordination was held on April 7, when the Rev. Shirley G. Sanchez, Colored, was made deacon at St. Mark's, where since the first of the year he has assisted the rector, the Rev. Charles W. Brooks. The rector presented the candidate for ordination, the sermon was preached by the Rev. Charles Clingman of the Church of the Advent. Besides a large number of the clergy of the Birmingham District, this service was distinguished by the presence of Bishop A. A. Gilman, of Hankow. Bishop Gilman at this service vividly described conditions in war-torn China.

R.

Mr. Lewis Sasse, 2nd, of Wilmington, Del., was ordained to the diaconate on March 25, in St. Michael's Church, Trenton, N. J. The Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, Bishop of Delaware, officiated, with the Rev. Samuel Steinmetz, rector of St. Michael's, as master of ceremonies. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Nelson M. Burroughs, St. Paul's Church, Syracuse. The Rev. George Graham, D. D., Calvary Church, Wilmington, Del., presented the candidate. Assisting clergy were: Canon Charles S. Lewis, Trenton; the Rev. Ralph Urban, Trenton; the Rev. Richard A. Beatty, New York. The Rev. Mr. Sasse will be an assistant to Bishop Mitchell, of Arizona.

DEATHS.

The Very Rev. John Rigg, Dean of Trinity Cathedral, Easton, Md., was found dead in bed, March 28, in the home of the Rev. George C. Sutton, D. D., Oxford, whose guest he was.

The funeral was held March 31 in the Cathedral, and was conducted by Bishop Davenport with interment in St. Thomas' churchyard, Croom, Md.

The Rev. John C. Goodman, rector of Grace Church, St. Francisville, La., died suddenly on Friday, March 25, while driving his automobile just outside of the town.

The burial took place from Grace Church, with the Rt. Rev. R. H. Weller, D. D., Bishop of Fond du Lac, and the Rev. M. W. Lockhart of St. James' Church, Baton Rouge, in charge. The Rev. C. B. K. Weed, New Orleans, city missionary, and the Rev. S. L. Vail, secretary of the diocese, were also present, representing the Bishop of the diocese. Interment was in the old parish churchyard.

Three Days.

Noon! on a Roman road
By weary prisoners trod,
Bowed to the earth a fainting form,
The Son of God.

Night! and a naked Cross
Lifted against the sky,
On whose stark arms the Son of God
Lay down to die.

Dawn! by an empty Tomb,
He who is strong to save,
The Son of God, hath conquered death
And rent the grave.

I. M. B.

If we would keep the feast, it must be by laying aside the leaven of malice and wickedness, and eating the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth. Our members which are upon the earth must be continually made dead, and we must as constantly put on the new man—which is being renewed unto knowledge after the image of Him that created him where Christ is all and in all.

Easter Eve.

Surely the faith that sees below
The wreathed drifts of Winter's snow,
The springtime blossoms bud and grow—

The faith that knows the perfume shed,
Where lilies droop the modest head,
Though all the world be cold and dead—

The faith that hears in lifeless trees
The songster's mingled melodies,
The swarm and drone of countless bees—

That faith may pierce with undimmed eyes,
The cloudy curtains of the skies,
That hide the heights of Paradise.

May view the empty sepulchre,
And know beyond all doubt and fear
"The Lord is risen; He is not here".

What Jesus does is the best answer to the question as to who He is.—A. Maclaren.

The Bell Book and Stationery Co.

ENGRAVED WEDDING ANNOUNCEMENTS
VISITING CARDS.
Fifth Street between Broad and Grace
RICHMOND, VA.

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.

Richmond, Virginia

THE SAFE EXECUTOR

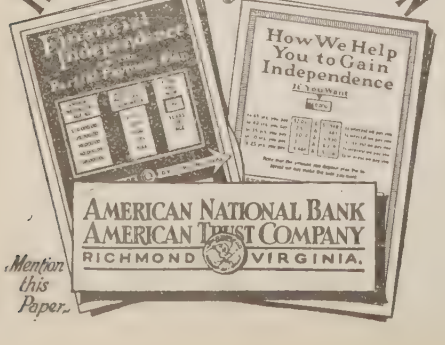
Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock $1,000,000.00
Surplus earned $1,500,000.00
Held in trust $30,000,000. (plus)

EARN $25 WEEKLY SPARE TIME
Writing for newspapers, magazines. Experience unnecessary. Details FREE. Press Syndicate, 1303 St. Louis, Mo.



"TRY AN' BEAT IT!"

If you will deposit each week so small an amount as $5.00 in the American's Income Building Plan, in 25 years you will have $14,000.00 in prime First Mortgage Bonds yielding $72.00 per month and $96.10 in cash.

We will gladly explain this simple plan to you.

KEEP YOUR INCOME COMING IN
Ask for Booklet on Income Building Plan

Mention this Paper.

INCORPORATED 1832

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,398,462.62

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer
J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm . P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

A Complete Store of shops and --- more --- an Institution

Miller & Rhoads

THE SHOPPING CENTER

Richmond - Virginia

QUALITY CHICKS
Chicks from winter laying, farm raised, mature stock, S. C. W. Leghorns, R. I. Reds, Barred Rocks, White Orpingtons, Anconas, Black Jersey Giants, White Wyandottes, White Plymouth Rocks, Black Minorcas, Pekin and Indian Runner Ducks; $15 per 100 up. Live Delivery guaranteed. Parcel Post prepaid. Hatching eggs $8.00 per 100 up. Several breeds rabbits. Circular free. Shipments will be made from one of our nearest associated hatcheries.
Glen Rock Nursery and Stock Farm, Ridgewood, N. J.

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC., 308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.
QUALITY—SERVICE

The South's Best Book Store

HUNTER & CO.

105 E. Broad Street
Richmond, Va.
Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen.
Prompt and Reliable Service.

Cuticura Talcum
Unadulterated - Exquisitely Scented

SYDNOR & HUNDLEY'S STOCK REDUCTION SALE

Complete Suites and Hundreds of Occasional Prices at

25 Per Cent, 33 1-3 Per Cent and 50 Per Cent Reductions.

7th at Grace Richmond, Va.

A NATIONAL CHURCH PAPER FOR ALL THE FAMILY.

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS FRUSTRA NISI 1835

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., APRIL 23, 1927. No. 17.

HEN fainting soul arise and sing,
Mount but be sober on the wing;
Mount up, for heaven is won by prayer;
Be sober, for thou art not there;
Till death the weary spirit free,
Thy God hath said, 'Tis good for thee
To walk by faith and not by sight;
Take it on trust a little while;
Soon shalt thou read the mystery right
In the full sunshine of His smile.

—J. Keble.

IN THIS ISSUE

THE PULPIT SERMON
By the Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, D. D.
Editor of "The Twenty Best Sermons"

A CHRISTIAN POLICY TOWARD CHINA
By Hon. R. Walton Moore
Member of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives

EDUCATIONAL

The Virginia Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded.
Established 1892.
For terms and information address
MISS M. GUNDRY.

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-eighth year of this School for Boys opened September 15, 1926. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. Hoxton, B. A., Principal.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The Requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA.

prepares boys at cost for college and university. Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountians of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., Rector.

St. Hilda's Hall

Charles Town, W. Va.
Near Harper's Ferry.

Chevron School for Girls. Episcopal Junior College—four year' High School and two years' College Courses. Elective Music, Art. Business, Athletics. Limited numbers.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

The One Hundred and Fourth Session Opened Wednesday, Sept. 15, 1926.

For catalogs and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria Va.

CHATHAM EPISCOPAL INSTITUTE,
Box 18, Chatham, Virginia.

College preparatory school for girls. Certificate privileges. Also two years of advanced Academic work. Special courses, Music, Art, Expression, Home Economics. Modern equipment. 15 Acres campus. Pool, Golf. Terms moderate. 83rd session September 22, 1926.

Bishop of Diocese of Southern Virginia President of Board.

For catalogue address
MABEL ELEANOR STONE
Principal.

The Divinity School of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia
42nd and Locust Streets.

Graduate Courses in Theology, Privileges at the University of Pennsylvania.

Address: The Rev. G. G. Bartlett, D. D., Dean.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY, Publishers,
112 North Fifth Street, - Richmond, Va.

LEWIS C. WILLIAMS.....President
REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Associate Editor
MISS FENTON WILLIAMSON News Editor
MISS SUSAN C. COOKE, Circulation Dept.
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00 Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful.....	4
Editorials	5-6
The Pulpit of the American Church	7
A Christian Policy Toward China—Hon. R. Walton Moore	9
Christianity and the Community—The Rev. R. Cary Montague.....	10
Book Reviews	11
Letters to the Editor	12
Church Intelligence	13
Family Department	17
Children's Department	19
Personal Notes	23

St. Stephen's College

An Undergraduate Church College for men.

There are four curricula—Classical, Literary, Scientific and Social Scientific.

For tution $250.00 a year; for a room furnished and heated $150.00 a year; for board in hall $250.00 a year; a total of $650.00.

Address: BERNARD IDDINGS BELL, President

Annandale-on-Hudson, N. Y. (Railway Station, Barrytown, N. Y.)

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesvile; St. Margaret's School, Tapphannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.)

(About gifts or bequests, address the Dean, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR BOYS.
Richmond, Virginia.

Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 60 pupils.

RATE $700.00.

Reduction to sons of Clergymen, teachers and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., Headmaster.

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

St. Agnes' Episcopal School

Alexandria, Virginia.

Boarding and Day School for Girls on Braddock Heights overlooking the Potomac River.

On the interurban trolley and bus lines between Washington and Alexandria.

Athletics and open air life; sixteen-acre campus. Primary, Intermediate, General and College Preparatory Courses. Music.

For information apply to
THE PRINCIPAL.

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University.

For catalog address
The Dean.

HOBART COLLEGE, Geneva, N. Y

A Church College for men, founded 1822. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

STUART HALL

STAUNTON, VA.

1843 1927

FORMERLY VIRGINIA FEMALE INSTITUTE

Oldest girls' school in Virginia—Episcopal For Catalogue, address MRS. H. N. HILLS, A. B., Box P.

The Hannah More Academy

The Dioceasan School of Maryland, Founded 1832. A Country School for Girls—fifteen miles from Baltimore. College Preparatory and General Courses, Music, Art, Supervised Athletics.

Principal, LAURA FOWLER, A. B., Reistertown, Maryland.

Richmond Trust Company

3%

ON SAVINGS.

BANKING—TRUSTS—REAL ESTATE

Capital $1,000,000.00

Main at Seventh Richmond, Virginia.

From Bethlehem to Calvary.

From Bethlehem to Calvary, the Saviour's journey lay;
Doubt, unbelief, scorn, fear and hate beset Him day by day,
But in His heart He bore God's love that brightened all the way.

O'er the Judean hills He walked, serene and brave of soul,
Seeking the beaten paths of men, touching and making whole,
Dying at last for love of man, on Calvary's darkened knoll.

He went with patient steps and slow, as one who scattered seed;
Like a fierce hunger in His heart, He felt the world's great need,
And the negations Moses gave He changed to loving deed.

From Bethlehem to Calvary the world still follows on,
Even as the halt and blind of old along His path were drawn;
Through Calvary's clouds they seek the light that led Him to the dawn.

—Meredith Nicholson, in Christ in the Poetry of Today.

Riches We Forget.

"Uncle, how much money have you?" It was an impertinent question; yet Murray could be excused for his frankness, for he was only a lad.

Uncle Ben laughed. "Not very much, son. I own this house, the last payment on the store has been made, and there is a little bank account."

"Then you are not rich?"

"No."

"But you are always so happy," persisted the boy.

The lad was making the same error the majority of us go on making day after day. It would seem as if we cannot erase from our minds that silly, outworn idea that riches and happiness are as inseparable as poverty and unhappiness.

True, money is powerful, but enormous wealth does not always mean real riches. We tend to forget all our internal riches—riches greater than all the silver dollars one could accumulate. We forget our riches in health—feet to walk, nose to smell, mouth to eat, tongue to talk, arms to work, eyes to see and ears to hear.

We forget our riches in friends. Life would hardly be worth living without friends. If I did not have a comrade to whom I could confide my secrets, I would be poor indeed. We forget our riches in thoughts. Thank God for the freedom of thought. No matter how tied down in body one might be, he can send his thoughts as far as he likes. In thought he can be a millionaire, a king, a prince, a sailor or a soldier.

Collecting money for the sole purpose of amassing wealth is a poor excuse for a life. Hoarding money so that when the owner dies it is lying idle is not using our possessions to the best advantage. Money is made to be exchanged. Money wisely used will bring a great reward. Hoarding brings a loss. What if the leaves should be greedily held by the tree? There would be no room for new growth.

Possess money, if you can—money is a power. But do not allow money to possess you. And, while we are earning and saving money, let us remember the other riches—health, friends and thoughts.—F. C., in Boy Life.

SOLD BY A SHUT-IN

Ladies' All-Silk Hose; full fashioned chiffon, extra sheer, fine quality, No. 175. Colors: Atmosphere, Amberette, Shadow, Darling, Gun-metal, White, Moonlight. Three pair for $7.05; one pair, $2.35.

Men's Hose, No. 300; twelve strand, extra close knit, pure thread silk with lisle top. Colors: Beach, Navy, Gray, White, Cordovan, Champagne, Russian Calf. Four pair for $4.00; one pair, $1.00.

These hose are guaranteed to please you. I pay the postage.

E. P. BROXTON,
Rte. 2, Blythe, Ga.

THE INN

Located in Historic
CHARLES-TOWN, WEST VIRGINIA
In the beautiful Shenandoah Valley. Two hours from Washington on the National Highway. Large shady lawn; home atmosphere; Southern cuisine. Address

THE INN,
Charles Town, West Va.
Mrs. John P. Briscoe.

FOUR POINT STAR SUMMER RANCH

St. Michael's Mission

WIND INDIAN RIVER RESERVATION,

Ethete, Wyoming.

Open from June 15th to September 15th.

Bring your family and friends to healthful Wyoming. Opportunities for fishing, horseback riding, and motor trips to many of America's most beautiful spots, including Yellowstone Park, abound. Good home table with plenty and dairy. Here a unique vacation may be spent in the delightful atmosphere of St. Michael's Mission. Write for further particulars. Prices moderate.

A. ABBOTT HASTINGS, Warden.

A FINE CHRISTIAN CRUISE.

The Wicker Tours, of Richmond, Va., operate not only a fine Christian cruise in summer to Palestine at a remarkably low rate, but a number of European tours that are most attractive. All tours personally conducted. If you are going abroad, either to Palestine or Europe, or both, this summer, it will be to your interest to write to The Wicker, Tours, Richmond, Va.

SEE EUROPE

$375 UP

Comprehensive Vacation Tours. Comfortable travel. Also PALESTINE-EGYPT cruise. 83 days $675 up.

The Wicker Tours, Richmond, Virginia.

Three Essentials To YOUR Bank

Experience—Strength—Helpfulness

Formed by consolidation of two of the oldest banks in the South, this institution invites your business with the assurance of ample facilities for all your financial requirements and a sincere spirit of helpfulness in banking relationships.

FIRST AND MERCHANTS
NATIONAL BANK OF RICHMOND

JOHN M. MILLER, JR., President.

CAPITAL, SURPLUS AND UNDIVIDED PROFITS, $6,300,000

"Palmer's book is a wonderful contribution to the subject," says Bishop Darst.

THE MINISTRY OF LAYMEN

A Plea for Lay Evangelism

By

LEON C. PALMER.

Over 2,000 copies sold before edition was off the press.

Postpaid: Single copies, 25c.; four for $1.00; nine for $2.00.

From

The BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW

202 S. Nineteenth St., Philadelphia.

EVERYTHING FOR THE CHURCH

J. & R. Lamb
23-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED WOOD · METAL · ETC.

Dewey's
EST. 1857
MATURED
WINES
for Sacramental Use
Affidavit Blanks and Price Lists Mailed on Request
H. T. Dewey & Sons Co.,
138 Fulton St., N. Y. C.

WOODY ART GLASS SHOP
Art Stained and Leaded Glass
Church Windows a Specialty
402 East Marshall St.
Richmond, Va.

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS
Largest stock in the South. We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival
The Couper Marble Works
(Established 79 years.)
294-296 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

We are Headquarters for CHURCH BOOKS
and
CHURCH SCHOOL SUPPLIES
Send for a copy of our Complete Catalogue
GEORGE W. JACOBS & COMPANY
Booksellers-Stationers-Engravers
1726 CHESTNUT STREET
PHILADELPHIA

R. GEISSLER, INC.
56 W. 8th STREET, NEW YORK, N.Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS

Church and Sunday School Furniture
THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY, Hickery, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue.

MOLLER PIPE ORGANS
three thousand churches. Every organ specially designed for the church and service in which it is be used and fully guaranteed. Specifications and estimates on request. Correspondence solicited.
M. P. MOLLER,
Hagerstown, Maryland.

CHURCH VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Surplices, Stole,
EMBROIDERIES
Silks, Cloths, Fringes.
CLERICAL SUITS
Rabats, Collars, Shirts.
COX SONS & VINING,
131-133 E. 23d St., New York.

XANTHINE
Hair Restorative
Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.
Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.
XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS
Gold, Silver and Brass.
Church and Chancel Furniture
Write for Catalogue for Episcopal Churches.
W. & E. SCHMIDT CO.
308 THIRD ST. MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Washington Cathedral
A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation
• • •
THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work of Missionary Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.
Chartered under Act of Congress.
Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.
Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.
• • •
Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

Kill All Flies! THEY SPREAD DISEASE
Placed anywhere, DAISY FLY KILLER attracts and kills all flies. Neat, clean, ornamental, convenient and cheap. Lasts all season. Made of metal, can't spill or tip over; will not soil or injure anything. Guaranteed.

DAISY FLY KILLER at your dealer or 5 by EXPRESS, prepaid, $1.25.
HAROLD SOMERS, 150 De Kalb Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"He hath turned the shadow of death into the morning."

"The Apostolate of kindness is the best of all."—Charles de Foucauld.

Nothing that we loved will truly perish, but will be found again in Him who takes up our history that has vanished, and in whom our life is hid.

O my soul, since God doth love thee,
Faint not, droop not, do not fear;
For though His Heaven is high above thee,
He Himself is ever near."

God would weave all our lives into patterns of loveliness. He has a perfect plan for each. It is only when we refuse to work according to His purpose that we mar the web.

In company guard your tongue; in solitude, your heart. Our words need watching; but also our thoughts and imaginations, which grow most active when we are alone.—Spurgeon.

I venerate the man whose heart is true,
Whose hands are pure, whose doctrine and whose life,
Coincident, exhibit lucid proof
That he is honest in the sacred cause.
—Cowper.

The preparation for active service is in secret with God, in learning ourselves in communion with Him. There is the battle really fought. Power for active service is acquired not in active service, but in intercourse with God in secret.

In all Christ's teaching on self-denial it must never be forgotten that it always meant to Him some larger good. Self-repression was always a stage to a truer self-expression; any giving up of self would result in the true finding of self——Hugh Black.

Peter slipped, but his Lord would not allow him to fall. Just as His hand was outstretched to lift Peter out of the waters on the Sea of Galilee, so did He lift Peter out of the depths of his denial by a look that wrung bitter tears from his soul.

The highest type of Christian faith is not the open vision, not some hour of rapt contemplation, but the recognition of the presence of Christ in daily work, the consciousness that as a man goes on and tries to do his work Christ is with him, and that the rewards of his labor come from Him.—Alexander Mann.

Cassocks
Surplices, Stoles, Altar Hangings, Bookmarkers and Embroideries Altar Linens, Materials, Rabats, Rabat Vests, Birettas, Collars, Cuffs and Shirts. Clerical and Custom Tailoring. Moderate prices.
J. M. HALL, Inc.
9 East 35th St., New York
Tel. Caledonia 8648

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., APRIL 23, 1927. No. 17.

PARAGRAPHS OF INTERIST

THE RESURRECTION MINISTRY OF OUR LORD is a part of His work that does not always receive sufficient attention. Clergy and Sunday-school workers are inclined to crowd all His appearances after the Resurrection into the Easter celebration, forgetting that they extended over a period of forty days. This forty-day season can be made as spiritually profitable to the Church as is the Lenten time preceding Easter. If we take each one of the appearances that our Lord made in His risen body we shall find that there is a special message of comfort and inspiration to be drawn from every one of these occasions. To illustrate what we mean, we may point briefly out the tender remembrance of denying Peter in the message left at the tomb and recorded by St. Mark (Mark 16:7); the consideration for two unknown disciples as emphasized in the walk to Emmaus, of which St. Luke tells us; the strengthening of a doubter's faith, as recorded by St. John at the appearance "after eight days" (John 20:26); last of all, the wonderful practicality shown in the scene recalled by John in his last chapter, where the Saviour in His spiritual body still is mindful of the needs and weaknesses of our physical bodies, and greets His seven hungry, tired and discouraged disciples, with the question, "Children, have ye any meat"? (John 21:5). During the Sundays between now and Ascension Day, a thoughtful consideration of these great scenes will be found tremendously helpful as a series of sermons for the clergy, or subjects of meditation for the laity.

THE NATIONAL DEPARTMENT OF CHRISTIAN SOCIAL SERVICE is ever active and on the alert to provide fresh and intelligent means of keeping this branch of Christ's Work before the people of the Church. In our department of "Christianity and The Community" will be found the program for the Seventh Annual Conference of Social Workers of the Episcopal Church. Besides this large gathering, numerous smaller groups are being arranged for the instruction of Rural Clergy in various sections of the country. The ten-day Institute for Pastors, promoted by this Department, begins this year on May 31. This is the third year in which a group of clergy gather in New York for a brief but serious study of social work, community problems, child welfare, social case work, labor problems, etc., in the New York School of Social Work. The men are lodged (without board) in the General Theological Seminary. Expenses for registration, lodging, and visits in connection with the classes, amount roughly to $25, plus the cost of food.

SEVEN HUNDREAD AND FIFTY THOUSAND FEET OF MOTION PICTURES have been sent to cheer eight thousand lepers in the Philippine and Virgin Islands. These films were sent in this worthy cause by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and they include educational features, although by no means confined to that type of picture. The gift to these outcasts of society is, of course, absolute and outright. The films will run there until they are entirely worn out. This is an extension of the service of the Motion Picture Industry, which prior to this time has also furnished pjictures to hospitals and homes in the United States, and indicates a thoughtfulness of others, which we are not apt to associate with this business. In this connection it is worth remembering that it is William Hays, the head of this great industry, that is at present directing his energies to raising the Ten Million Endowment Fund for Presbyterian Ministers. Within the past two weeks, two contributions for this cause of one hundred thousand dollars each were sent in by persons who would not allow their names to be divulged.

AT THE RECENT DEDICATION OF THE PARK AVENUE SYNAGOGUE, Bishop Manning was invited to be present, and make an address. He spoke with such a broad spirit of Brotherly Love, that we quote herewith some paragraphs as expressing a high standard of the Christian attitude:

"I say quite frankly, and I know you will not misunderstand my saying it, that I would like to see all men Christian, true Christians, filled with the spirit and the mind of Christ. I pray that the day may come when all of us, Christians and Jews alike, may see more clearly the Light that is in Christ and may walk together in that Light more fully than any of us do now. But this does not keep me as a Christian Bishop from respecting and honoring your loyalty to the noble teaching of the Old Testament which I also hold in common with you. I do not want to see either Jews or Christians grow weaker in their religious faith and conviction. What we all need today is fuller faith in God and a more real reverence for His Law. What a wonderful city New York would be if every Jew were an earnest and devout Jew and every Catholic were an earnest and devout Catholic and every Protestant were an earnest and devout Protestant.

If the day of full spiritual fellowship is to come it must come through the growth in all of us, Christian and Jew alike, of faith in God and love for each other. What is needed is that Christian and Jew shall walk together in brotherly love and fellowship. And here in New York we have an opportunity to do this such as the world has never before seen.

Whatever our present differences in faith, let us never forget that we are all children of one Father and are all created in His Image and Likeness. Catholics, Protestants and Jews, we all worship the God of Abraham, we all acknowledge the laws of life set forth in the Ten Commandments, we all hear the voice of God in the Hebrew Prophets and in the law of love to God and our fellow men declared in the Golden Rule.

Let us stand together as brethren against the strange recrudescence of pagan unbelief, the materialism, the breaking down of the sacredness of marriage and the home, the flood of indecency and obscenity which is now menacing our life.

And let us stand together in the demand that the children in our schools shall be taught to know that there is a God, the One God in Whom we all believe and trust, Whose Word is Light and Truth and Peace and Whose Law must be obeyed if our life as a nation is to endure.

MORE INFORMATION

We have received the following letter from one of our subscribers:

Editor of the Southern Churchman:—

Enclosed, please find money order for my subscription for your splendid paper. Particularly do we appreciate its being Protestant Episcopal and most heartily do we agree with Mr. Marsilliot and others whose letters we read with great interest.

Our Church . . . . is at present "divided against itself". For two years we had a young "Catholic" priest who has recently gone . . . . . leaving debt, discord and bitterness. Many of our people left the Church—some going into the Methodist Church, others to the Presbyterian and still others, myself included, were without a Church home, attending services now and then in the various Churches. We are hoping we may get a Protestant Episcopal rector, who will be able to regain at least a part of those who are scattered.

The Catholics are in the minority, but had it all their own way for a while. We are wondering if the Catholic party ever builds Churches, or just creeps in and takes possession of those already established.

Hoping that the Southern Churchman continue to grow in circulation,

Very respectfully yours,

In publishing this letter and commenting upon it editorially, we are withholding parts of it that might identify either the clergyman referred to, or the parish from which it comes. We do not wish, in any way, to hamper the usefulness of any minister, nor to say anything that might be detrimental to a parish, but we do believe that this situation exists in a good many parishes throughout the Church, and that it is doing incalculable harm. It is because we believe this, and because there is, in our opinion, a remedy for it that we are pursuing a policy of information in regard to conditions in the Church.

The average man is not particularly enthusiastic about religion in general, and his own Church in particular. When certain innovations and practices are introduced into the services, he does not want to start a "Church row", and quietly drops out, going to the Presbyterian or some other Church, or perhaps to the golf links. There is generally a minority, usually composed largely of women who like these kind of things, and who with a rector in charge can impose them upon a congregation.

We are not intolerant, and believe that a congregation ought to have the kind of service that it wants, but we are also convinced that in most cases these practices are developed by the clergy, and that vestries should know the views of prospective rectors before calling them.

Some of our correspondents advocate a quiescent policy, and seem to think it wrong to try to open the eyes of the people to what is going on in the Church. This is not the attitude assumed by those who represent the Anglo-Catholic Party. A continual stream of propaganda pours from the Holy Cross Press, at West Park, New York. At least one of our weekly Church papers of general circulation, and a monthly magazine are supporting this movement vigorously, and all the time. Executive offices with an official in charge have been established in New York.

The whole question of how far the Protestant Episcopal Church shall go toward becoming like the Roman Catholic Church is one that is now facing Episcopalians, and we can see no reason why it should not be discussed frankly and without acrimony.

A correspondent in this issue qoutes the Rev. S. C. Hughson, as saying that the Catholic Party simply stands for the principles of the Nicene Creed. Any Roman Catholic priest would no doubt say the same thing, but Mr. Hughson goes much further than this and says: "We contend for the presence of Jesus Christ on the altars of our Church, and with all charity we decline to accept any compromise or accommodation regarding this practice." The "practice" here referred to is the reservation of the elements of the Holy Communion on Church altars for adoration, and some of the Anglo-Catholic leaders go further than Mr. Hughson.

DO VESTRIES DESIRE THIS PRACTICE INTRODUCED INTO THEIR CHURCHES? IF THEY DO NOT, IT WILL BE WELL FOR THEM TO KNOW THE ATTITUDE OF CLERGY ON THIS SUBJECT BEFORE CALLING THEM.

THIS WEEK'S CONTRIBUTORS

THE REV. JOSEPH FORT NEWTON, D. D., was born in Texas, and received his primary education at home, later going to Hardy Institute and from there to the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky. After his graduation here he had charge of a Baptist church in Texas. He next went to a non-sectarian church in St. Louis, and from there to the People's Church at Dixon, Ill. Leaving the Baptists and becoming an Universalist, he had charge of the Liberal Christian Church in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Coe College, at this place conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Divinity. He was then called to the City Temple in London. After three year's service there in this great pulpit he came back to New York City, as pastor of the Church of the Divine Paternity. In 1925 he decided to enter the ministry of the Episcopal Church, and after being ordained deacon and priest, he was called to St. Paul's Memorial Church, Overbrooke, Pa., where he still is. He succeeded the Rev. Robert Norwood, and has maintained the high standard of preaching that this congregation had become accustomed to under the latter's ministry. Dr. Newton is considered one of the greatest preachers in this country, if not in the world, and is the author of several books of sermons. For the past three years he has edited the Twenty Best Sermons of 1924, of 1925 and of 1926, books which have been used as standards in homiletical departments at Theological Schools.

ROBERT WALTON MOORE was born at Fairfax, Va., and educated at the Episcopal High School and later at the University of Virginia. He began the practice of law in Washington, handling many important cases before the Interstate Commerce Commission. In 1919 he was elected to Congress, and has served in the House of Representatives ever since, having been on the Foreign Affairs Committee of that body for the past five years, or more. His experience on this committee fits him especially for a discussion of our present relations with China, which will be found in this issue of the Southern Churchman. Mr. Moore comes of an Episcopal family, and has for many years been vestryman in Zion Church, Fairfax, Va.

THE PULPIT OF THE AMERICAN CHURCH

THE ABUNDANT LIFE

By the Reverend Joseph Fortnewton, D. D.

"I am come that they might have life, and have it more abundantly."—John 10:10.

THERE are some texts whose very words bring back the faces of noble men and women who have translated them into life, and this text is one of them. It recalls the gracious figure of Phillips Brooks as he used to stand by the great pillar in Trinity Church in Boston pouring out a torrent of eloquence. Recently I have been preaching in his old pulpit, his memorials all about me—the bust in the Baptistry at once an inspiration and a challenge. It was an extraordinary experience, as if the preacher were not simply a tradition, but a presence in his church and his city.

Every preacher has a Key-truth, some aspect of the Gospel nearer to his heart and more vivid in his experience than any other; his own vine and fig-tree where he is at home. It was so with Phillips Brooks. He was wont to say that no matter what text he took, he had always one theme for his sermon—the Abundant Life. Of course, he varied his message with every art of emphasis, but he fulfilled in his ministry the ideal of Amiel when he said that to be religious is "to personify and embody the eternal". He was a symbolic figure, and his life was a perpetual disclosure of a beautiful soul, supreme both as preacher and pastor.

One day in New York he took for his text the words, "Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh". Everybody expected a sermon on death or the end of the world, or at least on the Coming of Christ. Instead, the title of his sermon was The Inexhaustible Interest of Life! With every variety of emphasis and appeal he showed that life without uncertainly, expectancy and unpredictable surprise would be deadly, flat, stale and unprofitable. Watch, therefore; live in a spirit of eager aspiration, for no one knows what a day will bring forth. It was so again when he talked of the scene of Jesus walking on the water, and Peter said: "Lord, if it be Thou, bid me come to Thee on the water. And He said, come." The sermon had to do with the great Adventure of Life. To him the religious life was a normal human life, full-orbed, radiant, and aglow with zest and glee. Such was his central insight, and his character lighted up like an altar lamp the teaching of his words. Whether in the careless freedom of the street, in the warm circle of friendship, or on his throne in the pulpit, he lived the abundant life.

Herein the noble preacher was like his Master whose he was and whom he served with such loyalty of rejoicing obedience. Surely it is significant that Jesus never once used the word religion, but always the word Life instead, for to Him "religion and life are one thing, or neither is anything". As William Blake said, He was "the Bright Preacher of Life". If one were asked to sum up His Gospel in one word, that word would be Life. Here lies the deep difference between Jesus and Buddha, to whom life was an ill, if not an evil, and whose ultimate beautitude was the hope of extinction. But Jesus came not to denude life and strip it bare of beauty, but to make it rich and deep, not only radiant, but radiating. Truly the very fact that He spoke thus of life shows that life must be good for if any one had a right to be a pessimist it was He. Baffled on every hand, despised and rejected of men, without money, without home, beset by the trickery of His foes and the treachery of friends, and always upon His sunniest hour a shadow of the cross, none the less He taught the glory of life. What a rebuke to the pessimism by which we are tempted in the dark hour or the passive mood!

By contrast with the radiance of His own life, the aspect of humanity which seemed most to impress the Master was its weariness, its lack of joyousness, its slow and heavy-laden step. He was not surprised at what men suffered, but at what they missed. Hence His mission as a bringer of a more free and vivid kind of life, rich, abundant, eternal. No description of Him is more arresting than the words of the Evangelist, "In Him was life"—a very intense, palpitating word, glowing, sparkling. He had, first of all, an abounding physical life, diffusing health from the very hems of His robe, and there is no hint that He was ever ill for an hour. He had, also, a vivid personality, as commanding as it was winsome, over-awing the soldiers sent to arrest Him, yet winning the love of little children. His mental life was deep beyond fathoming. He saw clearly; He spoke as never man spake. His ideas, considered in their sweep and forereaching grasp dazzle us with their depth, and betray an insight as true as a line of light. His moral life was no passive, pallid kind of innocence, but positive and profound; not only pure, but purifying. His religious experience, in its depth, its richness, its fullness, was a revelation which no words may tell. Alive in the truest, most effective and enjoyable ways, truly could He say that He had come that men might have a new and deeper kind of life.

What is all the world seeking today with such persistent, passionate quest? Life! More life, richer life—to see life, to know life, to possess life. The moving picture show lords it over the art gallery, because in the theatre the pictures seem to have life—they move. Everywhere it is the same. We judge an artist or an author by one test, whether he is, or is not, "in contact with life". In philosophy we are face to face with a movement of thought, hardly yet a system, which goes by the name of Vitalism. Its chief exponents teach us to regard the universe as an expression of life, instead of regarding life as a by-product, so to speak, of the universe. Yet with all our seeking after life, do we really find it? What multitudes go through the world not more than half alive, dwarfed, stunted, unresponsive. Too many are like the serfs in the Gogol story of Dead Souls, who were reckoned as being alive until the next census. Most of us, indeed, live with a slower pulse-beat than is our right, making a living, as we say, but not living a life.

For Jesus meant something more by the word life than we mean by it, something far deeper. Outwardly a man may appear prosperous, while all the time his inward nature is a shriveled starveing, his affections withered, his faith decrepit, his sympathies sluggish—"a dead soul's epitaph in his face". Hence the parable of Jesus about a man who had so rich a harvest that his barns were bursting, and he decided to pull down his barns and build greater ones. When he had filled the big barns to the eaves, he said to his soul, "Take thine ease; eat, drink and be merry", and that night he died. God called him a "fool" for thinking that the life of a man consists in the abundance of the things that he possesses. Life is not made of things. It uses them. Food, clothes, shelter we need, but only that we may live for the things that make it worth our time to live at all. Otherwise, we are only passing the time, or wearing out shoe-leather. What folly, then, to make incidentals the prime objects of life, the more so when our tenure of them is so short and insecure. Jesus measured life not by quantity, but by quality.

Equally futile is it to seek life with a fretful, feverish anxiety. Jesus saw all this fret and fuss of folk about what to eat, how to dress, and pointed to the lily whose beauty is untroubled by care. What did He mean? The lily does not toil, yet it is not idle. It does the thing it was meant to do. It lives out the law of its life, fulfills its reason for being. Just so many must live out the law of his life, seeking the kingdom of heaven as naturally as the lily seeks the light and air. Jesus held that the highest life is the only natural life. Marcus Aurelius lived a spiritual life in a palace. Simplicity is not a matter of things, but of spirit and an inner attitude toward things. Life becomes simpler when we seek first things first, and it was thus that Jesus made us seek first the kingdom of heaven. Other things are necessary, but not primary. When we invert the true order of life, it becomes cluttered, complex, unintelligible, and loses its bounding joy. Consider what is involved in being abundantly alive. Ruskin said that the outstanding, ennobling difference between one man and another, and the test whereby we may know who is alive and who only half-alive, is simply this—that one man feels more than the other. We are only human in so far as we are sensitive, responsive. Indifference, lack of sympathy, vulgarity are so many kinds of death. The root distinction between a gentleman and a churl lies in the fact that a gentleman feels a stain like a wound, and the churl is callous and does not care. Bunyan was a tinker, so was Christopher Sly, but how world-far they were apart in their capacity for sympathy and sorrow. The poet who said that Jesus was the first true gentleman that ever breathed was true to the facts of His nature, and His capacity alike for indignation and compassion. Fineness of feeling exposes one both to sorrow and joy, but one cannot have one without the other. It is in the blunt hand, the cold heart, the stolid habit, that men become dead of soul. Jesus came to quicken our pulses, to pour a new tide of pity into our hearts, to make men more intensely and vividly alive.

Many are the forms in which this more vivid, sensitive and abounding life may be fostered and developed; the greatest of all being a contact with the living spirit of Christ. Such contact means the infusion of a vital health and purity and joy into a human life, whereof Phillips Brooks is one of a multitude of witnesses. The glory of his life, the secret of its wonder and beauty, the source of its victorious and rejoicing service, was the fact that Christ lived in him richly—as Saint Gaudens felt but did not interpret aright. Those who knew him recall the majestic figure, the massive head, the great and beautiful eyes that were "homes of silent prayer", the tender strength, the prevailing sympathy, and the ineffable grace of that unforgettable man. There was about him a kind of divine passion, a human endowment of surpassing richness touched and transfigured by the light of God. There was a hallowing presence in his heart and therefore a hallowing power fell upon those who heard him in the dim recesses of Trinity Temple. High, fine, sweetly human, unspeakable lovely was the soul of Phillips Brooks, because Christ lived in it. He lived the life of wide sympathies, of pure emotions, of great thoughts, or holy ambitions, of eager and aspiring service—the life which is its own pledge and prophecy of eternity.

We live, said Wordsworth, in an imperishable line, by admiration, hope, and love, and the abundant life admires more eagerly, hopes more persistently, and loves more ardently. They are dead who live not by their admirations, but by their disgusts. The man most truly alive is he who is most keen to recognize and swift to greet whatsoever things are honest and just and of good report. If there be any virtue or any praise, he has eyes to see it and a voice of welcome. He is a hero-worshipper, an enthusiast for all generous causes and all noble adventures. In days when cynicism and the cant of cynicism are so much in vogue, he does not bow the knee to the Baal of a cheap and flippant scorn. No, he is dowered with the hate of hate, the scorn of scorn and the love of love, and by his faith in the hidden nobility of men he evokes that nobility and brings it to bloom. Amid all the haunting temptations to pessimism, he does not give way to the weakness of despair. Anybody can give up. Nothing is easier than to be a cynic. But the life of Christ shed abroad in our hearts keeps us buoyant and confident that in the end love shall triumph over selfishness and death shall be swallowed up in victory.

Salvation has many aspects, but it is all told in the one deathless word Love. For love it is that makes the most of life, thinks most deeply, feels most passionately, and serves most generously. It redeems us from selfishness—the sum of all sin—as well as from contempt and despair. It is true indeed that those who love most suffer most, as they have also most power to endure and conquer suffering; but all the saints have proved that the Cross can be a Tree of Life. Love feels keenly the fellowship of the common lot, rejoicing with them that weep—swept out of itself into the very life of God which is the redemption of the world. If now we look into the life of Christ, we find that He lived by admiration, hope, and love. How quick He was to welcome every yearning for a nobler life, every bud of promise, every glint of moral beauty. He never lost hope for humanity. His keen eye saw something to love even in the most forlorn and sin-bespattered mortal, and His love was a tide always flowing. Underneath His sorrow lay the mystic and unfathomable joy that comes of living richly, hoping unweariedly, and loving triumphantly.

Along this path we arrive at the true meaning of the Eternal Life. Immortality is one thing; eternal life is another. Christ did not come that we might have the gift of immortality. We have it whether we will or no; doomed to it, burdened by it, unable to escape it. No, Christ came that the awful fact of immortality might be heightened and brightened into splendor of eternal life. He saw that men do not live, but only exist, measuring life by duration not by death and glow and color. With Him the question was not how long a man may live, but how much he lives. Some one has used this illustration. When a river is low and shallow in the summer-time, we see the rocks that rise in its bed. They obstruct the stream, and make it fret as it journeys to the sea. But when the river is in flood, the rocks are covered and forgotten in the silence of a mighty sweep of happy waters moving in majesty. Measured by miles, the river is no longer than before. Measured by depth, how different it is!

Such is the abundant life—rich, sparkling, overflowing, unending! As Bergson said, life moves like a cavalry troop, over-riding death. For one who lives this life Eternity is now, Heaven is here, and Death is only a cloud-shadow wandering across our human valley. There is no break in it. It is continuous, not something we are to get when we die, but something that never dies. Length of days does not signify. Depth of life is what counts, radiance of faith, richness of love, and the fellowship with Him who redeems us from the tyranny of time. O Eternal Life, live in us abundantly lest we die without ever having lived, and teach us so to fill our days with the spirit of Him who came that we might have life that we may live indeed—live faithfully, fruitfully, fearlessly in the fellowship of the life that shall endless be.

TWENTY YEARS OF GLORIOUS SERVICE.

The National Bible Institute, 340 West Fifty-fifth Street, New York City, will celebrate its twentieth anniversary with a Bible Conference to be held on May 8, 9 and 10. An unusually fine program of Bible teaching and music has been arranged.

Organized in 1907, the National Bible Institute has had a very remarkable growth during the twenty years it has been ministering to the needs of New York. Started for the purpose of promoting aggressive evangelism every day in the year by means of outdoor evangelistic meetings, it soon faced the need of supplying trained workers for that field. As a result of this need, the Institute schools came into being and they now have an enrollment of over 300 young men and women who are preparing for definite Christian service in the homeland and on the foreign field as ministers and missionaries. Its graduates number over 300, many of whom have gone to the foreign field under thirty-five denominational and undenominational boards. Three rescue missions—the McAuley Cremorne Mission, the Beacon Light Mission and the Bronx Gospel Hall—are conducted in New York City. The Yale Hope Mission in New Haven, Conn., is also under the auspices of the Institute. During the fiscal year ending March 31, 1927, the Institute conducted 3,711 outdoor evangelistic meetings with an aggregate attendance of 593,710. At these meetings 95,990 tracts and gospels were distributed, and 3,469 persons publicly professed acceptance of Christ. For young women the National Bible Institute maintains a 200-acre camp with frontage on two lakes at Copake, N. Y. This camp provides all the facilities needed and desired for such purposes.

Under its varied activities the National Bible Institute carries on a continuous Bible Conference Program. During last year particular emphasis has been laid on Bible conferences for young people, and as a result of its ministry many young people have been led to give their hearts to Christ and not a few to His service.

PRAYER FOR MEXICO.

"Dios todopoderoso, nuestro Padre celestial, que siempre estas pronto a oir las oraciones de aquellos que te invocan"—so begins a prayer for Mexico recently set forth. The translation follows:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, who art ever ready to hear the prayers of those who call on Thee, grant, we humbly beseech Thee, the abundance of Thy blessings, both temporal and spiritual, upon the United States and Mexico.

Guide and guard its President, the members of his Cabinet, the members of Congress, the Governors of the several States and all others in authority.

Put into their minds good desires, increase in them true religion, nourish them with all goodness; and grant that by the operation of Thy Holy Spirit they may ever be led to put forth such efforts on behalf of Thy people as will give them release from all that hinders and prevents a true knowledge of Thee and the value which Thou hast set upon the sons of men.

Open the eyes of Thy children to the light of the everlasting gospel, quicken their minds and make known to them the liberty which is in Thee. All of which we ask in His Name who came to set us free, Thy Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

A CHRISTIAN POLICY TOWARD CHINA

By Hon. R. Walton Moore. M. C.

IT WILL not be questioned that western contact, enterprise and influence have been of extreme advantage to China, and that the severance or weakening of the legitimate relations between China and the west would be of extreme disadvantage to the interests of both. While both are responsible for the present situation, it is certainly unfortunate that the western nations, and then Japan, should ever have failed to reckon with the possibility that the Chinese people might acquire a national consciousness and strive for national independence and autonomy. Except for that failure, the west would have engaged in no such sowing of the wind as has contributed to cause the whirlwind. And it is also unfortunate, that, failing to take more definite notice of the signs of awakening and self assertion which, for upwards of a generation have been appearing, they did not determine to pursue a more cautious course. But while this is true of all, it may be fairly claimed that our country has been the last offender. It has shown more foresight than the others, and has been more just and sympathetic. For example, years ago, when exclusive territorial and business concessions were being greedily exacted by other nations, the United States, through Secretary Hay, promulgated the "open door" doctrine, which furnished the Chinese a measure of protection against such aggressions. Later, in the Washington Conference on the Limitation of Armament, the United States led in planning to relieve the Chinese from the foreign domination to which they were subject. The divergence between the views of the United States and those of some of the other powers is illustrated by the statements of Secretary Hay and the German Emperor when the Boxer Rebellion occurred in 1900. In the midst of that very serious disturbance, the Secretary plainly declared that "The policy of the United States is to preserve the territorial and administrative entity of China". About the same time, the Emperor announced as a program for his troops in China, "When you meet the foe, you will defeat him. No quarter will be given, no prisoners will be taken. Just as the Huns, one thousand years ago, under the leadership of Attila, gained a reputation by virtue of which they still live in historical tradition, so may the name of Germany become known in such manner in China that no Chinese will ever again even dare to look askance at a German". It may be noted in passing that the share of the United States in the Boxer indemnities—nearly $25,000,000—was remitted to China by legislation enacted in 1908 and 1924, to the extent of upwards of $18,000,000. But notwithstanding our relatively generous attitude, following the lead of Great Britain, we have taken over by treaties which are still in effect, privileges which free nations do not grant each other, and which all factions in China now condemn. Under these treaties, we maintain courts of our own for the trial of civil and criminal cases in which Americans are defendants, while of course Chinese living in this country are confined to our courts. In addition, these treaties forbid China to impose a tariff duty in excess of five per cent ad valorem on foreign goods entering its ports, while the sky may be the tariff limit on Chinese goods shipped to the United States.

Not in a moment, but slowly, through a long period in which the most significant event was the overthrow of the monarchy and the substitution of a republic, the leaders of the national sentiment, many of them highly intellectual men, educated in the universities of Europe and America, have spread among the inert mass of the population, which is about three times that of the United States, some knowledge of the extent of foreign control. The more moderate of these leaders, with their large following, constitute the element which an able writer now describes as "Young China", and which he believes is destined to gain power. There is a sort of irony in the fact that the process of apprising the Chinese people of their situation and stirring their indignation has been enormously assisted, but without any such design, by the foreigners themselves, through the work of their churches, hospitals and schools, by their periodicals and newspapers, and the numberless means of communication and information which they have set in motion, and but for which the whirlwind might conceivably have been long postponed.

That there should be widespread resentment and bitterness is not surprising, in view of the extensive and almost innumerable privileges which foreign nations have obtained, and without any nice regard to the method of obtaining them, and which have, from time to time, been held by the use of armed force. In particular instances, when England has resorted to that method, English statesmen, among them Cobden, Gladstone and Morley, have denounced the military activities of their government as wholly indefensible.

To prevent the whirlwind rioting on to a point where Americans may be as unwelcome in China as Chinese now are in America, and when not only China, but other eastern nations, may become relentlessly hostile towards western civilization and religion, the wisest statesmanship is demanded. And in such a crisis as this, nothing would be more fatuous than to assume that the civil war now in progress will end without the nation being unified with an approximately stable government, except to mistakenly assume that the reorganization will be communistic in its character, and therefore friendly international relations not possible. It is rather fashionable to attribute any movement for greater freedom in the Orient, or for that matter, elsewhere, to Russian influence, but it is incredible that these Chinese, with the background of a wonderful civilization which has never been entirely obscured, will ever be willing to substitute for their philosophy, literature and art, the theories of modern Russia. There is rather to be expected a revival and enrichment of the best qualities of the old order. It is not to be supposed that in the very near future the Chinese will altogether escape the turmoil which now prevails, and establish a social and political condition which westerners will thoroughly approve, but those who have the best means of knowing entertain strong hopes for the future.

No one denies that at this juncture it is our duty to use such methods as may be necessary to insure the safety of American lives and property, and that this doubtless requires cooperation with Great Britain, Japan and France. But beyond this, what should be our policy, in order to stay the whirlwind so that it may not become a tempest destroying the prospect of anything like normal relations hereafter between China and ourselves?

As indicated in a resolution reported during the last session of Congress by the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, and passed by the House we should let the Chinese understand that we admit the injustice of the unequal treaties and are prepared to modify or abandon them, without regard to the action of other nations. From every direction the resolution had impressive support. It had the support of prominent Americans living in China, such as the Director of the China Medical Board of the Rockefeller Foundation, the President of the College of Yale-in-China, and the Editor of the Peking Leader, who is also Professor in the National University of Peking; the Professor of Political Science of Johns Hopkins University, for years a resident of China, and the Professor of History and lecturer on International Relations of the same University; the business interests of this country, speaking through the Acting Secretary of the American Asiatic Association, and of the missionary interests, speaking through such authorities as Bishop Gilman, of the Diocese of Hankow, and Bishop Brent, who is so familiar with eastern affairs. Mentioning the resolution, Bishop Brent said that it would be an evidence to the Chinese "That we, at any rate, stand for an independent China on the same basis as our own Government is independent".

Furthermore, it should be made clear that when one of the factions, which is likely to be the Cantonese, forms a government, which can safeguard life and property, that government will be recognized and treated with the consideration and respect to which any independent nation is entitled; and that our commercial interests, which of course no one thinks should be lost sight of, shall not create the pivotal motive of our conduct, but be subordinate to the supreme matter of preserving the peace of the world and offering to the Orientals, with a reasonable prospect of acceptance, the best that can be afforded of our religion and civilization.

While the factional war continues, and final treaties cannot be negotiated, our Government should have no thought of joining the other powers in any step not essential to the protection of life and property. There should be no thought of a blockade of the ports or reprisals, and none of military intervention with a view to indefinite control of the country by the use of force. Nor should there by any pre-judgment of the question as to whether the Cantonese leaders directed or sanctioned the outrages which have occurred. And it seems to me that it might be of great value in the way of winning confidence and good will, for our Government, inasmuch as we have not been without fault in the past, to announce that it will bear the burden of the losses which Americans have thus far sustained, without demanding reparations on that account, in the event there is manifested from now on, an honest effort to accord our nationals fair treatment.

Without such a liberal policy such as that outlined, it is easy to forecast a future of struggle, confusion and hatred which will be disastrous to every American interest. On the other hand, such a policy, although it may mean temporary inconvenience, embarassment and loss of trade, is the only alternative, and certainly there is no other policy which can claim the character of Christian statesmanship.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE COMMUNITY

"The Kingdom Come, Thy Will be done on earth"

Edited by the Reverend R. Cary Montague

SEVENTH NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON SOCIAL SERVICE AT ST. PAUL'S CHURCH, DES MOINES, IOWA.

The National Conference on Social Service of the Episcopal Church has become an important part of our Church life. It has been meeting now for the past six years in all parts of the country, from Rhode Island to Colorado, and one year even went across the border to Toronto.

Its discussions are always helpful and inspiring, drawing together, as it does, workers from every section of the country. It provides a wonderful opportunity for an exchange of ideas and comparisons of plans. By holding it immediately preceding the great National Conference of Social Workers, it is possible to secure speakers who have had nation-wide experience.

This year's meeting promises to be no exception to those which have preceded it, and the following program offers an immensely interesting three days of valuable discussions:

Wednesday, May 11.

10:30 A. M.
Organization
(a) election of officers
(b) appointment of committees
(c) reading of minutes
(d) presentation of credentials
(e) provincial reports

1:00 P. M.
Luncheon at the Y. W. C. A.
Greeting and address by the President of the National Conference of Social Work, John A. Lapp, LL. D., Director of the Department of Social Action of the National Catholic Welfare Conference.

2:30 P. M.
Statement from the National Department by the Rev. Charles N. Lathrop.
Provincial Organization and Work by the Secretary of the Commission on Social Service of the Third Province, Mr. George R. Bedinger, Executive Director Public Charities Association of Pennsylvania. Discussion.
The Field and Work of the Diocesan Department by the Chairman of the Department of Social Service of the Diocese of Colorado, the Rev. Charles H. Brady. Discussion.

8:00 P. M.
(Session of the National Conference of Social Work—Presidential Address: "Justice First.")

Thursday, May 12.

7:30 A. M.
Holy Communion.

9:00 A. M.
(Sessions of the National Conference of Social Work.)

1:00 P. M.
Luncheon at the Y. W. C. A. under the auspices of the Church Mission of Help. Round Table Discussion on "Unadjusted Young People".

2:30 P. M.
Educating the Parish in Social Mindedness, by the Rev. Harold Holt, Assistant Secretary of the Department of Christian Social Service, sometime rector of All Saints', Portsmouth, Ohio. Discussion.

8:00 P. M.
(Session of the National Conference of Social Work—Address: Rural Social Problems.)

Friday, May 13.

7:30 A. M.
Holy Communion.

9:00 A. M.
(Sessions of the National Conference of Social Work.)

1:00 P. M.
Luncheon at the Y. W. C. A. under the auspices of the Girls' Friendly Society.

2:30 P. M.
The Religious Approach to Social Problems by Stuart A. Queen, Ph. D., Department of Sociology, University of Kansas, and
The Rev. Edward S. White, Rector, Holy Communion, St. Louis, Missouri.
Discussion.

4:00 P. M.
The Community Agencies as the Rector's Helpers by Miss Ruth Hill, Associate Executive Secretary, American Association for Organizing Family Social Work.
Discussion.

8:00 P. M.
(Session of the National Conference of Social Work—Address: "The Schools and Social Work.")

Saturday, May 14.

7:30 A. M.
Holy Communion.

9:00 A. M.
(Sessions of the National Conference of Social Work.)

1:00 P. M.
Luncheon at the Y. W. C. A. Address on the Relation of Social Work to the Church, by Dr. Frank J. Bruno, Department of Social Work, Washington University, St. Louis, Missouri.

8:00 P. M.
Service of Preparation at Saint Paul's Church, conducted by the Very Rev. Howard C. Robbins, D. D., Chaplain, Dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York.

Sunday, May 15.

8:00 A. M.
Holy Communion at Saint Paul's Church.
Celebrant, the Very Rev. Howard C. Robbins, D. D., Chaplain.
Assisted by the Rev. Elmer N. Owen, Rector.

11:00 A. M.
Morning Service.
Sermon by the Very Rev. Howard C. Robbins, D. D., Chaplain.

The sessions and luncheons are open to all who are interested.

Accommodations and rates are offered by the Brown Hotel, Des Moines, Iowa, on the European plan, as follows: Two in room, with bath, $2.00 each per day; single room, with bath, $3.50. Reservations should be made directly with the Hotel.

MAY DAY—CHILD HEALTH DAY, 1927.

Five years ago, perhaps with a desire to conserve and protect a world disillusioned and bruised by war, the American Child Health Association conceived the idea of a festival of American Childhood and selected the old May Day of our forefathers, as May Day—Child Health Day.

The idea of using May Day for promoting Child Health has grown rapidly in this time and its celebration is now a national expression of the ideal of the child—perfect physically, mentally, and spiritually—that must be the hope of the nation.

The purposes of May Day—Child Health Day now find expression through every great organization that touches the life of the child; through National and State Bodies such as the Children's Bureau, Department of Agriculture, the Red Cross, the United States Public Health Service, the State Departments of Health and Education; through lay organizations such as the American Federation of Labor, the American Legion, the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, the Girl and Boy Scouts; through schools; and now is added the last great link in the chain—the Church.

Throughout the United States in cities, in towns, in counties, in villages, in hamlets and in the isolated one-room school houses, by parades, floats, pageants, May Pole dances and other celebrations there have been made evident the hope and the determination to secure for our children the right to a physically fit body, a sound well-trained mind and an enriched and happy spirit.

This is not a mere flare for one day, May Day; it has been proven to hold within it the power of stimulus to permanent and continuous endeavor. All that it throws upon the screen in parade, pageant, and story, goes quietly on every day in the year, and May Day is merely the occasion for focusing attention upon how far we have cleared the pathway of these "little ones" and how we may further clear it during each succeeding year.

This year leaders in Protestant, Catholic and Jewish Churches are giving this project whole-hearted support; and it is hoped that representatives of each religious denomination may be included in local, county, and state May Day activities.

We suggest that on Sunday, May 1, all Churches ally themselves with this great movement through Sunday Schools, and through sermons and services dealing with the duty of parents to be intelligent about the physical, mental and spiritual rearing of their children. How many children in each congregation are "Five Point" children—that is, how many measure up to the state minimum standard of physical fitness? Truly if Christ concerned Himself with the bodies of men, the Churches may profitably follow His example.

There is a May Day chairman for each state, and information and suggestions may be secured from these local chairmen, or from your State Board of Health.

BOOK REVIEWS

HIGH THOUGHTS ON GREAT SUBJECTS.

MAKING OF MAN, a Study in Evolution: By Sir Oliver Lodge. Hodder and Stoughton, London; Doran, New York.

In recent years the name of Sir Oliver Lodge has been associated in the popular mind with Spiritualism. I doubt if he would class himself as a Spiritualist, certainly not as a member of any sect of Spiritualism. He is a member of the Church of England, and Sunday after Sunday reads the Lessons in his parish Church. Whatever else he may be, he is one of the greatest among modern Scientists. This combination in him of religion and science makes especially valuable at this time what he says on the subject of Evolution. This book contains less than two hundred pages and of course the treatment is general, as it is of the other great subjects on which the author touches, but what he says about Evolution will commend itself to Christian thinkers. If any one will read this, along with the sermon by Bishop Tucker published in a recent number of the Southern Churchman, certainly he will cease troubling about the relation of evolution to religion. Sir Oliver Lodge's book can truly be called one of reverence and piety, and while it is brief it lacks nothing in depth of thought. Any one who reads it once will want to read it more than once.

Two other great problems which are dealt with are the presence of evil and the Incarnation. "Man," he says, "was to be given freedom; he must be free to decide on his own course. Advice, even command, might be given, but not coercion. . . . . Freedom could not be only freedom to do right; it must involve freedom to do wrong also. The gift of freedom involved the possibility of sin. And sin followed." Again he says: "The first man had come; the advent of the Second Man was awaited. Glimmerings of His coming began to dawn on the specially enlightened." From this point, page 153, to the end of the chapter, the reader will find half a dozen pages of singular beauty and eloquence. Equally fine is the closing chapter. Both of these chapters deal with the supreme subject of the Incarnation. Nowhere else can be found a more beautiful and complete reconciliation and harmony of the two great words "The Father is greater than I," and yet "I and the Father are one". "Mystery indeed there is," says the author, "and presumably always will be." But he shows where the heart of the mystery lies.

It is needless to say that such a book as this is worth reading. For we have here the way in which a great mind has worked out, one might say for the comfort of his own soul, his thoughts on the greatest subjects that confront humanity. Whether or not the reader follows every turn of the author's high argument he will know that he is in the presence of a thinker who is not only keen in intellect but devout in spirit. Here are his closing words: "The full revelation of the Logos from the Beginning may not be clear to us even now, but our faith tells us that by a supreme Incarnation there was revealed the true Light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. The Word was truly made flesh and dwelt among us, and, in moments of insight, we have beheld His glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth."

J. H. D.

DAWN: By Irvine Bacheller. The Macmillan Company, New York. Pp. 335.

This book is almost certain to take a place beside Ben Hur, as one of the few great novels of the New Testament period. The reader moves among sacred characters, who are portrayed in vivid life-like pictures, exhibiting human qualities, yet with a dignity and beauty that keeps it from a taint of irreverence. In its pages one passes through Eastern scenes with such characters as Paul, Apollos, Bartimeus, and the Master Himself. The enthusiastic effervescence of the Oriental Jewish character is everywhere present, and the methods of speech shows the common use of parable and figurative language. The heroine, Dorcas, is represented as "the woman taken in adultery", whose forgiveness by the Saviour moves her to become an ardent disciple. She is in love with Apollos, though at first her affection is unrequited because he has a wife. After the latter's death, he seeks for her, and through many vicissitudes their mutual search for each other makes a thrilling story, with wonderfully related outstanding scenes like the conversion of St. Paul, which, is described in reverent and impressive language. We cannot commend this book too highly, believing, as we do, that its perusal will arouse a new and keener interest in the New Testament incidents, and that through it, many are likely to be drawn to the Sacred Story.

R. C. M.

IN TIME OF SORROW: By Bishop Slattery. The Macmillan Company, New York. Pp. 161.

In this little volume, so full of conviction and promise, Bishop Slattery clearly shows that through sorrow we are often brought to realize more fully our privileges and duties to ourselves and to humanity. In the chapter, "God and Immortality", he says: "It is not our responsibility how or when our dreams shall come true: God will care for that. But it is our duty to dream and pray and work with full confidence that our effort will count, by God's mercy, towards a glorious ending." Again, from his chapter, "The Assurance of Christ", he quotes Shakespeare: "The undiscovered country, from whose bourn no traveler returns," and adds that Shakespeare ignored the august traveler who did return, our Lord Jesus Christ. His resurrection crowned His life with power, and He promises us, not only life but such a life that we shall, if we follow Him, meet with our loved ones, in the life hereafter. The author has produced this book after many years of tender pastoral care and close contact with sorrow of every kind, bereavement, separation, affliction and disappointment. It is interspersed with comforting and inspiring verses and helpful quotations, while his own views on these great subjects are of a strengthening sort.

R. C. M.

WHAT IS THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION: By Edward L. Parson, D. D., Bishop of California. Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wis. Pp. 67.

When we read the title of this book, "What is Christianity" and saw just sixty-seven pages occupied with such discussions as attempt to give an answer to the title, there was an invitation to laughter—such a great subject in such a little volume, but the contents showed us that the essentials of Christianity are well compacted in this volume

These are four sermons, delivered in Grace Cathedral, San Francisco, California, by Bishop Parson. The preacher points out Faith as the essential initiative that attaches the individual to a personal Saviour. This personal Faith leads to "A Way of Life", peculiar to itself; then it ramifies itself in a collective way in a new "Society", or the Kingdom of God among mankind. The fourth sermon presents Christianity as a "Transforming Power" that can regenerate both the individual and society.

This book is helpful and simple in style. It can be read profitably.

S. S. S.

A GUIDE TO THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE: By Hersey E. Spence and James Cannon, III. Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tenn. Pp. 7-187.

This book contains the notes and outlines of two professors of Biblical literature in Duke University, well and thoroughly arranged but very brief for the beginner. It is valuable for all students of the Bible and Biblical history. Its treatment is historical and in full detail, but not expository. All the historical steps of "How We Got Our Bible", are well but very briefly mentioned, with all the versions from the LXX to the recent translation to modern speech.

The notes of these two Bible students and teachers are here sent out of the class room in book form, and we trust other students, both in seminaries and colleges, as well as Bible teachers in Bible classes, will find a great help in the study of this outline.

S. S. S.

HANDBOOK OF ALL DENOMINATIONS: By M. Phelan. Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tenn. Pp. 215.

We have in this volume an interesting and useful sketch of all Christian denominations, sects, or Churches, from the Baptist, numbering over five million members to the Vandanta Society in Boston, with a total membership of three hundred and fifty persons. Altogether there are just about one hundred denominations with their various branches included. Among these are found nine different kinds of Presbyterians, eleven varieties of Baptists and six branches of Methodism. Of course, in a book of this size covering such a tremendous field, the space given to each subject has to be very limited. It gives five pages to "Protestant Episcopalians", from which we quote the following paragraph: "The doctrinal position of the Episcopal Church is based upon the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds, together with the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England. The Church considers itself "a possible center and rallying point for the reunion of the widely varying forms of Protestant Christianity in America". A movement looking toward conciliation began as far back as 1853, but it did not find definite expression until 1886, when the House of Bishops set forth as "an irreducible minimum" the following position as a basis for the restoration of unity among the divided forces of Protestantism: (1) The Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as the revealed Word of God; (2) the Nicene Creed as a sufficient statement of the Christian faith; (3) the two Sacraments, Baptism and the Lord's Supper, ministered with unfailing use of Christ's words of institution and of the elements ordained by Him; (4) the historic episcopate locally adapted in the methods of its administration to the varying needs of the nations and peoples called into the unity of His Church."

This book will be found valuable for information and reference.

R. C. M.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

SEEKING PEACE.

Mr. Editor:

We have been watching with interest the progress of your earnest fight against "Romanizing tendencies" in our Church, and have already had somewhat to say in your forum about it. Perhaps you will allow another brief word. Laying aside all bias and prejudice, which is so apt to hurt the understanding, what are the facts in the case? Surely we may rely upon the "Catholic party" itself for the best definition of itself. I am going to quote the Rev. S. C. Hughson, O. H. C., an Anglican monk (of course), and well known for his Catholic leanings (of course), and the chairman of the Congress Committee of the Catholic Congress. Father Hughson says: "Its aim (that of the Catholic Congress Committee) is to convert America to the Catholic religion. By the Catholic religion is meant the faith as expressed in the Nicene Creed, and interpreted by the consensus of the Church throughout the ages." Now if that be a true statement of the meaning of the "Catholic faith" as these gentlemen claim the right to hold it, it is hard to see the cause for so much alarm about the "Romanization" of our Church by the Catholic movement. Under that rather broad definition we are all Catholics, if we are Episcopalians at all. Not that every true Episcopalian is not always a true Protestant. Our Church is militantly Protestant, and should always remain so. We protest continually for the ancient Catholic faith against the additions of Romanism and the subtractions of Protestantism. We hold our Protestant heritage very dear. It freed us from the very evident errors and heresies of Romanism. But it would be foolish for us to allow our Protestant heritage of nearly four hundred years to drive completely out of mind our Catholic heritage of over 1,900 years. It would be the ultimate folly for us to withdraw our claims and to allow the Roman sect to claim that larger heritage exclusively for itself. We should never forget that we are in the Church of the apostles, the martyrs and the saints, the Ancient Catholic Church, proclaiming to this generation her ancient faith as she received it from her Lord, and ministering in the present the old truths by which God's saints have lived and died for over 1,900 years.

And now, a word to our Catholic friends. Do not look upon us Low Churchmen as some kind of a disease, even though we may have all the characteristics. Nor take too much to heart some of the criticism we fling at you, and turn to fling it back again. Perhaps many of us do not understand you very well, and you know what a common failing it is to criticize what we cannot comprehend. Sometimes it even seems that you do not want to explain yourselves to us, so that we may understand. Sometimes we even think that you want to consider yourselves persecuted, and to feel hurt. Let us know more about you, and when we know you better we may not be so ready to criticize. We may not forsake our Low Church traditions, but we will understand what you are trying to do, and perhaps we shall find that we both believe in the work for the same Church, though in slightly different ways. Let us have peace in God's house. For the love of God, and of His Son Jesus Christ, and of the Holy Ghost the Lord and Giver of Life, let us center all our interest and attention on winning the world for our God and for His Christ, in searching for the sheep of His fold which are scattered abroad and lost, and in dispensing God's life-giving grace through the sacraments of His Church; and leave off this continual snapping at each other's heels about unimportant matters of opinion and practice.

William R. Moody,
Rector St. Andrew's Church.

Lawrenceville, Va.

WHAT IS PROPAGANDA?

Mr. Editor:

As we know, a member of Congress attacked the Federal Council of Churches for its alleged propaganda in regard to certain matters having to do with government and legislation. The Chicago Evening Post, in an editorial, came to the defense of the Federal Council. From this editorial you quote, in your issue of April 9, the following:

"Of course the accusation that it is an instrument of propaganda is wholly true. Propaganda is the business of the Christian religion. 'Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel,' was the marching order of its Founder."

Please permit me to say that this sounds well, but that it is really a play on the word propaganda. Propaganda, as the word is today understood, is worlds apart from the method of the early missioners. What they did was to "preach the gospel". They were awfully and gloriously busy doing just this. If they thought at all about reforming "the world" they would help it on by this constructive way of getting the gospel into the minds and hearts of individual men. So far as I have been able to read, there is no record in the early Church of anything approaching the modern idea of propaganda, which often, if not always, carries the implication of trying to affect or effect legislation. In fact, it seems to me that the method of propaganda in this modern sense is utterly opposed to the method of the gospel. Christ did not say, Go ye into all the world and try to reform it by imperial edicts or democratic legislation. His early Church did not work in this way, and yet at no period of its history has the Church accomplished so much in the same length of time in the way of really reforming the world as in its early days.

Permit me to add that this letter is not concerned with the dispute of the Congressman. My purpose is simply to object to the terms of newspaper's reply.

J. H. DILLARD.

Charlottesville, Va.

ILLEGAL PRACTICES.

Mr. Editor:

The twenty-eighth Article of Religion, which Article X of the Constitution of the Church makes a part of its doctrinal law, provides in part:

"The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was not by Christ's ordinance reserved, carried about, lifted up or worshipped."

Article XXXI reads:

"The sacrifice of masses, in which it was commonly said that the priest did offer Christ for the quick and the dead, to have remission of pain or guilt, were blasphemous fables and dangerous deceits."

There has reached me an invitation from Grace Church, Albany, N. Y., which is here reproduced for the information of your readers:

Grace Church, Albany, N. Y., March 28, 1927.

On April 1, 1899, the Rev. Paul Herbert Birdsall became rector of Grace Parish, Albany, N. Y., and the twenty-eighth anniversary of the rectorship will be marked by a special service at a quarter to 8 o'clock on the evening of Friday of this week, April 1, 1927.

The associate rector, the priest associate and the wardens and vestrymen of the parish have the honor to beg you to be present and to take part in the procession of the blessed sacrament.

The Rev. Harry Howe Bogert will be the preacher.

Supper will be served at 6 o'clock and hospitality for Friday night will be provided for those who will accept of it.

Please reply to the Rev. Walter F. Hayward, Jr., Grace Rectory, 498 Clinton Avenue, Albany, N. Y.

Parish masses on Friday morning at 6:30, 7:30 and 9:30. An intention for the rector of Grace Parish at your parish mass is requested."

I merely suggest that the laity read attentively the law of the Church, then read this invitation and reflect.

C. L. MARSILLIOT.

Memphis, Tenn.

A PLAN TO CARRY ON A GOOD WORK.

Mr. Editor:

To arouse interest in the work of the DuBose Memorial Church Training School at Monteagle, Tenn., the DuBose Fellowship is working on a plan to procure one hundred subscribers who will contribute $50 per annum for three years, to secure the services of a secretary who will give his whole time to the raising of an endowment fund.

The great success of this venture on the part of the Church and the need which this school has filled in supplying men for the rural ministry of the Church, has led many to give of their means for the maintenance of this institution. This valuable asset of the Church, however, can only be kept intact insofar as funds are put away gradually for the endowment fund. The efforts of the men who have made the DuBose Memorial Church Training School what it is must be sustained.

Men heading the list of subscribers at the present time, to make possible this additional secretary, are Messrs. E. H. Simmons, President of the New York Stock Exchange; Frank L. Polk, former Assistant Secretary of War; George Gordon Battle and others of equal repute and well known in the Church. These men assure others, who can and will contribute to this great cause with their good will and material help, that their assistance will be greatly appreciated. Any one desiring to contribute to this object, under the plan suggested, may do so by writing to Mr. H. M. Stillman, Vice-President of the Interstate Trust Company, 59 Liberty Street, New York City.

The DuBose Fellowship consists of all who have and are at present contributing to the support of the DuBose Memorial Church Training School.

T. H. RICHLY.

New York.

Church Intelligence

Latest News From Missionaries in China.

Cables were received April 14 from Shanghai as follows:

From Bishops Graves and Huntington:

Expressing the opinion that unless the proposed Commission to China can come quickly, its arrival had better be delayed until September.

In explanation of this situation, it may be well to point out that the Department cabled to China that the commission would endeavor to arrive by May 1 and that the reply came back advising delay. The foregoing message seems to indicate that the situation has changed further. Bishop Tucker now has responsibilities which he cannot set aside before June 15.

From Bishop Graves:

Asking that careful consideration be given to the statement appearing in the daily papers of April 13, signed by the missionaries in Nanking, concerning the outbreak in that city on March 24. This statement Bishop Graves says, may be thoroughly trusted.

Also concerning us:

That Dr. Mary L. James of the Church General Hospital, Wuchang, left Shanghai April 9 for Sydney, New South Wales, and

That the Rev. T. P. Maslin and family, also of Hankow, have left for Manila. This means probably that Mr. Maslin, in accordance with our cabled suggestion, will take work temporarily in Manila, either among the Chinese or English-speaking people.

From Bishop Huntington:

Informing us that the departure of Rev. L. R. Craighill and family for this country has been postponed awaiting developments in China.

From Bishop Roots:

Informing us that the Chinese Christians and the Minister of Foreign Affairs, advise him and a minimum staff to remain in Hankow as long as transportation to Shanghai is available. Accordingly, the Bishop, Dr. T. J. Hollander, Dr. A. P. Wakefield, Mr. J. S. Littell and Mr. E. M. Littell are remaining.

Bishop Roots adds: "Situation gives great cause for concern."

Boone Middle School and Boone University are continuing under the direction of Dean Francis Wei.

The Church General Hospital, Wuchang, is operating with Dr. Lowe, one of the Chinese staff, in charge.

Early in April, an attempt was made to open St. Hilda's School. It promised to be successful. Bishop Roots now reports that the school cannot continue. We are not informed whether Miss E. M. Buchanan, the Principal, has returned to Shanghai.

Bishop Roots asks that Bishop Gilman should reach Hankow by the beginning of June.

Bishop Roots and those remaining with him in Hankow express the hope that "the American Government and Church will use the utmost patience".

A cable received on April 13 from Shanghai gives the following information:

The following members of the Hankow staff have arrived in Shanghai, all well: Mrs. T. J. Hollander and children, Dr. A. G. Melvin and Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Brown.

Mr. Theodore Hobbie, of Hankow, sailed April 9 on the President Pierce, due in Seattle April 25.

Miss Margaret Roberts, of Hankow, who has been in the Peking Language School, cables that she is safe and well at Seoul, Korea.

John W. Wood.

Daughters of the King: A Suggestion.

Following the lead of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, the Daughters of the King would like to suggest to the clergy the use of Crusade Chapters for the follow-up work of the Crusade.

These chapters would be expected to do the work of the Daughters of the King for a period of three months. At the end of that time they can, with the approval of the rector, apply for a charter and become regular parish chapters, or they can disband. Further information may be obtained from Mrs. Elizabeth C. Young, Room 305, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Lenten Offering Anniversary Plans.

All the domestic Bishops have been invited to attend the fiftieth anniversary celebration of the Lenten Offering, to take place in the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, on June 5, and as the House of Bishops meets in New York on June 1, it is possible that a number may be able to be present. Members of the National Council and missionaries on furlough are also expected. Bishop Murray is to preside and the service is to be broadcast. It is to include a pageant of scenes from the mission fields. Possibly the most interesting feature, however, will be the reports to be presented by delegates representing every diocese and district, including those overseas, as to the amount of their offerings.

The Department of Religious Education is making a great effort to secure accurate reports for this date. To do so it will be necessary for all parishes to send their offerings to their diocesan headquarters before April 25.

Layman's Missions.

Mr. E. C. Mercer, who has conducted over three hundred missions in the Church, has decided to carry on his evangelistic work as heretofore. Since his wife's recent tragic death he has held two missions: one March 20-27, in St. Matthew's Parish, Sunbury, Pa., and the other March 27-April 3, in Trinity Parish, Williamsport, Pa. Hix next mission will be in Trinity, Gloversville, N. Y., May 1-8. He asks the prayers of his friends for his work.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. H. St. Geo. Tucker, D. D., Coadjutor.

Bishops' Crusade Conference.

On March 29 and 30 the parishes in the central part of the Rappahannock Convocation met at St. John's Church, Warsaw, for a Conference on the Crusade. The attendance was splendid and the results of the conference were all that could be desired. Both Bishops were present; the other speakers and conference leaders being the Rev. W. E. Cox, Hon. Rosewell Page, Miss L. T. Davis and Miss Sallie Dean. As a result of the meeting the following schedule of parish missions has been arranged for the Rappahannock Convocation:

Caroline County: St. Peter's, Port Royal, second week in May, the Rev. T. P. Baker, missioner.

Essex County: St. John's, Tappahannock, some time in October. St. Paul's, Miller's Tavern, second week in May, the Rev. F. D. Goodwin, missioner. St. Luke's, Montague, August, the Rev. F. D. Goodwin, missioner. St. Anne's Parish, first week in May, the Rev. W. H. Burkhardt, missioner.

Gloucester County: Abingdon Parish, first week in May, the Rev. W. R. Mason, missioner. Ware Parish, second week in May, the Rev. Dudley Boogher, missioner.

King George County: To be arranged later.

Lancaster County: Trinity Lancaster; Grace, Kilmarnock, first two weeks in May, the Rev. G. R. Dame, missioner. St. Mary's, Whitechapel, third week in May, the Rev. Charles Sheerin, missioner.

Mathews County: Kingston Parish, to be held in fall.

Middlesex County: Christchurch Parish, some time in May. Epiphany Chapel, Urbanna, May 26-28, the Rev. R. C. Montague, missioner.

Northumberland County: St. Stephen's Parish, some time in fall.

Richmond County: Lunenburg Parish and North Farnham Parish, first week in May, the Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Missioner.

Spotsylvania County: St. George's, Fredericksburg, May 2-6, the Rev. Pembroke Reed, missioner. Trinity, Fredericksburg, May 9-12, the Rev. Dennis Whittle, missioner.

Stafford County: Overwharton Parish, April 25-29, the Rev. R. C. Montague, missioner.

Westmoreland County: Washington and Montross Parish, missions held during Lent. Cople Parish, April 3-6, the Rev. G. Freeland PePter, D. D., missioner.

Community Service in St. Stephen's Church, Culpeper.

The Community Service was held in St. Stephen's Church, Culpeper, for the thirteenth consecutive occasion on Good Friday, April 14.

The day furnishes the theme for addresses on some features of our Lord's Death, and its purpose and results, the great Truth of our Salvation, held in common by all believers in our Lord and Saviour. The ministers of Culpeper have united in making addresses each year, under license from the Bishop. The historic fact of the day in itself and its lessons have furnished such a variety of associated truth and practical application, that no program has yet been used again from a previous year.

This year "Christ's Own Experience of His Cross" was the theme. From this the Rev. Dr. Hooper showed Christ's instruction about it during His public ministry; the Rev. George W. Cox, His anticipation of it, and its influence on His own life; the Rev. J. M. Burton, told of Christ's unselfishness, while hanging there, towards His enemies, the dying thief, and His mother; and the Rev. S. Jett, Jr., spoke of Christ's own soul's sufferings, and also the possibility of His own followers crucifying Him again by indifference and unbelief; warning against wounding His great love.

A representative congregation of the whole community attended the service and took part in the worship conducted by the rector of St. Stephen's, the Rev. Dr. Hammond. He voiced the sincere regret of all present in the enforced absence, on account of illness, for the first time in thirteen years, of the Rev. Dr. Winfrey, pastor of the Baptist Church, and offered prayer for his restoration to health.

Lenten Devotional Service.

The Virginia Seminary Glee Club gave a beautiful Lenten devotional service of music, Friday evening, April 8, at the Parish House of Grace Church, Casanova. There was a congregation of approximately two hundred people.

Fifteen minutes before the service there was a violin-piano prelude by Mrs. Martin Bram, violinist, and Mr. H. J. Miller, pianist.

The hymns for the service were chosen so that the entire congregation might share in that portion of the music.

Mr. Christian, who has been in charge of Grace Church since October, read the service, and Mr. Jones of Texas, a senior at the Seminary, preached the sermon. His message was a stirring call to a fresh appreciation of "the meaning of the Cross".

Grace Church has been without a rector for some time, but has been well servide by students fro mthe Seminary. Besides regular services twice a month, Sunday and Parish visiting, Mr. Christian has planned and carried out a number of special services.

Laymen's Association.

As the Rappahannock Valley Convocation meets at Ware Church, Gloucester, April 26 to 28, it is especially urged that members of the Laymen's Association try to attend certainly on the twenty-seventh, if they cannot be there any other day, as the evening of the twenty-seventh will be given to a meeting of the laymen, when they will be addressed by Mr. B. T. Newton and other speakers.

Laymen are always allowed, some of the time at the Convocations for encouragement of this important movement, and the clergy are not onlycordially welcomed, but requested to bring some representative laymen with them to these meetings.

Kingston Parish.

The Rev. George C. Shaw, of South River, N. J., entered upon his duties as rector of Kingston Parish, Mathews County, Virginia, on Palm Sunday. This historic old parish has been without a rector for some time and the churches have been kept open by a retired ex-rector, the Rev. Giles B. Cooke and Messrs. Perry Williams and Eugene Barnes, lay readers.

L.

The Rev. J. Haller Gibboney, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Barton Heights, Richmond, for the past six years, has resigned because of ill health, the resignation to take effect June 1.

His resignation has been accepted with regret by the vestry.

Mr. Gibboney was given a year's leave of absence by the church in February, 1926, with the hope that his health would improve.

He returned to his congregation about two and a half months ago, expecting to retain his position and resume active work, but found it impossible.

The Church of the Epiphany has experienced substantial growth since Mr. Gibboney took charge six years ago. The membershipnow totals 370, with 160 in the Sunday School. The church building is situated at Barton Avenue and Battery Street.

From June of last year until February of this year, his place was temporarily filled by the Rev. H. B. W. Peters.

The Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., confirmed a class of forty-seven including one from another parish at St. Andrew's, Richmond, on Easter Sunday night. The class, the largest confirmed by Bishop Tucker in Virginia was presented by the Rev. W. Geiger Irwin, minister-in-charge.

On Easter Sunday afternoon the Rev. Mr. Irwin baptized twenty-eight children. The Rev. Z. S. Farland assisted in this service.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

Toc H Dedication Service.

The Toc H, of Washington, a fellowship having its origin in the British Army during the World War, attended a service in Bethlehem Chapel on Wednesday evening, April 20. This service, which was planned by the Toc H of Washington, with the cooperation of the Bishop and Dean of Washington, had for its special feature the dedication of "the lamp of maintenance of the first branch of Toc H in the United States". The Washington branch having the distinction of being the first in this country, is now known as Mark I. The Rev. Hugh F. Sawbridge, chaplain of the Toc H in Leicester, England, was present for this dedication service, which institutes the Washington branch as a member of the general organization. Mr. Sawbridge is visiting in this country now, for the purpose of advancing the Toc H movement, and while in Washington is residing at the Toc H Club House, 219 C Street. The organization stands for Christian devotion and brotherly service as a memorial to the comrades who sacrificed their lives during the World War.

Meeting of the Sunday-School Institute.

The monthly meeting of the Sunday-School Institute of the Diocese of Washington was held in Epiphany Parish Hall on Tuesday evening, April 19. The principal speaker was the Rev. Roland Cotton Smith, D. D., whose topic was "Some Educational Hobbies". In accordance with a new plan, recently adopted for these meetings, the address was followed by conferences for groups of teachers and others interested in particular phases of Sunday-school work. The groups were divided as follows:

Clergy and Superintendents of Sunday Schools—Leader, the Rev. W. L. DeVries, D. D.

Teachers of Senior Classes—Leader, the Rev. E. P. Wroth.

Teachers of Junior Classes—Leader, Mrs. Mary C. D. Johnson.

Teachers of Primary Grades—Leader, the Rev. Clarence P. Parker.

Teachers of Church Kindergartens—Miss Catherine R. Watkins, Director of Kindergartens, Washington Public Schools.

Superintendents of Font Rolls—Leader, Miss Clara W. Herbert, Assistant Librarian, Public Library.

Lay Cornerstone of New Parish Hall.

Bishop Freeman officiated at the laying of the cornerstone of the new parish hall and cloister building at St. Philip's Church, Laurel, Md., on Saturday, April 16, and delivered an address. An address was also made by Mr. Stanly Hinricks, a layman of the parish and superintendent of the Sunday school.

The cloister building will connect the parish hall and church and will be built as a memorial to Mr. Townley McKee, a former vestryman of St. Philip's Church. Mr. Hulbert A. Woolfall, deacon in charge of the parish, and the Rev. E. Pinkney Wroth, former rector there and present rector of Christ Church, Georgetown, were other clergymen present.

The spring meeting of the Southern Archdeaconry of the Diocese of Washington was held in St. Barnabas' Chapel, Oxon Hill, Md., on Wednesday, April 20. The program of the day included a celebration of the Holy Communion and address by the Bishop of Washington, luncheon served by the women of King George's Parish and business session of the Archdeaconry. Delegates included the clergy of Southern Maryland and one lay delegate from each parish in Charles and St. Mary's Counties and in so much of Prince George's County as lies south of the District of Columbia.

The Rev. Henry C. Parkman, vicar of St. James' Chapel at Indian Head, is the president of the Archdeaconry and presided.

M. M. W.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

Rector To Be Married.

The Easter Sunday papers carry the announcement by Mrs. Anna M. Davidson, of Blacksburg, Virginia, of the engagement of her daughter, Maria Bolton, to the Rev. Joseph Manly Cobb, rector of Christ Church, Blacksburg, the wedding to take place in June.

Miss Davidson's father, the late Prof. Robert J. Davidson, was a member of the faculty of Virginia Polytechnic Institute at Blacksburg and her maternal grandfather, the late Dr. J. M. MacBryde, was president of the institute.

The Rev. Mr. Cobb, son of the late Judson D. Cobb, is a graduate of the University of Virginia and Virginia Seminary. In November, 1925, Mr. Cobb became rector of Christ Church, Blacksburg. He is doing excellent work among the cadets of the V. P. I. and also conducts a mission at Merrimac Mines, "High Top", between Blacksburg and Christiansburg.

Processional Cross Dedicated.

On Easter Sunday morning the Rev. G. Otis Mead, rector of Christ Church, Roanoke, set apart a handsome brass processional cross, the gift of Mrs. John T. Trout as a memorial to her late husband.

The Lenten Offering of Christ Church Sunday School amounted to very nearly a thousand dollars and it is expected that by the time the final returns are in that figure will just about be reached.

Of Especial Interest is the fact that on Easter Day, at the early morning service, in R. E. Lee Memorial Church, Lexington, one hundred and fifty of the communicants were cadets of Virginia Military Institute and students of Washington and Lee University. The Rev. Churchill J. Gibson, D. D., is rector of this church and is happy and successful in his work among the men of these two institutions.

Mr. George F. Wiese, a student of DuBose Memorial Church Training School at Monteagle, Tennessee, has returned to take up his work there after having served, during his winter vacation, as an assistant to the Rev. Herbert H. Young, Dean of Associate Missions in Southwestern Virginia. Mr. Wiese had his headquarters at Dante and was most helpful in his work among a number of missions in the large territory under the direction of Dean Young.

T. A. S.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland D. D., Bishop.

The Twenty-fifth Anniversary of Epiphany Parish.

The congregation of Epiphany Church, Germantown, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the incorporation of the parish on Tuesday night when present and former members of the parish and friends gathered.

The program included a reception to the Bishop of the Diocese, the Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, and Mrs. Garland and to all former rectors of the parish. The present rector is the Rev. J. Wesley Twolves. Epiphany Parish was incorporated in 1902. In 1901 the work of erecting the present beautiful church was started on ground donated by the trustees of the A. J. Drexel estate. First services were held in the completed church in October of that year. Its first rector was the Rev. J. Alan Montgomery, now a member of the faculty of the Philadelphia Divinity School. The Rev. Richard J. Morris served for about twelve years, relinquishing his rectorship to become associated with the Bishop of the Diocese and now the Bishop's Secretary. He was followed by the Rev. Irving A. McGrew, and about three years ago the present rector took charge.

The celebration of the anniversary closes on Sunday afternoon, April 24, with a special service of thanksgiving at which an augmented choir under direction of Robert M. Banks will render Lloyd's Festival, "Te Deum in E Flat", and Gounod's "Praise Ye the Father". The Rev. George Cadwalader Foley will be the special preacher.

Children's Easter Services.

One of the outstanding features of Easter Day in the more than two hundred parishes and missions of the Diocese was the children's Easter anniversary services, at which upwards of 30,000 members of the Sunday schools presented at the altar in all churches their mite boxes in which during the Lenten season they gathered pennies, nickels and dimes as their offering to missions.

Increased significance attaches to these children's services this Easter, as the year 1927 marks the Golden Jubilee anniversary of the Children's Lenten Offering for Missions in the Episcopal Church throughout the United States. Services similar to those here were held throughout the Church at home and in all foreign missions, in which it is estimated more than 500,000 children participated. The birthplace of the Lenten Offering was in St. John's Church, Cynwyd, just across the Philadelphia county line, and under the impulse resulting from that offering a half century ago it spread throughout the whole Church.

Arrangements are being completed by the Diocese of Pennsylvania under Bishop Garland's direction and by the National Council of the General Church to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of this Children's Lenten Offering to missions by holding the national presentation service in this city on June 5. Delegations of Sunday schools and Bishops and clergy from other Dioceses will participate. During the years since 1887 the children of the Episcopal Church have raised upwards of $6,500,000 for missions through their Lenten mite boxes.

R. R. W.

Death of the Rev. Dr. J. deW. Perry.

The Rev. James deWolf Perry, D. D., father of Bishop Perry, of Rhode Island, and for forty-one years a member of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, and for twenty-seven years President of that body, and an outstanding leader in the Church life of the Diocese for a period of more than sixty years, died on Monday, April 11, at his home in Germantown.

Dr. Perry had been in feeble health for some time and his death was due to the ills incident to old age. Funeral services were held on Wednesday afternoon, in Calvary Church, Germantown, of which parish he was rector for a period of forty-two years, from 1866 to 1908, and rector emeritus from the latter year to the time of his death, a period of nineteen years.

The Rt. Rev. James deWolf Perry officiated at the services in Calvary Church, assisted the Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, Bishop of the Diocese, and the Rt. Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander, former Bishop of Pennsylvania. Members of the Standing Committee of the Diocese were the honorary pall-bearers. The clergy of the diocese in vestments took part in the services. The body was taken to Bristol, Rhode Island, Dr. Perry's birthplace, for interment.

Dr. Perry was in his eighty-ninth year. He was born in Bristol, Rhode Island, December 22, 1838, which had been the family home for nearly two centuries. Dr. Perry was the son of James deWolf Perry and Julia Jones Perry, of Silver Creek, Bristol. On his mother's side he was the great-grandson of Benjamin Bourn, Quartermaster on General Washington's staff and later a member of Congress from Rhode Island. On his father's side he was the great-grandson of Captain James deWolf Perry, also one of the first Congressmen from Rhode Island. Dr. Perry's grandfather was Captain Raymond Perry, brother of Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry and Matthew Galbraith Perry.

In 1856 Dr. Perry entered Brown University, where he was graduated four years later, President of his class and member of the Phi Beta Kappa. Entering Berkeley Divinity School to study under the late Bishop Williams, of Connecticut, he returned to Providence a year later to be ordained Deacon and became an assistant at Grace Church, Providence. He remained there a year and came to the Philadelphia Divinity School, where he finished his studies and served as Curate to the Rev. (later Bishop of Central Pennsylvania) M. A. deWolfe Howe, at St. Luke's Philadelphia.

In 1864 he was ordained to the priesthood and returned to his native state as associate minister of St. Paul's, Pawtucket. In May, 1866, he became rector of Calvary Church, Germantown, when that part of Philadelphia was covered by large country estates. As Germantown became thickly populated by the expansion of the city proper, Dr. Perry in 1891 undertook the rebuilding of the church and parish house, carrying through in two years the completion of the present fine group of buildings.

Dr. Perry, at the time of his death, was the oldest alumnus of the Philadelphia Divinity School. He served as a delegate to the several General Conventions. During his twenty-seven years as President of the Standing Committee he has presided over the Diocesan Convention at the election of four Bishops of the Diocese of Pennsylvania. In recent years he conducted every week during the winter at his home a large class in Bible Study. His lectures on the subject were published two years ago in a volume entitled "Studies in the Gospel". For thirty-one years up to his death he was Warden and Vice-President of the Church Training and Deaconess House. He was Vice-President of the Bishop White Prayer Book Society; Vice-President of the Evangelical Education Association; member of the Board of Advisors of the Philadelphia Divinity School and a member of the Society of the War of 1812.

Dr. Perry was twice married. His first wife was Miss Elizabeth Russell Tyson, of New Bedford, Mass., who died in 1910. In 1914 Dr. Perry married Miss Marian Frazer Harris, who survives him. Dr. Perry is survived by five children of his first marriage, Robert Swain Perry, of New York; Bishop Perry of Rhode Island; Mrs. William Bartlette Thurber, Mrs. Russell Sturgis Hubbard and Mrs. James Savage Russell, all of Milton, Mass.

R. R. W.

FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. F. A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop.

The United Thank Offering.

The annual meeting of the United Thank Offering took place on Monday, April 4, in the Parish House of St. James' Church, Lake City, Fla. The different members represented ten states and England, with those of French and Spanish descent. This organization of the Woman's Auxiliary is especially interested in rural religious development, many groups in neighboring towns and hamlets being without churches or rectors. Florida has recently acquired one million new inhabitants, who are rapidly becoming Southern in sympathy, and there is a great opportunity for the Church among them.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstern, D. D., Coadjutor.

Death of the Rev. Wilbur F. Watkins, Jr.

The Rev. Wilbur Fisk Watkins, Jr., for thirty-four years rector of St. John's Church, Mt. Washington, Baltimore, and since 1925 a retired priest of the Diocese of Maryland, died April 7, at St. George, Bermuda, where he had gone for the winter.

The Rev. Mr. Watkins was born in Brooklyn, N. Y. He was a graduate of Union College and of the Philadelphia Divinity School. Ordained to the priesthood in 1883, his early ministry was in the Dioceses of Pennsylvania and Central Pennsylvania. He came to Baltimore in 1889 as assistant at Emmanuel Church, in 1891 became rector of St. John's Church. Since his retirement he has been living in Brooklyn.

The body was brought to Baltimore for burial, the funeral services being said in St. John's Church by the Rt. Rev. John T. Murray, D. D., assisted by the Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., and by the present rector of the parish, the Rev. R. S. Litsinger.

St. Paul's, Baltimore.

There were 1,206 communicants in St. Paul's, Baltimore, on Easter, six hundred and fifty of which were at the mother church. The large church during the three hours' service was filled to capacity with many standing. It was the twenty-first consecutive preaching of this service by the present rector, Dr. Kinsolving. The estimated attendance at the mid-day services was 31,500, nearly 6,000 larger than last year.

These services make a profound impression upon the community. The preachers are carefully selected and they come thoroughly prepared for their work.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

New Windows.

A number of new windows have been placed or are about to be placed in churches in the diocese.

In the Church of the Incarnation, Brooklyn, two windows were dedicated on Palm Sunday. They were designed, made and presented by Miss Jessie Van Brunt, a parishioner, who has made in all about twenty windows for this and other churches. These two are about three feet by four in size and are placed in the vestibules. The themes are two hymns. The first represents the moon shining through trees, the prevailing tone being a "midnight blue". Inscribed in the lower panel is the second verse of Addison's hymn, "The Spacious Firmament on High"—

"Soon as the evening shades prevail,
The moon takes up the wondrous tale,
And nightly to the listening earth
Repeats the story of her birth".

The second window shows the dawn of day, with trees reflected in a quiet pool. The inscription is from Buckoll's hymn,

"Come, my soul, thou must be waking,
Now is breaking
O'er the earth another day".

These windows are given "In honor of our beloved rector", the Rev. A. W. E. Carrington.

A new window has been placed in the new chancel of the Church of the Resurrection, Richmond Hill. It is over the altar, and is to have two other windows on either side of it. The central window represents the Risen Christ, in the act of blessing His disciples. It is the gift of Mr. George L. Fowler and Miss Mary Fowler in memory of their parents. It will be dedicated on Low Sunday. The four windows complet-

(Continued on page 22.)

Family Department

April.

1. Friday.
3. Fifth (Passion) Sunday in Lent.
10. Sixth (Palm) Sunday in Lent.
14. Maundy Thursday.
15. Good Friday.
16. Easter Even.
17. Easter Day.
24. First Sunday after Easter.
25. Monday. S. Mark.
30. Saturday.

Collect for First Sunday After Easter.

Almighty Father, Who hast given Thine only Son to die for our sins, and to rise again for our justification; Grant us so to put away the leaven of malice and wickedness that we may always serve Thee in pureness of living and truth; through the merits of the same, Thy Son. Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Collect for St. Mark's Day.

O Almighty God, Who hast instructed Thy Holy Church with the heavenly doctrine of Thy Evangelist Saint Mark; Give us grace that, being not like children carried away with every blast of vain doctrine, we may be established in the truth of Thy Holy Gospel; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Theories and the Resurrection.

The less extravagant among modern critics, who do not question the sincerity of the witnesses, may be roughly divided into two classes. There are those who dismiss the appearances of Jesus as hallucinations, explicable enough in certain psychological conditions, but totally devoid of evidential value in relation to objective fact. There are others—professedly Christians—who allow that Jesus manifested Himself to the disciples as alive for evermore, but deny the more "material" adjuncts of the story, such as the finding of the empty tomb. The impossibility of discussing the merits of either position in a few sentences scarcely needs to be confessed. We must be content to remark that, of the two kinds of criticism, the second is at once the more interesting and the more provocative of "philosophic doubt". When the story of the Resurrection, and therewith the whole claim of Christianity, is treated as mere illusion, at least we know where we are. But when we are invited to simplify the narrative by plunging into the depths of metaphysics, and when the "Jesus of history" is sharply contrasted with the "Jesus of faith", the darkness begins rapidly to fall. The strange thing is, too, that the authors of these intellectual refinements are the very people who are most often to be heard lamenting the fact that the Church ever dragged in philosophy for the mystification of a simple tale. The disciples, to be sure, were not metaphysicians, but does any one seriously pretend that they would have believed in the Resurrection, had they known the body of Jesus to be still in the tomb? The faith then of the Church (since that faith depends entirely upon what the first disciples believed) must rest on a blunder or an accident; and, for our part, we would as soon that it rested on an honest hallucination, such as the frankly non-Christian interpreters of the story are prepared to admit. The truth is that most of the well-meaning critics who have striven to rationalize the narrative of the Resurrection, and yet to prepare its spiritual reality, have got utterly out of their depth. Our Lord sometimes met a question framed to entrap Him by putting another question still harder to answer. If we might presume thus far to imitate His method, we should be inclined to suggest to the exponents of the new Gnosticism that, when they can tell us exactly what is meant by "matter", exactly how body and soul, or body and spirit, are related, exactly how the antithesis of "subjective" and "objective" bears upon the discovery of the "Jesus of history", and exactly what we should understand by a "miracle", it will then be time to consider a version of the Resurrection which most certainly is not the version that inspired the Church to convert the world.—Selected.

"I Go To Prepare a Place For You."

There is in the world today a great cry going up for Christian unity. Let us see whether the words written at the head of these few reflections do not furnish a clue as to the method whereby that cry may be hushed in accomplishment and peace.

Christ, our Master and Lord, made a promise to His disciples. He went to prepare a place which then did not exist; and if He went He promised to receive them into it, that they might reign with Him and labor with Him to make all things new for their struggling brethren on the earth.

Since that promise was made He has received countless saints, known and unknown to us, into that Place, and there they have found their questioning and struggles ended for evermore.

If we could rise with them into the Place He has prepared should we not see this stupendous truth? We have not to seek for unity; it exists.

Our divisions exist in our human brains, which are incapable of grasping the whole truth. I do not mean that everything which is believed and asserted is true. It is not possible to reconcile a lie with truth; nor can you reconcile a lie with a lie; for each has in it a fundamental disharmony. Nor can you reconcile evil, i. e., something which is contrary to the Mind of Christ, with good, i. e., something which is eternally part of the Mind of Christ.

But there are many differing opinions which are aspects of truth imperfectly grasped. They are reconcilable; they can be seen as complementary one to the other, in the Place He went to prepare; and in the Light which streams from It into the soul when in prayer. Therefore the soul who lives in the spirit and power of prayer is justified in asserting that "our unhappy divisions" do not exist in the Kingdom of Christ; and to think of them thus, as partial views of limited human brains is, I suggest, the way in which to harmonize them. I do not mean that we should treat our personal convictions as of no importance. May God forbid! They are the Bread of Life to us. But I do mean that instead of scouting the views of others, we might say: "In the Place where He reigns these views, apparently so contrary, are harmonized in the marvel and the Wisdom of His Mind; all mysteries of the worlds seen and unseen are summed up in Him; He is making all things new; and when that mighty travail is ended, He will draw aside the veil and show the glorious accomplishment."

We do not realize, I believe, as we ought to do, that all here is being guided and governed with infinite patience from the Place He has prepared; though we may cooperate in His work, yet we must remember the Plan is there, the Guidance is there, and the judgment of the heavenly earth is the only certain judgment. It is revealed, truth, in part on earth through His earthly Church, through His prophets, saints, and messengers, but the perfect work and the ultimate Truth we cannot grasp in its fulness with our reasoning brains.

I will illustrate my meaning by a little story which is true.

A little child prayed for the recovery of a sick animal; there were those who thought the child should be checked; it seemed to them an unworthy use of prayer.

That was the honest and reverent opinion of the earth.

The opinion of the "heavenly earth", the Place He has prepared, was different. The animal, which had been despaired of by the veterinary surgeon, got well.

The prayer of faith had healed the sick, and the Lord raised him up in answer to His little child.—Michael Wood.

Each Separately.

We believe that Jesus is with His people everywhere today: for the Spirit of Jesus is just the Spirit of God, and God is everywhere. . . . But we think of God as beholding us in the mass: as looking on this congregation and seeing a thousand people as one sees a crowd. Not so. It is not in the mass that God sees us, but as separate individuals, each of us more valuable than all the treasures of Golconda—for each is a separate entity with none other like us. Just as Jesus sees the one woman and says "Mary" with infinite love: so God sees each separate heart here and knows all about us. He knows how Mary sitting over there has to help an ailing mother, sacrificing the pleasures of life she longs for, at times with rebellious tears. He knows. And all about Jean and the wages she gets, and how much of it she spends on her dress and on her amusements, and how little she gives her struggling parents. He knows. And about John who goes about the city with a rebellious heart looking for work and finding none, with care so black on his brow that he sometimes says: "There is no God, or if there is, He doesn't care"! And about Peter who is in the far country, but has come by force of habit to the Church today away from the swine troughs ... to sing the old hymns. He knows. And about Andrew who has read up a little second-hand knowledge and who will tell you that God is a myth and immortality a fable ... for he himself has proved it! The universe is to a worm only what the worm can make of it. And the heart of the All Father has a special tenderness for the little worms who prove to each other that the clod in which they wriggle is all the universe there is. And about John Smith and his wife who have come to the church on this Easter Day, with an ache in the heart, thinking of the sons who once sat beside them drinking the chalice of the grapes of God, and who will never more return nor see their native country!

Each separately God sees and God knows all about, and God yearns over, and to each He says: "As I live, ye My children shall live also. Death can have no dominion over you. Peace be unto you."

Oh! to hear it now deep in our hearts as we take in our hands the sacred elements. "Mary." Listen! There's your own very name whispered in your ear ... Mary ... Jean ... George "Seek Me who turn the shadow of death into morning! The Lord is My Name." ... As we kneel here and adore, truly the veil between us and the dead becomes thin as gossamer.—Dr. Norman MacLean (Edinburgh).

Confidential Chats With Children.

"I don't see how it is the members of your family tell you everything." Mrs. Strong had been sitting on the veranda when Nell and George had come in from a tennis match. "Of course, some children are like that, born that way, I suppose," she continued. "My family never tell me a thing. Ever since they were tiny mites they have kept their own counsels. Of course, they are just like their father. He is so reserved."

That night, after my grown-up son and daughter had come to my room to say good-night, and the house was still and dark, my mind raced back over the years to the time when my children were little more than babies. For three years I was an invalid. I had to sit still and see the world go by and how I fretted for fear the children would grow away from me and would contract habits I could never break. Their father, too, was reserved, and possibly that hurt me as much as my illness. I couldn't go out and see the things he was seeing, or meet the people he was meeting. Every day we seemed a little further apart. One whole evening we never spoke a word though there was no estrangement. I made up my mind then that so far as in me lay my children should be taught to be frank and free and chatty, and that frankness should not mean gossipping or tale-bearing.

Every day when the children came in from school or play, I would ask them what pleasant things had happened while they were out. If unpleasant things were told, as they were bound to be occasionally, we passed them over as lightly as possible. If little playmates had been rough and rude, if teachers had not been quite appreciative, why that was a pity, but if Nell and George would try to be a little kinder and better there was not a doubt but things would improve. I tried to show them that it was always the one who did the unkind or selfish thing who really needed pity. It was he who was happy. And of course teachers could not always tell how much work went into a lesson. Children are usually fairly just and with a little help see both sides of a problem.

Then we made a game of this telling. I was in it, too, and for the one who made the best record during the week there was a little prize. By and by they wanted "Daddy" added. I was a "doubting Thomas". Did I not remember our long evening without a word? I kept my doubts to myself, however, for which I was very thankful, because the plan worked.

After the evening meal was over, we chatted. These chats were stiff and formal at first, or so they seemed to me, but it was not long before we all looked forward eagerly to those few minutes "between the dark and the daylight". It was the only time in the busy day when father and children met. Barriers were broken down. Possibly my husband would have liked to have broken those barriers many a time before, but years of repression had done their fatal work. Reserved people when they do throw off their reserve seem to say so much more than they intended and are so abashed at their temerity that they retreat further than ever into their shells. But the confidences of their children are not only contagious, but reassuring.

Our "experience meetings" as we called them continued all through childhood days, getting longer and fuller as the years went on. Father is gone now, the hour is gone, the glorious fleeting days of childhood are past, but the effect of those confidences will go on forever. Some day my boy and girl will be in homes of their own and the memory of the twilight hour spent with Father and Mother will influence the lives of their boys and girls.

Maybe my children were just naturally frank. Possibly, as Mrs. Brown said, "They were born that way". Maybe without training they would have been the same. Who can tell? But had they not been, by the time I had found it out, the habit of reserve would have been established, and it would have been too late to have brought about such happy results.—C. L. Beattie.

Hath Not Thy Heart Within Thee Burned.

Hath not thy heart within thee burned
At evening's calm and holy hour,
As if its inmost depths discerned
The presence of a loftier power?

Hast thou not heard 'mid forest glades
While ancient rivers murmured by,
A voice from forth the eternal shades,
That spake a present Deity?

And, as upon the sacred page,
Thine eye in rapt attention turned
O'er records of a holier age,
Hath not thy heart within thee burned?

It was the voice of God that spake
In silence to thy silent heart;
And bade each worthier thought awake,
And every dream of earth depart.

Voice of our God, O yet be near!
In low, sweet accents, whisper peace;
Direct us on our pathway here;
Then bid in heaven our wanderings cease.

—S. G. Bulfinch.

I Will Not Be Afraid.

The longer we live the more are we convinced that fear is the great foe of human happiness and well-being. Thousands of men and women not only cannot enjoy life because the days are filled with mistrust and dread of what is to come, but that mistrust and dread is a seriously hampering and hurtful thing as well. Our ancestors a few millenniums ago stood in awe of nature, and felt the world about them to be peopled with evil spirits and adverse forces that must be guarded against and placated and got the better of in various ways; and it is to be feared that many of us do not have in reality a much more Christian view of life and the universe than they had. If we do not people our world with evil-minded and wicked spirits, neither are we able to think of it as under the hand of divine goodness and love; and in practical life, whatever our theory of things may be, we seem to think that some evil fate may be lurking around the corner to seize us. And the way we do this is pure paganism, indeed, from which even the rudiments and beginnings of the Christian faith ought to deliver us. If you will take your New Testament and go through it with any care at all you will find that fear of any kind is one of the things that a Christian is not supposed to have, and that deliverance from it is of the greatest blessings that a faith in Christ brings.—The Christian Guardian.

The Word "Amen" is One of the Oldest in the World.

The word "Amen", which we all pronounce at the end of prayers and hymns is one of the oldest used in the world. A clergyman in London said the following about it:

"On Friday, at the Mohammedan mosques, millions of devout worshippers prayed the prayer which is their equivalent for the Lord's Prayer; and the full toned Doxology rang out from the throats of Islam, Amen.

"Yesterday, the Jewish congregations in the synagogues responded to their minister who, at the close of the great Chumish Prayer, said 'Say ye, Amen', and they all said 'Amen'. Today, throughout the Christian Church this word closes our prayers and praise.

"Few words in the vocabulary of religion are more widely used than the word 'Amen', and few to my mind are less intelligently uttered. This short word is repeated continually, until I fear it has become blurred and blunted by usage.

"It is a Hebrew term which has passed unchanged into Greek, Arabic, Latin and English. Wherever the soul of man, Jewish, Mohammedan, or Christian, bows before God, the one 'Amen' comes to the lips. It means 'Truly'—'So be it'. We commonly say Amen in worship to some statement by another person if it is a term of response, meaning that if a statement of God's truth is made in our presence, we say Amen to it if we agree with it.

"In the Early Church, in the fourth century, we are told the word Amen rang from the congregation sometimes like a clap of thunder: people poured their hearts into it. In a number of our congregations today, I mean in some churches, the use of Amen at the end of prayers has been discontinued, which is a real loss."—Canadian Churchman.

For the Southern Churchman.

Easter.

Henry Irvine Lynds.

The empty nest upon the swinging bough,
Bespeaks the fledgelings flown;
The riven chrysalis, cicada's shell,
But tell of life full grown.

The empty tomb within the garden wall,
Is proof that He who gave
His very life, that Death by Him should die;
Has risen from the grave.

For the Young Folks

For the Southern Churchman.

A Mouse Tale.

Anne Pierce.

Old Grandpa Mouse is old and gray,
He has not been shaved for many a day;
His whiskers lie on the floor as he runs,
But he's a wise old fellow and knows the turns
Of Tabby, and all her dangerous ways.

Dear Grandma Mouse is fat and round.
She sits by the fireside and makes not a sound;
She keeps bits of cheese and cakes and buns,
For good little mouse and grand-daughters and sons,
And she warns them of Tabby whose claws will wound.

Little Bill Mouse is saucy and smart,
He talks to the old folks fresh and tart;
He brags how he got by with Tabby one day,
And he laughs when they shake their heads and say,
Ah! youth will have its way.

Sweet Sister Mouse is gentle and good.
She sits by Grandma and knits on a hood.
She runs little errands and sweeps the hearth,
She thinks Brother Bill is the salt of the earth,
And that's even old Tabbq is kind and good.

And Tabby lies on the hearth rug dim,
Stretches herself out long and thin;
Looks here and there with her long green eyes,
And thinks of what a great surprise
Is in store for Sister and him.

For the Southern Churchman.

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

A Walk With Jesus.

M. L. G.

Two men were walking along the road from Jerusalem to Emmaus that first Easter. They went slowly, with weary faces and sad talk. How they had trusted! How they had loved! Only to see Him whom they had hoped would free their country from the power of Rome dragged to a Roman trial and death. Instead of being circled with David's crown, His head had been torn with thorns. And for a throne He had only a cross, and for courtiers, a gaping mob that railed on Him and mocked Him. As the sky blackened above His cross, so the hope in their hearts darkened to despair.

True, there was the story of the women who had been early at the tomb. But that was impossible, of course. They must have been deceived by their love and longing for Him. Angels in shining robes and with assurance of unconquered life!—no; all that was too wonderful, too good to be true.

They hardly noticed that Someone had drawn near and was fitting His more vigorous steps to theirs, until He asked them what they spoke of that made them so sorrowful. Then they poured it all out, for it was easy to tell their sad story to this Stranger.

"Oh, slow of heart," He answered them, and at the words the ashes where hope had died in those hearts grew red with a feeling they had never thought to know again. And He went on to show them that what they had thought defeat was the way of glory; that their King was still a King, who would reign not over their land only but over all the earth; not for a man's terms of years, but forever and ever. Slowly the light came back, and for a time it blinded them, so that they knew Him not till He broke the bread and blessed it and gave it to them as only Jesus had ever done.

But for those two, I think nothing could ever again seem "too good to be true".

Blue On The Willow.

Old Doctor Dormouse had left the banks of Willow Pond, Paddler the tortoise was now over at the other side of the pond, sunning himself close to a large boulder called Red Rock, and Grandfather Gurk sat upon his log-end. The cloud of mosquitoes that had come up out of the marshes had drifted back and down again, for the sky was clear, the sun bright and warm, and the breeze had risen just enough to ruffle the waters of the pond.

The big frog looked around, but not one of the water birds was to be seen riding the tiny waves that chased across the pond, nor could hawk or gull be seen flying near. This did not suit Grandfather Gurk, for he wished to talk, and be talked to, and he shook his head as he said aloud:

"Only a dormouse, a tortoise and mosquitoes out just now. Not one of them stayed as long as I wished him to, except the mosquitoes. My ears are all a-tickle to have a lot of questions and answers poured into them."

"Your ears could not hold many questions and answers, for I cannot see even one of your ear-tips from here," said a strange voice from the top of one of the stunted willow trees on the bank nearest to the bullfrog.

"Ho! Ho! Ho!" laughed the big frog, as soon as he had caught sight of the speaker. "I can't see one of your ear tips, either. Big, floppy ears are of no use to a bullfrog, for every time that I went in swimming, I would be sure to get them full of water. So my ears are of a different kind altogether, ones with nothing about them to show to any one who did not know, that my ears are hidden in my head, and that I can hear as well as any one with large, long ears sticking up from, or out at the sides of his head."

The owner of the voice from the willow tree was a little bird, but little larger than a sparrow. It had the same round head as a sparrow, the same little bill, and the same bright eyes. But there the resemblance ended, for instead of a coat of dull greys and browns, this bird's feathered suit was of a bright, rich blue.

The ends of the bird's wing-feathers, and the tail were deep blue in color, shading almost to black. It was not Joy, the bluebird, for even the feathers of the throat were blue, and this bird seemed to be more merry than gentle.

"I can easily see that you do not know who I am, Master Gurk. I can just see that you do not know me. Chip! Chip! Chip! I am Jolly."

"What is the rest of your name?" asked Grandfather Gurk.

"Oh, I was Jolly yesterday, I am Jolly today, and I expect to be Jolly tomorrow," was the reply.

"I can understand that," laughed the squatty frog, "but I would like to know the rest of your name. Jolly — what, you know."

"I am Jolly, the bunting. I am an Indigo Bunting, bluer than the bluebird, and gayer than the grosbeak."

The little bird lifted its head, and started to sing. "Orble-orble-orble". Then, waving a wing at the frog, the Indigo Bunting said:

"If this willow was a hawthorn, I would come here every morning, perhaps stay here altogether."

"Then you must have your home in a hawthorn tree," said the frog.

"I never build my nest in the tip of any tree," answered the bunting. "It may be by the roadside, at the swamp edge, or in a meadow, but never in a tree-top."

"Don't you wish to tell me just where it is?" asked Grandfather Gurk.

"Oh, I don't mind a bit," answered the bird. "My nest is not higher than a long hop from the ground, but it is safely hidden in the centre of a thorny clump of wild briar."

"A briar bush may be a safe place, but not a very pretty spot for a nest," said the bullfrog.

"You would not say so if you were a bird and had a nest there," said Jolly. "The leaves are fresh and green, its flowers bloom all through the summertime, and in the morning my little rose-home is sweeter than any honeysuckle-nest."

"If the briar is such a fine place, why did you speak of the hawthorn as if it were a favorite of yours?" asked Grandfather Gurk.

"Because it is a favorite," was the bird's reply. "On the tip of a hawthorn I perch when I wish to sing, beginning early in the morning, and often as late as twilight."

"I suppose there is a Mistress Bunting in a blue dress, and that she is keeping house while you're away," said the frog.

"If I did not tell you, you might not think she was a bunting at all," said Jolly. "Her feather dress is a quiet brown, and only the wings and tail show a faint touch of blue. She stays at home far more than I do, for sometimes there are eggs, four or five blue-white ones."

"And when the eggs hatch there are four or five little baby buntings," laughed Grandfather Gurk.

"Yes," said the blue bird. "Hungry, little baby buntings. I am home very often then, but when they are old enough to take care of themselves, I spend more time upon my hawthorn-perch."

"You have not told me what your nest is like," said the bullfrog.

"It is just the shape of a little cup," replied the bunting, "and built strongly of soft, woven grasses. It is only our summer home, though, for when the cold days come, we fly southward."

"And when winter is over—" began Grandfather Gurk.

"We come back here to our sweet-briar home," completed Jolly.

A clear "chip, chip" sounded from a thicket not many yards away, and Jolly, the Indigo Bunting, flew homeward. A moment later, and the frog saw the bird rising again, and from the tip of a hawthorn tree nearby, the bird in the blue coat sang gladly:

From my cosy nest 'neath the wild briar-rose,
With its leaves of green, and its bloom so sweet,
I sing to the morn when the dawn first shows—
"Orble, orble, orble—Weet, tweet, tweet".
Through the summer day, and the sunny hours,
On my swaying perch on the hawthorn tip,
I sing to the brook, and the bees, and the flowers—
"Orble, orble, orble—quip, quip, quip".
When the sun-gold fades to the dusk's soft grey,
And the wings of evening waft to sleep,
I sing "good night" to a joyous day—
"Orble, orble, orble—peep, peep, peep."

—B. E. Green, in Canadian Churchman.

For the Southern Churchman.

Little Girl and the Dingoe and the Bouncing Kangaroo.

Louis Tucker.

Once upon a time Little Girl ran out into the Australian bush because her mother had spanked her. The reason that her mother spanked her was because she had run away into the bush. She ran till she was out of hearing of the house for fear that her mother would call her and she would have to mind; and then she began to walk slowly along and admire the scenery. After a while she remembered bread-and-milk time and decided to forgive her mother and go home; but when she started back, somebody had changed the play and all the scenery was different. So she lost her way and all the golden sunlight turned to shadows.

Then she noticed that one of the shadows had topaz eyes and followed her, and when it came closer it was a dingoe. Dingoes are Australian wolves, and the story of Red Riding Hood in Australia, instead of being a wolf, is about a girl and a grandmother and a dingoe. Little Girl had seen dingoes before. So she was too frightened to cry. So she said a little prayer and wondered what to do next; and just then she met old Man Kangaroo.

Old Man Kangaroo is nine feet long, not counting his tail, but he can lie flat and hide in ten inches of dry grass behind a bush no bigger than a geranium. Little Girl did not see him at all until she stepped on the tip of his tail and he rose with a whoosh like a seven-inch shell and started straight for the dingoe. He probably saw the dingoe but he certainly did not care. The dingoe was so scared that he ran rapidly; but Old Man Kangaroo jumped so very much faster that he went right over the running dingoe as if they were playing leap-frog, and both of them vanished together into the quiet, velvet darkness.

After that Little Girl cried a while, but nobody came so she curled down in the warm, snug nest in the grass that Old Man Kangaroo had made. After that she dreamed that she danced at a ball where there was nobody else but kangaroos. It must have been a dream, and it must have been caused by Old Man Kangaroo coming back; because when her Daddy, with a native and a lantern, tracked her trail and found her at last, there was a warm, snug spot right by her where Old Man Kangaroo had lain down again, and all round in a circle, about a hundred feet away, were dingoe-tracks. The dingoe had wanted very much to come and eat Little Girl, but had not dared because Old Man Kangaroo was near her, and he stood nine feet high when he rose up to fight. He could kick like an ostrich and the claws on his hind feet could kill a desert-survey camel, and Australian survey-camels are tougher than government mules. When they saw Little Girl's Daddy's lantern, both the dingoe and the kangaroo quietly went away into the night, because he carried a star in his right hand and death-by-lightning in a stick on his shoulder. So Little Girl's Daddy picked her up and carried her home to her thankful mother, and she hardly woke up at all.

Little Girl's Daddy went to work next day to get rid of the dingoes, and kept at it till there were no more in that part of the country. He never killed any more kangaroos after that and never let anybody else do it on his land, either. So Old Man Kangaroo found that he was safe there and for years and years afterwards he spent most of his time in Little Girl's south paddock.

Two Very Young Samaritans.

It was Saturday morning in January. The sun came up beaming and found the world looking very different from the way it had looked when he went down. Snow had fallen in the night, and now the brown fields, the bare trees, the gray roofs, even the fences and gateposts were beautiful under their covering of glistening snow.

"Isn't it grand that the first snow we've had this winter came on Saturday!" cried Patsy.

Mother agreed that it was extra good luck.

"I'll wake Mike!" decided Patsy. She ran outside and scooped up a handful of snow and ran up and threw it in her brother's face.

"Hey!" he shouted. He sat up in bed and looked out the window. A broad grin spread over his face. "Just wait!" he said. "I'll pay you back, you little savage!"

Patsy ran downstairs, laughing. She pulled on her sweater and cap and went out to the barn. "I'll give Big Boy some extra corn this morning," she said. "He can't eat hay when the stack is covered with snow." She threw a dozen ears of corn into the feed trough. The pony gave her a welcoming whinney. He crunched his corn and gazed at her fondly.

A bird was hopping around rather forlornly in the barnyard as Patsy started back to the house. "Poor little fellow," said Patsy, "you don't like snow as much as I do, do you? I guess I wouldn't think it was fun either, if it covered up my breakfast! But you just wait, I'll give you something to eat!" she promised.

Breakfast was ready in the kitchen when Patsy got back. She sniffed hungrily at the fresh sausage and buckwheat cakes with maple sirup. It was very jolly, Patsy thought, eating breakfast in the kitchen, with the rows of yellow crocks and shining pans, and Boots, the Maltese cat, asleep under the table.

But all at once she felt an icy lump go down her back, and she wheeled around and saw Mike running out of the door. She flew after him, out into the yard, and then the battle began! They pounded each other with snowballs for half an hour. Then they decided to call a truce and make a snow man.

The snow man was a great success. His snaggled-tooth grin was very lifelike. His black button eyes seemed to sparkle with fun and mischief. Mother and daddy came out to admire him.

"Do you know," said mother, "he reminds me of Uncle Dick."

"Why, he does!" exclaimed Patsy. "Only he's white, instead of black!"

"Uncle Dick always is smiling like that, you know," said Mike.

"Poor old fellow, I'm afraid he isn't smiling much today," said daddy. "I saw him yesterday, as I passed, out gathering up dead limbs for stove wood,"

"We get lots of fun out of snow," said Patsy thoughtfully, "but they don't. It's as hard on them as it is on the birds. And I fed the birds. Mother, let's fix a basket of food for them."

"All right, we will," said mother. "There's plenty of fresh baked bread and sausage and the new sorghum, and of course the potatoes are plentiful."

"You might hitch Big Boy to the spring wagon and take them some wood as you go," said daddy.

"Oh, let's!" said Patsy. "We can pretend we're the Good Samaritan, Mike!"

They drove up the steep hill, past the cedar thicket, past the water mill, past the big pond and came at last to the little battered cabin where the old darkies lived. Aunt Jenny opened the door. And when she saw the children and Big Boy and the wood and the big basket of food she said: "Now de Lord bless my chillun! Dey love dey snow and dey ice, but dey don' never fergit de folks as is too ole to enjoy hit lak dey do!"—Christian Observer.

Teddy's First Voyage.

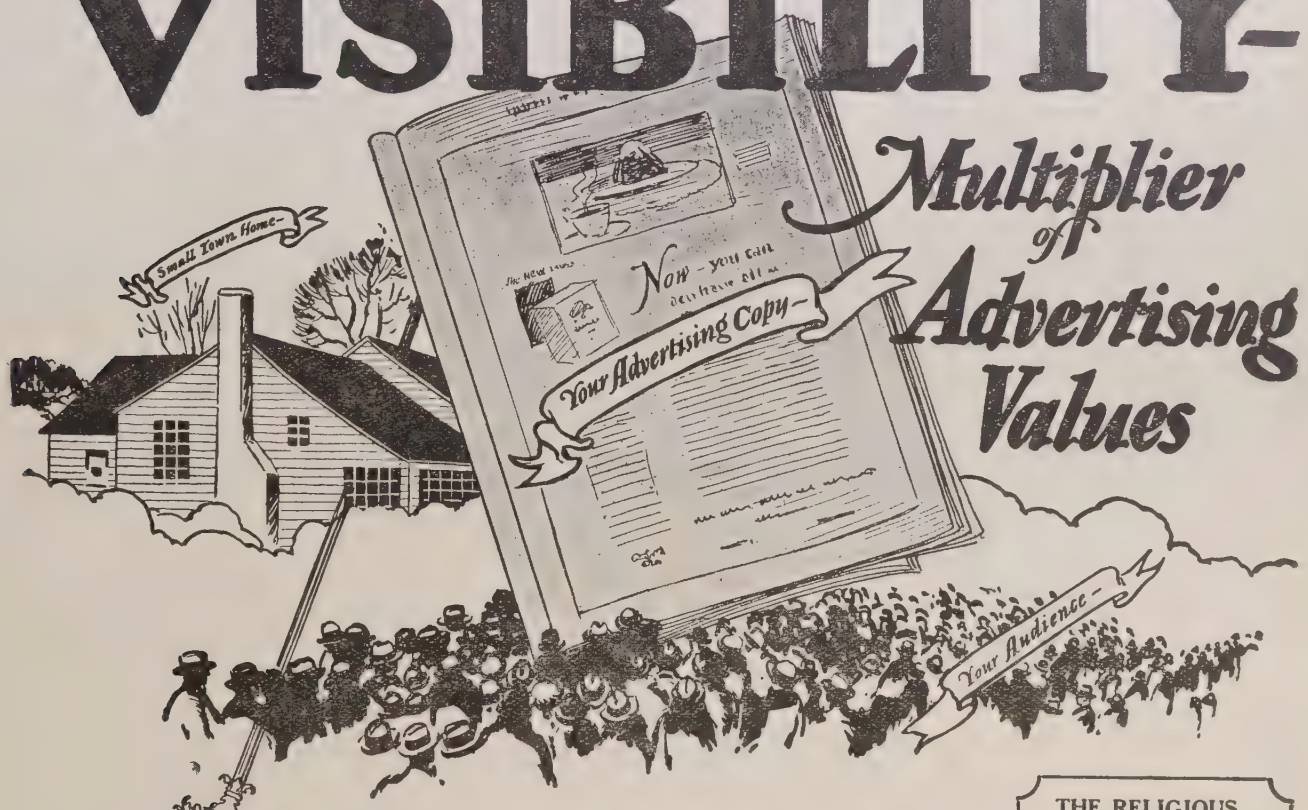
Our Teddy laughed as he sailed away
While he could see the shore,
And when the land was out of sight
He only laughed the more.

And when they stowed him safe away
Within the upper berth,
He filled the tiny cabin full
With shouts of boyish mirth.

He laughed and laughed: "I don't call this
A sleeping-room at all—
A pantry cupboard, don't you think?
And very, very small."

And when the sun came shining in,
He caught its earliest beam
And woke his father with a shout
To tell a funny dream.

"I thought the cupboard rocked and rocked.
I wasn't me myself,
But just a big, big frosted cake
Upon the highest shelf.



"While I was rocking there I thought
A freckled boy about
As big as me came climbing up
And picked a raisin out."

—Florence Mellish, in The Congregationalist.

"Two things are involved in seeking first God's Kingdom and righteousness, namely, priority and preeminence. That is, Kingdom and righteousness must be sought before, and continuously preferred above, other things. Also, they must be sought for their own sake, and not to obtain other things, else in God's sight it is not true seeking."

VISIBILITY—

Multiplier of Advertising Values

It is axiomatic that attention and reader interest are the first essentials of advertising values. The best copy and art work are of no avail if not seen.

Keen advertising men contend that 500,000 circulation where twenty-four to thirty-two pages are less than 25% advertising is of far greater advertising value than 1,000,000 circulation where a hundred or more pages are 45% advertising.

The Religious Press Home Weeklies Combination is a select list of among the finest publications in their sphere. In addition to VISIBILITY, this new medium of long established publications is noted for the following unique values:

Distribution by States

N.E. & Middle Atlantic	31%
Southern States	26%
Central Western States	39%
Far Western States	3%
Foreign	1%

574,137 CIRCULATION
(Sworn 6 Months Average Ending June 30)
72% Home Ownership
63.1% Automobile Owners
Direct-to-the-Home, Full Family Readership
$6.10 MILINE RATE

Distribution by Population

5,000 and under	57%
5,000 to 10,000	11%
10,000 to 20,000	8%
Over 20,000	24%

Other groups have equally interesting statistics. May we tell of them? Every sincere space buyer should know about these publications — No obligation, of course.

THE RELIGIOUS HOME WEEKLIES

Sunday School Times
Christian Endeavor World
Searchlight
Lookout
Christian Standard
Christian Union Herald
Religious Telescope
Presbyterian—Herald & Presbyter
United Presbyterian
Reformed Church Messenger
Evangelical Herald
Methodist Protestant
Christian Leader
Gospel Advocate
Richmond Christian Advocate
Presbyterian of the South
Southern Churchman
Baltimore Southern Methodist
Southern Christian Advocate

Boy's Group

Forward
Watchword
Way

Monthlies

King's Business
Record of Christian Work
St. Andrew's Cross
Westminster Teacher
American Church S. S. Magazine
Otterbein Teacher
Heidelberg Teacher
Bible Teacher

Quarterlies

United Brethren Quarterlies
Reformed Church Quarterlies
Standard Quarterlies
United Presbyterian Quarterlies
Methodist Protestant Quarterlies
Episcopal Church Quarterlies
Wilde Quarterlies

THE RELIGIOUS PRESS ASSOCIATION

Incorporated 1882

Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia

Allan E. Shubert, Manager

North American Bldg., Chicago, Western Office

National Advertisers and Agencies are Again Turning to the Religious Press

Reprinted from the January, 1927 issue of Standard Rate & Data Service

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

A STATEMENT

From St. Andrews' Mountain Mission, Piedmont Parish, Marshall, Va.

Just a little more than a year ago, we began sending out appeals for funds with which to purchase property, adjoining our Mission Chapel, to be known as St. Andrew's Mission Home. The response was really remarkable, when one considers the many appeals within the church and out of it, that flood the press and the mails. From north, east, south and west—from far away Japan, came subscriptions, large and small; from old friends and entire strangers; from various branches of the faithful Woman's Auxiliary, Section B, and the Juniors.

For this great help we are truly grateful. We thank God and take courage. We have now raised a little over $3,000.00 and have nearly $4,000.00 more to raise. Some of the equipment has been bought and installed, we have moved into the property, and find it a great convenience to the work. We are very anxious to pay off this indebtedness as soon as possible, and save 6 per cent interest on deferred payments.

It looks like imposing on good nature to again appeal to our kind friends, old and new, but we must raise these funds somehow from somewhere. If you could just peep into the work room of St. Andrews' Mission Home and see the faithful women making rugs and quilts, if you could see our dear little girls sewing, basket making, etc., and the ingenious little boys at their woodwork, you would realize that it is all well worthwhile.

Who wants to help to raise the next $1,000.00? If ten persons will subscribe $100.00 each, or twenty persons $50.00, or forty persons $25., or one hundred persons $10.00, we will have the $1,000.00. Subscriptins can be paid in full or in instalments at convenience of donor. Any amount at all will be much appreciated and gratefully acknowledged.

Yours for the Master's Kingdom in the mountains of Virginia,

REV. W. B. EVERETT, III., Rector.
Piedmont Parish. Marshall, Va.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

PIPE ORGANS.

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, INC., Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices. Particular attention given to designing organs for memorials.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 209 East Franklin Street. Richmond, Va.

CHURCH LINEN.

PURE IRISH LINEN at wholesale prices for Church Guilds, Rectors and others. Samples on request.
MARY FAWCETT.
115 Franklin St., New York City.

ROOMS—WASHINGTON.

VISITORS TO WASHINGTON ACCOMMODated with comfortable rooms in private home. Reasonable rates. Private bath. Mrs. W. A. Masker, 2751 Macomb Street. N. W.

OLD ENVELOPES.

WANTED—Old Envelopes from letters written between 1845 and 1874. Do not remove the stamps from the envelopes Highest prices paid. GEORGE HAKES, 290 Broadway, New York.

CONFEDERATE STAMPS.

WANTED—Confederate Stamps, also United States Stamps used before 1870. Collections purchased. Higest prices paid. GEORGE HAKES, 290 Broadway, New York.

STAINED GLASS

JAMES POWELL & SONS (Whitefriars), Ltd., London, England—Stained Glass. Designs and estimates submitted on receipt of full particulars. Distributor ADRIAN A. BUCK, 665 Fifth Ave., New York City.

TRAVEL.

SOUTHERN LADY, RETURNING TO VISIT relations, England and Continent, for summer, will chaperon small party. References Virginia and England. Address "Chaperon", care of Southern Churchman.

FOR RENT.

TO RENT FOR SUMMER MONTHS, furnished home in Shenandoah Valley, near Winchester. Cool brick house, large lawn. Address Mrs. E. S. Meade, White Post, Va.

SITUATION WANTED.

CHURCH WORKER.

INFORMATION DESIRED CONCERNING an opportunity in Church work where the services of a trained and educated layman are needed. No objection to traveling. Subscriber is at liberty to refer to the Bishop of the Diocese. Address "S-4" care of Southern Churchman

COLLEGE STUDENT DESIRES SUMMER position as governess, tutor, etc. Address "C-2", care of Southern Churchman.

A WOMAN OF REFINEMENT AND CULture, qualifiel to make a home, experienced in college life of young women, has traveled in this country and abroad, desires a position as companion at home or to travel. References exchanged. Address "F. C.", Southern Churchman.

HELP WANTED

WANTED, IN A SOUTHERN ORPHANage, a gentlewoman to take charge of the boys' department, also the linen room. Address "C-4", care of Southern Churchman.

Deaths

REV. WILBBUR FISK WATKINS, JR., PRIEST.

The REV. WILBUR FISK WATKINS, JR., a retired Priest of the Diocese of Maryland, died on April 7th at St. George's, Bermuda, where he had spent the winter. The burial service was held in St. John's Church, Mt. Washington, Baltimore, on Wednesday, April 13th. Bishop Murray officiated, assisted by Bishop Helfenstein. At the grave the service was taken by Rev. R. S. Litsinger, Rector of St. John's, and Rev. S. Halsted Watkins, a brother. The interment was in Druid Ridge Cemetery. Mr. Watkins graduated from Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., in 1881, and entered the Philadelphia Divinity School that fall. While in the seminary he was ordered deacon by Bishop Stevens. For two years he added to his studies the duties of an assistant to the Rev. Dr. George Kinsolving, then rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Philadelphia.

On his ordination to the Priesthood in 1885 Mr. Watkins became rector of St. Steephen's Church, Bridesburg, Philadelphia. His next care was Trinity Parish, Shamokin, Penn. After a short rectorship he served successfully as an assistant in St. Stephen's, Wilkes-Barre, under the Rev. Dr. Henry Jones, and Emmanuel, Baltimore, under the Rev. Dr. Eccleston. In 1891 he accepted the rectorship of St. John's Church, Mt. Washington, and remained there until his retirement in 1925, a term of service of thirty-three and a half years.

In 1890 Mr. Watkins married Miss Ella Robinson, of Philadelphia. She died in 1923. There are three children, Mrs. John B. Arnold, of Madison, Wis., Leonard R., an official of the Western Electric Co., New York, and Ella R., a teacher in St. Catherine's School, Richmond, Va.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

(Continued from page 16.)

ing the series are to represent St. Thomas, St. Peter, Elijah and Job, and are intended to testify to the truth of the Resurrection. The Elijah window has been ordered and is expected to be ready before Ascension. These windows are being made by Calvert, Herrick and Heidinger, of New York.

For St. George's Church, Flushing, a window has been ordered from Heaton, Butler and Bayne, of London, to be given by the women of the parish in memory of the late rector, the Rev. Henry D. Waller.

The windows of the new St. John's Chapel (Walter Gibb Memorial) at the Church Charity Foundation are now being placed. There will be twelve in all. The large windows over the entrance and the five windows on each side of the chapel are in grisaille, with bands of bright color. The window over the reredos illustrates Christ's words, "I am the Vine, ye are the branches". In the central panel is a medallion of the Crucifixion. On one side of this is a medallion of St. John, the patron of the chapel and of the Hospital with which it is connected, as well as of the Sisterhood which labors there. On the other side is a medallion of St. Luke, the patron of physicians. In the window are also symbols of the four Evangelists; of St. Elizabeth, patron of the poor; of St. Giles, patron of children, and of cripples; of Florence Nightingale, as an ideal for nurses; and of Louis Pasteur, outstanding leader in the modern development of medical science.

Parochial Items of Interest.

Unusual are the following items of parochial news: In the Church of the Annunciation, Glendale, members of the congregation have placed several articles of furniture made by their own hands since the church was finished about a year ago. Among those are an altar, a crucifix and candlesticks, a credence and four electric light fixtures. A reredos has been provided by the members of the Women's Guild. The Men's Club of the Cathedral parish have districted the town and members of the club are making a friendly visit at every home in Garden City. At All Saints', Richmond Hill, a daily Eucharist has been maintained for nearly four years. St. John's, Southampton, has been incorporated and will seek admission to the Convention at its session next month. This Church was begun in 1908 by the Rev. Samuel C. Fish, who has been in charge ever since. Meantime he has organized three other churches in contiguous territory—St. Ann's, Bridgehampton; St. Mary's, Hampton Bays; and St. Mark's, Westhampton Beach. All these are included in the parish now incorporated.

UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D. Bishop.

Missionary Pageant.

A pageant of rare beauty and missionary appeal was presented in Satterlee Hall, of Trinity Parish House, Columbia, on April 4.

After the opening hymn, with vested choir, and prayer for missions and Bible reading, Mrs. Beverley Sloan announced that the pageant was the work of the Department of Church and Church Extension of the women and of the Men's Club of the parish. She introduced Mrs. M. B. Hutchinson, who took charge of the program.

The center of the stage was occupied by an effective reproduction of a cover of The Spirit of Missions. A little girl, representing Mission Study and weeping because she was neglected, interested the audience in mission study and in the missionary work of the Church by opening The Spirit of Missions on various scenes representing phases of the work in the field.

There was Miss Grace Lindley, who told of the opportunities before the Church. The next scene represented Dr. Elliott at work in St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo. A group of attractive Japanese girls showed the fine work being done through Miss Hallie Williams at St. Agnes' School, Kyoto. Significantly a boy with freckled face and sun hat stood for the opportunities in the mountains of the South. Latin-America was introduced in vivid colors with a fine appeal for the work there. A small girl in real Hawaiian costume reminded the audience of their own share in the work there in the person of Miss Eunice Haddon. A group of Italian-Americans spoke of the Foreign-Born American work of the Church. Deaconess Marie P. Williams told of the work she and her co-workers are doing in the coal fields in the mountains of Virginia. The "Little Blue Box" appeared with a comparison of the beginning at $400 with the last offering of $912,841.30, all for the womanhood of the world by those who recognize their blessings through Christ. Upper South Carolina's missionary to China, Miss Theodora Young, came with a group of her girls to show the work she is doing. A group of American Indians came for the work under Bishop Burleson. A figure in purple spoke of the sacrifice of missions, pointing especially to Archdeacon Stuck in Alaska and the Rev. and Mrs. Hoke Ramsaur in Liberia.

At last all those who had taken part in the pageant came together following the Cross, symbolizing the oneness of the task. The Rev. Henry D. Phillips, D. D., offered prayers for the missionary work of the Church and gave the benediction.

Crusade Results.

Every parish and mission in the diocese has felt the effects of the Bishops' Crusade. Many Church people attended some of the services in Greenville and Columbia. But after the visit of the National Crusaders the clergy of the diocese were assigned to the various churches for various parochial missions of a week each. These missions were well received and have been most fruitful in their results. The smallest missions especially have had revived in them the sense of fellowship with the whole Church and of their share in the tasks for the Kingdom of God. A number have expressed their gratitude for the messages of the missions and many have asked for the privilege of sharing the benefits of a like mission each year. A splendid response has been made to the appeal for rededication to the service of Christ.

A. R. M.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

Following Up The Crusade.

As a follow-up to the Bishop's Crusade there have been held at Christ Church, Savannah, during Lent, daily at noon, twenty-minute services, by the rector, the Rev. David Cady Wright.

For the first five weeks in Lent Mr. Wright gave a series of lectures on the "Lord's Prayer". These proved to be a source of help to all and were developed in a way that was most appealing to the laymen.

The concluding lectures during Holy Week were devoted to the subject, "Who Crucified Christ"?

The attendance at these services was outstanding. The daily attendance ranged from two hundred to three hundred people.

H. B. H.

Rural Work In One Georgia County.

Rural work being the forefront of the Church's Program this year through the study of the book, "Beyond City Limits", a report made by one of the women Crusaders of the Diocese of George given at the study class of Christ Church, Savannah, showed the diversified work of three small communities of Camden County.

In St. Mary's, where there are about sixteen communicants, mostly women, a group keeps the church in order, runs an organized Church School, visits the sick, welcomes strangers, holds regular meetings of the Woman's Auxiliary, always meets its quota, invites the whole town to service when a missionary visits the mission, and makes the Church a living, growing concern in spite of the fact that money is scarce and visitations few. They are planning to mend the roof and beautify the churchyard, and this last is a community project. They unite the functions of Christian social service, the Church School, Altar Guild, Daughters of the King, study groups and rector's aid—all under the name of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Almost remarkable is the situation existing in the two little hamlets of Woodbine and Waverly. The women of both communities, all Communions, unite under the name of the Woman's Auxiliary, with a member of the Episcopal Church as their head. She finds a study program that will be spiritually educating without dogma or doctrine. She holds business meetings attended by all women, for the purpose of planning work. All her per capita dues are paid into the Woman's Auxiliary, but funds from entertainments and business enterprises are divided among the churches. These women, like the ones at St. Mary's, unite all the services of their respective churches under the general head of Woman's Auxiliary. They supply food, clothing and friendly service to all in need, nurse the sick and visit strangers.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Harold Holt has resigned All Saints' Parish, Portsmouth, Ohio, effective May 1, to accept his election as Assistant Secretary of the Department of Social Service of the National Council. Mr. Holt was elected at the February meeting of the Council.

The Rev. Mart G. Smith, formerly rector of Holy Cross Church, Paris, Texas, has accepted a call to Trinity Church, Fredonia, N. Y.

The Rev. Franklin C. Smielau, formerly deaf-mute missionary of the Diocese of Harrisburg, has accepted a similar position in the Fifth Province, with charges in Ohio, Southern Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan.

The Rev. Rodney F. Cobb, formerly curate of Trinity Cathedral, Davenport, Iowa, has accepted the call to be curate of Old Trinity Church, New York City.

The Ven. E. J. Dennen has accepted the call to be rector of Christ Church, Boston, Mass., in addition to present duties as Archdeacon of Boston.

The Rev. Henry J. Pulver, formerly deaf-mute missionary of the Diocese of Washington, is now missionary in charge of the work among the deaf mutes of the Diocese of Harrisburg.

The Rev. W. F. Parsons, formerly rector of St. Peter's Church, Weston, Mass., will take charge of missions at Lyme and Niantic, Conn., May 2, when his address will be Black Hall, Conn.

The Rev. G. J. Childs, formerly rector of St. Peter's Church, St. Paul, Minn., entered upon his duties as rector of St. Paul's Church, La Porte, Ind., on April 18.

The Rev. Charles T. Leachman, formerly rector of Calvary Church, Santa Cruz, Cal., is now minister-in-charge of mission of St. John the Baptist, Capitola, Calif.

ORDINATIONS.

The Rt. Rev. John G. Murray, D. D., as Bishop of the Diocese, assisted by his Coadjutor, the Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., advanced to the priesthood, in Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, on Wednesday in Holy Week, April 13, 1927, the Rev. Wilbur F. Wheeler, presented by the Rev. E. R. Noble; and ordained to the diaconate Harry S. Weyrich, presented by the Rev. Hugh Birckhead, D. D., who also preached the sermon.

In St. Chad's Chapel, St. John's College, Greeley, Colo., on March 25, the Rt. Rev. Robert H. Mize, D. D., Bishop of Salina, ordained to the diaconate Norman Ritner Alter. The candidate was presented by the Very Rev. Benjamin W. Bonell, dean of St. John's College, and Bishop Mize preached the sermon.

The Rev. Mr. Alter will complete his course at St. John's College.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Slater Clay Blackston, rector emeritus of St. John's Church, Butte, Mont., died at the Good Samaritan Hospital, Portland, Oregon, on March 21.

Mr. Blackiston was born in Kent County, Md., January 13, 1846. He was graduated from Washington College, Maryland, attended Nashotah Seminary, Wisconsin, and was ordained deacon in 1872 and priest in 1873 by Bishop Robertson. His life work was done in Butte, Mont., where he labored for thirty years as rector of St. John's Church. He retired as rector in 1913, went to Spokane in 1916, and to Portland, Ore., in 1919.

The Rev. Bernard Schulte, D. D., nonparochial clergyman of the Diocese of New York, died of pneumonia at the home of his son in Omaha, Neb., on Sunday morning, April 3, in his seventy-ninth year. Burial services were held at St. Barnabas' Church, Saturday morning, April 9.

The Rev. Frank H. Church, secretary of the Diocese of California, died in San Francisco on Wednesday, April 6. The funeral service was held at the Cathedral on Saturday, April 9.

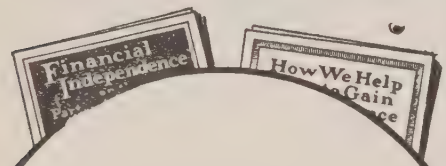
The Bell Book and Stationery Co.

ENGRAVED WEDDING ANNOUNCEMENTS
VISITING CARDS.
Fifth Street between Broad and Grace
RICHMOND, VA.

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.

Richmond, Virginia

THE SAFE EXECUTOR

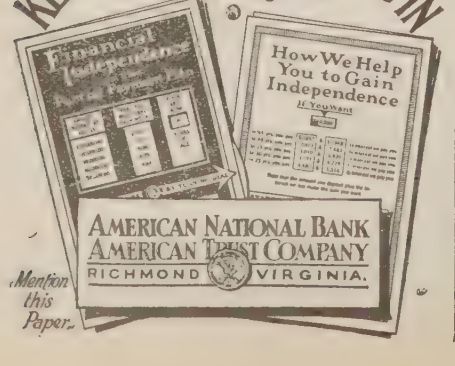


Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock $1,000,000.00
Surplus earned $1,500,000.00
Held in trust $30,000,000. (plus)



EARN $25 WEEKLY SPARE TIME
Writing for newspapers, magazines. Experience unnecessary. Details FREE. Press Syndicate, 1303 St. Louis, Mo.

YOU ASK ANOTHER

If I deposit $3.45 per week in your Income Building Plan, how long will it take me to get $10,000?" 25 years—and only deposit $4,484.00, the balance is interest earned by the plan. Make up your mind as to the amount you should save and ask us what you may expect from 6 per cent compound interest by The Plan and how it works.

KEEP YOUR INCOME COMING IN
Ask for Booklet on Income Building Plan

Mention this Paper.

INCORPORATED 1832

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,398,462.62

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer
J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm . P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

A Complete Store of shops and --- more --- an Institution

Miller & Rhoads

"THE SHOPPING CENTER"

Richmond - Virginia

QUALITY CHICKS

Chicks from winter laying, farm raised, mature stock, S. C. W. Leghorns, R. I. Reds, Barred Rocks, White Orpingtons, Anconas, Black Jersey Giants, White Wyandottes, White Plymouth Rocks, Black Minorcas, Pekin and Indian Runner Ducks; $15 per 100 up. Live Delivery guaranteed. Parcel Post prepaid. Hatching eggs $8.00 per 100 up. Several breeds rabbits. Circular free. Shipments will be made from one of our nearest associated hatcheries.
Glen Rock Nursery and Stock Farm, Ridgewood, N. J.

Cuticura Loveliness
A Clear Healthy Skin
Insured by Every-day Use of Cuticura Soap

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC., 308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.
QUALITY—SERVICE

SYDNOR & HUNDLEY'S STOCK REDUCTION SALE

Complete Suites and Hundreds of Occasional Prices at

25 Per Cent, 33 1-3 Per Cent and 50 Per Cent Reductions.

7th at Grace — Richmond, Va.

The South's Best Book Store

HUNTER & CO.

105 E. Broad Street
Richmond, Va.
Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen.
Prompt and Reliable Service.

A NATIONAL CHURCH PAPER FOR ALL THE FAMILY.

Southern Churchman

NISI DOMINUS FRUSTRA 1835

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., APRIL 30, 1927. No. 18.

THE world stands out on either side
No wider than the heart is wide;
Above the world is stretched the sky,—
No higher than the soul is high.
The heart can push the sea and land
Farther away on either hand;
The soul can split the sky in two,
And let the face of God shine through.

—Edna St. V. Millay.

IN THIS ISSUE

THE PULPIT SERMON
By The Right Reverend William T. Manning, D. D.,
Bishop of New York
The Archbishop of Canterbury on The Revised
Prayer Book.

EDUCATIONAL

The Virginia Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded.
Established 1892.
For terms and information address
MISS M. GUNDRY.

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-eighth year of this School for Boys opened September 15, 1926. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. Hoxton, B. A., Principal.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The Requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA,

prepares boys at cost for college and university. Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountians of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., Rector.

St. Hilda's Hall

Charles Town, W. Va.
Near Harper's Ferry.

Chevron School for Girls. Episcopal Junior College—four year' High School and two years' College Courses. Elective Music, Art. Business, Athletics. Limited numbers.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

The One Hundred and Fourth Session
Opened Wednesday, Sept. 15, 1926.

For catalogs and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria Va.

CHATHAM EPISCOPAL INSTITUTE,
Box 13, Chatham, Virginia.

College preparatory school for girls. Certificate privileges. Also two years of advanced Academic work. Special courses, Music, Art, Expression, Home Economics. Modern equipment. 15 Acres campus. Pool, Golf. Terms moderate. 33rd session September 22, 1926.

Bishop of Diocese of Southern Virginia President of Board.

For catalogue address
MABEL ELEANOR STONE
Principal.

The Hannah More Academy

The Dioceasan School of Maryland, Founded 1832. A Country School for Girls—fifteen miles from Baltimore. College Preparatory and General Courses, Music, Art, Supervised Athletics.

Principal, LAURA FOWLER, A. B., Reistertown, Maryland.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY, Publishers,
112 North Fifth Street, - Richmond, Va.

LEWIS C. WILLIAMS.....President
REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Associate Editor
MISS FENTON WILLIAMSON News Editor
MISS SUSAN C. COOKE, Circulation Dept.
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00 Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful.....	4
Editorials	5-6
The Pulpit of the American Church	7
The Archbishop of Canterbury on the Revised Prayer Book	8
Items From Two Storm Centres...	9
Christianity and the Community—The Rev. R. Cary Montague....	10
Summer Schools and Conferences..	11
Church Intelligence	12
Family Department	17
Children's Department	19
Personal Notes	23

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry The curriculum covers the full course to Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

St. Stephen's College

An Undergraduate Church College for men.

There are four curricula—Classical, Literary, Scientific and Social Scientific.

For tution $250.00 a year; for a room furnished and heated $150.00 a year; for board in hall $250.00 a year; a total of $650.00.

Address: BERNARD IDDINGS BELL, President

Annandale-on-Hudson, N. Y. (Railway Station, Barrytown, N. Y.)

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesvile; St. Margaret's School, Tapphannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.)

(About gifts or bequests, address the Dean, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR BOYS.
Richmond, Virginia.

Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 60 pupils.

RATE $700.00.

Reduction to sons of Clergymen, teachers and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., Headmaster.

St. Agnes' Episcopal School

Alexandria, Virginia.

Boarding and Day School for Girls on Braddock Heights overlooking the Potomac River.

On the interurban trolley and bus lines between Washington and Alexandria.

Athletics and open air life; sixteen-acre campus. Primary, Intermediate, General and College Preparatory Courses. Music.

For information apply to
THE PRINCIPAL.

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University.

For catalog address

The Dean.

HOBART COLLEGE, Geneva, N. Y

A Church College for men, founded 1822. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

SOLD BY A SHUT-IN

Ladies All-Silk Hose; full fashioned chiffon, extra sheer, fine quality, No. 175. Colors: Atmosphere, Amberette, Shadow, Darling, Gun-metal, White, Moonlight. Three pair for $7.05; one pair, $2.35.

Men's Hose, No. 300; twelve strand, extra close knit, pure thread silk with lisle top. Colors: Black, Navy, Gray, White, Cordovan, Champagne, Russian Calf. Four pair for $4.00; one pair, $1.00.

These hose are guaranteed to please you. I pay the postage.

E. P. BROXTON,
Rte. 2, Blythe, Ga.

$25 TO $50 For Your Church or Society

Sell our Embossed Initial Tea Napkins packed three dozen to the package. Made of the finest Lynkloth Crepe Paper. Every package with your own initial in Old English. In ordering, kindly state the quantity of each initial you desire. This is an article that every home has use for, and, with our Sample Box, sales are easily made. Costs 13c.; sells for 25c. Sample box, 25c. With every order of 25 packages sample package free. Thirty days' credit, carrying charges prepaid.

Gillmore Bros., Publishers, Reading, Pa.

For the Southern Churchman.

The Cry of the Easter Dawn.

F. B. Stone.

They have taken my Lord away!
How that cry still rings out on the air!
'Twas the cry of a heart that had suffered and bled,
This new grief held the tones of despair.

But that sorrow has turned to joy,
Joy for us and for Mary that day;
If we give Him our hearts and hold fast to our Lord,
There's no power that can tear Him away.

Now He holds us close in His love,
Though the billows around us may roll,
And the enemy strive to the utmost to gain
His old mastery over our soul.

And no soul need utter the cry
That rang out on that first Easter day,
For our Lord has arisen with life for us all,
And He now is our joy and our stay.

The City Church.

What is the responsibility of the Churches of the city? What does the Church of Christ exist for? For the select few who today worship within the buildings called by His name? Then in God's name close the doors! Such Churches have no mission and should cease to exist. The Church of Christ exists to reveal God and to act in concert with Him. Would that I could startle you into Christian activity! The sorrow of the city awaits your sympathy and the saving force and grace of Jesus Christ. How is the city to know that it is not God-forsaken? Through the Church. Let me speak plainly. If you are careless of the city's sorrow, you are not a Christian. Call yourself a cultured pagan, if you will, but do not use the term Christian. If you are not pitying the city, you are a God-forsaken soul, and need the city of some greater soul.—G. Campbell Morgan.

The way of the fearless leader is lonely. Do not be afraid of being misunderstood. There is an austere joy in being alone with the truth. Those who look far enough ahead with prophetic soul must live in advance of their day. Under the surface of the discipline of loneliness, there is a freedom and a vibrant joy beside which all minor rewards are as nothing. There is a life which seems to be sufficient and satisfactory. The temptation is to rest in it. Do not. Reach up to the higher, which reveals itself only as we enter it.—Bishop Brent.

WANTED—Consecrated Christian Men
To assist in developing Bryan Memorial University. Attractive basis.
Mr. Lockhart, 101 W. 80th St., New York City.

Richmond Trust Company
3%
ON SAVINGS.
BANKING—TRUSTS—REAL ESTATE
Capital $1,000,000.00
Main at Seventh Richmond, Virginia.

FOUR POINT STAR SUMMER RANCH
St. Michael's Mission
WIND RIVER INDIAN RESERVATION,
Ethete, Wyoming.

Open from June 15th to September 15th.
Bring your family and friends to healthful Wyoming. Opportunities for fishing, horseback riding, and motor trips to many of America's most beautiful spots, including Yellowstone Park, abound. Good home table with plenty and dairy. Here a unique vacation may be spent in the delightful atmosphere of St. Michael's Mission. Write for further particulars. Prices moderate.

A. ABBOTT HASTINGS, Warden.

ANNOUNCEMENT

THE CHOIR EDITION
. . . OF . . .
THE NEW HYMNAL

In order to satisfy an apparent desire for a stronger book for the use of the choir, we have prepared a limited experimental edition which is designed for heavy usage. The pages are specially stitched and the binding heavily reinforced. It is bound in red buckram so as to be easily distinguishable. Otherwise it is exactly similar to the standard musical edition.

Choir Edition.....$1.50 per copy, or
1.30 in lots of 100 or more

Standard Musical Edition..... 1.20 per copy, or
1.00 in lots of 100 or more

(A total order of 100 or more, part of which are to be the Choir Edition, entitles the purchaser to the reduced prices on both editions.)

Word Edition.....40c per copy

Carriage Charges are Extra

ORDERS SHOULD BE SENT TO

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

14 Wall Street, New York

EVERYTHING FOR THE CHURCH

J. & R. Lamb
23-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED WOOD · METAL · ETC.

Dewey's
EST. 1857
MATURED
WINES
for Sacramental Use
Affidavit Blanks and Price Lists Mailed on Request
H. T. Dewey & Sons Co.,
138 Fulton St., N. Y. C.

WOODY ART GLASS SHOP
Art Stained and Leaded Glass
Church Windows a Specialty
402 East Marshall St.
Richmond, Va.

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS
Largest stock in the South. We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival
The Couper Marble Works
(Established 79 years.)
294-296 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

BIG PROFITS
For Your Church Organization
The Handy Household Helper
Write for full information
METAL SPONGE SALES CORP.,
Dept. G, Lehigh Ave, & Mascher St.,
Philadelphia.

BLOTCHY SKIN
need not annoy you. Pimples blackheads, etc. are quickly dispelled by Resinol

R. GEISSLER, INC.
56 W. 8th STREET, NEW YORK, N.Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS

Church and Sunday School Furniture
THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY,
Hickery, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue.

"Palmer's book is a wonderful contribution to the subject," says Bishop Darst.

THE MINISTRY OF LAYMEN
A Plea for Lay Evangelism
By
LEON C. PALMER.

Over 2,000 copies sold before edition was off the press.

Postpaid: Single copies, 25c.; four for $1.00; nine for $2.00.

From
The BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW
202 S. Nineteenth St., Philadelphia.

XANTHINE
Hair Restorative
Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.
Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.
XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

Washington Cathedral
A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation
• • •
THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work of Missionary Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.
Chartered under Act of Congress.
Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.
Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.
• • •
Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

Church Furniture
Pews · Pulpits · Chancel · Furniture
Sunday School Seating
American Seating Company
General Offices 1029 Lycton Bldg., CHICAGO.
Catalogues on Request.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Every advance toward unselfishness is a victory for Christ.

It is hardly fair to criticize those who try to do and fail, if we never try.

Civilization is a contract between the great dead, the living, and the unborn. —Edmund Burke.

Social regeneration can never come en masse; it must come through the individual.—Rev. Dwight W. Wylie.

We are inclined to weaken the gospel to make it palatable to the world, rather than to assert its authority to save the world.—Bishop Warren Candler.

It is not enough to say to another, "Hands off!" We need to say one to another, "Hands Together". We must agree not only to differ but to cooperate.—Robert E. Speer.

Worship or service—which? Ah, that is best
To which He calls us, be it toil or rest;
To labor for Him in life's busy stir,
Or seek His feet, a silent worshipper.

Give me, O Lord, a heart of grace,
A voice of joy, a shining face.
A tenderness for all that stray,
With strength to help them on the way.

"Glad wisdom is not gotten, but is given;
Not dug out of the earth, but dropped from Heaven:
Heavenly not earthly, is the brightness of it."

Never say, "It is nobody's business but my own what I do with my life". It is not true. Your life is put in your hands, as a trust, for many others besides yourself. If you use it well, it will make others happy; if you abuse it, it will harm others beside yourself.

Triumphant Morn, whose first ray had such might
That Life and Love, which passed beyond the ken
And ministering care of mortal men,
Upon this holy day could reunite!
—Caroline Hazard.

Any heart turned God-ward feels more joy
In one short hour of prayer than e'er was raised
By all the feasts of earth since its foundation.
—P. J. Bailey.

Christianity does not rest its case upon theories about Christ, but upon the fact of Christ; not upon any theory of Christ's resurrection, but upon the fact of His resurrection; not upon any theory of the inspiration of the Bible, but upon the fact that it inspires men with a sense of God; not opon any theory of how Christ saves, but upon the fact that He saves those who, with warmness of heart and singleness of purpose seek to follow Him.—Rev. R. C. Helfenstein, D. D.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., APRIL 30, 1927. No. 18.

EASTERN ITEMS OF YESTERDAY AND TODAY

OLD EPHESUS WHERE ST. PAUL LECTURED FOR THREE YEARS, thereby establishing what might be called the first Christian Theological Seminary, is emerging under the excavators' pick and shovel.

Through the cooperation of numerous nationalities, including Aziz Bey, the leader of the Museum of Smyrna, and a Turkish official, and delegates from Austria and America, the work of uncovering this ancient city of Asia Minor was resumed last fall. Wonderful catacombs, with Christian graves of many different types, have been discovered. It will be remembered that tradition has it, that St. John the Evangelist was the first Bishop of the Church here. A sanctuary, bearing his name, has been found and partially uncovered, and it is hoped that next autumn's work will entirely retrieve this ancient building. Many potsherds having interesting and valuable inscription upon them have been discovered and innumerable Christian writings around the graves will contribute enormously to our knowledge of the thought of these early followers of Christ. The work is now suspended through the hot season, but we may hope for immensely valuable discoveries when it begins next fall.

DID SARAH, THE WIFE OF ABRAHAM, KNOW THE TOILET ARTS OF TODAY? We know that she possessed some modern feminine attributes, for we are told that she "laughed within herself" upon over-hearing a conversation that amused her; and a few verses further we read, "Sarah denied, saying I laughed not, for she was afraid" (Gen. 18:12 to 15). The humanity of the Bible is delightful, and almost as inspiring as its divinity, for it shows that God has been dealing with us, His children, who after all are just people, for, lo, these many centuries; but to return to our question, "Did Sarah know the toilet arts of today"? She might have, for according to reports from the East, of recent discoveries there in the ruins of cities of great antiquity, we read:

"We turn to objects for elucidation of the habits of the town dwellers. Ivory casket-lids bearing Phoenician inscriptions—reputed to be the first Phoenician inscriptions found in Mesopotamia—a dedication by a lady to Astarte, the Moon Goddess—indicate the elaborate handicraft as well as the expensive and luxurious materials used for these purposes.

Of more immediate interest to the modern woman would be another find, a complete toilet set in ivory—a mirror handle, a powder box, a paint pot sphinx-like in form, a very elaborate comb bearing engravings. Having a toilet set of such material and workmanship the woman of Ur cannot be thought of as lacking much that the twentieth century woman possesses in the way of dressing table equipment. A wealth of fine objects found in tombs of a much earlier period (according to Mr. Woolley's accounts dating about 3000 B. C.) left no doubt as to the lavish use of precious metals and materials for purposes that do not strictly fall within the ordinary meaning of luxury—though copper and other cheap materials were, no doubt, used for domestic and kindred purposes and for cups, tools and weapons. Numerous diadems, rings and gold and silver jewels have been found that one would believe to be of recent fabrication, if one did not know that they had been dug out of long-buried palaces."

THE ANCIENT HOME OF ABRAHAM, Ur of the Chaldees, is being uncovered and brought to light by excavators, working under the joint auspices of the British Museum, and the museum of the University of Pennsylvania. Many well preserved clay tablets have been found, containing much interesting information about customs prevailing in 2000 B. C. This work was begun before the World War, but, of course, was suspended during that tragic period. The most valuable discoveries have been made since last October.

The houses in which clay tablets were found are most striking. The standard of comfort and the great luxury which people in the days of Abraham, about 2000 B. C. or earlier, allowed themselves are almost incredible. The apartment house tenant in New York City may still regard early peoples with an Olympian glance; but the fact remains that man in Abraham's days allowed himself a solidly built two-story building where his modern metropolitan successor has to content himself with a very small section of a huge building with numerous tenants.

We are told that the houses resembled the best houses of present-day Bagdad; that there was a central court with a wooden gallery from which upper rooms opened; that the family lived upstairs while the ground floor was allotted to reception rooms and domestic offices.

MAHATMA GHANDI CAME FORTH FROM A YEAR'S RETIREMENT LAST DECEMBER, and is now living simply in India at a little village, a ten hours' railroad journey north of Bombay. To this village come distinguished people from all over the world to see him. He has started the spinning industry for the natives of India, which promises to be of great value in relieving the terrible poverty in many villages. His plan is to teach young men of India to spin, and they go by twos, like missionaries, teaching the people of the villages this handcraft. He does half an hour's spinning himself every day. He is a New Testament professor at one of the national colleges near Sabarmati, and he occasionally delivers lectures there. His days begin at four in the morning, when he has an hour of prayer, and he is busy from that time on until he retires for the night, which is always at an early hour.

There are a few simple rules of life that must be followed by those living at Gandhi's retreat. The first is that no violence must be used; second, there must be utter truthfulness and no exaggeration; third, no eating to please the palate, but only to maintain the strength; fourth, no stealing, which means not consuming or possessing more than is needed for a simple life, and lastly, purity.

THE PRACTICABILITY OF THE RISEN LORD

It is thoroughly characteristic of the indifference to date, or chronology, of the Gospel writers that there is no way to tell at what period of the forty days of the resurrection ministry it was that Our Saviour made His appearance to the seven disciples on the shore of the Sea of Galilee. It must have been more than eight days after Easter when Peter, the two sons of Zebidee and those other disciples had returned to their trade of fishing, beyond that we cannot specify the time.

No matter when it was, we may be sure that it was a glorious event in the experience of those who shared it. We also can draw a wonderful message from it for our daily lives.

If we read over the twenty-first chapter of St. John's Gospel, one is bound to be impressed with the practicality of the Risen Saviour.

We are told that He stood upon the shore of the lake at day-break when the disciples had been toiling all night and had taken nothing. His first question was exactly what He would have asked had He been in the flesh: "Children, have ye any meat?" To their reply in the negative, He said: "Cast the net on the right side of the ship and ye shall find." He did not give them their food, but told them where to get it for themselves. This is the true Christian spirit of helpfulness.

After John's intuitive recognition, and Peter's impulsive plunge into the water to reach Him, both of which were entirely characteristic, His next command is equally practical: "Bring of the fish which ye have now caught," was apparently followed by a little pause while the fish were being prepared and cooked, then comes the gracious invitation: "Come and dine."

It is almost irreverent to picture that scene wherein Jesus in His resurrection body prepared and cooked a meal of fish and bread for those seven hungry, weary friends of His.

The record shows just four sentences spoken by Him, each one going straight to the relief of the situation. First —He asks if they have anything to eat, then He tells them where to get it, and to bring some of the fish to Him, that He may cook them, then to come and share it. Could any modern trained Red Cross worker go about the relief of a situation in a more direct manner?

What a thought it is that this Risen Lord, the Conqueror of death and the grave, still knows the needs of our physical bodies and still wants to minister to them!

Not only is this scene intensely comforting as showing us that the Christ of eternity is mindful of the needs and weaknesses of our frail bodies; but this incident is also tremendously convincing of the proof of the truth of the Easter message.

The evidence for the fact of the resurrection does not consist of punctured hands and feet, and the pierced side. The joy of Easter is not a revitalized material body, but continuing personality. We are not interested in the restoring of this temporary tenement of flesh and blood and bones in which our souls are tabernacled here for a little while on earth, but in the perpetuity of our personalities.

In His earthly life it had been the purpose of Jesus to give to people those things which they needed to complete life, sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, health to the sick, soundness to the crippled, forgiveness to the wicked. Now, here upon the shore of the Galilean Lake, we see the same Person showing the same attributes of loving thoughtfulness, as when He had walked the earth, a man amongst men.

This is a more positive proof of the conquest of death than the appearance to Thomas when He showed His hands and feet. It is also vastly more satisfying proof.

We can get along very well without the body in which the soul of Jesus lived, but we cannot do without that loving thoughtfulness of others that was the personification of the Father, and that enabled Him to say "He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father".

A MODERN NABOTH'S VINEYARD

We are glad to note that another Church paper considers our relations with Mexico to be worthy of comment in the religious press. The able editor of the Southwestern Episcopalian, the Rev. J. Lewis Gibbs, in commenting upon President Coolidge's commendation of the Bible as "the bulwark of our Government", calls the attention of the Administration to the twenty-first chapter of the first Book of Kings, "in which it will find the story of Naboth".

He applies this incident as follows:

"Naboth had a vineyard which Ahab, the king, coveted for himself. Naboth refused to sell his vineyard. Gentle Jezebel, Ahab's wife, solved the problem. She sent secret messages to Naboth's neighbors. They had him accused of cursing God and the king. Naboth was stoned to death. King Ahab got the vineyard and everybody was happy once more—except Naboth perhaps.

Certain oil operators, especially some of those who tried to rob their own country of its oil reserves during a former Administration, desire oil concessions in Mexico. Mexico refuses to be exploited. The gentle Secretary of State, who is so fearful of violent, blood-thirsty Bolshevists, solves the problem. Let arms and munitions be smuggled into Mexico to revolutionists who can always be paid to revolute. Kill off a few hundred "greasers" if necessary and then set up a dummy administration which will behave itself seemly before its Uncle Sammy. Then everybody will be happy. The oily gentlemen of Teapot Dome fame will have their oil and perhaps will refrain from conspiring to get control of the naval reserve of their own country—and, by the way of adding to everybody's joy, the Roman Catholic Church can go on its unmolested way keeping the Mexican peons in the density of their ignorance.

We wonder whether there is any Elijah lurking around under some juniper tree or in some cave ready to go to Washington saying, 'Hast thou killed and also taken possession? In the place where dogs licked the blood of slaughtered Mexicans shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine. Thou hast sold thyself to do evil in the sight of Jehovah. Remember Naboth's vineyard'!"

THIS WEEK'S PREACHER

THE RIGHT REVEREND WILLIAM T. MANNING, D. D., D. C. L., S. T. D., was born in England, but received practically all of his education in this country, taking his theological course at the University of the South, from which he received his first Doctor of Divinity degree. Since then he has been honored with this degree by Harvard, Nashotah and Princeton, and has received the D. C. L. degree from King's College, Nova Scotia, and an S. T. D. degree from Columbia University, New York. His parochial experience has been as varied as have the honors which have come to him. Beginning at Trinity Church, Redlands, California, in 1891, he returned to his Alma Mater in two years to take a place on the faculty as Professor of Dogmatic Theology. He next went to St. John's Church, Lansdowne, Pa., and was called from there to Christ Church, Nashville, Tenn. After remaining in this famous parish for five years, he went to New York, first as vicar of St. Agnes Chapel, Trinity Parish, becoming assistant rector of the parish in 1904, and rector in 1908. He was elected Bishop of New York in 1921, and since then has become a national figure in religious and public life. The completion of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine is one of his ambitions, and he gives a large part of his great ability to this end, holding it up to the imagination of the country as a national religious shrine, which it is rapidly becoming.

THE PULPIT OF THE AMERICAN CHURCH

BISHOP MANNING'S EASTER MESSAGE

Sermon Preached in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on Easter Day, 1927.

I am the Light of the World.—St. John 8:12.

Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me.—St. John 14:1.

I am the resurrection and the life . . . . whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die.—St. John 11:25, 26.

All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth . . . . and, lo, I am with you alway even unto the end of the world. —St. Matthew 28:18,20.

THOSE are the words of Jesus Christ Who rose from the dead on Easter morning.

The religion of a Christian does not mean a mere acceptance of the moral teachings of Christ, or admiration of the human character of Christ; it means faith in Christ Himself, as He now is at the right hand of God. It was their faith in Christ Himself which changed the lives of those men and women in the New Testament, and which gave them power to change the world.

And so, as you sit here this Easter morning, I give you the Easter Message in His own words, spoken by His own lips, "I am the Light of the World". "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me." "I am the resurrection and the life . . . whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth . . . and, lo, I am with you alway even unto the end of the world."

These are not the words of one who is only a human teacher, only a man of unusual moral excellence, only a son of God in the same sense in which we are all sons of God. They are the words of One Who places Himself in a relation to the world, and to His fellow men, which belongs to God alone.

They are the words of One Who shows us the love of God because He is one with God. They are the words of One who knows Himself to be and declares Himself to be equal with the Eternal Father and Creator.

They are the words of One Who declares Himself the Saviour of each one of us, and the Saviour of the whole world.

No other has ever dared to speak such words as these. Jesus Christ alone of all who ever trod this earth makes these claims. And more and more as the centuries pass the world sees that His claims are true. It is the Godhead of Christ which alone justifies His claims and which is the warrant of His promises to us. And so, on this blessed Feast of His Resurrection, we lift our prayers and praises to Him in the words which have been used by Christians through the whole life of the Church on earth, and which echo not only in our Creed, but in every act and utterance of the Church's worship, "Thou only, O Christ, with the Holy Ghost, art most high in the glory of God the Father".

And the message of Easter to America is that Jesus Christ, Who rose from the dead, is Lord and God, that our life as a nation is founded on faith in the Risen Christ, that our hope and trust is in Him even as our fathers' was, that He alone has power to guide, to uphold and to preserve us as a people.

There are today in our land powerful influences which openly seek to discredit Jesus Christ, challenging His right to rule, denying His Divine power, rejecting His standards of purity, of marriage, and of life. In much of our current literature, in many of the lecture rooms in our colleges and universities there is an attitude which is definitely hostile to faith in Christ as God. Even in some Christian pulpits there are voices which suggest doubt as to the Divine power of Christ, which suggest to men that if they are modern and progressive and use their minds they cannot be expected to believe the Message of Easter. Standing here before you this Easter Day, in this Cathedral which we are building as a witness to our faith in Christ, speaking in the presence of the God of Truth, I declare to you that there is no fact of science or of scholarship, there is no discovery of modern knowledge, there is no claim of intellect or of reason which debars any sincere man or woman from kneeling before Jesus Christ as God and Saviour.

Dear friends, what we now need in our land is a revival of true faith in God and the future life, without which, as George Tyrrell tells us, "Man becomes ever more pert and provincial with every step of his progress".

There is no other who can give us this faith but Christ Who rose from the dead, and Who speaks to us this Easter.

And what Easter says to our nation it says also to the whole world. What we need is One Who is able to overcome the sin of the world. It is Jesus Christ alone Who can do this.

We are now facing stupendous world problems, perhaps a time of world crisis. Not only in China, but through the whole East it is evident that vast changes are coming, changes which may completely eclipse those which have followed upon the World War.

Christ on the Throne of God alone can give the light, the guidance, the strength that is needed. If Christ be now followed these new movements will bring righteousness, peace and brotherhood such as the world has never yet seen. If Christ be not followed who shall say what the future may hold? Let us pray that the statesmen and leaders of our nation, that the leaders of all nations, may now be guided by the Light that is in Christ.

Let us pray that the Church may awake to meet the present world situation which may be the greatest challenge, and the greatest opportunity, of her whole history.

We, who are Christians, know only too well our own failure and shortcomings; we know that the weakness, the spiritual inadequacy of the Church is due to us, to our spiritual apathy, to our indifference, to the insufficiency of our faith in Christ.

Let our prayer this Easter Day be that our faith in Christ may be more real, that the Church throughout the whole world may arise in her true strength, that she may preach Christ with the same faith and power with which the first disciples preached Him, that the differences and divisions which weaken and impair her life may be lessened, and healed, and that she may bear her witness for Him Who says to us, "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me". "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth . . . and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world".

THE TEACHER.

He sent men out to preach the living Word,
Aflame with all the ardor of His fire;
They spoke the Truth, wherever truth was heard
But back to Him they brought their hearts'-desire
They turned to Him through all the lengthening days
With each perplexity of life or creed.
But that they brought to Him their human need.
—Hildegrade Hoyt Swift, In the Christian Century.
His deep reward, not that they spoke His praise,

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY ON THE REVISED PRAYER BOOK

SCIENTIFIC and philosophic thought was, by the middle of the last century, taking in large measure a new aspect and fashioning a new background for the thoughts and aspirations and prayers of the ordinary intelligent man. The new realization of the fact of evolution, though the formulated theory was still in its infancy, gave activity to quite novel lines of thought and effort and inquiry.

Through all this old Faith proved its strength and its stability, and I do not suggest for a moment that it required in a fundamental sense restatement of its principles.

The Book of Common Prayer drawn from the religious services of many generations of men brings those principles into the field of our daily action and thought with what seems to me to be literally incomparable sagacity and strength. It has no parallel on earth. But none the less it had become inevitable that if it was not to leave out of consideration or out of touch a great number of familiar thoughts, there must be some modification in the direction of enrichment or elasticity, some facility for thoughts less rigid than those of two hundred years before.

In accordance with all this, for just sixty years there has been a continuous series of steady endeavors to reconsider and enrich the Prayer Book—the cherished possession of the National Church.

There has been no cessation whatever in the call for reconsideration and for new suggestions, and it is the merest ignorance or indifference which can speak of the proposals now before us as anything else than the culmination of what has been sought for sixty years or more.

The idea entertained in the earlier decades of that time, that mere diccipline was all that was needed to meet what we may call a Ritual restlessness, has passed happily into oblivion, for discipline is by itself no remedy till men are more or less agreed as to the rules or usages under debate.

In pursuance of the advice of the Royal Commission the Crown issued Letters of Business to the Convocations and these were renewed at each Dissolution of Parliament. Interruptions on a great scale were inevitable, and it was not till 1920 that the Convocations reported their formal Reply to the Letters of Business. It is not too much to say that the Great War gave to nearly everybody new thoughts upon the largest issues of life and conduct—personal, national, and universal. A question like Prayer Book Revision was dwarfed into insignificance. The thought and resolve which came to every earnest man was that, by God's help, we must bring it about that no such catastrophe should ever darken the world again, and I suppose that the setting of almost every man's prayers, and many men's beliefs, was made new. We got a new background for every prayer about our corporate life, and to very many there came also unwonted thoughts concerning those who were passing, or had passed, into the world unseen. We cannot ignore the difference which all this made.

Before us on the table have been three documents. One is the Measure and Schedule, known among us as N. A. 84. Next we had before us the amendments suggested by the House of Clergy, and thirdly those suggested by the House of Laity. No single paragraph in the Book now compiled but has gone through the test of our detailed weighing, paragraph by paragraph, of all these three documents. The task has been anxious and heavy. It has been done (I say it without hesitation) conscientiously, prayerfully, and hopefully.

We have striven in quiet dependence on the Spirit of God to enrich the material of our public worship. I have always myself had in mind that what we do concerns not ourselves only but the usage of our brethren overseas, who, as you know, have been watching with ceaseless interest the progress of our labors. In such pages of the Book as are new every prayer has been sifted, every sentence has been weighed. I ask you to realize that in this volume we indicate not what we believe that any section of Churchmen will regard as their ideal of an alternative book. No, but we give you the only kind of Alternative Book for which, at the present juncture, we can anticipate general acceptance. For you also the hour is a grave one, for you are charged with the duty of saying whether or not you would have us go forward and take the last, the concluding step. If we take it, with your concurrence, I believe that the use of this Book will meet the requirements of many who have hitherto felt their requirements to be unmet, and that it will even draw together some who are now disunited and uneasy. Naturally there will be disappointment on the part of many who have set their hearts on some particular kind of change in one direction or another. That is inevitable.

Now let me summarize our proposals.

First, this Alternative Book is permissive only. It is in no sense forced on those who do not wish to use it.

Secondly, it is a composite book. You will find in it the old Prayer Book in its entirely with only some trifling changes in the old forms of the minor Offices. This form of Book may seem perhaps evasive and certainly clumsy. But it has this great advantage—that the worshipper who takes only the new Book to church will find within its pages everything which can be used there, whether new or old.

Thirdly, of the changes made the majority deal with matters quite uncontroversial. They are the kind of changes which have been advocated of recent years with practical unanimity. Such are the permissive shortening of Morning and Evening Prayer, and the increase of the Prayers and Thanksgivings in number and scope. Liberty is given to shorten the Litany, and the use of the Athanasian Creed—if that may now be included as non-controversial—is made voluntary. Some additional "Proper Prefaces" are permitted in the Communion Office. The customary modifications in the use of the Psalter on Sundays are sanctioned. The Office for the Burial of the Dead has been enriched. And in the Orders for Baptism and Matrimony some of the references to the Old Testament Patriarchs are omitted. Further, we propose an Appendix at the end of the Book containing the Offices of Prime and Compline, and a short Service which may be said by Minister and people before the Holy Communion. In the same Appendix provision is made for additional Epistles and Gospels to be used on week-days in Lent and, with special Collects, on certain other occasions. No elaborate provision is made for the various minor Holy Days because the whole question of the Calendar has had to be left to a Commission to examine, and we shall not have their Report in time to take action on it in this Measure.

Fourthly, I turn to matters which cannot be called uncontroversial and which inevitably invite discussion. I will mention three connected with the Office of the Holy Communion.

Next—and this is a matter of great importance—we are given sanction to the optional use of an Alternative Order for the administration of Holy Communion. We have naturally taken into consideration the Offices already in use in different parts of the Anglican Communion—in Scotland, in the United States of America, and in the Province of South Africa. But the Order as we propose it will be seen to differ in some respects from each of these.

The very idea of having such an alternative order of Holy Communion will certainly be challenged in some quarters. And, I am afraid, I must tell you that one of our number, the Bishop of Norwich, though approving, I believe, of almost all our work other than this, proposes on this account to dissociate himself from his brethren. You in your capacity as members of the House of Clergy were emphatic in desiring that an alternative order should be permitted. But you will remember that you left to the Bishops the problem of finding their way through two suggested alternative forms. I am sanguine enough to believe that you will find in our proposals a satisfactory solution of difficulties which had been left unresolved. I have no hesitation in expressing my own wish that we could in this most solemn of all our Services unite in the use of one Form only. I pray that in days to come this may come about with general consent. Meanwhile I am convinced that the cause of unity and concerd will best be served by the provision which we have adopted.

As to the Canon itself, we propose to meet various criticisms of the Consecration Prayer by offering in the alternative order one which contains the ancient feature of the Invocation of the Holy Spirit and a reference in the Thanksgiving to other incidents in Our Lord's life beside the Crucifixion. Also the offering of "ourselves, our souls, and bodies" becomes part of the Consecration Prayer itself. These changes have long been desired by a considerable section of the Church, and it is, we believe, a reasonable comment upon our existing Prayer that it omits certain elements which are of very high antiquity and give greater fullness to our commemoration of Our Lord's Redemption.

I turn next to the anxious question of the Reservation of the Consecrated Elements for the Communion of the Sick. There is no question that with the stress laid, rightly or wrongly, by many on the obligation of the priest to celebrate fasting, and yet more with the increased frequency of the reception of the Holy Communion by the faithful, a demand has grown up which calls for consideration. Accordingly the Rubrics prefixed to the alternative Order for the Communion of the Sick made provision for the reservation of the Elements to be used for the communion of the sick and for no other purpose. Whatever rules it may be necessary for the Archbishop and Bishops acting together, or for the Convocation of the Province, to issue, the conditions under which alone we authorize reservation are set forth with unmistakable clearness in the proposed Rubric.

Two other points—apart from the Order of Holy Communion. We have included among the Special Collects, Epistles, and Gospels for permissive use Thanksgivings (which may be used on any day when desired) for the Institution of Holy Baptism and for the Institution of Holy Communion.

Again, I attach great importance to the increased elasticity which our alternative usage encourages as regards additional prayers and thanksgivings, both those which are actually provided and those which an incumbent, under due Episcopal sanction, can introduce. This includes permission, under certain conditions, to make use of extempore prayer. It is an experiment, and some will deem it rash. Its possible danger is indisputable, but I believe that on the whole it will bring us great gain. Only experience can test its workableness in association with our normal usage.

I have thus briefly summarized what seem to me to be the more important proposals in our Draft Book. Important as they are, I wish to say emphatically that in my deliberate judgment nothing that we have suggested makes any change in the doctrinal position of the Church of England. The balance of emphasis may here and there be somewhat altered, but that mere fact will disquiet no one who remembers what different aspects of the truth have been emphasized by recognized Church leaders during the last four hundred years. The distinctive basis remains sure, and is enriched by the development of thought, the acquisition of fresh knowledge, and the upgrowth of new theories for the exposition of a truth manifold yet one and indestructible.

If I thought that what we are suggesting today would mean or involve any marked re-setting of the distinctive position of the Church of England, I should not be standing here to advocate your acceptance of what we lay before you. My Churchmanship is the Churchmanship which has found it possible—yes, and desirable—to include Hooker and Jewel and Andrewes and Cosin and Waterland and Simeon and Keble, and I am persuaded that we are not departing therefrom to the right hand or to the left. And I remind you yet again that our proposals are permissive only, and that those who find in the old Prayer Book all that they desire can rest content in those pastures still.

May I further place on record a fact which gives me cause for thankful satisfaction? The Bishops have given to their work unremitting devotion, and during many weeks there has rarely, among those in this country, been more than a single absentee. And never in all my experience of conciliar work have I known long sittings and anxious discussions to be carried on with such absolute harmony and mutual confidence on the part of men of varied experience, varied sympathy, and here and there of varied opinions. It has been an object-lesson helpful to us all. It has been, I am persuaded, a direct answer to our prayers.

Will you deem it inappropriate or intrusive if I give to my final words a personal touch? It happens that this very day, February 7, is the opening day of my twenty-fifth year as Archbishop of Canterbury. The memories of these many years and of the friendships which have lightened them are rich and varied. They crowd upon me at this hour. The years have not been years of leisure. No one is more conscious than I am of the abundant and obvious shortcomings which have marked their course. But we have together striven to do our best. If it should be my privilege to see, during the course of the twenty-fifth year which has today begun, the peaceable completion of the task which has occupied us so long, I shall indeed, as the eventide of public life, nay of life itself, draws on, be filled with humble thankfulness and hope. God in His mercy grant to the Church of our time such a spirit of loyal cooperation as shall make that peaceful issue well assured. Do I not speak for every one here when I say that our hearts are aflame with an eager longing for it? And come it can. May we as men of one heart and one soul, and with this work to aid us, be now set free, to discharge aright, at a great time in the world's history, the larger tasks which await us on every side, in promoting the Spirit of the Lord Christ and the progress of His Kingdom among men.

ITEMS FROM TWO STORM CENTERS

MEXICO.

A RECENT issue of the Mexican diocesan paper, La Buena Lid, which is published in Mexico, in Spanish, contains an unsigned article on the Episcopal Church in Mexico, answering a series of eight questions, such as: "What is the history of the Episcopal Church?" "Does it not resemble the Roman Catholic Church?" "What end does the Episcopal Church seek in Mexico, where the great majority of the Mexican people are Christian and are members of the Roman Catholic Church?" In answer to the last question the article says, in part, translated:

The Episcopal Church came to Mexico at the invitation of the Mexican people. When the reform movement began, under President Juarez, it was directed by a small group of fervent, loyal and sensible Mexican citizens who were encouraged by President Juarez and the members of his liberal government. A priest of the Roman Church was elected the first bishop of the "Mexican Church of Jesus", and petitioned the American Episcopal Church for consecration. He died in 1872, before his petition could be granted. Bishop Riley, consecrated in 1879 by American Bishops for the Mexican Church, served for a short period.

Meanwhile, congregations of English and Americans necessitated the supervision of an American bishop, and in 1904 Henry D. Aves was consecrated bishop for the English-speaking people.

"Faithful to the catholic principles which guided them, the native clergy sought to be received under his jurisdiction. A plan acceptable to both Churches was formulated, and in February, 1906, Bishop Aves took charge of the thirty-two native congregations and the foreign churches.

"Consequently the Episcopal Church is here because it has an obligation towards its Mexican members, now of the second and third generation; because it dare not neglect the English-speaking Anglicans who live in Mexico; and because it believes that it ought to accept within its fold the thouands of Mexicans of liberal thought who are separated from the Roman Church and who desire a Church which resembles the one that they have left, but which is liberal and evangelical, and under which the Mexicans are obliged to be faithful only to God and their country."

To the question, "What has your Church done for the Mexican people"? La Buena Lid says: "Since the Episcopal Church first interested itself in Mexico it has practiced that love of humanity which is exemplified in Christ. Since 1875 Hooker School has exercised a good influence in the life of Mexican women and girls. Today it is one of the best educational institutions, meriting the praise of government inspectors as well as of native and foreign visitors. In Guadalajara we have an industrial school for boys; in the House of the Holy Name, in Mexico City, we carry on a distinguished social service among the less fortunate; in Nopala we have maintained a hospital.

"We believe, however, that our most important contribution to Mexico has been to maintain religious services in Spanish, which have attracted and have satisfied people who have demanded freedom and enlightenment.

"Our aim has been to develop character, and to encourage those who have come to us to realize the possibility that our Lord saw in the poorest and humblest, which leads, once it is known, to a clean and sane life, and to a true and honest citizenship."

CHINA.

Bishop Norris, of Peking (English Diocese of North China), writes in a personal letter to English friends: "This country is presenting the world with some very serious problems. Their solution is by no means as easy as many people think. It stands to reason:

(1) That a revolution in a country of this size must take time, say half a century, to work itself out satisfactorily;

(2) That it will be impeded by all external interests, influences and forces—they are like foreign bodies in a wound—irritants;

(3) That it will be marked by internal chaos for a time, because its local leaders will inevitably get the idea of being national leaders, and thus come to blows with each other;

(4) That the wisest course, therefore, for all outsiders, is to interfere as little as possible (see 2 above), to be patient with the chaos (see 3 above), and above all, to be as far as possible unselfish in their attitude;

(5) Always remembering that as a result of the revolution the volume of trade will probably increase fifty or one hundred-fold, but the channels of trade will inevitably change from being "foreign" to being "Chinese"—we must expect this and prepare for it, and it is suicidal to fight against it, as if we could "hold on" under present conditions."

CHRISTIANITY AND THE COMMUNITY

"The Kingdom Come, Thy Will be done on earth"

Edited by the Reverend R. Cary Montague

COMMENTS ON CHILD TRAINING.

By Mary Evelyn Brydon, M. D.

Article XVI.—The Ten Commandments.

(Continued.)

The Sixth Commandment—Thou Shalt Do No Murder.

Self-Control: This no easy lesson to teach. However, if you have taught your child from the Third Commandment reverence for God and the things of God, you have laid a foundation for teaching the meaning of this Commandment as given in the Church Catechism: "To hurt nobody by word or deed. To bear no malice nor hatred in my heart."

The Bible says that in the beginning God "breathed into man the breath of life and man became a living soul". Thus man's life, being the very breath of God, must ever be a sacred thing both to himself and others. The instinct of self-preservation is so strongly implanted in man that it is called "nature's first law". This nature must be greatly changed by a distraught mind before one deliberately takes his own life; and his heart must be very full of wickedness before he can commit murder.

This Commandment is full of paradoxes for the little child. Look at the baby toddler sitting there painstakingly pulling the legs and wings from a captive fly. "Stop it, Mama spank," and you slap his little hands; then you hastily run for a cloth to wipe them, for they have touched a fly. This done you take up a fly swatter muttering, "Hateful pests", and endeavor to kill as many as you can reach.

Baby mustn't pull the kitty's tail, but Daddy gets up at night and throws something at a yowling cat in the back yard.

The child mustn't squeeze the wounded bird in his hands, for he will hurt it; nor catch the gold fish for they cannot live out of water; but grandfather goes hunting and fishing and returns with a brace of birds or a string of fish.

Children are naturally destructive. This arises from no particular love of cruelty, but partly from curiosity, partly from an instinctive obedience to the law of self-preservation, and partly from a very human desire to get what is wanted. He must be taught to harness these natural traits and make them serve a useful purpose. He must be taught that if he is to live he must let others live; to conserve and love life, not hate and destroy it.

These differences must be taught as definite lessons. There are two sides to the application of the teaching. To kill for the wanton love of killing is wrong, to kill a human being with malice and hatred in the heart is murder. To kill a pest or to supply the table with food is right. Cruelty, slow, lingering torture to helpless things, unnecessary destruction of life, are wrong. To kill swiftly for necessary purposes, to put an animal out of pain, is right. It is a difficult lesson to teach; but you much teach it.

It is inevitable that as we come into conflict with each other in our human striving for similar ends; our personalities are bound to clash in a more or less discordant manner unless we are safeguarded from within. When jars come, when anger, wrath, jealousy, etc., arise in our minds against our brother, our neighbor, the greatest possible help that can come to us to check the raised arm, the hot tongue, the evil thought is the Holy Spirit's indwelling power. This power acts from within and through the factors that control our acts—the will, the reason, the judgment—the highest forces of the intellect—and thus we attain—self-control.

The spirit of the Commandment can be best taught children by (1) impressing the importance of self-control; and (2) appeal to the protective instinct.

First: We should teach them control of anger, hatred, destructiveness, and other evil tendencies. How shall we teach these? The child does not know these objectionable traits until he experiences them, or even then unless they and their unhappy consequences are brought to his attention. By time he is old enough for it to be brought to his attention, the evil seeds have been sown.

The first indication of a wayward spirit may be a temper trantrum or unnecessary crying spells thwarted. Temper tantrums always have a reason. Lack of sleep, sunshine or fresh air, unnecessary bribery, living examples in mother, father or other member of the family, malnutrition, over-fatigue and its opposite—over-stimulation—lack of proper food, wrong food habits, and spoiling by always having his own way irrespective of the rights of others. These and many other things teach a child to expect to get what he wants when he wants it.

Self-control must begin from the day of birth, and you can begin then to teach the child not to cry unnecessarily. Upon the foundation of this early lesson of self-control can be laid the later lessons of control of temper.

But merely to control one's temper is not enough in the light of our Lord's teaching. Is it possible to prevent the evil thoughts engendered by wrath, jealousy, envy, etc., from ever arising in our minds? We are certainly told definitely in the Bible that such a thing is possible. We cannot prevent this nor can you so teach your child. But what about the Holy Spirit who will teach us all things? The trouble is we don't believe that He can; isn't that so? Yet it is told us expressly in the Bible.

Let me urge you, therefore, to teach the child:

First: To control such bodily things as are in his power to control—temper, crying, "answering back", fighting, etc.

Second. Reverence for God and the things of God.

Third. That his body is the Temple of the Holy Spirit and therefore precious in God's sight.

Fourth. That he is a child of God and therefore a friend of Jesus.

These things taught in a positive way will inevitably help to inculcate the habit of self-control.

Second: If the child is taught that he is a child of God, it should be an easy next step to teach him to apply this teaching to his playmate, his neighbor. He also is a child of God, and the same respect the child accords Him is to be accorded to his neighbor.

But something more than just accepting the idea of others being children of God is necessary. Your child should be taught to help, and give service, to safeguard his brother, his playmate, his neighbor. This idea of safeguarding or protection is fairly easy to teach.

Everything that is weak, helpless or imposed upon should call forth the protective instinct of a boy; everything that is sick, defective, hungry, should call forth the maternal or cherishing instinct of a girl.

The protective instinct in the boy and the maternal instinct in the girl are therefore to be fostered. These traits, together with the definite teaching from you that since every child is a child of God, everybody's life is valuable and precious in the sight of God, will enable your child to live harmoniously and peaceably with all men and if universally taught and practiced should eventually help to abolish war.

Daily Bible Readings.

April 24—1 John 5:4-12.	May 1—1 Peter 2:19-25.
April 25—Acts 13:4-13.	May 2—Psalm 23.
April 26—1 Peter 5:1-11.	May 3—Ezek. 34:1-16.
April 27—1 John 4:1-21.	May 4—Isaiah 40:1-11.
April 28—Luke 5:27-32.	May 5—John 10:1-18.
April 29—John 20:19-31.	May 6.—Matt. 25:31-46.
April 30—Acts 20:17-38.	May 7—Rev. 7:9-17.

SUMMER SCHOOLS AND CONFERENCES

Graduate Mission Study Conference Lake George, New York.

The Missionary Education Movement has its twenty-fifth annual summer conference this year at Lake George from June 28 to July 9. This is primarily a graduate conference for those who have attended a Church conference for two or three summers and desire to get specific training in methods of missionary education. Dr. Sailer, for example, has a two-hour normal class on "How to Teach a Mission Study Class", and Dr. Hargraves, two hours on, "Missionary Education Problems of the Local Church".

The organization of this really great movement must be described as "interdenominational", inasmuch as no better word is available in our generation. Perhaps Lausanne will at least think of some more inspiring term. But there is unlimited inspiration in the conference itself, as well as edification, while the beauty of Lake George and the recreation, pageants, music, etc., at Silver Bay are famous.

A folder giving detailed information as to faculty, lodging and expense, may be had from G. G. Le Sourd, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York. Rooms are reserved in order of registration.

Miss Lindley, Miss Tillotson, Miss Lucy Sturgis, Mr. Samuel Thorne, Jr., and Mr. W. E. Leidt are Episcopal Church people on the conference board. Miss Sallie Deane, of Richmond, one of our Church women, is on the faculty this year, giving the young people's course on the Bible. John Roots, the Bishop's son, has been asked to give the course on the Story of Missions, though his acceptance has not yet been received.

Southern Conference on Lay Evangelism, Blue Ridge.

Arrangements have been completed for holding a "Southern Conference on Lay Evangelism" at Blue Ridge, North Carolina, June 30 to July 4. The conference will be both inspirational and educational in character, the morning sessions being devoted to studies and practical discussions on the nature and place of lay evangelism and its opportunities, difficulties and methods, while the evening session each day will feature an address by some leading Bishop of the Church. The afternoons will be free for recreation and informal conferences.

The Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop of East Carolina, and Chairman of the National Commission on Evangelism, will give the opening address, Thursday evening, June 30.

The conference, while sponsored by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, is for laymen of the Church generally.

Full information may be obtained from the Conference Director, Leon C. Palmer, General Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, 202 South Nineteenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Peninsula Summer Conference. Ocean City, Maryland.

The Peninsula Summer Conference, which holds its ninth session this year at Ocean City, Md., from June 20 to 26, inclusive, will present eighteen courses besides conferences. The faculty will include Dr. C. J. Galpin, of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, who will give a course on "Rural Social Problems"; Dr. C. B. Hedrick, of the Berkley Divinity School, who will teach "The Life of Our Lord"; Professor William R. Howell, of Washington College, a course on "Sociology and the Problem of the Church"; the Rev. Frederick E. Seymour, director of Religious Education in the Diocese of Pennsylvania, "Creative Teaching"; the Rev. Franklin J. Clark, Secretary of the National Council, "Mission Study"; the Rev. Elmer C. Pedrick, two courses on "Youth and the Church" and "The Young People's Movement"; Miss Mildred H. Brown, "Pageantry"; Mrs. Herman C. Cook, "Girls' Friendly Work"; Prof. J. W. Crosley, of the U. S. Naval Academy, "Church Music"; the Rev. Addison A. Ewing, a course for the Clergy on "Preaching"; Mrs. Arthur Van Harlingen, "Discussion Leadership"; the Rev. Christopher P. Sparling, a course on Church History; the Rev. Richard W. Trapnell, a course on Christian Ethics"; and the Rev. George W. Graham, D. D., on "Teaching the Grammar and Junior High School Grades.

The Bishop of Easton, the Rt. Rev. George W. Davenport, is President of the Conference, and the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., Bishop of Delaware, is chaplain. Information concerning the conference may be obtained from the Rev. Henry N. Herndon, 1306 Van Buren Street, Wilmington, Delaware.

Summer Conference, Diocese of Dallas, Saint Mary's College, Dallas.

The Summer Conference of the Diocese of Dallas will be held in Saint Mary's College, Dallas, June 5-12. Courses will be given in the various departments of Religious Education, Social Service, Young People's Work, Woman's Auxiliary, Church Music, etc., with the following instructors:

The Rev. Dr. Karl Morgan Block, rector of the Church of Saint Michael and All Angels, St. Louis; the Rev. Edw. S. White, rector of the Church of the Holy Communion, Saint Louis, Missouri; the Rev. Bertram L. Smith, rector of St. Barnabas' Church, Omaha; the Rev. Dr. Edward Henry Eckel, St. Andrew's Church, Fort Worth, Texas; Miss Edith James, instructor in Religious Education, St. Mary's College, Dallas; Miss Martha Russ, Field Worker for the Diocesan Department of Religious Education; the Rev. Frank Gavin, professor of Ecclesiastical History, General Seminary, New York; Miss Dorothy Fischer, Organization Secretary of the Federated Episcopal Young People of the Province of Sewanee; Mrs. J. C. Tolman, President of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Province of the Southwest; Mr. Karl Wiesemann, Organist and Choir Director, St. Matthew's Cathedral, Dallas;

The Dean of the Faculty is the Rev. Goodrich R. Fenner, Dallas, Texas; the Chaplain; the Rev. Dr. Frank Gavin, and the Registrar, Mr. Irvine T. Holloway, 1227 Kirby Building, Dallas, Tex.

The Valle Crucis School.

Valle Crucis Summer School for Religious Education, under direction of the Department of Religious Education of the five Carolina Dioceses will be held at Valle Crucis, Watauga County, N. C., July 4-16, 1927.

The faculty for the school will include:

The Rev. Homer W. Starr, Ph. D., Dean of the Faculty, Charleston, S. C.; the Rev. Cameron McRae, D. D., National Council, Shanghai, China; the Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker, D. D., Field Secretary Province of Sewanee, Houma, La.; Mr. Leon C. Palmer, General Secretary Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Philadelphia, Pa.; Mrs. D. D. Taber, Field Secretary Religious Education National Council, New York; Mrs. John Loman, Secretary Department Religious Education, Diocese of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa.; Miss Anne Morton Stout, Field Secretary Province of Sewanee, Memphis, Tenn.; Miss Margaret G. Weed, Educational Secretary Woman's Auxiliary, Province of Sewanee, Jacksonville, Fla.; the Rev. W. H. K. Pendleton, Chairman Department Religious Education, Diocese of Upper South Carolina, Spartanburg, S. C.; the Rev. Geo. F. Rogers, rector Trinity Church, Asheville, N. C.; Wade R. Brown, Mus. Doc., Chairman Department Religious Education, Diocese of North Carolina, Greensboro, N. C.; Mrs. Frank N. Challen, Executive Secretary Y. P. S. L., Diocese of North Carolina, Charlotte, N. C.; Mrs. J. W. Griffith, Director Religious Education, Christ Church, Savannah, Ga.; Mrs. M. B. Hutchinson, Secretary Woman's Auxiliary, Diocese of Upper South Carolina, Columbia, S. C.; Mrs. Jean S. Knight, Field Secretary Religious Education, Diocese Western North Carolina, Gastonia, N. C.

The officers of the school are:

Advisory: The Bishops of the Diocese of North Carolina, South Carolina, East Carolina, Upper South Carolina, and Western North Carolina.

Executive Committee: The Rev. J. W. C. Johnson, Director, Gastonia, N. C.; the Rev. W. H. K. Pendleton, Vice-Director, Spartanburg, S. C.; Wade R. Brown, Musical Director, Greensboro, N. C.; the Rev. Geo. W. Lay, D. C. L., Beaufort, N. C.

Beaufort, N. C.; the Rev. H. W. Starr Ph. D., Dean, Charleston, S. C.

Treasurer: the Rev. J. P. Burke, Valle Crucis, N. C.

Registrar: Miss Virginia Bouldin, Valle Crucis, N. C.

The directors announce that there is every prospect for a Summer School useful to the Church in the cause of Christian Education. The courses and faculty have been selected mindful of four definite groups of pupils attending from our Carolina family of dioceses:

(1) Teachers and Officers of Church Schools.

(2) Woman's Auxiliary Diocesan and District Officers and Parish Program Leaders and Mission Workers.

(3) The Clergy and active laymen of our Carolina Churches.

(4) Y. P. S. L. and their Counsellors.

More than ever the directors in the School are earnestly endeavoring to keep religious education spiritual. They would meet the needs of those who have consecrated their lives for Christ's service and who want to fit themselves for His Work.

Registration should be made now to the Rev. J. Preston Burke, Treasurer, for Valle Crucis Summer School, Valle Crucis, N. C.

The Blue Mountain Conference, Frederick, Maryland.

Generally speaking, the Blue Mountain Conference of 1927, to be held July 11-23, at Hood College, Frederick, Md., will operate along the same lines as last year. It will continue to be an "advanced conference", not in the sense of being a post-graduate course, but because it tries to supply the things most needed by those who are already busy with Church work, or who by spiritual experience are ready to take up leadership in their parishes.

Lectures on "Personal Religion" will be given by the Rev. J. O. S. Huntington, O. H. C., who will also be Chaplain of the Conference. There will be classes on many subjects, opportunity being given to those interested in every phase of Church work to improve their methods. The program will be evenly balanced between the departments of Religious Education, Missions and Social Service. The Enrollment Committee will try to see that no member of the Conference undertakes more than he or she can assimilate with profit.

An interesting departure this year will be a course on Church Music under the leadership of the Rev. A. V. Bennett.

A more extensive innovation will be the "School of Religious Drama", under the leadership of Miss Joy Higgins of Boston.

The evening program is being arranged with the thought in mind that at that hour the busy student wants something that will inspire and thrill without necessitating too much mental effort. Speakers with real stories to tell, missionaries from the field, workers in unknown vineyards, will occupy the evening hour.

Information regarding these Schools may be had from the Executive Secretary of Rural Work, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

Registrations and requests for reservations should be made to the Rev. Charles E. McCoy, 848 West Fourth Street, Williamsport, Pa. Programs may be obtained from Mr. McCoy or from the Secretary, Miss Helen C. Washburn, 2030 DeLancey Place, Philadelphia, Pa.

For general information write to the Executive Officer, the Rev. N. B. Groton, Whitemarsh, Pa.

Schools For Rural Clergy will be held as follows:

Madison, Wisconsin, June 27-July 8.

Manhattan, Kansas, June 6-10.

Cornell, Ithaca, N. Y., July 11-23.

Chestertown, Md., tentative date first week in September.

University of Maryland, College Park, Md., June 13-24.

Church Intelligence

Situation in China Mission.

On April 13, the Publicity Department cabled to China, asking for answers to questions concerning conditions in each diocese. The questions asked and the answers received on April 22, follow:

Diocese of Shanghai.

Question 1.—What do you propose to do with missionaries pending return to Station?

Answer.—Have authorized all missionaries whose furloughs are due in 1927-1928 and 1929 to return to America if they so desire, except those whose work is continuing and those who can be used elsewhere in the mission.

Question 2.—What Schools and hospitals are in operation?

Answer.—St. Luke's Hospital, Shanghai; St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Shanghai. Hope to reopen following in January, 1928: St. Andrew's Hospital, Wusih; Church Hospital, Zangzok. Following closed until September, 1928: St. John's University, Shanghai; St. John's Middle School, Shanghai; St. Mary's Hall, Shanghai; All Middle Schools; All Day Schools. Following are open and will continue as long as possible: St. John's Medical School; St. John's Theological School.

Question 3.—Are Chinese Clergy maintaining services in places which foreigners have been obliged to leave temporarily?

Answer.—In the following places: Wusih, Soochow, Kinagwan, Haiakwan (Nanking).

Question 4.—What is the amount required in addition to annual appropriation for traveling expenses from stations to Shanghai?

Answer.—$500 gold.

Question 5.—What is the amount required for outfit allowances for missionaries who lost their personal effects?

Answer.—$1,500 gold.

Question 6.—What is the amount required for traveling expenses on account of anticipated furloughs?

Answer.—$12,000 gold.

Question 7.—What is the estimated loss of personal and real property?

Answer.—No reply received.

Question 8.—What do you think of the prospects?

Answer.—Await letter.

Diocese of Hankow.

Question 1.—What do you propose to do with missionaries pending return to Stations?

Answer.—Studying the language in Shanghai: the Rev. Nelson Gifford, the Rev. and Mrs. C. L. Pickens. Teaching in school for children of American missionaries in Shanghai, Miss Mary Dawson. Sailing for the United States early in May, Deaconess Ridgely, Miss A. B. Mundelein. Others have made no definite plans as yet.

Question 2.—What schools and hospitals are in operation?

Answer.—Boone Middle School, Wuchang; Central China University, Wuchang; Boys' School, Hanchuan; Majority of primary schools; Women's Department, Church General Hospital, Wuchang.

Question 3.—Are Chinese clergy maintaining services in places which foreigners have been obliged to leave temporarily.

Answer.—Except in Changsha, Chuchow, Simakeo. In these places, Chinese clergy have been threatened with death and driven out.

Question 4.—What is the amount required in addition to annual appropriation for traveling expenses from stations to Shanghai?

Answer.—$1,500 gold.

Question 5.—What is the amount required for outfit allowances for missionaries who lose their personal effects?

Answer.—No reply received.

Question 6.—What is the amount required for traveling expenses on account of anticipated furloughs?

Answer.—Furture developments very uncertain.

Diocese of Anking.

Question 1.—What do you propose to do with missionaries pending return to station?

Answer.—The following are leaving for the United States: the Rev. F. E. Lund and family, the Rev. E. J. Lee and family, Sisters of the Transfiguration, Dr. R. H. Meade and family, Dr. Harry Taylor and family.

The following are working at St. Luke's Hospital, Shanghai: Dr. McC. Fellows.

The following are teaching in Japan: Mr. and Mrs. L. Tompkinson.

The following are visiting Japan for the summer: Mr. and Mrs. B. W. Lanphear and Mr. R. M. Watts.

The following are studying the language in Shanghai: Miss Carolyn Davis, and Miss Lillian Harris.

The following have made no definite plans: the Rev. Amos Goddard, the Rev. and Mrs. Lloyd R. Craighill and family, the Rev. and Mrs. Vincent H. Gowen, the Rev. and Mrs. A. W. S. Lee, Miss Alice Gregg, Miss Margaret K. Monteiro, Miss Lila S. Stroman, Miss Bertha M. Beard, Miss Irene A. Gehrling, Miss Mildred S. Capron and Miss Blanche E. Myers.

Question 2.—What schools are in operation?

Answer.—St. Paul's High School, Anking; Boys' School, Cathedral Compound, Anking; Parish Schools at Wuhu, Kiukiang, Nanchang and nearly all primary schools.

Question 3.—Are Chinese Clergy maintaining services in places which foreigners have been obliged to leave temporarily?

Answer.—In all places with few exceptions.

Question 4.—What is the amount required in addition to annual appropriation for traveling expenses from stations to Shanghai?

Answer.—$1,000 gold.

Question 5.—What is the amount required for outfit allowances for missionaries who lost their personal effects?

Answer.—$12,000 gold.

Question 6.—What is the amount required for traveling expenses on account of anticipated furloughs?

Answer.—Cannot yet estimate accurately.

Question 7.—What is the estimated loss of personal and real property. No answer received.

Question 8.—What do you think of the prospects?

Answer.—It is just possible conservative party may succeed in organizing a government. If they are not successful, cannot return for years.

The DuBose Memorial Training School, Gift to The Emerald Hodgson Hospital.

A gift of $50,000 has been received by DuBose Memorial Training School, Monteagle, Tenn., from Mrs. Alfred Duane Pell, of New York, to build the Alfred Duane Pell Library, a memorial to her husband, who was interested in the school from its beginning and contributed largely to it. Mrs. Pell made the gift after a personal visit to the school. It is hoped that work may be started in the spring of 1928, and that endowment for books and maintenance may be found by that time. The building is to be in keeping with the main building recently completed, in Spanish mission style, of reinforced concrete, having two stories, a large reading room and assembly hall on the first floor, with officers and studies for five professors on the floor above.

The main building, completed two years ago, was the gift of a number of interested friends, one of the largest contributions coming from Mississippi. Aside from this the school is housed in six frame buildings, together with the office of the Field Secretary, the Rev. Dr. W. S. Claiborne.

Mrs. John A. Browne is completing the furnishing of the oratory, a part of the main building, which she gave as a memorial to her husband.

There are fifty men in the school now, and five instructors with their families. Professors from Sewanee, six miles distant, come over to assist in teaching. Eight of the students have their wives with them, and the school family also includes fifteen children. The students do most of the house and farm work on the place, the only paid servants being the cook and the head farmer. The men can earn about half their cost. The women are in charge of the main building, the children's school, the dining room and kitchen, the dairy and the poultry. In the summer every one "turns to" and cans fruit and vegetables for the coming year. The term runs from March 20 to December 20.

All the men go two by two to work in the twenty missions around the countryside, and the bishop and archdeacon call on them for other help.

The cost per man per year is $585, of which about $285 is received in work. The school's budget is about $29,000. There is only one endowed scholarship, of $5,000.

The men come from a wide range of the country, including the Northeast and the middle West, and are trained with the understanding that they return for work in the diocese from which they came. Exceptions now and then result from kidnapping practiced by "bandit bishops", though in at least one case amendment was made by paying the loser the sum he had spent his candidate's training.

It is the only school of its kind, training mature men for service with emphasis on rural work.

Outstanding needs of the institution are: endowment, five additional classrooms, and a barn which should cost $10,000. The school farm has horses, cows, hogs and poultry, and the question of their shelter, and protection of their feed is quite as urgent in its way as any other.

Another gift, to a nearby institution, is that of Mrs. L. C. Treadwell, of Memphis, who is building and endowing two wards for the Emerald Hodgson Hospital at Sewanee, in memory of her father and mother, Col. and Mrs. Snowden, of Memphis. It is hoped that the wards will be opened in June, which will give the hospital a total of seventy beds. It is the only hospital between Nashville and Chattanooga, one hundred and fifty miles, and serves a large mountain population as well as five institutions. About eighty per cent of its work is free. It is supported by general contributions and a small endowment. Its great need is for a $200,000 endowment, with provision for X-Ray equipment and two technicians. The hospital is training nurses for village and rural work throughout that region, mountain girls chiefly, such as those from St. Mary's School, Sewanee. A resident of that section says St. Mary's is the best piece of mountain work the church is doing anywhere.

Death of The First Priest Ordained in the Nippon Sei Kokwai.

Bishop McKim sends words of the death, on April 6, of the first priest ordained in the Nippon Sei Kokwai, the Rev. Masakadzu Tai. He was ordained deacon by Bishop Williams in 1884, and priest by Bishop Hare in 1891, when Bishop Hare made a visitation in Japan. Mr. Tai was the first Japanese pastor of Christ Church, Kanda, Tokyo, which he served for more than fifteen years. He was the first priest also at Sendai, in the District of the Tohoku, and for more than twenty years priest at Kawagoe. He retired from active service in 1924, at the age of seventy-seven, and has lived in Kawagoe since then.

In his younger days Mr. Tai was one of the most eloquent Christian preachers in Japan, and an aggressive and fearless evangelist. He was a soldier under the Shogun in his early years. When he became a Christian he was cast out by his family and ostracized by his friends, and was obliged to sleep in the open at Ueno Park. He became a Christian under the Rev. W. B. Cooper, who came as a missionary to Japan in 1873.

Mr. Tai was one of the most genial and friendly of men and was the best known and best loved citizen of the city of Kawagoe.

Laity Conference.

The 1927 Conference of the National Federation of Church Clubs of the United States will be held Friday and Saturday, May 6 and 7, at Briarcliff Lodge, Briarcliff Manor, N. Y. All laymen of the Episcopal Church are cordially invited to attend this Conference. The general subject will be the Work of the Laity.

Thursday evening, May 5, there will be an informal reception and social gathering. Both Friday and Saturday mornings at eight o'clock, there will be celebrations of the Holy Communion in the near-by parish churches. On Friday morning, May 6, the first session of the Conference will begin with a business meeting, followed by five-minute reports of the work of the Church Clubs. Brief addresses will be made on: The Work of the Laity in the Parish; In the Diocese; In the Nation. On Friday afternoon at 2:15 a brief address from the President of the Federation will be followed by reports from representatives of Laymen's Organizations. The Friday evening session will be devoted to discussion of cooperation among laymen's organizations.

Saturday morning reports will be made by representatives of women's organizations. These will be followed by a business session, during which officers will be elected and a place of meeting selected for the next year. Saturday afternoon will be devoted to social intercourse and outdoor recreation. Saturday evening the Annual Dinner of the Federation will be held at which the delegates will be the guests of the Church Club of New York.

For information apply to E. R. Hardy, Secretary, 7 East Forty-Eighth Street, New York City. For accommodations, apply to Briarcliff Lodge, Briarcliff, N. Y.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

The Diocesan Lenten Offering.

A most inspiring service was held in Christ Church, Roanoke, in the afternoon of Sunday, April 24; the occasion being the celebration of the Lenten Offering in all the Church (Sunday) Schools in the Diocese. The service began with a procession of representatives of schools in various parts of the diocese, led by the combined junior choirs of the three Roanoke churches and St. Paul's at Salem.

The Rev. J. Manly Cobb, rector of Christ Church, Blacksburg, had charge of the service as a member of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education; the Rev. Devall L. Gwathmey, of St. John's, Wytheville, being unable to attend. The lesson was read by the Rev. Roland J. Moncure, of St. Paul's, Salem, and prayers were said by the Rev. Messrs. G. Otis Mead, of Christ Church, and Alfred R. Berkeley, of St. John's, Roanoke. The Rt. Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, made the address.

Reports were heard from the various schools and each delegation rose. Two hundred and thirty-four persons represented seventeen schools outside of Roanoke.

The total offering amounted to $5,702.09, with several of the smaller points yet to be heard from.

Three banners were awarded. That for the largest total offering went to Christ Church, Roanoke, reporting $976.85. That for the largest offering per mite box went to St. Peter's, Altavista, with an average of $9.89. The banner for the greatest percentage of increase in total over last year was awarded to Trinity at Richlands, its increase being five hundred and fifty-four per cent. In this connection it is interesting to note that St. Peter's, Altavista, has been without a rector since January 1. Mr. W. C. Rierson is Superintendent of the Sunday School, and, obviously, is "carrying on". Mr. John A. Wilson, Jr., a Candidate for Orders, is in charge of Trinity, Richlands, under the Rev. H. H. Young, Dean of Associate Missions.

All of the offerings considered in the competition were devoted to Missions. Two of the schools reported their actual receipts were somewhat larger; the difference in one case going into a building fund and in the other instance being a special gift to Boys' Home at Covington, Va.

This is the first diocesan Lenten offering celebration held in Southwestern Virginia. It was considered a great success and will probably be repeated each year hereafter.

Parish House at Pedlar Mills.

The people of St. Luke's Church at Pedlar Mills, in Amherst County, the Rev. J. R. Ellis, rector, have begun the erection of a parish house. The building, twenty-four by forty feet, is to be on the east side of the church and will prove most useful in connection with the social activities of the community.

New Church at St. John's, Lynchburg.

When, in 1910, St. John's Church was organized in the Rivermont section of Lynchburg, with the Rev. George Floyd Rogers as rector, there were not sufficient funds for the construction of the entire plant that was deemed necessary. Therefore, the congregation erected the parish house first, fitting it up for use as a church. This, with additions and improvements, has since that time served as the house of worship.

The people, under the leadership of the Rev. Thomas M. Browne, the present rector, have now reached the point where they can proceed with the erection of the church itself. The work was officially begun on Sunday, March 13, when, after the confirmation service, Bishop Jett and the rector, led the congregation outside to the place where the new structure is to be located and the Bishop pronounced a special blessing upon the undertaking.

The church is to be of brick and limestone, with slate roof, and will cost about $86,000.

T. A. S.

GEORGIA.

Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop.

1871 Program Reproduced.

A unique and beautiful festival was held by the Church School of Christ Church, Savannah, Easter afternoon, when the program of 1871 was reproduced as nearly as possible. One of the older parishioners, Mr. J. Moultrie Lee, treasurer of the parish, found an old newspaper of that date describing the celebration fifty-six years ago, and suggested the idea of reproducing it for this year's anniversary. In the procession were the banners of many years back, and which have not been used in the more modern programs of later years. The original carols of the 1871 service were sung, and following the roll call of the present school and the presentation of the offering, the roll of the classes of the Sunday School of 1871 was then called. Out of the twenty-seven names of teachers listed, three of the teachers of that time stood when called, and sixteen other classes were represented either by descendants or collaterals, leaving only eight without representatives in this generation. At the conclusion of this roll call, the rector, the Rev. David Cady Wright, then asked all present who were pupils that year to stand and about a dozen in the congregation responded. It is recalled through the old newspaper that at that old celebration an offering of $300 was given for missions. This is an interesting fact at this time when the Church Schools are celebrating the Golden Jubilee of the Lenten offering. Not only does it anticipate that offering by six years, but the amount is noteworthy as it was given at a time when the South was barely recovering from the efforts of the War Between the States.

The offering made on Easter afternoon by Christ Church School was $627.15. This will be supplemented by an additional $100 or more from the House of Prayer School, a parochial mission of Christ Church. This is only the third annual offering of the mission. Christ Church School was founded by the Rev. John Wesley when he was rector of Christ Church in 1736 and part of 1737.

Class of Colored Nurses in Church School.

In the Church School of Christ Church, Savannah, Ga., there is a Colored nurses' class led by a communicant of St. Augustine's Colored Parish, and which is composed of nurses who bring some of the little pupils to the school. At the recent Easter Festival, when all of the other classes had presented their banners at the chancel, the Colored nurses' class was called, and one of the members marched up the aisle, carrying a banner, as the other representatives had done. This nurse has been employed for forty years in the family of the child she now attends.

H. B. H.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. H. St. Geo. Tucker, D. D., Coadjutor.

Recent Bequests.

By the will of the late Mrs. Nannie F. Johnson, of Richmond, $500 is left to Monumental Church, Richmond, and $3,500 to St. Peter's Church, Port Royal, Va. Mrs. Johnson also requested that her diamonds be sold and the proceeds, which will amount to probably $4,000, given to St. Peter's.

Organist For More Than Fifty Years.

Mrs. John R. Haile has been presented by the congregation of St. Paul's Church, Essex County, with a beautiful silver vase in appreciation of her services as organist which have extended over a period of more than fifty years. Mrs. Haile is still serving in that capacity.

Christ Church, Alexandria.

A beautiful Service of Lights was held Easter Sunday evening in Christ Church, Alexandria, the Rev. W. J. Morton, D. D., rector. The purpose of the service, which was under the auspices of the choir and the Young People's Service League, was to describe the chief events in the life of Christ as set forth in the Christian year. The music, the lessons, the prayers and the lighting of the church were all meant to bring home to the congregation the spiritual meaning of the great events of the life of Christ the Light of the World. Five of these were presented, the preparation for His coming, the Birth of Christ, the Epiphany, His sacrifice on Calvary and the Victory of Easter Day in His resurrection from the dead. The service was in charge of the Rev. Dr. W. J. Morton, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Jones, a student at the Seminary, who has charge of the Young People's League.

A handsome doctor's hood was recently presented to Dr. Morton by the choir. Dr. Morton received his degree from the Virginia Seminary in 1918.

The Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D., Presiding Bishop of the Church, held three services in Cunningham Chapel Parish in Clarke County (the Rev. B. D. Chambers, rector) on Maundy Thursday. A large congregation was present at the eleven o'clock service. Beside the parishioners, there were numbers from Winchester, Berryville, White Post and Front Royal. The afternoon service for young people drew a church full at Emmanuel Chapel, Boyce. The night service was held in the parish church, Millwood, when the Bishop conducted the meditation before the celebration of the Holy Communion.

The Mite-Box Fiftieth Anniversary raised the Sunday-school Lenten offering of Millwood and Boyce to a new high water mark, $500 being the amount contributed by the seventy scholars of these two schools. Pennies and nickles were few this year, as the young people were celebrating a golden anniversary, so converted their offerings from nickel and silver and presented them in gold.

BETHLEHEM.

Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Coadjutor.

Easter.

The Easter reports which have come to the diocesan office are splendid—the largest congregations—liberal offerings—more communicants than ever. At the Pro-Cathedral, Bethlehem, the Dean reports the largest congregations in the history of the parish on Easter Day. Bishop Talbot confirmed eighty persons on Easter Evening—the banner class. Several were unable to come to the class on account of sickness. There will be a second class shortly.

St. Peter's, Tunkhannock.

The Editor of the Bethlehem Churchman, the Rev. Mr. Neikirk, has been put in charge of this mission temporarily. On Easter Evening forty of his congregation, St. James, Pittston, and his choir were carried the twenty miles up the Susquehanna River to Tunkhannock by motors provided by his people and held a most inspiring service in the mission. Mr. Neikirk will go to St. Peter's twice a month.

The new Church, St. Martin's-in-the-Field, Nuangola, is completed and paid for, costing nearly $17,000. The rector of St. Clement's Church, Wilkes-Barre, the Rev. Mr. Groves, took his choir and a number of others on Easter morning to Nuangola and gave the congregation their Easter Communion. The new church was packed.

H. P. W.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The Coming Convention.

The one hundred and eleventh annual convention of the Diocese of North Carolina will be held in the Church of the Holy Comforter, Burlington, May 10 and 11. On the evening before, the Churchman's Club, embracing a membership of over a hundred laymen from Greensboro, Winston-Salem, High Point, Salisbury, Burlington and other places, will hold a dinner meeting in the Alamance Hotel in Burlington, when the chief address will be made by the Rev. Charles E. McAllister, of Newark.

Constructive Community Service.

One hundred and twenty-four persons have passed through the monthly clinics for crippled people now being held in the parish house. Five of a dozen such clinics have already been held. They are sponsored financially by the Kiwanis and Rotary Clubs and Dr. Thos. F. Opie, rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, is chairman of the joint committee in charge.

A free clinic to ascertain predisposition to tuberculosis was also held recently in the parish kindergarten and about thirty little boys and girls were given the test. The kindergarten is a community affair and numbers ninety-five attendants. A kindergarten mothers' club with forty-five members, representing all the churches in the city, has also been organized and is doing constructive service in the interest of the youth of the community.

LOS ANGELES.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Johnson, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. B. Stevens, D. D., Coadjutor.

Bishop Johnson's Condition.

The Rt. Rev. Joseph H. Johnson, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, though still seriously ill, is reported resting somewhat easier at the Las Encinas Sanitarium, Pasadena, Calif. The bishop, who is in his eightieth year, suffered a complete nervous breakdown last autumn, and at Christmas time it was feared he might not rally. He is slowly gaining now, and hopes are entertained that he may again be able to participate in the diocesan life.

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

Crusade Missions.

In connection with the close of the Bishops' Crusade in the Diocese of Michigan, successful missions have been held at Grace Church, Mount Clemens, by the Rev. W. F. Jerome; at St. Jude's, Fenton, by the Rev. George Backhurst; and at St. Paul's, St. Clair, by the Rev. L. P. Hagger. A feature of the last mission was the conducting of healing services under the auspices of the Guild of the Nazarene. A branch of the Guild has been organized to conserve the results of the mission.

Under the direction of Archdeacon Ramsay, Mr. William S. Duncan has been appointed lay-reader in charge of St. Bartholomew's Mission, Fordson, Mich.

McE.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, D. D., Suffragan.

General Theological Seminary.

Prominent men interested in the General Theological Seminary of the Episcopal Church, in Chelsea Square, met at luncheon recently at the Downtown Association. Mr. Frank L. Polk was host. The Very Rev. Hughell E. W. Fosbroke explained the situation and new needs of the School to carry out its progressive policies in training men for the ministry.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland D. D., Bishop.

Christ Church Cemetery.

Unless the city takes steps to maintain the historic cemetery of Old Christ Church, Philadelphia, in which four signers of the Declaration of Independence are buried, the entire place will become a ruin.

Parish officials made this assertion last week commenting on the dilapidated appearance of the burial ground. The Rev. Dr. Louis C. Washburn, rector of the church, said the membership of the parish is doing its best to maintain the cemetery and that the city might help.

In an editorial on Saturday, April 23, the Philadelphia Public Ledger says:

"Something will be done to end the neglect of the famous Old Christ Church burial ground. Philadelphia has been deeply moved by the revelations that many headstones are broken in this historic spot, that one of the side walls is in danger of falling on several graves and that other traces of ruin may be found in this cemetery. It is evident that the officers of the parish have done all they could with the inadequate funds at their disposal. They have borne most of the cost of the upkeep of the churchyard for two centuries. Additional help is now needed and will be available shortly. Councilman Hall is endeavoring to find some means whereby the city can extend aid. Patriotic societies are planning to join in the movement. Both as a matter of civic pride and for the sake of preserving for future generations this historic church and churchyard, any past neglect on the part of Philadelphia will be atoned for."

Episcopal Hospital Campaign.

A campaign to raise an additional $200,000 for a new dispensary for the Episcopal Hospital, Philadelphia, was started April 22 with a luncheon at the hospital for the team workers.

The campaign manager, Mr. George W. Wilkins, Superintendent of Galilee Mission, announced that $50,000 had already been pledged.

The old dispensary can handle only 100,000 persons a year and is inadequate. When completed the new structure will be able to handle 300,000 persons a year. The present dispensary was started many years ago and has served the entire northeastern district of Philadelphia, handling most of the thousands of cases emanating from the many textile and other mills in this section.

The Annual Meeting of the Mission Study Classes of the Diocese was held on Monday night, April 25, in the Parish House of Holy Trinity Episcopal Church, Philadelphia, at which Bishop Garland officiated, and the Rev. Chas. N. Lathrop, head of the National Department of Christian Social Service, was the principal speaker.

Memorial Tablet: Judges of the Courts of Common Pleas in Philadelphia on Sunday morning attended the unveiling of a bronze tablet in memory of Judge William H. Shoemaker in the Church of the Atonement, West Philadelphia.

Judge Shoemaker, who died in December, 1924, was a vestryman of the church for twenty-two years. The tablet is the gift of Mrs. Shoemaker.

R. R. W.

Trinity Memorial Church, Ambler, reports the largest Palm Sunday and Easter attendance in its history. The attendance during Lent, 1927, was nearly fifty per cent greater than the previous Lent. The vestry at their Easter meeting passed a resolution commending the work and activities of the rector, the Rev. William Filler Lutz.

WYOMING

Rt. Rev. Nat. S. Thomas, D. D. Bishop

St. Michael's Mission.

St. Michael's Mission has in the past entertained paying guests, from time to time, but the idea of making it durare held on Sunday. In the summer ing the summer months a so-called "Dude Ranch", came from the East with a new superintendent. Knowing what discriminating people who long for something different want, he determined to lose no time in using this attractive plant to this end.

For those who do not understand, St. Michael's is an Episcopal Mission and School for the children on the Arapahoe Indian Tribe. Here, during nine months of the year, about forty girls and as many boys, ages ranging from six to eighteen, live, learn and become, it is hoped, Christian men and women.

In St. Michael's Chapel, built of logs and with rustic pews, one faces the exerlasting hills, framed in a large glass window over the altar. To those of any Creed or no Creed the message of those mountains could not be lost. Here, during the winter months, two services are held on Sunday. In the summer, an evening service will be held.

With a complete equipment for housing families in separate cottages or individuals in the different units, all tastes can be easily suited.

St. Michael's is ideally situated one-half a mile from Little Wind River, which abounds in trout, and is in full view of three mountain ranges, the nearest being the Wind River Range of the Rockies, on which is the Continental Divide. Opportunity for riding through beautiful fields of wild flowers, along lovely winding paths by the river and over strange red hills, abound.

For those who desire greater distances to conquer trips into the Wind River Mountains themselves will be planned with picnics in some of the near-by canyons.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

The Cathedral Comes Into Its Own.

When the Cathedral of this Diocese was built at Garden City, by the generosity of Mrs. A. T. Stewart, in the late seventies of the nineteenth century, there were many to whom it seemed a grave mistake to locate the Cathedral and the Bishop's House twenty miles from the center of population, in a chimerical "city" that hardly merited the name of village. For years afterward, though the diocese was proud of having one of the most beautiful churches, and one of the earliest Cathedrals, in this country—admittedly an architectural gem of great beauty—yet its possession was felt to be in some ways a handicap, since it was so far removed, not only from Brooklyn, the only city in the diocese, but even from any village of real importance. Seldom could a congregation be gathered there that even approximately filled the church. Even at meetings of the Diocesan Convention there was room enough and to spare. But gradually the "only Cathedral town in America" grew in importance and in population, and the local congregation year by year increased in size. With the recent amazing growth of all the Long Island suburbs, Garden City and its environs have gained enormously in population. The Cathedral congregation is becoming one of the largest and most important in the diocese. In the latter part of Bishop Burgess' episcopate, the exterior of the church, including the spire, was thoroughly renovated at great expense. A year or two ago the organ, the largest and finest in this country when it was built, was completely renovated and its real beauty demonstrated anew. Recently new pews were installed in the church, arranged to occupy a larger floor area than the former ones, so increasing the number of seats. The old pews were placed in the crypt, and by means of microphones and amplifiers the service was made audible there. The efforts of the new dean, the Very Rev. George Paul T. Sargent, who was installed in January of this year, to bring the cathedral to its greatest usefulness in the surrounding community, are meeting with notable success.

Congregations have been larger than ever before. On Palm Sunday morning, when the Rev. Cecil Spencer Carpenter, M. A., Vicar of Bolton, England, preached, the church was crowded. On Tuesday in Holy Week, Bishop Stires confirmed eighty-six, and received one from the Roman communion. On Good Friday a thousand people by actual count, attended the Three Hours' Service. On Easter Day at the first communion service at seven o'clock, the church was filled; at nine there was another good congregation; at eleven there was not even standing room to be had in the church or in the crypt, and many were unable to get in.

The crypt has been renovated. Under the chancel and sanctuary, in the part of the crypt where the stewards and Bishop Burgess are buried, a chapel has been created, which can readily be made into a very beautiful one.

The Cathedral of the Incarnation, at Garden City, has, in short, developed into a real center of religious influence in the large and growing community in which it is located. At the same time, through the greater ease of transportation, it is also assuming a more important part in the life of the diocese. The center of population on Long Island moves steadily eastward; the empty "Hempstead plains" of a generation ago are a veritable "Garden City" now, and are becoming a residential area for thousands. The wisdom of Bishop Littlejohn is being vindicated. The Cathedral is coming into its own.

Largest Number of Easter Communions.

At St. Paul's, Flatbush, the number of Easter communions was larger than ever before. At six-thirty two hundred and fifty received the Sacrament; at seven-thirty, four hundred and eighty; at nine (the children's communion), five hundred and twenty; and at eleven, out of an attendance of eleven hundred, four hundred and twenty more received communion, a total of sixteen hundred and seventy communicants actually receiving during the day. I venture to say that this number was not exceeded any where in the diocese. Beside these wonderful congregations through the morning, there were six hundred at a children's service at four, and two hundred and sixty at night.

Four Parishes To Celebrate 225th Anniversary.

Plans for the celebration of the two hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the four colonial parishes of Jamaica, Flushing, Newtown and Hempstead, are maturing. Each parish will have its own local observances, and the Diocesan Committee appointed by Bishop Stires has prepared a program for a joint commemoration and thanksgiving. The date selected for this is Tuesday, May 3, and the place Jamaica—the oldest of the four parishes. There will be a dinner in Grace Church Parish House, at which the Bishop of the Diocese, the Rt. Rev. Ernest M. Stires, D. D., will preside. Guests of honor will be the Presiding Bishop, the Most Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D., and a representative (not yet designated) of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, whose first effort was the founding of the parish in Jamaica. The senior Church warden of each of the four parishes will speak. After dinner there will be a United Service of Thanksgiving in Grace Church. The rector of the parish, the Rev. Rockland T. Homans, will be assisted by the rectors of the other churches—the Rev. George F. Taylor of St. George's, Flushing; the Rev. Edward M. McGuffey of St. James', Newton, and the Rev. John S. Haight of St. George's, Hempstead.

The Presiding Bishop, Bishop Stires, and the representative of the S. P. G. will speak. The object of the service is two fold: first, a thanksgiving for the establishing of the Church in these counties; second, an emphasis on our missionary responsibility, as those who are themselves the beneficiaries of missionary effort.

The Rev. Frederick W. Norris, D. D., rector of the Church of St. Matthew, Brooklyn, who has been in the hospital for several weeks, is reported to be making steady progress toward recovery.

The Rev. Edgar M. Thompson, who has been a hospital patient since before Christmas, has been better recently, though not yet able to leave his bed.

C. H. W.

TENNESSEE.

Rt. Rev. Thos. F. Gailor, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J. M. Maxon, D. D., Coadjutor.

Bishops Guests of Churchmen's Club.

The Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Gailor, the Rt. Rev. James M. Maxon, the Rt. Rev. Theodore D. Bratton, Bishop of Mississippi, and the Rt. Rev. James R. Winchester, Bishop of Arkansas, were guests of honor at the dinner given by the Churchmen's Club on April 20. Outstanding laymen made brief talks.

The dinner was the first held by the club, which was organized following the recent Bishops' Crusade. The Churchmen's Club is the expression on the part of the men of the Episcopal parishes of a desire to unify the forces of their Church, in order that all of the men of all of the parishes, through one organization, may direct their efforts toward the advancement and growth of the Church as a whole.

The executive committee back of the movement is eager to have the membership include all the men of the Church. Every male member of the Episcopal Church in the Memphis territory is eligible for membership. There are no dues and no assessments.

Plans for definitely directing the efforts of the club in a way that will be productive of the best results were discussed.

Easter at The Gailor Memorial.

Bishop Gailor preached at the morning Service on Easter Sunday in St. Mary's Cathedral (Gailor Memorial), Memphis.

In addition to the celebration of Holy Communion at eleven o'clock, there were one with two early celebrations one with Bishop Gailor as the celebrant, and the other with the Very Rev. Israel H. Noe, dean of the Cathedral, the celebrant.

In addition to these services, there was a Children's Communion, with full explanation of the same, at 9:30 A. M., and an evening service, when Dean Noe continued his series of sermons on "Modern Day Living Prophets", discussing the book, "The Message of Sadhu Sundar Singh", by Streeter, the subject being, "A Modern St. Paul".

ARIZONA.

Rt. Rev. Walter Mitchell, D. D., Bishop.

The Splendid Work of Three Institutions.

Church people unfamiliar with St. Luke's three institutions in Arizona would be gratified by learning a little about them, for they represent one of our Church's most welcome efforts. The concise report for 1926-27 may be obtained from Bishop Mitchell's office or from St. Luke's Home, both in Phoenix. The Rev. Bertrand R. Cocks was recently the recipient of much attention on the twentieth anniversary of his coming to Phoenix as Superintendent of St. Luke's Home and General Missionary in the District of Arizona. The entire community voiced its enthusiasm for him.

Lured by the golden flood of Arizona sunshine, thousands of people, both sick and well, have gone there. Twenty years ago, Bishop Atwood, touched by the needs of the unfortunates among

(Continued on page 22.)

Family Department

April.

1. Friday.
3. Fifth (Passion) Sunday in Lent.
10. Sixth (Palm) Sunday in Lent.
14. Maundy Thursday.
15. Good Friday.
16. Easter Even.
17. Easter Day.
24. First Sunday after Easter.
25. Monday. S. Mark.
30. Saturday.

Collect for Second Sunday After Easter.

Almighty God, Who hast given Thine only Son to be unto us both a sacrifice for sin and also an ensample of godly life; Give us grace that we may always most thankfully receive that His inestimable benefit, and also daily endeavor ourselves to follow the blessed steps of His most holy life; through the same Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

Collect for St. Philip's and St. James' Day.

O Almighty God, Whom truly to know is everlasting life; Grant us perfectly to know Thy Son Jesus Christ to be the way, the truth and the life; that, following the steps of Thy holy apostles, Saint Philip and Saint James, we may steadfastly walk in the way that leadeth to eternal life; through the same Thy Son Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

For the Southern Churchman.

Easter.

Francelia Leonard.

We lay Him in a tomb
Built by a rich man,
There, in the perfumed gloom
We seek Him eagerly:
That living, loving face
So full of peace and grace
Shining so regally!
And of the glistening angel at the door
We question longingly: "Ah, no more
Shall we behold Him face to face"?
And he makes answer, "Look within,
Here are the symbols of His grace,
Here are the emblems of His earthly strife
But would you find Him? Linger not!
Follow along the road to Emmaus
Among your fellow men on the Mount,
And there, with Him and them
Ascend into the Vision of the Son of God
Brother of men"!

The Veil as Gossamer.

Between Friday night and Sunday morning, nineteen centuries ago, the most momentous event in the history of the world occurred. We may differ as to the nature of the event; we cannot but agree as to its world-transforming power. On Friday night the disciples and the Holy Women resigned themselves to the victory of all-conquering death. They could think of nothing but how to provide for rendering the last duty of love to the dead body of their Master—and out of that grave came, unexpectedly, unlooked for, the life and power that changed the band of mourners into a joyous and a triumphing host. Death and the grave have ever been the end: here they are the glorious beginning.

Now on this Easter morning let us try humbly and reverently, conscious of the mystery encompassing us which no eye can pierce, to realize what happened. St. Mark tells us that He appeared first to Mary Magdalene—with all the old love and old tenderness uncongealed by the chill tomb. Her name on His lips—Mary—has rung through the centuries as a trumpet proclaiming that death cannot halt the onward march of the host of God.

Surely this woman, to whom His first word was spoken that made sable death luminous, cannot but capture the imagination.

She came from Magdala on the shore of the Lake of Gennesaret. We must not confound her with the woman who is called a sinner. Early in our Lord's ministry she met him. She was a poor, neurotic woman, the victim of delusions, shunning the haunts of men; tormented by alternate frenzy and brooding silence. A modern physician has diagnosed her condition as that of "a woman whose personality has been disintegrated or disrupted, and whose mind was a battleground of forces released from her lower self, all control gone". It was the condition which was described in the picturesque language of a primitive age as being possessed by demons. That her case was grievous is shown by the number of demons that were supposed to haunt her. Then suddenly she comes in touch with Jesus. The dynamic power of His personality, the mesmeric force that He irradiated, scattered her gloom and brought the streams of healing vitality into her soul. There are multitudes of strange people in the world who still sit credulous in the dark believing that the legs of a table can be vitalized and set gyrating round a room; but when you tell them that a glorious personality such as Jesus could vitalize a nervous wreck into new life, they look at you with pitying eyes. That is what Jesus did to Mary of Magdala. He told her of the Father, and how the world was not a demon-haunted graveyard, but the shrine of His love and His mercy. Fear died within her. "I too am a daughter of God and He loves me," she said to herself one day, and it was if she had risen from the dead. The change was such that they said it was as if seven demons had left her. And her heart clung to Jesus for He had snatched her as from the charnel-house.

When you realize that story you will understand what was in the heart of Mary as she stood with the Holy Mother over against the Cross and watched. He had saved her: and now she was powerless to save Him. She watched through all the six hours; and when Mary of Magdala, Mary the Mother of Jesus, and Nicodemus laid Him in the grave, she watched still. When the stone was rolled across the entrance and the tomb was sealed, she felt as if her own heart lay buried there.

When the Sabbath was over she was the first at the tomb with the spices. She would at least have that comfort—the comfort of ministering the last rites of love. The empty tomb mocked her. The others go away but she lingers. Again and again she comes to the little window and looks into the dark tomb. There is nothing there. She turns round hearing the question, "Why weepest thou"? and lo! a man confronts her. "Whom seekest thou?" He asks, and she thought He was the gardener. There is a depth of grief which numbs all the faculties. The eye blinded by weeping, and the ear dulled by the ache of the heart, cannot see, cannot hear aright. The depth of her grief is shown by her failure to recognize . . . "Mary," He says, lingering on the word. With the joyous cry, "My Master", she throws herself down at His feet. It is the ecstasy of love born out of despair. . .

And as you see it, remembering what lay behind: the soul of the woman reborn: the life that owed everything to Jesus . . . you understand that adoring cry . . . And you will never be able to say "My Master" as Mary said it on this or any other Easter Day until you too have had that living touch with Christ which means a life risen from the dust. It is only those who know what it is to be forgiven of God, to be made to live by His Spirit, for whom an eternity of wonders has dawned, hearing His voice saying: "Son and Daughter of God!"—only they can hail the Lord of Life on Easter morn with the fire of adoration in the heart and the rapture of praise on the lips. When we remember what the Lord has wrought: then shall we praise and adore!—Dr. Norman MacLean, D. D., in "Easter Sermons".

A Letter From a "Refugee" to Shanghai.

Something of what is involved in leaving home and work at short notice and going as a "refugee" to Shanghai is shown by a letter from Miss M. A. Bremer, of St. Faith's School for Girls, Yangchow, District of Shanghai, written early in February. She says Yangchow was so quiet and peaceable that it seemed fairly silly to have to leave their comfortable home and friendly surroundings; nevertheless, conditions in the interior were growing worse, and if the Cantonese were actually to carry out their melodrama, it was as well to be in Shanghai. The school was closed for the China New Year holiday when the decision was made.

"We told the servants we should have to stay in Shanghai for a time and that the place would be in their hands. They are such loyal souls! Our cook gave me one look and remarked in firm tones, 'put that wood away'—our year's supply, weathering outdoors. Things went steadily with hardly a moment of anything but a mechanical, 'This could stay; it could be replaced. That must come with me; I should miss it if—'

"Of course more than the mere things was the heart-breaking situation of leaving the people, the work. But under pressure of time we went on and by six o'clock our steamer trunks, suitcases and ourselves were out of the compound. The servants had worked like beavers, the amah had wept but had not stayed her hand, and we turned our backs on the place that means so much more than house or home or possessions.

"The Standard Oil launch, loaned by their Chinkiang office, was awaiting us at the East Gate and it needed only a few hours to make the trip down the Canal and over the Yangtse. We waited also in their residence quarters for the midnight train, which the five of us boarded and by six-thirty next morning we were in Shanghai. We were assigned to stay at St. John's University with one of the families in residence. There seems little likelihood at present of opening girls' schools next term, and the enforced stop may be even longer.

"One thing seems clear, the Moscow Reds are doing their best to break up the whole social structure of the country. There are Moderates who may gain increased influence and we can only hope for them to do so. One can see the struggle between these two in many places and in many situations. . . .

"So far as local feeling in Yangchow is concerned, there was a meeting of about thirty prominent men in the city who sent a representative to our mission to beg us not to leave, assuring us that they would provide a special launch at any time needed. The whole city, at present, seems friendly. The question is what will take place when the agitators arrive?

"Therefore the Consul at Nanking, the Bishop, and all in authority are doing their utmost to have all precautions taken. We may be able to go back in a month's time and find the place intact. And it may be impossible to stir until after the summer is passed."

For the Southern Churchman.

At Break of Day.

Lillian F. Lewis.

The orb of day in splendor rose
To herald Judah's Easter morn,
To bid dawn's diamon'd rays disclose
A tomb bereft; but not forlorn,
For angels voiced its word of cheer:
Behold, Christ lives! He is not here!

Although so strongly had been sealed
The sacred sepulchre latewhile,
Adoring mourners there revealed
In place of tears now solaced smile:
Their Lord in triumph was arisen;
Unbarred His recent three days prison!

In ecstasy the tidings sped
Thus early brought hearts bowed in grief:
Removed the stones—He was not dead.
What joy! what promise! what relief!
He rose with healing in His wings,
The Sun of righteousness, earth sings.

The Law of Compensation.

We shall never forget the indelible impression made on our boyish mind by the first reading in the Latin class of the immortal Fables of Aesop. And especially of the incomparable story of "Juno and the Peacock". Most of our readers are familiar with it. Juno was the goddess of the birds, and one day the peacock, rustling in all its glory of wanton coloring, appeared before Juno with a bitter complaint. Displaying her tail and marvelously beautiful featherage, she reminded the goddess of her raucous voice, comparing it with the mellifluous song of the little drab nightingale. And this was Juno's answer, "It is not the habit of the gods to bestow all excellences upon one individual".

This is true of creation and of the way of God with man. Compensation is nature's law only because it is God's law in life. He takes and giveth as He pleaseth. In the parable of the talents the Lord of the servants gives ten and five and two talents apparently without considering the previous claims of the men on whom the trust was bestowed. The reward of the faithful keeper of the five talents was exactly like that of him who had the ten. And the terrible lot of the keeper of the two talents was simply the result of his misunderstanding of the Master's orders. He failed because he was unworthy of the trust, not because his two talents did not bring to the master other ten or other five. God bestows according to His own free will and grace.

The history of mankind is full of marvelous examples of what men have accomplished under the greatest handicaps for God and for the world. Some of the greatest characters of human history had to struggle with tremendous obstacles and in the struggle made themselves immortal. The impressionist school of art in Germany depicted our Lord as most hideous in His outward appearance, simply because the prophet has said, "He hath no form nor comeliness and there was no beauty in Him that we should desire Him"; and that wholly without slightest confirmation in the Gospels or from any contemporaneous source.

But to other great leaders of men this is strictly applicable. Alexander the Great, according to competent testimony, was both a hunchback and an epileptic. Paul according to Chrysostom, was "an unsightly dwarf", yet he touched the stars; Shakespeare was a cripple; so were Scott and Byron and Lord Kelvin; Nelson and Napoleon were men of small and unimposing stature; Homer and Milton were blind poets; and that greatest of all composers, Beethoven, was so deaf that he could not hear the heaviest thunderclap; and some of the greatest preachers of the ages were men of bodily weakness and infirmity, sometimes even deformed.

Always and everywhere we find this law of compensation. Did they perhaps achieve what they did because they first overcame their tremendous handicap? There is comfort and inspiration in this thought for men and women of high ideals, but whose path is one of shadows and trials. We should "carry on", as the English said in the late war, no matter what are the hindrances; trusting in God, go forward in the way of His pointing and do with your might what your hand findeth to do. Thus God gets all the glory; we are but His poor instruments. Martin Luther used to say: "God can hit a straight blow with a crooked stick." And time and again the history of the world and the Church has proved the truth of this saying of the great Reformer. Paul prayed long and ardently for the removal of the thorn in his flesh, but the remaining thorn was of greater help to him than its removal could ever have been. "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint."—Christian Observer.

God's Faith In Us.

We hear much of trusting God. We are exhorted to "have faith in God", to "trust in the Lord", and these exhortations are enforced by examples of heroes of faith the record of whose lives not only adorn the pages of the Holy Book but all the pages of worth while history. The faith required of us is the basis of all achievement. Without faith God cannot be pleased because nothing will be done; all will be kept "hidden in a napkin"; there will be no preparation for crops, no sowing of seed, no social organization, no industry, no anything. "Have faith in God."

God has faith in us. Of this we hear too little. We need to think much of God's trust in us that we may strive to be worthy. All belongs to God. The world is His with all things therein. We are His. All our latent or developed powers are His. Nothing is or can be held by any man in fee simple.

No sensible man invests his all in an enterprise or places it in the hands of persons without confidence that his investment will be wisely and honestly handled. God, who is infinitely wise, shows His faith in man by entrusting all His "goods" to him. He reserves nothing. With implicit faith He delivers His goods to "each according to his several ability", to one five talents, to another two, to another one, simply saying, "occupy till I come". This transforms a relationship that is essentially that of bond servant into that of steward—one honored with a trust.—Exchange.

For the Southern Churchman.

The Quest.

Conrad H. Goodwin.

Be this thy radiant goal,
Found in love's chief intent;
To claim some kindred soul
As friend—so mould its bent.

Then multiply the quest:
All flesh as spirit see;
Cleanse sense with motive blest—
Love men exultantly.

But why this task so bold?
Why trust that honor lifts?
Or think that virtues hold—
And take fresh wounds for gifts?

Real worth, faith-child, make sure;
For spirit's leap despoils
Though passions subtly lure—
Look! conquered flesh recoils.

Full trust is true restraint;
My soul in thine, sense-free;
Love masters all complaint—
Friendship's eternity!

Give all thyself—love's goal—
To feed the spirit's flame!
Till flesh, as templed soul,
Shall praise His Holy Name.

"However Little Strength Rouse That Little."

"If I were asked," said an American Bishop recently, "how a parish, however small or poor, would be most likely to flourish, I would say: let it begin to exert itself in the great work of the Propagation of the Faith. However meager its resources or little its strength, let it rouse that little, such as it is, and, zealous for souls, let it strive by fervent prayer for the missionaries and by methodical contributions to relieve the poverty of the missions; these very efforts will react upon the parish by unifying and enlarging it."

Many ministers are finding this out by experience. Living strictly to itself, a parish soon "goes to seed". It loses that sense of Catholicity and solidarity which belongs to it by right. Isolated it ceases, in a sense, to be part of that Divine Body of Christ, each member of which is in the closest sympathy with every other.—Exchange.

For the Young Folks

The Shooting Star.

Last evening, when my mother dear
Was rocking me to sleep,
My drowsy eyes I opened wide
For just a farewell peep.

The stars were smiling down at me
With gentle, silver light,
When suddenly a little one
Went flying through the night!

All in a moment it was gone,
Before I could say, "Oh"!
I wondered where 'twas flying to,
And if it had to go.

I think that 'way off in the sky,
Some place had not a light,
And God said to the little stars,
"Who'll go and make it bright"?

And then this little willing star,
Before the rest had stirred,
Cried, "I will go"! and off he flew,
Without another word.

For the Southern Churchman.

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

Jesus On the Lake-Shore.

M. L. G.

Jesus stood on the Shore of the Lake of Galilee. He was making a fire of coals, and when it burned brightly He began to cook breakfast, fish and bread. Out on the lake, through the morning mist He could see a boat, and He knew that Peter and Nathanael and John and others of His friends were in it, and that they had had a night of hard work, fishing. They would be cold and hungry, and ready for a good fire and breakfast.

"Boys," He called out, "have you caught any fish?"

The men in the boat heard that cheerful call coming out to them; but they did not know who stood on the shore. "No!" they shouted in answer.

"Throw the net on the right side of the boat and you'll find," the voice came out to them again.

And so they did, pulling the net back full of great fishes. They could not draw it again into the boat, so full it was, so they came slowly to land, dragging the net after the boat. John knew whose work it must be that had turned a poor night's work into wonderful success. "It is the Lord!" he said to Peter.

Then Peter left his mates, for he must be out of the boat, struggling with the waves to get to Jesus. Oh, to see Him again, to know anew that the terrible death on Calvary had not been all, to be assured again that he was forgiven for his denial of this Best Friend!

The others came more slowly in the boat, and after all Peter had to go back and draw the net to land. But his heart glowed with joy and wonder and awe.

"Come and get your breakfast," said Jesus, and His own hands took the bread and fish and gave it to them. Yes, this was Jesus, the very same. He had been through death, but that had not changed His care for them. His love for them. The very same Jesus!

After the breakfast the Lord took back PePter into the company of those who were to be witnesses of Him, and Peter went through a long ministry, to death for Jesus, and never denied Him again.

Timmy's May Baskets.

By Margaret Ward.

"May is coming!" said Timmy to Aunt Lu. "And May is for Maying. My mother told me a story of when she was little. It was about the time you found the little wind flowers in time for May Day."

Aunt Lu nodded. "Up along the stone wall in Mr. Brown's south pasture. They are always early there. But the best May flower is the trailing arbutus, and the latest, pinkest ones, grow up in the pines near Miss Electa Appleby's."

"Then we'll look there first," Timmy decided. "But how did you manage about the baskets?"

"We made ours out of paper," Aunt Lu told him. "Mine were generally green to match the leaves, but your mother liked pink."

"I want both," announced Timmy. "Will you find the paper and show me tonight?"

So Aunt Lu bought rolls of pale pink and soft green crinkly paper—much prettier, she told Timmy, than the shiny kind they had when she was little—and a tube of paste. And that night Timmy screwed his face into a knot and found that his fingers were all thumbs, trying to make baskets.

Timmy hated to "try and try again". He liked things to come easily. "Couldn't you do the baskets and I go with you to get the flowers?" he asked.

"No, sir!" said Aunt Lu. "If they're your baskets, you must help."

After a while Timmy found that if he was careful enough, the paste didn't smear, and when he pulled the top edge of the paper into a frilly ruffle he didn't need to tear it.

"I see that trying is useful," said Timmy, "but I shall be glad when we get to picking flowers."

"There is a try there, too," Aunt Lu warned him. "The trailing arbutus will die if you pull up the roots. You must cut it with scissors—Oh, so carefully! I couldn't take you unless you promised."

So Timmy promised, and so on the last afternoon of April, he and Aunt Lu climbed the hill to the pine wood near Miss Electa Appleby's and gathered their flowers. And next morning, the minute Timmy woke up, he called Aunt Lu, and they began filling the baskets.

When the baskets were done, Aunt Lu packed them all in the big market basket. "I'll carry them and you can run and hang them on the doors," she said.

At Jack Brown's house Aunt Lu stopped. "Going to leave one here?" she asked.

"No," said Timmy, "'cause he has daffodils in his yard. I like Jack, but he has daffodils for his May."

At the next house, which was little and shabby, Timmy took out a basket.

"Who lives here, Timmy?" asked Aunt Lu.

"I don't know that," returned Timmy, "but I think this house needs a basket."

And when the gay little baskets were all hung and they had started home for breakfast, Aunt Lu declared, "You know how to hang May baskets better than your mother and I did".

"Well, I didn't have to try. I seemed to know they must all find May right outside."—Selected.

For the Southern Churchman.

The Shark and the Automatic Alarm Clock.

Louis Tucker.

Once upon a time there was a man who invented an automatic, waterproof alarm clock, that did not have to be wound up, but only shaken up, to make it keep running, and that went off at the set hour every day with remorseless regularity. He lived in Havana, and when he got a working model made, he took a sloop to go to Key West and take the railroad to Washington for a patent; but a hurricane came up the Florida channel that day and the sloop went to the bottom.

Next day a man, who was fishing at Key West, heard a chime of bells under the boat at six o'clock in the morning; so he went home and told about it and they put him to bed because they said he had fever and was delirious. At six o'clock that afternoon three Negroes sitting on a Key West wharf heard a chime of bells under the wharf; and they were so astonished that one of them fell overboard and was never seen any more. At six o'clock the next morning a chime of bells was heard in the forecastle of the revenue cutter, which made the men think the boat was haunted and gave the officers a great deal of trouble; for all the men tried to get shore-leave at once. At six o'clock that afternoon a chime of bells was heard close to some bathers on the other side of the island, which was a good thing, because they came ashore; and it was not heard any more for some days around Key West. But out at the Dry Tortugas the lighthouse keepers thought they must certainly be going mad, for they heard a chime of bells every morning at sunrise and every evening at sunset for three days.

From that time on the whole Florida reef knew of the bells. At sunrise and sunset they were heard, sometimes in one place and sometimes in another; and all the fishermen were sure it was mermaids or else a spirit alarm-clock which woke them from this dream of life and told them when to die. Several did die when they heard it—just curled up and took to their beds and died. Nobody could think of any explanation. Most men who had not heard it made sure it was not so, but when the silvery bells did really and actually chime in the water near them, it scared them twice as much as if they had believed.

At last a man with no brains and yellow leggings, who was a stock-broker when he was at home, caught something on the end of a tarpon line which was not a tarpon. It was very big and heavy and for an hour and a half nobody could see what it is; for it rushed and pulled and sulked and would not come up to the top of the water, and the man was very nearly tired out before he managed to see that it was an enormous shark. At last he gave up his pole and reel to a fisherman whom he had hired; and between them they tired the thing out and drew it into shallow water and there another fisherman harpooned it. It broke the fishing line at that but the harpoon held; so they got it caught at last; and just as they dragged it up on the sand a chime of silver bells went off, and they looked around and saw that the sun was setting.

The fishermen were scared out of seven senses, but the yellow-legged man with no brains had never heard the ghost-stories about the silver bells and so he said the noise was inside the shark. Nobody believed him, but he insisted so hard that, at last, they got an axe and a torch from the boat. Now you can cut a shark into steaks and chops and he will live, but if you hit him hard on the tip of the nose with an axe it gives him concussion of the backbone and he dies at once. They killed this one and they lit the torch —for it gets dark very soon after sunset on the Florida Reef—and cut him open. Inside they found some buttons and the brass buckle to a belt and a waterproof, automatic alarm clock.

The yellow-legged man took the clock because it was his shark; and he had it examined and patented and sold the patent for a great deal of money and gave the fishermen five dollars apiece. As for the white fishermen, they understood now what caused the ghost-bells; but the Negro fishermen said it was real ghosts and would not believe this explanation at all; and perhaps you will not either.

The Feather Bed Boat.

I like to go to grandma's house
And sleep in her feather bed;
I play I'm a boat on the sea afloat
With the waves clear over my head.

The bed's four posts are the rockbound coasts,
The patchwork quilt is the sail,
And the wind and rain on the windowpane
Are a wild nor'easter gale.

I weigh my anchor and hoist my sails
And I set my course due west,
And away I go with a ho! heave ho!
In search of a treasure chest.

A treasure chest with a Spanish crest
On the rusty, iron-bound lid;
Hid deep in the sand of a foreign land
By the terrible Captain Kidd.

On the shining shore of a tropic isle
'Neath the Southern moon's bright beams,
I end my quest, for I find my chest,
And it's just chock-full of dreams.

And so there I stay until break of day
And the eastern sky grows red;
And I open my eyes as grandma cries,
"Wake up, you sleepy head".

—Alleine Langford.

The Bear That Ran Away.

"Oh! It's getting so dark, Ted! I wish we were home!"

"Well, there's nothing here to hurt us. But let's hurry, Sue, and we'll get home in time for supper."

"I'm too tired to hurry. Oh, Ted, I wish we hadn't fastened our sled to Mr. Smith's bobsled. It seems hours since we untied the rope and started to walk back home."

"We'll take this short cut through the woods. I wish I could pull you on the sled, but there's too much brush."

"I'm so tired, Ted, that I'll just have to rest."

"It will soon be really dark and we ought to keep on. But if you're so tired, lie down on the sled and I'll cover you with my sweater."

After a few moments, Ted was shivering with cold and said, "Can't you go on now? I'll leave the sled here for I can't pull it through the brush. I'll get it tomorrow."

Again they started, but found it hard going on account of the thick underbrush. After a time, in the growing darkness, Ted stumbled against something, and was surprised to find it was the sled. He knew, then, that they were lost, and had been walking in a circle, as people often do when lost in a forest. He did not want to frighten Sue still further, so he said: "I think we'd better stay right here and rest. Some one will come and get us before long."

"Stay here! In these dark woods!" wailed Sue.

"Don't cry! I know we're not far from home, but I can't see the path. You lie down again, and I'll cover you up warm."

Sue was so tired that in a few moments she was asleep. Ted wished he had not coaxed her to try a ride behind Farmer Smith's bobsled. No one at home had seen them start, so would not know where to search for them.

The wood was full of noises, astir with life. "Just squirrels and rabbits!" Ted told himself. It grew colder, and he jumped up and down and clapped his hands to warm them.

As the moon shone dimly among the trees, Ted, snuggling close to Sue, felt himself going to sleep. Then he heard a crackling of bushes, and in a cleared space a few yards away, he saw a great shaggy animal with a swaying, hanging head. "A bear!" he thought, and his heart beat wildly. In great fear, he gave a shout that startled the still woods. Instantly the bear rose on his hind legs and moved around as if he were dancing, but soon dropped to all fours and shuffled quickly away among the trees. Sue had not wakaned at Ted's shout.

After a time, in spite of his fear, Ted fell asleep and did not waken until the shouts of searchers roused him. His first words were: "I saw a bear, dad! But he didn't see us."

"A bear! You were dreaming. There's been no bear in these woods for fifty years."

"I wasn't dreaming!" Ted insisted.

After leaving the woods, they met several strange men, and one asked: "Have you seen a bear about here? A trained one escaped from his keeper in Brent, and we've seen his tracks leading this way."

"Dad! Did you hear?"

"Yes, Ted, it must have been a real bear, not a dream one."

"And a trained one! When I shouted, he must have thought he was ordered to dance. But, anyway, I'm glad he didn't find us. Would you have liked his company, Sue, if you had wakened to see him dance?"—Selected.

Sewing Aches.

Jessie sat down by her mother to sew. She was making a pillow-case for her own little pillow.

"All this?" she asked in a discontented tone, holding the seam out.

"That is not too much for a little girl who has a work-basket of her own," said her mother.

"Yes," thought Jessie; "mother has given me a work-basket, and I ought to be willing to sew," with that she took a few stitches quite diligently.

"I have a dreadful pain in my side," said Jessie in a few minutes. "My thumb is very sore," she complained. "Oh, my hand is so tired!" was the next. Next there was something the matter with her foot, and then with her eyes, and so she was full of trouble.

At length the sewing was done. Jessie brought it to her mother.

"Should I not first send for a doctor?" asked her mother.

"The doctor for me, mother?" cried the little girl, as surprised as she could be.

"Certainly, a little girl so full of pains and aches must be ill, and the sooner we get the doctor the better."

"Oh, mother," said Jessie, laughing, "they were sewing aches. I am well now."—Exchange.

Spring and Summer.

The alder by the river
Shakes out her powdery curls;
The willow buds are silver
For little boys and girls.

The little birds fly over,
And oh, how sweet they sing,
To tell the happy children
That once again 'tis spring.

The gay green grass comes creeping
So soft beneath their feet,
The frogs begin to ripple
A music clear and sweet.

And buttercupts are coming,
And scarlet columbine,
And in the sunny meadows
The dandelions shine.

And just as many daisies
As their soft hands can hold,
The little ones may gather,
All fair, and white, and gold.

Here blows the warm red clover,
There peeps the violets blue;
Oh, happy little children,
God made them all for you.

—Jessie May Davis.

Gold and Brown.

"Have you asked Mary Watson to our party?" asked Elizabeth Warren of her Cousin Marjorie.

"Oh, yes," Marjorie answered. "And hasn't she the prettiest brown curls you ever saw?"

"Pretty curls," answered Elizabeth, "but they are golden curls and not brown."

Maybe it is the way the light shone on them," said Marjorie, who never liked to quarrel about things.

"Oh, no," replied Elizabeth, "I know golden curls when I see them, and I just saw Mary Watson, and I asked her to the party too; so I guess she'll be sure to come."

"I hope she will," Marjorie couldn't keep from saying, "and then you'll be sure to see that her curls are brown."

That was all they said, for two cousins just can't quarrel very hard when they are all ready to have a party together. The party was to be at Marjorie's home, but both little girls had done the inviting and prepared for the fun. Because it was so close to hallowe'en night it was to be a hallowe'en party, and the boys and girls were all going to wear fancy costumes, with gay caps like witches' caps and little cloth masks to hide their faces.

Marjorie's Aunt Anne met them all at the door and led them to their places for the march that was to be the first of the party games. Aunt Anne, who was a wonderful musician, was going to play a march, and all the make believe witches were to march all around the room, through the big hall, and back to the playroom, where the games were to be. In the playroom there were long strings of apples to bite off of the string. Marjorie and Elizabeth had helped to fix them so they knew all about it, but the others didn't; so when the march was over Aunt Anne was going to ask every one to take off their masks and witch cloaks so they could play better. Marjorie could hardly wait for them all to come in, and as Aunt Anne would bring them into the room she felt very queer, not knowing who was who and just having to guess about her very best friends.

"It's queer," she whispered to Elizabeth, for as she and Elizabeth had dressed together they knew each other, "to be in a room full of people that you don't know."

"Of course we know them," Elizabeth giggled in reply, "but we just don't know which is which nor who is who."

But pretty soon they began to think that there was something very queer about it sure enough, for when they went to take partners for the march there was one little witch too many.

"I can't think who it is," Marjorie whispered to her cousin; "but you go on and march with her and I'll stay behind by myself because I ought to be polite, as it is at my house."

So Elizabeth and the odd little witch marched all around together.

"Are you Mary Watson?" Elizabeth asked while they were marching through the lighted dining room.

"Yes," whispered the odd girl, "and you are Elizabeth, and I'm so glad you asked me to the party."

"Yes," Elizabeth agreed, "and would you mind letting me see your hair just a minute."

Mary lifted her cap and let Elizabeth look at the shining mass of golden curls, then she asked, "Why"?

"Oh, nothing," said Elizabeth, "only I have a joke on my Cousin Marjorie; she thinks your hair is brown." And Elizabeth felt quite self-important over being right. She could hardly wait to find Marjorie after the march was over. In the big playroom when Aunt Anne said, "Now everybody take off his mask", there was so much guessing and laughing and shouting over mistakes that it was some time before Elizabeth thought again about finding Marjorie and saying: "See here, Mary's curls are golden just like I said they were. Now, isn't that a joke on you?"

That was exactly what she was going to say. She had it all made up beforehand; but there was so much laughing and moving about that she forgot it again and went on playing games.

Then after awhile Aunt Anne told them all to stand in a long row and when she called their names to come up and get the plate she had to hand to them. On the plate were little chicken sandwiches and frosted cookies and a cup of hot chocolate. It looked so good that it made you glad when your name was called.

But the funniest thing happened when Aunt Anne called Mary Watson's name. Instead of one little girl going up there went two, one with shining golden curls and the other with darker brown ones.

"Why, why," gasped Aunt Anne, "are you twins? And surely you are not both named Mary."

"Oh, yes, we are," they laughed; "but we are not twins; we are cousins, and we don't live in the same town—"

Then Mary with the golden curls said: "I am visiting Brownie." And Mary with the brown curls said: "Goldie is visiting me, and it was nice of Elizabeth to ask her to the party."

Then every one laughed, and Marjorie and Elizabeth said: "Isn't that a joke on us? We were just about to quarrel over something, and we were both right."

"And both wrong too," said Marjorie thoughtfully. "And don't you think those are nice nicknames, Goldie and Brownie? We'll have to call them that now."—Christian Advocate.

The Little Red Hen's House.

When Annabel awoke from her nap, she could not think where she was. Then she remembered how she had run into the potato dug-out to hide. Before she could call out, the hired man had shut the door. She called until she was tired; then she had fallen asleep.

Annabel jumped up and felt her way in the dark cave to where a door opened. This time, when she pounded with both hands, it came open at once.

The sun was shining outside, but it looked strange beyond the door. The girl did not know that she had come through a tiny air door in the side of the hill instead of the entrance.

There was no path to follow, but Annabel pushed her way through weeds that grew as high as her head. She walked on and on, until she came to a hedge.

As Annabel was visiting in the country, she did not know whether she ought to go through the hedge. So she walked on until she came to a stream that stopped her path. Then she slipped through the hedge.

On the other side she soon got into a dark wood. By this time she was very tired and hungry. She remembered that they were to have had a tea-party, with peppermint candy, that evening at the farmhouse. When she thought about it, she sat on a stone to cry.

Suddenly Annabel heard a small voice which seemed to say, "Oh, me! me"! She looked about and saw a tiny chicken running all about. It was so frightened that the girl had no trouble to catch it.

"I'll find your mother," she promised the chick, forgetting all about her own troubles.

Hunting through the bushes, she caught sight of the smallest red hen she had ever seen. The little hen had six other chicks following her.

"I have one of your chicks!" called Annabel.

But the hen, who had no idea she had lost one of her babies, went as fast as she could down a furrow, with Annabel after her.

The little red hen soon came out of the wood and hurried across a stretch of green grass to the door of a tiny red and white bungalow. It looked so much like a candy house that Annabel was not surprised when she drew near and got a whiff of peppermint.

Just then the little hen looked back and saw the chick in Annabel's hand. She suddenly flew at her as if to peck her.

Then a girl came running across the lawn, and Annabel saw that she had come from a red and white bungalow, painted just like the little one.

"Dear me!" cried the girl to Annabel; "did my banty hen lose a chicken? And did you find it?"

"Yes, and I don't care if she did try to peck me," laughed Annabel; "that little chick is happy. I was lost in the woods, and she led me to this place."

"Aren't you the girl visiting at the Wallace place?" asked the girl. "I'm Eva Blair, and we live on the next farm. When I have shown you our home, I'll take you home."

So Eva explained that the banty chickens were hers, and that the cunning red and white chicken-house had been a birthday present.

"It looks like candy," laughed Annabel; "and smells like it, too."

"That spearmint, growing in the grass," explained Eva.

"To think," cried Annabel, "of a little red hen's chicken showing me my way home and finding me a new friend! Helping the little chick made me help myself."—Christian Sun.

True Economy

is practiced by the wearers of

BERRY CLOTHES.

Dependable; stylish; attractive; yet they cost no more.

Come and see

O. N. Berry Co.

RICHMOND, VA.

White Leghorn hens and males now half price. Thousands of eight-week-old pullets. Also baby chicks and eggs. Trapnested, pedigreed foundation stock, egg bred 27 years. Winners at 20 egg contests. Catalog and special price bulletin free. I ship C. O. D. and guarantee satisfaction.
GEORGE B. FERRIS 893 Union Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Real Estate Loans

REASONABLE RATES AND TERMS

SOUTHERN BOND AND MORTGAGE COMPANY, INC.,

627 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

FOR SALE.

FOR SALE: PIANO IN GOOD CONDITION. Terms to Sunday Schools, or readers of this paper left to buyer. Address "W-3", care of Southern Churchman.

BOARDING—WASHINGTON.

MISS BOULDIN, AT 1346 PARK ROAD Court, Apartment 208, Washington, D. C., would like transient guests.

PIPE ORGANS.

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, INC., Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices. Particular attention given to designing organs for memorials.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 209 East Franklin Street. Richmond, Va.

CHURCH LINEN.

PURE IRISH LINEN at wholesale prices for Church Guilds, Rectors and others. Samples on request.
MARY FAWCETT.
115 Franklin St., New York City.

ROOMS—WASHINGTON.

VISITORS TO WASHINGTON ACCOMMODATED with comfortable rooms in private home. Reasonable rates. Private bath. Mrs. W. A. Masker, 2751 Macomb Street. N. W.

OLD ENVELOPES.

WANTED—Old Envelopes from letters written between 1845 and 1874. Do not remove the stamps from the envelopes Highest prices paid. GEORGE HAKES, 290 Broadway, New York.

STAINED GLASS

JAMES POWELL & SONS (Whitefriars), Ltd., London, England—Stained Glass. Designs and estimates submitted on receipt of full particulars. Distributor ADRIAN A. BUCK, 665 Fifth Ave., New York City.

TRAVEL.

SOUTHERN LADY, RETURNING TO VISIT relations, England and Continent, for summer, will chaperon small party. References Virginia and England. Address "Chaperon", care of Southern Churchman.

FOR RENT.

TO RENT FOR SUMMER MONTHS, furnished home in Shenandoah Valley, near Winchester. Cool brick house, large lawn. Address Mrs. E. S. Meade, White Post, Va.

—CATHEDRAL STUDIOS—
Washington London.

Church Embroideries and Vestments, Silks, Fringes, Gold thread, Stoles with crosses from $7.60, Burse and veil from $15, Surplices and exquisite Altar Linens, Church vestments imported for the Churches free of duty.
MISS L. V. MACKRILLE,
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington, D. C. D. C. Telephone Cleveland 52.

SITUATION WANTED.

A YOUNG ENGLISHMAN, WITH AN OXFORD background, recently come to this country, wishes a position for the summer vacation as tutor, or as traveling guide to party visiting England. Reference may be made to Dean Metcalf, or Dr. Lewis of the University of Virginia. Address "30", care of Southern Churchman.

LADY OF REFINEMENT AND CULTURE desires position as companion, or mother's help. Experienced in caring for invalids. Address Mrs. L. T. Anderson, Raleigh Apartments, 326 Harrison St., Richmond, Va.

CHURCH WORKER.

INFORMATION DESIRED CONCERNING an opportunity in Church work where the services of a trained and educated layman are needed. No objection to traveling. Subscriber is at liberty to refer to the Bishop of the Diocese. Address "S-4" care of Southern Churchman

A WOMAN OF REFINEMENT AND CULTURE, qualified to make a home, experienced in college life of young women, has traveled in this country and abroad, desires a position as companion at home or to travel. References exchanged. Address "F. C.", Southern Churchman.

HELP WANTED

WANTED, AT ONCE, TWO CONGENIAL WHITE women to assume entire charge of home, cooking, laundry, etc., in small family at Warrenton, Fauquier county, Virginia. Excellent references required. Room with private bath. $30.00 per month. Address "No. 4" care Southern Churchman.

WANTED, IN A SOUTHERN ORPHANage, a gentlewoman to take charge of the boys' department, also the linen room. Address "C-4", care of Southern Churchman.

Deaths

GILL: On Thursday, April 21st., at her home in Petersburg, Va., in the eighty-first year of her age, MARGARET widow of German B. Gill and mother of Rev. J. M. B. Gill. Funeral from St. Paul's Church Friday the 22nd. Interment in Blandford Cemetery.

MRS. ANNIE S. POWELL.

Entered into rest at her home in Wytheville, Virginia, MRS. ANNIE S. POWELL. Mrs. Powell was before her marriage Miss Annie Jones, of Orange, and was widely known throughout the state.

On the morning of April 5, she fell asleep to awaken in that sunlight that knows no shadow, that morning that has no waning. To those who loved her a precious memory has taken the place of a beloved presence. Like a tired child when the day is far spent, she closed her eyes to open on the sight of Him who is our Light.

Full of years, she could look back on life's duties faithfully performed with a calm and peaceful mind a rare courage that had faced bravely the many duties and vicissitudes of a long and useful life. Staunch and loyal to her own, doing her duty always, she was a loving and devoted mother, kind and sympathetic to her friends and neighbors. The world has been blessed by her noble presence; she has left behind sweet and tender memories enshrined in many hearts. She has passed into the Great Beyond, not changed but glorified into the clear morning of that country where:

"Those Angel faces smile,
Which we have loved long since—
And lost awile."

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 16.)

them, started St. Luke's Home for the treatment of tubercular patients. Ten years ago St. Luke's in the Desert was opened at Tucson, where Mr. E. C. Clark has been superintendent, and more recently, St. Luke's in the Mountains, at Prescott, where at an altitude of 5,300 feet among the pines the patients are cared for during the hot summer months. Moving day is an event, with a special coach and baggage car.

St. Luke's Home has seventy-seven beds; St. Luke's in the Desert, thirty-two. There is a waiting list, and perhaps there would always be, no matter how much the plants were enlarged. The report mentions definite extensions which are needed, however, as well as endowed beds and increased support. The maximum charges are less than cost, and a large proportion of the work is free, as many of the patients would otherwise have no hope.

One cannot argue effectively about the needs of sick people; one either knows them, or one does not. All Church people who have been touched even remotely by the pathos of tuberculosis and the hopeful search of its sufferers for restored health, may well be proud of the Church's work in Arizona, and grateful to the faithful servants, superintendents, physicians, nurses, staff and general friends, who alone, humanly speaking, make it pos-

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA.

The Rt. Rev. J. M. Horner, D. D., Bishop.

Calvary Church, Fletcher.

Easter at Calvary Church, the Rev. Clarence S. McClellan, Jr., rector, was marked by several notable services attended by congregations that taxed the seating capacity of the old church to its limit. At six A. M. among the graves in the churchyard and before a large floral cross the "Dawn Service" was held with "Reveille" sounded over the graves by Scout Edwin Allison, of Asheville. The rector gave a short Easter message, read ancient Easter Prayers and the Easter Story from the "Interwoven Gospels", and the choir and congregation standing by the graves sang old Easter Carols. Then the graves were adorned with Easter flowers. At six-forty-five there was Holy Communion in the church, at ten the Church School Easter Festival, at ten-thirty an Easter Egg Hunt on the church lawn and at eleven o'clock the Festal Service with the rector as preacher and the Rev. Ira Swanman assisting.

On Tuesday evening, April 19, the Rev. and Mrs. Clarence Stuart McClellan, Jr., opened Calvary Rectory to the public for a program of old mountain songs and ballads from the mountains of Western North Carolina. Bascom L. Lunsford, collector of mountain songs, and a musician of prominence, gave an evening of these old mountain melodies with banjo and violin accompaniment. The rectory was filled with an audience numbering several hundreds of people, including many of the mountain folk, who came in from the coves and gaps to hear Mr. Lunsford's program. Several mountain women and men sang songs with violin accompaniment at the close of the evening. This program marks the first in a series of interesting musicals to be given in Calvary Rectory during the spring and summer. These evenings are designed for the community and much interest is being shown in them.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D. Bishop.

"A Greater Vestry."

At the Easter election of Christ Church Parish, Williamsport, the Rev. Hiram R. Bennett, rector, a "Greater Vestry" of forty-five members was elected. Fifteen members compose the canonical vestry, and there are fifteen other men, with fifteen women also. Great things are expected of this new body.

Gifts To St. Stephen's, Harrisburg.

St. Stephen's Church, Harrisburg, received several gifts at Easter, which were blessed on Easter Day by the rector, the Rev. Oscar F. R. Treder, D. D. Among them are a pair of five-branched candle-sticks, designed by Messrs. Gorham, of New York, presented by Mrs. Lillian Sawyer in memory of her husband, the late Rev. Rollin Alger Sawyer, for many years rector of the parish. Mrs. Sawyer will supply the candles for these candelabra. The Chancel Chapter of the parish has presented the church with a beautiful altar service book and two Prayer Books, all bound in full turkey morocco and suitably inscribed. St. Stephen's Rectory has recently been repaired and renovated. Mrs. T. Reckhill Smith, for many years a faithful and generous communicant of St. Stephens' Harrisburg, who in her lifetime gave two communion services of solid silver to the parish, recently died and in her will made provision for a gift of $500 for the church. She also left a fine silver tea service to the Woman's Auxiliary of the Parish.

News Paragraphs of Interest.

The vestry of St. James' Parish, Lancaster, Pa., through their rector, the Rev. Clifford Gray Twombly, D. D., have presented All Saints' Church, Paradise, with a processional cross for the use of the new vested choir, the present vicar of Paradise being a descendant of the Rev. Thomas Barton, one of the first rectors of St. James', an old Colonial parish.

Sergeant Gault, in charge of the Williamsport, Pa., Recruiting Station, was recently baptized by the rector of St. John's, South Williamsport, the Rev. Herbert Warren Hunter. Sergeant Gault was formerly an Orthodox Jew, son of Solomon and Rebecca Gault. He will be presented for Confirmation on the next visitation of the parish by Bishop Darlington.

On Easter Even, a little shrine erected in the baptistry of Christ Memorial Church, Danville, Pa., was blessed by the rector, the Rev. A. G. E. Jenner. The shrine is a memorial of the late James Jacob Clemens. The crucifix and candlesticks are the gift of the widow, Mrs. Annie T. Clemens. The shelf was made by Mr. Ent Keller, and the silk dossals were provided by a faithful communicant of the parish.

Record-breaking attendance at all services marked the Easter observance at St. John's Church, York, the Rev. Paul S. Atkins, rector. At a largely attended meeting on Easter Monday a rising vote of thanks was unanimously extended the rector for the remarkable record the parish had attained under his leadership. A growth in the communicant list from five hundred to eight hundred and an increase in the parish budget from $12,000 to $20,000, the meeting of all obligations to the field work fund and the eradication of a long standing indebtedness of $20,000 were among the accomplishments stressed in a resolution presented by the Senior Warden.

A. A. H.

The wilderness of Jericho and the Garden of Gethsemane—these witnessed His two most grievous struggles, and in these He triumphed wholly over the worst and most awful assaults of the enemy of souls; but during no part of the days of His flesh was He free from temptation, since otherwise His life had been n otrue hnman life at all, nor would He in the same measure have left us an ensample that we should follow His steps.—Selected.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Edgar V. W. Edwards, formerly minister-in-charge of St. Paul's Mission, Graniteville, S. C., and neighboring missions, has accepted appointment to be Rural Missionary in Monroe, Escambia and Baldwin Counties, Alabama, with addresses at Atmore, Ala., effective about June 1.

The Rev. Arthur P. S. Hyde, who has been serving Holy Rood Church, New York, as locum tenens since the resignation of the Rev. Dr. G. A. Carstensen in December, 1926, has been elected rector of the parish.

At the request of Bishop Brent, who is in charge of European Churches, the Rev. James Sheerin, of New York, has accepted the rectorship of the American Church, Munich, Germany, and will begin his duties there June 1. His address after that date will be Salvator Platz, Munich, Bavaria. Mr. and Mrs. Sheerin will sail from New York for Antwerp by the Arabic on May 14.

The vestry of St. Mark's, Mauch Chunk, Pa., have elected the Rev. Walter C. Roberts to be rector emeritus of the parish.

The Rev. E. C. Moore, formerly assistant at the Detroit Episcopal City Mission, has accepted a call to become rector of St. Timothy's Church, Jackson, Mich. The change was effective April 15.

The Rev. William Page Dame, rector of Memorial Church, Baltimore, has accepted the call to be rector of Christ Church School, Middlesex County, Virginia, and expects to take up his work there about the first of July.

After May 15, the address of the Rev. A. E. Pawla will be changed from Gillette, Wyo., to Thermopolis, Wyo.

The Rev. J. H. McCurdy has resigned the parish of St. James', Birmingham, Michigan. His place will be taken by the Rev. W. L. Forsyth, formerly assistant to the Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott, at the parish of Grace and St. Peter's Baltimore. Mr. Forsyth expects to take charge June 1.

The Rev. Edwin S. Hinks, of Elk Ridge, Md., has accepted a call to Grace Church, Cazenova, Va.

The address of the Rev. Reginald F. Hall is changed from Lorton, Va., to Beltsville, Md.

The Rev. Allen Evans, Jr., formerly rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Winchester, Mass., has accepted a call to Trinity Church, Hewlett, L. I., N. Y., and takes charge May 1.

The Rev. Stanley T. Boggess, formerly minister-in-charge of St. Barnabas', Dunsmuir, and St. John's, McCloud, Cal., has accepted a call to be rector of St. Paul's, Walla Walla, Wash.

The Rev. John L. Dwyer, formerly rector of Trinity Church, Shelburne, Vt., has accepted a call to St. Luke's Church, Fall River, Mass.

The Rev. T. Gordon Luke, formerly minister-in-charge of Holy Innocents', Oakland, Calif., has accepted the call to be rector of St. Mark's, Yreka, Calif.

ORDINATIONS.

Mr. Harold R. Onderdonk, of the Church of the Atonement, Tenafly, was ordained Deacon in that church by Bishop Stearly, on Tuesday in Easter Week. He was presented by the rector, the Rev. Elwyn H. Speer, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. William S. Claiborne, D. D., of Sewanee. The Rev. Aubrey H. Derby, an old friend, said the litany while the Epistle was read by the Rev. J. R. Lynes, D. D., of St. Paul's, Englewood.

A number of clergy from neighboring parishes were present to assist in the service and the large congregation completely filled the church.

Mr. Onderdonk made his preparation for Deacon's Orders at the Du Bose School, Monteagle, Tennessee. He plans to go on in his preparation for Priest's Orders by studying at Columbia University and the General Theological Seminary.

In Christ Church, Corning, New York, on Saturday, April 2, the Rev. John W. Mulder was advanced to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. David L. Ferris, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Western New York.

He was presented by the rector of the parish, the Rev. George B. Kinkead. The litany was said by the Rev. G. Paul Musselman, of St. Clement's Church, Buffalo, the Rev. Lewis E. Ward of St. Thomas' Church, Bath, acted as deacon, and the Rev. Edward B. Jermin of St. Peter's Church, Dansville, acted as sub-deacon. Bishop Ferris preached the sermon while the Rev. Edgar T. Pancoast of St. Mary's Church, Salamanca, was the Bishop's chaplain.

The Rev. Mr. Mulder, who was a former pastor of the First Congregational Church, Corning, has been placed in charge of Zion Church, Avon, where he has been serving his diaconate. He was graduated from the College of Worcester with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and from Yale Divinity School with the degree of Bachelor of Sacred Theology.

Harry Ross Greer, of Atlanta, Ga., a senior in the General Theological Seminary, New York, was ordained a deacon Sunday, April 24, in Christ Church, Seventy-First Street, west of Broadway, where he will remain after his graduation in June as assistant to the Rev. Dr. John R. Atkinson, the rector. The officiating Bishop was the Rt. Rev. Henry Judah Mikell, Bishop of Atlanta.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Percival S. McIntyre died in New York on Wednesday, April 11. He was a native of Savannah, Ga., and was graduated from the Seabury Divinity School, at Faribault, Minn., in 1887. He was ordained a deacon in 1886 and advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Whipple the next year. He was attached to the Cathedral in Topeka, Kans., for the next four years, and later held charges at Grace Church, St. James' Church, and the Church of the Redeemer in Chicago and as rector of St. Stephen's Church at Woodlawn, N. Y.

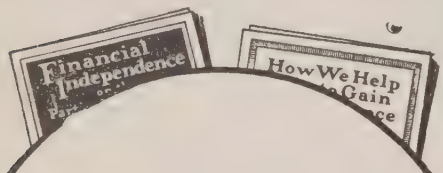
The Bell Book and Stationery Co.

ENGRAVED WEDDING ANNOUNCEMENTS
VISITING CARDS.
Fifth Street between Broad and Grace
RICHMOND, VA.

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.

Richmond, Virginia

THE SAFE EXECUTOR

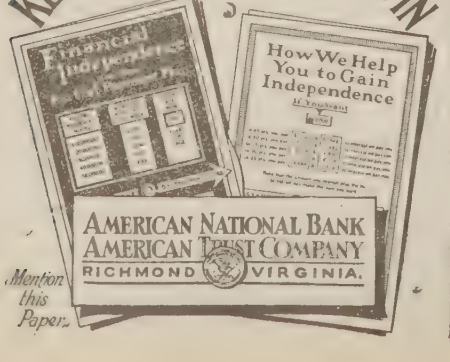


Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock $1,000,000.00
Surplus earned $1,500,000.00
Held in trust $30,000,000. (plus)



EARN $25 WEEKLY SPARE TIME
Writing for newspapers, magazines. Experience unnecessary. Details FREE. Press Syndicate, 1303 St. Louis, Mo.

YOU ASK ANOTHER

If I deposit $3.45 per week in your Income Building Plan, how long will it take me to get $10,000?" 25 years—and only deposit $4,484.00, the balance is interest earned by the plan. Make up your mind as to the amount you should save and ask us what you may expect from 5 per cent compound interest by The Plan and how it works.

KEEP YOUR INCOME COMING IN
Ask for Booklet on Income Building Plan

Mention this Paper

INCORPORATED 1882

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,398,462.62

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer
J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm . P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

A Complete Store of shops and --- more --- an Institution

Miller & Rhoads

"THE SHOPPING CENTER"

Richmond - Virginia

QUALITY CHICKS

Chicks from winter laying, farm raised, mature stock, S. C. W. Leghorns, R. I. Reds, Barred Rocks, White Orpingtons, Anconas, Black Jersey Giants, White Wyandottes, White Plymouth Rocks, Black Minorcas, Pekin and Indian Runner Ducks; $15 per 100 up. Live Delivery guaranteed. Parcel Post prepaid. Hatching eggs $8.00 per 100 up. Several breeds rabbits. Circular free. Shipments will be made from one of our nearest associated hatcheries.

Glen Rock Nursery and Stock Farm, Ridgewood, N. J.

Cuticura Soap

Is Pure and Sweet

Ideal for Children

Sample Soap, Ointment, Talcum free. Address: Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. J, Malden, Mass.

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC., 308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.

QUALITY—SERVICE

The South's Best Book Store

HUNTER & CO.

105 E. Broad Street
Richmond, Va.
Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen.
Prompt and Reliable Service.

SYDNOR & HUNDLEY'S STOCK REDUCTION SALE

Complete Suites and Hundreds of Occasional Prices at

25 Per Cent, 33 1-3 Per Cent and 50 Per Cent Reductions.

7th at Grace — Richmond, Va.

A NATIONAL CHURCH PAPER FOR ALL THE FAMILY.

Southern Churchman

1835 DOMINUS FRUSTRA NISI

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., MAY 7, 1927. No. 19.

GOD blesses still the generous thought,
And still the fitting word He speeds,
And Truth, at His requiring taught,
He quickens into deeds.

—Whittier

IN THIS ISSUE

THE PULPIT SERMON
By the Reverend W. S. Claiborne, D. D.,
Archdeacon of Sewanee, Tennessee

THE FUTURE OF CHRISTIANITY IN CHINA
By the Reverend Kimber H. K. Den

EDUCATIONAL

The Virginia Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded.
Established 1892.
For terms and information address
MISS M. GUNDRY.

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-eighth year of this School for Boys opened September 15, 1926. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. Hoxton, B. A., Principal.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The Requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA,

prepares boys at cost for college and university. Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountians of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., Rector.

St. Hilda's Hall

Charles Town, W. Va.
Near Harper's Ferry.

Chevron School for Girls. Episcopal Junior College—four year' High School and two years' College Courses. Elective Music, Art. Business, Athletics. Limited numbers.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

The One Hundred and Fourth Session
Opened Wednesday, Sept. 15, 1926.

For catalogs and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria Va.

The Hannah More Academy

The Dioceasan School of Maryland, Founded 1832. A Country School for Girls—fifteen miles from Baltimore. College Preparatory and General Courses, Music, Art, Supervised Athletics.

Principal, LAURA FOWLER, A. B., Reistertown, Maryland.

The Divinity School of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia
42nd and Locust Streets.

Graduate Courses in Theology, Privileges at the University of Pennsylvania.

Address: The Rev. G. G. Barlett, D. D., Dean.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY, Publishers,
112 North Fifth Street, - Richmond, Va.

LEWIS C. WILLIAMS.....President
REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Associate Editor
MISS FENTON WILLIAMSON News Editor
MISS SUSAN C. COOKE, Circulation Dept.
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00 Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful.....	4
Editorials	5-6
The Pulpit of the American Church	7
The Future of Christianity in China —The Rev. Kimber H. K. Den	9
Christianity and the Community— The Rev. R. Cary Montague....	11
Meeting of the National Council and Departments	11
Church Intelligence	13
Family Department	17
Children's Department	19
Personal Notes	23

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

St. Stephen's College

An Undergraduate Church College for men.

There are four curricula—Classical, Literary, Scientific and Social Scientific.

For tution $250.00 a year; for a room furnished and heated $150.00 a year; for board in hall $250.00 a year; a total of $650.00.

Address: BERNARD IDDINGS BELL, President

Annandale-on-Hudson, N. Y. (Railway Station, Barrytown, N. Y.)

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesvile; St. Margaret's School, Tapphannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.)

(About gifts or bequests, address the Dean, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR BOYS.
Richmond, Virginia.

Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 60 pupils.

RATE $700.00.

Reduction to sons of Clergymen, teachers and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., Headmaster.

St. Agnes' Episcopal School

Alexandria, Virginia.

Boarding and Day School for Girls on Braddock Heights overlooking the Potomac River.

On the interurban trolley and bus lines between Washington and Alexandria.

Athletics and open air life; sixteen-acre campus. Primary, Intermediate, General and College Preparatory Courses. Music.

For information apply to THE PRINCIPAL.

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University.

For catalog address

The Dean.

HOBART COLLEGE, Geneva, N. Y

A Church College for men, founded 1822. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

STUART HALL

STAUNTON, VA.

1843 1926

FORMERLY VIRGINIA FEMALE INSTITUTE

Oldest girls' school in Virginia—Episcopal. Location healthful and beautiful. General and college preparatory courses. Loyal alumnae find here for their daughters the familiar atmosphere of culture and refinement, combined with modern equipment and teaching methods. Supervised outdoor sports. For catalogue, address MRS. H. N. HILLS, A. B., Box P.

St. Albans

The National Cathedral School for Boys

Thorough Preparation for Leading Universities splendid equipment, unexcelled location on Mt. St. Alban overlooking Washington.

Eight years' course. Athletics for Every Boy.

Address:
WILLIAM H. CHURCH, Head Master,
Washington D. C.

National Cathedral School

A Home and Day School for Girls.

The Bishop of Washington, President Board of Trustees. Jessie C. McDonald, M. S., Principal. Helen L. Webster, Ph. D., Academic Head. Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

GUNSTON HALL

A Girl's School in the National Capital. Founded on the soundest principles and highest scholastic standards. Under Church influence. Prepartory and academic courses. Two years graduate and college work. Music, Art, Expression, Domestic Science. Athletics. Richard N. Mason, Business Manager.

MARY L. GILDERSLEEVE.
MARY B. KERR, B. A., M. A., Prins.
1930 Florida Avenue, Washington, D. C.

FOUR POINT STAR SUMMER RANCH

ST. MICHAEL'S MISSION
WIND RIBER INDIAN RESERVATION
ETHETE, WYO.

Open from June 15th to September 15th.

Bring your family and friends to healthful Wyoming. (Opportunities for fishing, horseback riding, and motor trips to many of America's most beautiful spots, including Yellowstone Park, abound. Good home table with plenty of fresh products from our own ranch gardens and dairy. Here a unique vacation may be spent in the delightful atmosphere of St. Michael's Mission. Write for further particulars. Prices moderate.

A. ABBOTT HASTNIGS, Warden.

ST. MARY'S SCHOOL

Raleigh, N. C.
A Junior College
Rev. Warren W. Way, A. M., Rector.

An Episcopal School for Girls. Four years High School and two years College Courses. Accredited. Special courses: Music, Art, Expression, Home Economics, Business.
20 Acre Campus-Gymnasium-Field Sports
New, Indoor, Tiled Swiming Pool
Advent session opens September 15, 1927. For catalogue address A. W. TUCKER, Business Manager, Box 19.

WINSTON-INTERNATIONAL
SUNDAY SCHOOL SCHOLARS' BIBLES
SELF-PRONOUNCING
Contain specially prepared Helps to Bible Study and many Attractive Illustrations suitable for children.
Send for Illustrated Catalog
THE JOHN C. WINSTON CO., Publishers
American Bible Headquarters
355 Winston Building Philadelphia

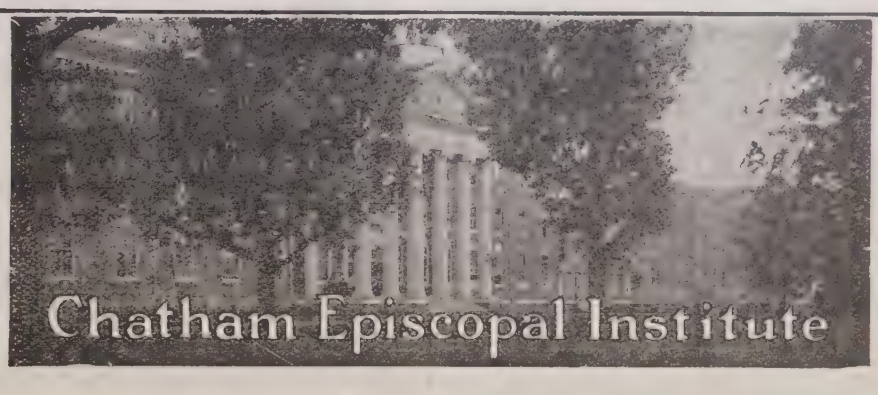
THE INN

Located in Historic
CHARLES-TOWN, WEST VIRGINIA
In the beautiful Shenandoah Valley. Two hours from Washington on the National Highway. Large shady lawn; home atmosphere; Southern cuisine. Address

THE INN,
Charles Town, West Va.
Mrs. John P. Briscoe.

SOLD BY A SHUT-IN

Ladies All-Silk Hose; full fashioned chiffon, extra sheer, fine quality, No. 175. Colors: Atmosphere, Amberette, Shadow, Darling, Gun-metal, White, Moonlight. Three pair for $7.05; one pair, $2.35.



Men's Hose, No. 300; twelve strand, extra close knit, pure thread silk with lisle top. Colors: Black, Navy, Gray, White, Cordovan, Champagne, Russian Calf. Four pair for $4.00; one pair, $1.00.

These hose are guaranteed to please you. I pay the postage.

E. P. BROXTON,
Rte. 2, Blythe, Ga.

Richmond Trust Company

3%
ON SAVINGS.
BANKING—TRUSTS—REAL ESTATE
Capital $1,000,000.00
Main at Seventh Richmond, Virginia.

Chatham, Virginia

College preparatory school for girls. Certificate privileges. Also two years of advanced academic work in English, History, Psychology and Sociology. Special courses—Music, Art, Expression, Home Economics. Modern equipment. 15-acre campus. Swimming pool. Golf course. Terms moderate. 33rd session September 22, 1926. BISHOP OF DIOCESE OF SOUTHERN VIRGINIA, President of the Board. For catalog address

MABEL ELEANOR STONE, A.M., Principal, Box 13.

THE COLONIAL CHURCH IN VIRGINIA

With Biographical Sketches of the first six Bishops of the Diocese of Virginia, and other historical papers, together with brief Biographical Sketches of each of the known Colonial Clergy of Virginia. Illustrated.

By the Rev.
EDWARD LEWIS GOODWIN, D. D.
Historographer of the Diocese of Virginia,
1905-1924

With Forward by the Rt. Rev.
WILLIAM CABELL BROWN, D. D.
Bishop of Virginia
And Introduction by the Rev.
G. MACLAREN BRYDON

Dr. Goodwin's life work in historic research. In addition to being the most careful study yet made of clerical life in colonial Virginia, the biographical sketches of the first six Bishops carry the history almost to the present day, and there are studies of Church foundations in other parts of the South as well. Dr. Goodwin is able very largely to vindicate the colonial clergy from charges commonly made against their characters.

Cloth, $6.00
Postage about 30 cts.

MOREHOUSE PUBLISHING CO.

1801-1811 FOND DU LAC AVE., MILWAUKEE, WIS.

TOMORROW'S SUCCESS

is built upon today's efforts. Assure your future prosperity. Build up your savings with us and make safe investments. Use the services of our Bond and Mortgage deparment.

STATE-PLANTERS
Bank & Trust Company

Richmond, Virginia.

EVERYTHING FOR THE CHURCH

J. & R. Lamb
23-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED · WOOD · METAL · ETC.

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS
Largest stock in the South. We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival
The Couper Marble Works
(Established 79 years.)
204-206 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

WOODY ART GLASS SHOP
Art Stained and Leaded Glass
Church Windows a Specialty
402 East Marshall St.
Richmond, Va.

R. GEISSLER, INC.
56 W. 8th STREET, NEW YORK, N.Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST 1877

SEE EUROPE
$375 UP
Comprehensive Vacation Tours. Comfortable travel. Also PALESTINE-EGYPT cruise. 83 days $675 up.
The Wicker Tours, Richmond, Virginia.

"Palmer's book is a wonderful contribution to the subject," says Bishop Darst.

THE MINISTRY OF LAYMEN
A Plea for Lay Evangelism
By
LEON C. PALMER.

Over 2,000 copies sold before edition was off the press.

Postpaid: Single copies, 25c.; four for $1.00; nine for $2.00.

From
The BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW
202 S. Nineteenth St., Philadelphia.

Church and Sunday School Furniture
THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY, Hickery, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue.

We are Headquarters for
CHURCH BOOKS and CHURCH SCHOOL SUPPLIES
Send for a copy of our Complete Catalogue
GEORGE W. JACOBS & COMPANY
Booksellers-Stationers-Engravers
1726 CHESTNUT STREET
PHILADELPHIA

MOLLER PIPE ORGANS
three thousand churches. Every organ specially designed for the church and service in which it is be used and fully guaranteed. Specifications and estimates on request. Correspondence solicited.
M. P. MOLLER,
Hagerstown, Maryland.

Washington Cathedral
A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation
• • •
THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work Missionary, Educational, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.
Chartered under Act of Congress.
Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.
Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.
• • •
Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

CHURCH VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Surplices, Stole.
EMBROIDERIES
Silks, Cloths, Fringes.
CLERICAL SUITS
Rabats, Collars, Shirts.
COX SONS & VINING,
131-133 E. 23d St., New York.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS
Gold, Silver and Brass.
Church and Chancel Furniture
Write for Catalogue for Episcopal Churches.
W. & E. SCHMIDT CO.
808 THIRD ST. MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

The farther off you follow the more fearful you will be.—Ex.

Of course charity is born at home; but it cannot grow up there.—Ex.

You get no credit for the gift you think of as a tax.—Ex.

What we do in the crisis always depends upon whether we see the difficulties in the light of God, or God in the shadow of the difficulties.—G. Campbell Morgan.

Pray therefore when thy heart is light,
And He has made thee glad;
Pray in the dark and stormy night,
When life has made thee sad.
Marianne Farmingham.

Christ tells us to count the cost of discipleship, but he never asked us to count the gain. He knew we could not; there is no arithmetic to compute that. —W. L. Watkinson.

Spread out your petition before God, and then say, "Thy will, not mine, be done"! The sweetest lesson I have learned in God's school is to let the Lord choose for me."—D. L. Moody.

He who is faithful over a few things is lord of cities. It does not matter whether you preach in Westminster Abbey, or teach a ragged class, so you be faithful. The faithfulness is all.—George Macdonald.

Life, like war, is a series of mistakes; and he is not the best Christian nor the best general who makes the fewest false steps. He is the best who wins the most splendid victories by the retrieval of mistakes.—F. W. Robertson.

"Take up thy cross,
Then shalt thou find the burden light,
The path made straight, the way all bright,
Thy warfare cease.
So shalt thou win thy crown,
At last thy life lay down
In perfect peace."

The use of Scripture is to set man right with God. Who of us has not experienced this wonderful power in his own life, how the simple reading of a psalm, or a text, or even an isolated word, has gone like a two-edged sword into our inmost being, discussing the thoughts and intents of the heart, overwhelming us with tears of contrition or with shouts of praise?—Selected.

Cassocks
Surplices, Stoles, Altar Hangings, Bookmarkers and Embroideries Altar Linens, Materials, Rabats, Rabat Vests, Birettas, Collars, Cuffs and Shirts. Clerical and Custom Tailoring. Moderate prices.
J. M. HALL, Inc.
9 East 35th St., New York
Tel. Caledonia 3643

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., MAY 7, 1927. No. 19.

PARAGRAPHS

THE TRAGEDY IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY LOOMS LARGE to us, and it is hoped that the five million dollars called for by President Coolidge will be raised and wisely used. We have no doubt that the Red Cross will come to the rescue, again proving, as it did in Japan, the wonderful Christian spirit now prevailing. It does not alleviate our own suffering to think of the grief of others, but it does impress us with God's great mercy to this country, even at such a time as this, when we remember that in Bengal, India, fifteen thousand lives have been snuffed out by an epidemic, in the past three months, and it has scarcely made an impression in that densely populated country. Let every one give to the Mississippi sufferers to the limit of his ability, but let no one feel that this disaster is an especial punishment inflicted upon us.

A CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETY OPERATING A BANK, sounds like a new departure for this religious organization. In Jhelum, India, this form of commercial activity has been started, and is under successful operation on the cooperative basis. According to the Christian Century, the purpose is to save the members from the toils of the money-lenders by making small loans to the depressed classes, many of whom, in periods of stringency, assume a burden of exorbitant interest under which they struggle for the rest of their lives. Indian Christian Endeavor is characterized not only by such practical measures for the relief of intolerable conditions but by that spirit of national self-consciousness which is increasingly manifest in the whole Christian movement in India. Indian endeavorers already raise all the funds required for their local societies and for their district and provincial unions.

ARRANGEMENTS ARE BEING MADE BY LEADERS OF ELEVEN RELIGIONS for a conference to be held in 1928. According to the statement of Dr. Henry Atkinson, "There will be no attempt to compare religions, or to judge or readjust according to any schedule the religious faith of any individual or people. The sole purpose will be to consider how the forces of religion in all nations can be mobilized in a concerted action against war and that spirit and those things which make for war". The universal conference will be held in 1930.

ONE MILLION FIVE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS IS NOW BEING RAISED by a group of New York business men to complete the Broadway Temple. The wings of this enormous building will be used as apartment houses, and they are almost complete, having cost nearly one million dollars and a half. The foundations for the great church, which will make the central structure of this enormous building, have already been dug at a cost of nearly a million dollars. A huge revolving electric cross will be placed upon the top, where it can be seen at night, by one-tenth of the entire population of the United States. It will be at a height of seven hundred and nineteen feet—half as high again as the Washington Monument. Besides the large church auditorium of which the Rev. Christian F. Reisner is pastor, this building will house as many people as will be found in a small city. Its erection marks a new departure in Church building, in this or any other country.

AS OTHERS SEE IT

Last week we gave the views of the Archbishop of Canterbury on the Revised Book of Common Prayer of the English Church. We have given space to the discussion on this subject, because it is practically the same thing that is going on in our Church.

The Archbishop has minimized the changes as much as possible so as to avoid all the opposition he can. The vital point in the whole matter centers around the question of reserving the elements of the Holy Communion on the altars of the Church. The new English Prayer Book provides for such reservation "for the sick only".

We find a very good illustration of the effect that this will have upon the general public in an editorial in the Christian Century of February 24, which we quote, as follows:

"The important point in the new optional forms which are proposed for introduction into the Prayer Book is the authorization of the reservation of the sacrament. And this is important because of its doctrinal implications. If the sacrament is to be reserved—that is, if a portion of the consecrated bread and wine is to be kept in a proper receptacle on the altar—it can be only in order that it may be adored. Nobody is interested in reserving it for any other purpose—except to have it ready to administer to the sick in an emergency, and that is clearly a minor motive with those who have been arguing for the reservation. And if it is to be adored, it can be only because it is considered as having become, in some genuine sense, the real body and blood of Christ. In other words, it is the admission of a practice which implies the doctrine of transubstantiation. It permits the celebration of the communion to become a proper mass, in the sense in which the Roman Catholic Church uses that term. It allows Anglicans to make the communion not a symbol, but a miracle. The question is not whether the doctrine of the real presence is true or not, but whether members of the Anglican Church are to be allowed to believe that it is true and to utilize a form of service expressive of that doctrine."

The writer of this editorial then proceeds to discuss the argument in favor of transubstantiation of the elements in the service of the Holy Communion, taking a very liberal view on this subject, and upholding the position of the English Bishops in making the Anglican Church broad enough to hold those persons who want everything Roman Catholic except the Pope, and proceeds to suggest the consistent way to secure it in the following sentence:

"The question which confronted the English Bishops was not whether or not the doctrine of the real presence is true, but whether one who, for any of the above or other reasons, feels moved to adore the sacrament as the body and blood of Christ should be compelled to go over to Rome to do so. We think the Bishops were right in deciding that he should not. To have decided to the contrary would have been to play into the hands of Rome. The question at once suggests itself, whether immediate steps ought to be taken to make optional or to eliminate entirely those paragraphs in the thirty-nine articles of religion which explicitly deny the doctrine which the now permitted ceremony implicitly admits as allowable."

This practice of the adoration of the elements of the Holy Communion on the altars of Episcopal Churches is one of the chief objects of the Anglo-Catholic Movement. It is on this subject that the Rev. S. C. Hughson states publicly "that with all charity we decline to accept any compromise or accommodation regarding this practice".

Another of their leaders who has also spoken for the Anglo-Catholics in public, says: "We know what we want, and we intend to get it". It would look as though this were the case, because at the last General Convention the first step was taken, as the Christian Century suggests above, when the thirty-nine articles were voted out of the Prayer Book. The leaders of the movement toward Rome recognize that they must get rid of this barrier, as a preliminary step toward the legal introduction into the Protestant Episcopal Church of the ends they desire, and intend to attain. They realized, as apparently others did not, the importance of this move. Knowing what they want, and intending to have it, makes a difference. It contributes enormously to cohesive action. We believe that the Protestant Episcopal Church ought to be the kind of Church that the laity want. If they want to give clergymen the liberty to introduce these innovations they have the power to do so at the next General Convention.

SHALL THE BARRIERS BE CLEARED FOR THE INTRODUCTION OF ALL ROMAN PRACTICES INTO THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH BY RATIFYING THE REMOVAL OF THE THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES FROM THE PRAYER BOOK?

PRACTICAL IDEALISM

The vision of a warless world has seemed to many to be out of the question in spite of the fact that practically the entire religious press is striving for this objective. It may not, however, be so visionary as some think, for when we can count in our ranks such a man as Charles M. Schwab, the industrialists will begin to take notice. This great capitalist and builder of a mighty industry recently made the following statement:

"As to war, and its effect on business, I would say that the time is coming when there will be no more wars, simply because the world will have become too intelligent to fight them. The thought of war is abhorrent to me. Even as the head of the largest ordnance producing industry in the world, I would rather see that vast industry sunk to the bottom of the ocean than have my country involved in war again."

If Mr. Schwab is sincere in this utterance, and we have every reason to suppose that he is, it will mean more than many sermons on peace, and bring the abolition of war appreciably nearer.

A BOOKLET WORTH READING

An interesting correspondence has been going on in Tennessee. A pamphlet entitled, "Shall The Protestant Episcopal Church Be Destroyed"? was prepared and published by the Hon. C. L. Marsilliot, a Federal Judge of Memphis, Tenn. It is addressed "To the Laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America", and is a frank setting forth of the present situation in the Church, and particularly with reference to Prayer Book revision. It is published by Latsch & Arnold, 97 North Second Street, Memphis, Tenn., at $8.00 per hundred copies, or $35 for five hundred copies, and has already run through several editions. It contains a tremendous amount of information about the Church in the last century, going back to 1832, and tracing the development of the present Anglo-Catholic Movement. Aside from the contents of this booklet itself, which is both interesting and informing, there has since arisen around it a correspondence in which no less than three Bishops are taking part. Bishop Gailor addressed a communication to the editor of the Chronicle on the subject on March 2, in which he says, "The animous of the tract is unfortunate. It is a bitter attack upon individual members of the Episcopal Church, imputing bad motives, hypocrisy and false witness to many thousands of good people". On the other hand, Bishop Harris, of the Diocese of Marquette, in an open letter to the author, says, "No doubt your calm and judicial statement, based upon your findings after intensive research and exhaustive study of the evidence within your hands, with which your training as a jurist and Federal Judge peculiarly fit you to deal, will come as a distinct shock to thousands of laymen within the Church and to some of the younger clergy. I might include also some of the older priests and bishops, who have been so absorbed in their own immediate problems that they have failed to perceive and duly consider what is going on round about them". Bishop Seaman, of North Texas, has written an introduction to the pamphlet, which has now gone through five editions, and is worth reading, irrespective of the views held by any individual Episcopalian.

THIS WEEK'S PREACHER

THE REVEREND WILLIAM S. CLAIBORNE, D. D., is one of that host of Virginians who have given their services to the Protestant Episcopal Church. Born in Amherst County, he took his college education at the University of the South, and also graduated there in theology. His first pastoral charge, too, was at this place, the fascination for which has never left him, as he has given his entire ministerial effort to this institution and the surrounding country. He was the founder of St. Andrew's Industrial School for Boys, which has since been taken over by the Order of the Holy Cross. He established the Emerald-Hodgson Memorial Hospital, and reorganized St. Mary's-on-the-Mountain, an Industrial School for Girls at Sewanee. The only time that he has left this field was to render service as a chaplain in the Rainbow Division during 1919, and after the war he became Archdeacon of Sewanee, the position which he still holds.

THE PULPIT OF THE AMERICAN CHURCH

BE YE DOERS OF THE WORD

By the Reverend W. S. Claiborne, D. D.

AN outstanding characteristic of life, from the lowest to the highest form, is organization. Finding it in the lower and tracing it through to the higher animal and into man, we have organization governed by natural laws with its various departments and leaders from Amoeba to Newton.

Sometimes in studying the work of certain forms of life, as for instance the bee, it is hard to understand the value of some of apparently the most important adjustments. The bee that searches the flower for the nectar to make the honey, brings it to the hive and deposits it with another laborer who in turn places it in its cell; the manifold and many-sided activities of the different inhabitants of the hive are all essential to the development of the bee and his work. In human life we frequently meet the same condition, and try to abolish certain offices or positions, usually at the expense of the development of the things we are trying to develop.

To have organization it is very essential that we have real leadership, for organization without leadership ends in a mob and disintegrates. The law of supply and demand cannot permanently be ignored, and the place into which each individual fits in society in the long run has to be recognized. This involves well-rounded and well-developed leadership, which cannot be produced without the development of the mental, physical and moral side of man, and which will enable him to meet every emergency that may arise and to keep himself well balanced and in control. A man can only control others in so far as he can control himself. Without this trained leadership the various organizations will come into conflict and a catastrophe arise and war will ensue. Consequently, the real leader must see the necessity of attempting to put every individual into his own place and develop him in the work which it seems God has created him for. Round pegs in square holes will not prevent leakage, which in the end will sap the life out of and lose the contents of the container.

We should remember that the Gospels and the Epistles were written from the battlefield and not from a cloister, and are therefore better understood by men in the battle of life. We should constantly keep before us the fact that you cannot judge society by one individual or a few individuals, but that you must deal with each individual and nothing can be explained purely intellectually which will fit the whole of man. As Bishop Barnes so well put it in his Easter sermon, "After you have explained intellectually everything, you cannot explain man".

The world today in every department of life needs leaders who will stir society from our present chaos and lead it to God, the author and finisher of our life. Every period in the world's history has its own peculiar problems, and each period must really solve its own problems, or they leave an inheritance for their successors which in the end if not successfully settled will produce anarchy. So it behooves us to have wise, far-sighted godly leaders, both in Church and State, who can see beyond the borders of their own environment and exhibit due regard to others' position in the world. We can no longer live an isolated life as though we lived on a remote island. We have our responsibilities to bear, and these cannot be faced by isolation, nor from the selfish standpoint of enjoying the privilege of living in the world without bearing our responsibilities of the world's work. We cannot offer something which costs us nothing and expect a return. The seed must be planted in good soil else it will not yield an increase. The seed must be cultivated and protected or it will be choked. Surely in the realm of religion we need men of vision, of faith, of hope and charity, men who are adequately trained to meet modern conditions. This does not mean purely an academic education as we understand that term, but men who have also gone apart with the Master and followed Him, witnessing and bearing witness to His life.

Clerical training does not simply involve Latin, Greek and Hebrew, essential as they are. It also means prayer and spiritual exercise, and if you please, manual labor, to discipline and develop the whole man, mentally, morally and physically. Jack Dempsey had his worshippers, while some intellectual giant on the other hand may have his, but neither can be of great influence and wield a power in the world without spiritual development. We need a St. Augustine of Hippo, the orator, the leader, the philosopher, who, when he had reached the heights of his ambition, realized that it was not those things, but Christ that he needed in order to attain to reality. Or in modern times, Dr. Schweitzer, who wielded great power in the intellectual world at Strasburg University, but at length, as the story goes, said, "What's the use"? Surrendering all of the cultural side of life that he was enjoying, he took up the study of medicine and went to the heart of Africa, ministering to uneducated, undeveloped, uncultured people in mind, body and soul. To do work of this sort requires men of real development; and nowhere is it more needed than in the Church of the Living God. But the officer in the Church will of necessity have to be trained to know his place and his work and not be driven hither and yon by every whim of man. He must know God in order to reveal God to the world. The Jew knew a good deal about God, but he had not risen to the point that he really knew Him; and our Lord was born in Bethlehem of a virgin, to raise man up to God, but He had no easy time in revealing Himself to those most intimate with Him. When they had seen and heard and lived with Him, they said, "Show us the Father, it sufficeth us", to which He sadly replied, "Have I been so long time with you and you do not know me"? These men in their place of life were possibly leaders of some sort or other, but they certainly were not well rounded leaders. They had studied too much about God and did not intimately know God Himself. They hadn't sufficient faith to give all. They held back a little. Their courage and faith were far from being what they should have been. Their whole conception was largely based upon a selfish standpoint, and hence their vision was dimmed. When the test was made by our Lord they were unable to meet it, and failed as we do today.

The officer of the army who is sent out in the field of battle should have his mind on one thing, namely, to devote himself to that work in which he is placed, and not to use his position as a stepping stone to a "higher" office. This latter is the curse of the Church, and the cause of the failure of our small parishes and rural work. The world affords many instances of hardship, deprivation and loneliness, and thereby not infrequently sets an example to the Church. Too often a clergyman's estimate of his work is based on the possibility of a mitre or a large city parish, as though the attainment of either of these necessarily involved efficiency in the Master's vineyard!

We all know only too well that portion of the Church's history, with its intrigues and political connivances, undertaken in order to obtain ecclesiastical distinction; and that she has survived such things is proof she is divine. Truly we are forced to the conclusion that the commission given to us is of divine origin, for otherwise the Church would have been wiped out hundreds of years ago. We see, in spite of our infirmities, the Church going on, enlarging and strengthening herself with innumerable temptations on every hand.

Science has done wonders for the benefit of mankind, certain scientists have also led many astray, by attempting to excuse all human weaknesses by certain physical defects. We know there are physical defects, but to attribute every weakness of man to such defects does not seem a legitimate way to handle society, nor does it help to prevent sin and crime. The pastor of his flock must study the whole man and not simply a particular group of cells. He must be conscientious and careful about his conclusions, and not follow the line of least resistance. Our Lord went straight to the core of the matter, but He always did it with the love of a father and not as a tyrant. He could say stern things with love, and this the pastor must learn to do if he desires to be of service in the community in which he is exercising his ministry.

The story is told of Field Marshall Foch, that when he was in command of the French Army of Lorraine, he defeated and had driven back the Germans practically to the German border. Without any reason so far as the average man knew, Foch was deprived of his command and put in charge of the French Forty-Second Division composed of Colonial troops. Naturally nobody knew what these troops would do. At the Battle of the Marne, Foch reported to his superior officer, "I am flanked on the right, cut to pieces on the left; I advance". With the center of his division he drove a wedge into the German lines which forced them to throw back their flanks on both sides, and Foch won the day. Only a well-rounded, well-disciplined soldier could ever have effected such a drive into the German lines. The same thing is true of the officer of the Church. Faith in God and confidence in His Kingdom alone enables him to go forward, regardless of the character of the troops under his care.

The training necessary for such leadership is not merely an academic thing, but involves the development of the whole man. St. Andrew and St. Peter were but fishermen with extremely limited, if any, academic education, but let us not forget that our Lord called these men apart from the world and showed them the necessary things to be done, the kind of life to live in order to inspire other men to follow the Master. St. Paul, a highly educated man, deeply spiritual, an enthusiastic, zealous Hebrew, honest in his life, proud of his citizenship, who gloried in his intellectual attainments, had to go apart for possibly three years in the wilderness to readjust his mental and spiritual constitution in order to become the great Apostle to the Gentiles. His motto thereafter was, "I live; yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me". And would to God that were the motto of us clergy today!

In modern life we have Archdeacon Stuck, who was a cultured gentleman, a lover of the finer things of life, happily situated as the dean of a large cathedral. He hears the call of the Master to go to Alaska. Many said to him, "Are you not making a mistake, allowing your enthusiasm to get the upper hand of you? You are a very important man in your locality and can do a great deal to influence that part of God's army among whom you are located. Alaska is a dreadfully hard field, and the deprivations will be many". But Stuck answered, "I am going on a certain date". He went. Nothing deterred him. He believed that he had received orders from On High, and he answered the orders and gave his life for the people to whom he believed God had sent him.

There was another man who was busy in the world's affairs, extremely successful in business, and who belonged to the same Church as did Stuck. He said, "Stuck is making a fatal mistake, and is making a sacrifice of little use. He should teach in one of our large universities and inspire our men at home". When Stuck later made the ascent of Mt. Dennali, he was very certain that Stuck was not in his right place. After Stuck's books came out, this man read them and gave them away to his friends. At the same time he was criticizing Stuck for staying in Alaska. One day this wealthy gentleman said to a friend of his, "Why don't you get Stuck back to teach at Sewanee, his Alma Mater? How that man could inspire the student body of that institution and send men out to do great work in the nation"! The gentleman replied to his wealthy friend, "Stuck has been offered the professorship at Sewanee two or three times, and he has declined. Last summer he was asked if he did not think the time had come when he should come back and help them out at Sewanee. The look that Stuck gave his interlocutor will never be forgotten, and his remark was this, "I must go back to my people in Alaska". As you know he fills practically an unknown grave.

This wealthy gentleman referred to had reverses. His wealth gradually disappeared, and one day he found that only bills filled his desk and that he had nothing to pay them with. The thing he had depended on for his life was solely success in the business world, and there was nothing to fall back upon. It was all gone, and he fills a suicide's grave.

Naturally, my fellow officer, you must be careful as to your orders. A captain in the American Army in France received orders which he understood required him to make a raid with fifty men on the enemy's lines at two P. M. He hadn't sufficient knowledge of military affairs, training and discipline even to fear that there was some mistake somewhere. These raids were in fact made at night. He made the raid; and it was his last, for only fifteen of his men ever lived to tell the sad story of mistaken orders.

How true of men in the Church of the Living God mistaking their position, and ever seeking to climb in the worldly sense to what they deem as higher places, and what failures do we see in parishes and dioceses manned by such men! Ever keep your mind and heart open to the Divine Guide, and look for direction from the Cross of Christ Crucified, whatever your lot may be, consecrating yourself to the service of Him, whom the world said was a mistake, but He Himself said, "If a grain of wheat falls into the ground, it abideth alone. But if it die, it beareth much fruit". Nineteen centuries of Christianity have justified His word.

THE TAKING OF SHANGHAI.

Extract from a letter from Mr. Ellis N. Tucker, Professor of Mathematics in St. John's University, Shanghai, China, dated March 25, 1927, describing the capture of Shanghai by the Cantonese:

"Monday, Shanghai went over to the South. In many parts of the city there was some very bloody fighting. The foreign troops kept very good order in the settlement and around our way. We have the British outside our gates and they go about their work in a quiet, business-like way. We have not suffered in any way nor had any trouble of any sort.

All day Sunday we watched the defeated Northern troops pass. They were a wretched-looking lot. Monday saw the coming of the labor troops, who made a reign of terrior in the native district. Tuesday, the Southern troops came by. They were not much better than the others. A general strike was declared Monday, but was called off today. So, things have eased down. We have had grandstand seats, as everything passes by the Hangchow railroad track.

It looks as if there is going to be a fight to the finish between the Military and the Reds. At present, the Military have the upper hand in Shanghai, and that helps a great deal. As to the future, none can tell. Reports from Nanking point to a terrible time there.

We gave a two-day holiday at the request of the boys, so that they could celebrate the Nationalist victory. Yesterday, the holiday was extended indefinitely. The chances of opening again are not very good. The uncertainty is very hard on us, but we can but sit and wait."

THE FUTURE OF CHRISTIANITY IN CHINA

By the Reverend Kimber H. K. Den

I.

THE RENAISSANCE MOVEMENT.

THIS Renaissance movement generally interpreted as the intellectual awakening in China, presents to the Christian Church a wonderful opportunity as well as a real problem. The attitude of the more educated and influential classes toward the Christian religion and its followers has greatly changed in recent years as a result of this movement, which served Christianity largely in two ways.

First of all, this movement encourages an impartial study of Christianity. The enemy of Christianity is preconceived judgment and indifference rather than fearless investigation or even opposition. This indifference is now being removed by this movement which encourages a critical attitude toward everything. The educated youth of China are encouraged to think for themselves. They want to ask "why" about everything, and to take nothing for granted. Naturally they apply the same principles to Christianity. They study the history and the teaching of the Christian Church in that critical attitude, which thus gives a more effective means of expression. For by means of this movement, Christianity is finding people who are paying it earnest attention as a subject worthy of study and discussion in circles and among individuals where Christianity never had a chance of being heard before. Thus, it opens up a remarkable opportunity for the Church to bear witness for its Lord and Master.

Second, this movement is making way for Christianity. Both Christianity and this movement have found a common foe in the existing superstitions whether in the life of the individual or of society. Much of the work of Christianity has been fighting against superstitions which were the products of ignorance. The ignorance may be due to a lack of scientific knowledge of the natural world or due to the lack of critical insight into the spiritual life. Christianity has been waging an incessant war in the last century, ever since her arrival upon the soil of China, against idolatrous worship, the trust in pseudo-scientific astrology, and many other superstitious beliefs and practices. But for a long time, Christianity has fought these wars almost single-handed. Now this movement is fighting against the very same enemies and even with greater relentlessness. By its very tenet of accepting nothing unless it is critically examined and proved to be worthy of acceptance, it has knocked down many an idol which has held sway over the people and which Christianity has often failed to root out as completely as she wanted to.

In this connection there is also the patriotic movement led by the student classes of China. It was started a few years ago with the idea of awakening the Nationalistic spirit of the people. Such a growth of National consciousness of the Chinese people as has been stimulated by this movement, prompted in no small measure the present nation-wide cry for a Chinese indigenous Church. We know that the Protestant Christian Church in China has a history of over one hundred years, while the Church in Japan is younger in age; but as far as a sense of ownership and responsibility on the part of the Church and the recognition given to her by the foreign missions are concerned, Japan is way ahead of China. It has been said that one of the strongest reasons for this is that the Japanese people have been predominantly Nationalistic in their views, hence it has reacted in the mission policies there. May not the same thing be soon realized in China as a result of this Nationalistic movement?

As we are aware, the greatest hindrance to the progress of China is the great mass of illiteracy in the country. It is also a great handicap to the work of the Church, because it is estimated that thirty-five per cent of the men and sixty-five per cent of the women in the Christian Church in China today are still unable to read and write. That means they have no direct access to the Word of God. Because of lack of education, the Bible is not an open Book to these brethren in Christ. This is indeed a drawback. Because they are deprived of one of the most important means for the development of the Christian life. Realizing the danger of ignorance of the people, a group of intelligent young people in China has recently worked out a method of using the National phonetic script, which enables many illiterate men and women to read and write for themselves. By use of this phonetic script, many adult illiterates in the Church have also been taught to read the Bible in a very short time. Portions of the Scriptures, the whole of the New Testament, and other literature, are being widely circulated and used. When the enemy of illiteracy is conquered, the Church in China may have a direct presentation of its message to the ignorant people. Thus the words of our Lord, "The poor have the Gospel preached to them", have their fulfillment in China. So much for the external problems of Christianity.

Now let us turn our attention to its internal problems. The first and the most important is the question of leadership. All the problems that are facing the young Church in China point to the need of more and better trained leaders. We are grateful to God for the large number of men and women who have faithfully devoted their talents and lives to the work of the Christian Church, especially for the few outstanding leaders as Chang Po-ling, C. Y. Cheng, Feng Yu-hsiang, and others whom God has from time to time raised in the Chinese Church. But such great leaders, however, are extremely few in the Chinese Church. We need many more of them. How are they to be secured? How trained? How held? How used? Are some of the questions that press for an answer. Unless the missionaries can successfully train leaders, they can hardly lay the foundation of a Chinese native Church. As it is quite evident, however, that not every missionary can successfully train leaders, a process of elimination is necessary. There are only two kinds of missionaries that are really useful, viz., those who have enough ability and experience to train leaders and those who, though unable to do training, can do a piece of work well without the desire to dominate. The cry of the Church is leadership. There is even a more urgent cry for leading workers of a voluntary nature. Statistics showed that the numerical increase of all the Protestant missions in China in the year 1921 was only 20,671, while the staff of full-time Chinese workers in the employ of the missions was not fewer than 24,732. Of course, if statistics have any suggestive value at all, it shows only one part of the problem. But the fact remains that the increase of the Church in membership is small. Should not more attention be paid to the discovering, the training, the utilizing, and the holding for the Christian service of leaders not paid by the Mission or Church, men who are willing to render to the cause of Christ voluntary service? Today the Protestant Churches in China have probably a membership of a half million people, while the general complaint is that the number is too small. But if every one of them is so trained with a sense of responsibility for the Church work, the young Church in China certainly has a great future.

Next to this problem of Leadership is the question of Message. What is to be the message of the Church? What kind of gospel should it proclaim? In spite of so many different Christian bodies that exist in China today, there should be a real and common message given to China by the different missions as a whole, so that Chinese Christians can make a genuine contribution to the discovery, interpretation and presentation of that message. With that in view, a number of Christians in Peking formed the Truth Witness Group about seven or eight years ago. The chief activity of the group is the publication of a monthly magazine called Sheng-Ming (Life) for the presentation of a common and real Christian message to China and through it they can approach Christ.

The third internal question is Unity. The existence of denominations has a great weakening effect. "United we stand, divided we fall." The lack of a strong united front accounts largely for the slow progress of the Church. It is very hard for the Chinese Church to see the need and reason for the existence of so many different denominations and Christian divisions in China. Perhaps due allowances should always be made in view of the fact that human beings differ in their temperaments and point of view, but that is no justification for such wide divisions of Christian bodies in China, in which a unified Christian strength is needed for the battle against heathen superstitious beliefs and practices. For it is upon the ability and extent of Cooperation among the Christians and the Churches that the future of Christianity in China largely depends.

Having discussed these outstanding problems of the Church, both externally and internally, the writer wants to assure that Christianity in China has certainly a very bright outlook in the future. In view of all the opportunities that are lying before us, and the change of attitude toward Christianity by the intellectual class, one cannot fail to believe that the future of the Christian Church in China is full of hope. In spite of its many defects and shortcomings, Christianity is coming to a stage where we can see many signs of encouragement and promise. While there are missionaries who are either causing division or are too domineering, there are many more who have the right kind of attitude. Especially is it gratifying to note the improved quality of the younger missionary generation. With regard to Chinese leadership in the Christian work, we see a large number of young leaders turned out from mission schools every year who are dedicating more and more their lives to the Christian cause. Among the many Christian organizations, the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations have been rather outstanding in bringing Church and society together, in emphasizing Chinese leadership and control and in promoting social service. Then think of the various movements in the Church that have sprung up within the last few years. Through the Chinese Church Movement, the Chinese Church is trying to develop itself in an indigenous way. She is beginning to view the Christian message through her Oriental eyes and to interpret it on the basis of her own Oriental culture and thought. It is said that Christianity in the last century has come to China with a great deal of European coloring.. In bringing to the people of the Orient the gospel of salvation, the missionary has brought with him much of the thought, manners, customs, temperament, and atmosphere of the West, some of which does not seem to be quite suitable for the people of the East. Thoughtful Christians today are trying to show to their non-Christian friends that while they reject all that is superstitious and idolatrous in the old customs and traditions, yet they wish to uphold and enrich all that which is in keeping with the teaching of the Christian religion. For we realize that Christ has come to China not to destroy but to fulfill all that is beautiful, good and true in the past. Hence in recent years, in many places in China, Churches were put up with Chinese architecture and Chinese designs. Some of the Church rituals are so adopted as an expression of Chinese thought and taste.

The Yunnan Home Missionary Movement and the establishment of a big mission work in Shansi by our Episcopal Church in Northern China are wonderful examples of the manifestation of a spirit of self-propagation among the Chinese Christians. It has amply proved that the Chinese Christians are willing and capable of carrying out Christian work themselves.

In spite of the introduction of Western denominationalism by the different missions, the Chinese Christians welcome union in every possible way. Happily in recent years the desire for closer cooperation is growing very much even among missionaries, and some progress along this line has already been made. There are now many union institutions established by the different missions to meet the need of higher education. Above the different Christian bodies, there is found in every city, large or small, an organic union of Christian strength to meet the social issues. Union meetings and conferences are often held for finding a common solution of all Christian problems. In addition, we can show in a number of other ways that the Christian forces in China are trying "to dwell in unity". For this we are profoundly thankful to the Lord.

Then think of the significance of the National Christian Conference, which was held in Shanghai early in May, 1922. For the first time in the history of the Church in China, a conference of that nature was held composed of approximately one thousand Church and Mission delegates, of which fifty per cent of the delegates were Chinese, whereas in the 1907 conference there were no Chinese delegates at all. The theme of that conference was "the Chinese Church", which covered discussions on all the most vital problems in relation to the future of the Chinese Church —such as "The Present State of Christianity in China", "The Future Task of the Church", "The Message of the Church", "The Development of Leadership in the Work of the Church", and "Cooperation and Coordination in the Work of the Church". As a result of this conference there has been established an officially representative organ of all Christian Churches in China known as the National Christian Council of China. Inwardly, it serves as a bond of union of all Christian bodies in promoting a common cause for Christ and outwardly it represents all Christian Churches as one body to meet all social issues. Since the formation of this organization, wonderful works have been done in checking the influences of such prevalent evils as prostitution, gambling, and opium smoking. To strengthen the spiritual life of the Church in China as a whole, constructive plans are being carried out to promote on a nation-wide scale such movements as the Bible Reading Church Movement, and Christian Home Movements, which are far beyond the effort of any individual Church to undertake. Thus by means of this Council, all the Christian bodies have been held up towards working on the accomplishment of a common cause—the establishment of a self-governing, self-propagating and self-supporting Church in China. But unity means strength. I believe that as a result of the combination of the various Christian forces, working toward this common end, it would hasten the attainment of this goal more speedily than it would for each Church working separately.

So, on the whole, the future of the Christian religion is very promising. The question as to how soon will come the realization of such a future, depends upon chiefly to how large an extent the different missions could cooperate and to what a degree the Native Church is allowed opportunity for self-expression and indigenous development. Again, I believe that as soon as the political disturbance in the country settles down, the Chinese Church will be more ready to take its share in the spreading of Christ's message and will speedily take up its burdens and responsibilities to the glory of Almighty God.

So much has been said about all the spontaneous efforts of the Chinese Christians made in developing a Native Chinese Church and other secular movements favorable to their attempts. Before conclusion, I would like to say something more about what the missions can do best at this time in helping the Chinese Christians to hasten the accomplishment of this end—which has been kept as a common goal in view both by the missions and the Chinese Christians for a great many years. Since it has been shown from the various signs that the Church in China is coming to a period of ripening at which the Christians are beginning to have a sense of responsibility and interest in the Church, it therefore calls for a change of the old attitude of the Mission and a revision of the old missionary policy to meet the new situation of the Chinese Church.

(Concluded Next Week.)

THE INDWELLING CHRIST.

For His dwelling place He wants a clean house and a good home. What less can reverent love offer Him? And why not make His presence real as any other member of the family? Abide in me and I in you, I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you. Here is witness to a mystical union in the hidden depths of personality. What can He mean but a spiritual identity between the servant and his Lord, as sharers in the same eternal life? Because I live, ye shall live also. For me this settles the question of immortality, the welcome confirmations of philosophy cannot approach it, in convincing and satisfying power.

The Master fondles this thought, enforcing it with the parallelism of the vine and the branches. He symbolizes it in the bread and wine of the memorial supper. In His solemn words is a haze of mysticism, in which "mystery seems clear, and clearness itself is mystery". In a rapture, Paul saw this truth and declared, it is no longer I that live, but Christ who liveth in me.

This supreme revelation is for the ages. Are many of us honestly interested in the exalted conception and striving to enter into realization of its blessedness? Do we say, Lord, Lord, and yet, forget the practical aim of Him who woul denthrone Himself in our hearts? Shame on us, if we do not make a home for Him sweet and beautiful. Where He is, heaven is. We dare not ask Him to bide with hateful dispositions, unkind feelings, or evil thoughts and imaginations; with His whip of cords He will scourge the demons out.

By this vitally intimate union with His people, He gains His vantage ground for purification of character and for perfecting the children of God.

It is not a creed that he gives us, but a program of godly living and of self-sacrificing service. The Indwelling Love has no other way. In the hot battles with temptation, this holy presence is our succour and safety. The precious invisible friend, in the days of pain and sorrow, suffers with us and calms us with the strong consolations of God. This was Paul's comfort when he exclaimed, "Our lives are hid with Christ in God"; there is none like Him; He has no rival. Today He is the inarticulate desire of all nations.

What manner of love is this, that the Son of God wants to live with us and in us? Here is the true Springboard for the sermon and the potent call to adoring meditation. Our main question now is: Shall you and I give Him a good home, and love Him with an intense personal affection?—Dr. W. R. L. Smith.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE COMMUNITY

"The Kingdom Come, Thy Will be done on earth"

Edited by the Reverend R. Cary Montague

COMMENTS ON CHILD TRAINING.

By Mary Evelyn Brydon, M. D.

Article XVII.—The Seventh Commandment—Thou Shalt Not Commit Adultery.

Purity. Teach your child to make his life pure and holy in the sight of God. This is probably the hardest of all the Commandments to understand in the light of our modern life of scientific knowledge and personal freedom. But in the light of Scripture teaching it is direct, simple, unequivocal, specific.

Adultery means "violation of the marriage bed"; that and only that. I can see no way of getting around it. One who violates this Commandment is an adulterer or an adulteress. Such a person has become accordingly impure, unchaste, polluted. The danger to the body of venereal disease is as nothing compared to the stain put upon the spirit, the character, and the sin against the Holy Spirit.

Take note that this Commandment, in common with all the others, does not take into account either physical or biological necessities of the human body, nor does it state what procedure should be followed upon violation of the Commandment. I shall not, therefore, discuss sex problems or divorce at this time. These subjects can better be discussed when we take up the moral training of the child.

At present I am concerned with the one idea—what to teach our children from the Seventh Commandment. Surely there is a lesson to be taught from it, so let us get down to that business. Obviously, we cannot teach the child anything about adultery. We have selected "Purity" as the best single word to cover the teaching of the Seventh Commandment.

The dictionary defines Purity "free from moral or physical defilement; chaste; holy, clean; unpolluted". A child fresh from the creative hands of God is pure. You cannot teach purity to the pure. He is it. He cannot understand the very words that illustrate his own condition.

The problem must be approached from another angle. The child must be taught to keep pure. And throughout his childhood until his body awakens at adolescence this roundabout method of instruction must be maintained so far as the Seventh Commandment is concerned. For I do not hold with those eminent sociologists, medicos, and legal lights that the way to teach a child purity is to give the bald facts of sex life. When the child asks direct questions, or if found to be associating with those of unclean lips, Yes! But to gradually lead him to observe life around him carefully, from time to time answering questions that arise in his mind, but offering no advance information he is not ready for—this seems to me a better way; but it should be secondary, and if you are on guard, you will know when the proper time comes to explain the facts of life; birth, illness and death. This you will be able to do if you have prepared the ground beforehand, and only his mother can adequately handle this subject with the small child.

In my opinion the Seventh Commandment—keep pure and holy in the sight of God—can best be taught through the fundamental principles of cleanliness; clean thoughts; clean occupations; clean body.

Here is what a mother of two boys says is her method:

"My little boy came home from school and asked. 'Mother, why are some of the boys at school so bad? Is it because they have let the Devil come into their hearts'? I told him that perhaps those boys have never been taught that the way to keep God in the heart is by thinking good thoughts all the time. We know by the first chapter of Genesis that all that God made was good and a part of Him, so good thoughts are God's angels hovering around us always and protecting us. They protect us from all that harms and bad thoughts lead us away from God and His protection. No one should love bad, they should love only good. I find that my boys have responded to the thought of 'purity' in the teaching of the Seventh Commandment more than anything else. Any one who knows my 'big boy' knows that he is a clean boy. I have seen the results of my teachings with him and now he is an example for the little one to follow as he does so eagerly. Pure food, pure air, pure companionship, innocent amusement, clean and wholesome occupations—and that means to help mother a great deal and be under her supervision. The Seventh Commandment is a divine demand to hold ourselves ever untouched and uncontaminated by evil, remembering always that it is the pure in heart who see God; don't teach the child that God is far off and that we have to die to see Him. Make Him the child's spiritual companion always with him.

"When right-thinking builds its own impenetrable defense, no attack of the enemy can prevail, however cunningly devised.

"I find the stories of Joseph and Daniel make a great impression on the child, illustrating to him how one can maintain one's standard of purity amidst the most corrupt and licentious surroundings and be protected and delivered by steadfast obedience to God. In the adulteration of food or any commercial commodity, the baser element added is usually of a cheap and deleterious nature. So it is with the purity of the child; it becomes adulterated with the impure as it leaves the protection of the home life and comes in contact with the child who has not put on the armor of good thoughts. Keep the purity of the child unadulterated; and as he develops into manhood his early life will hold his thoughts to the pure; it is only evil thoughts that lead to evil deeds. The thoughts must be first. Teach the child that good thoughts are angels protecting him and helping all they may reach.

"Thought is the cause of action always. Keep the thought pure and unadulterated with evil and the action will be pure."

Keeping clean is not merely so many baths per week. It has to do with other things as well. The body, says St. Paul, is the Temple of the Holy Spirit. We are taught that the Holy Spirit actually comes into our bodies and possesses us—body, mind and soul. The little child's mind must be prepared, must be made receptive for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. If possible, see that his mental tastes and talents have only the best food to feed upon.

As his mind must be prepared, so must his body. To be worthy for such a high calling the body must be clean, healthy and wholesome. Safeguard it from disease early. We know what to do to protect the body against some diseases—diphtheria, smallpox, typhoid—and we know how to build up the body's resistance to prevent other diseases from gaining a foothold. Some invalids are wonderful Christians, but could the Holy Spirit not use a strong, healthy body to better advantage? This is more a parent's responsibility, one which a child hardly understands. See that he is trained in health habits—so thoroughly trained that he will not know any other habits.

But even radiant health cannot alone keep a child pure and holy. It helps. But this is a definite mental attitude which must be gently inclined towards cleanliness—to wash clean, play clean sports, play fair. Give the child a taste of these and he will come in time himself to hate filth, smut and other things that soil. No one can as easily give a child a taste for clean wholesome living as can his mother—if she is on her job.

Daily Bible Readings.

May 8—1 Peter 2:11-17.
May 9—1 Cor. 8:1-3.
May 10—John 1:43-51.
May 11—Luke 10:25-37.
May 12—Acts 4:13-22.
May 13—Eph. 5:21-6:9.
May 14—John 13:1-17.
May 15—James 1:7-21.
May 16—Matt. 25:14-30.
May 17—1 Tim. 6:6-21.
May 18—Mal. 3:8-18.
May 19—Matt. 7:1-12.
May 20—Eph. 3:14-21.
May 21—Heb. 9:16-28.

MEETING OF THE NATIONAL COUNCIL AND DEPARTMENTS

April 26-28, 1927

The Presiding Bishop, conscious of the many important matters demanding the attention of the National Council at its meetings April 26-28, sent a request to bishops and clergy asking that prayer be offered in their churches on April 24 that the members of the Council might be rightly guided in their deliberations. He reported a very general response from the clergy. The Bishop of Tennessee wrote that his request had been observed all over the Diocese. Other bishops reported the same. Miss Lindley reported for the Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary, that they were responding to this request of the Presiding Bishop.

Eighteen of the twenty-six members were present.

At the last meeting of the Council the Presiding Bishop was requested to use every endeavor to secure the completion of the payment of the deficit. He reported on the result of his endeavor.

The Bishop of Western New York addressed the Council in the interest of the Chateau Neuvic School near Bordeaux, France. This school was started by Captain P. H. Chadbourn about four years ago at his own charges. It occupies a beautiful property over one hundred acres in extent, with an extremely fine and majestic building. Captain Chadbourn is very anxious to have this school conducted as a Church School. He is making plans for exchange teachers and masters.

In order to insure the continuance of the school under Church auspices, he desires to turn the property over to the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society as a holding company, and to have a Board of Trustees appointed for the conduct of the school. The property is entirely clear of debt.

A special committee was appointed to confer with Bishop Brent and Captain Chadbcurn. The report of this committee, which was adopted by the Council, states "that the National Council is ready to assume the responsibility of appointing four out of seven trustees of the school as long as the school continues to operate, this responsibility to take effect when the school is incorporated and the property free of debt and acquired by the corporation, provided the charter is satisfactory to the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society".

Bishop Brent also reported for the executives of our Church colleges, presenting a protest from them against the 50 per cent cut in their appropriations, feeling that this was not fair in view of the smaller cuts made in other work. This also was given to a special committee to consider, in consultation with Bishop Brent, which reported that it was not prepared to recommend a change in the present appropriations, which recommendation was adopted by the Council.

The Bishop-Coadjutor of South Florida, Bishop Wing, addressed both the Department of Missions and the National Council. Bishop Wing stated that in response to the appeal for $60,000 needed to rehabilitate the work in the Diocese destroyed by the hurricane, only $12,000 had been received. He spoke of the splendid work carried on by St. Agnes' Colored Church in Miami, the congregation of which had given over $18,000 to build its new church and had raised the walls and was preparing to complete the building when the hurricane destroyed all that had been done. He said that it would require approximately $15,000 to rebuild. This was referred to the Special Committee on Undesignated Legacies.

A request from the Diocese of Sacramento for an additional appropriation of $6,000—$1,000 for Indian work and $5,000 for white work to supplement the missionary stipends, was referred to the Department of Missions.

A request from the Convention of the Diocese of Missouri for financial aid for student work at Columbia, Mo., was referred to the Department of Religious Education.

The Field Department requested the Presiding Bishop to appoint, subject to confirmation by the National Council, a Negro priest as General Secretary of the Field Department for work among Negroes. The National Council authorized the Presiding Bishop to take such action when a suitable man could be found for the position.

The Department of Religious Education held no formal meeting at this time, having postponed its regular meeting to hold it in connection with the Eighth Annual Conference on Religious Education, to be held in Rochester, N. Y., May 3-5. It reported the issuing of the first number of its new magazine, "Findings in Religious Education".

The Presiding Bishop announced the receipt of the resignation of the Bishop of Colorado as a member of the National Commission on Evangelism, and the appointment of the Bishop of Delaware in his place. This Commission was holding a meeting at the same time as the meeting of the National Council, and the Bishop-Coadjutor of Albany presented a report of the results of the Bishops' Crusade.

Canon Bolt, of St. John's, Newfoundland, brought the greetings of the Church in that Dominion to our Church here through the National Council.

Dr. Mansfield presented the following to the National Council, which was adopted unanimously by a rising vote:

"The National Council having learned that on May 3 the Rt. Rev. Arthur Selden Lloyd, D. D., will reach his seventieth birthday, extends to Bishop Lloyd its heartiest congratulations.

"His inspiring leadership of the mission work of the Church during the nineteen years he served as General Secretary and President of the Board of Missions can never be forgotten.

"The National Council is grateful for Bishop Lloyd's continued service on the Department of Missions. The Council assures Bishop Lloyd of its abiding affection and its good wishes for the future."

The Council was treated to the exhibition of an interesting moving picture film showing the work of the American Church Institute for Negroes in its various schools throughout the South. It is a three-reel film, requiring forty-five minutes to run, and will be available for exhibition purposes.

MISSIONS.

In accordance with the recommendation of the Department of Missions, the National Council made certain appropriations from the undesignated legacies received in the year 1926.

Changes were made in the Advance Work items in the District of Liberia, in order that an effort may be made to secure proper buildings and equipment for Cuttington College and Divinity School, at a cost of $50,000.

Hearty approval was given to the plans proposed by Bishop McKim for the enlargement of the school for nurses at St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, in accordance with the request of the Japanese Government. Under this arrangement, the nurses' training school will become a Semmon Gakko or "special college", licensed by the Educational Department. This will enable St. Luke's to accept the responsibility requested by the Japanese Government for training nurses to supervise the care of the health of Japanese children in the public school system throughout the country.

Certain powers of attorney for special purposes were granted to the Bishops of Porto Rico and the Canal Zone for purposes in connection with property matters.

Final adjustments were made in connection with the financial statements of the foreign and Latin American missions for the year 1926.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER FOR THE YEAR 1926.

Subject to Affirmative Action on $7,938.52 Overdrafts.

Budget as adopted by General Convention		$4,212,370.00
Reduced by National Council, February, 1926		200,410.00
Net appropriations		$4,011,960.00
Lapsed balances		297,067.11
Expenditures		$3,714,892.89
Income.
Dioceses and Districts	$3,028,983.51
China, Japan and Miscellaneous	79,271.22
United Thank Offering	270,000.00
Interest on Trust Funds	399,627.97
	$3,777,882.70
Surplus		62,989.81
	$3,777,882.70	$3,777,882.70

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLICITY.

Mr. Hobbs, for the Department of Publicity, reported further gains in the subscription list of The Spirit of Missions and a net improvement of $800 in the manufacturing cost account of the magazine for the first three months of this year as compared with last year, when a new high record was made.

The results of inquiry into the feasibility of a proposal to issue a superior general Church weekly were reported and the following resolution of the Department was adopted by the National Council:

That the matter of a national Church weekly issued by the National Council is accepted by the Council as of sufficient importance to receive consideration, and is referred back to the Department of Publicity for further consideration and report.

Mr. Hobbs reported the result of a Churchwide questionnaire to determine whether publication of a semi-printed weekly or monthly for parish bulletin use was wise or feasible. Grave mechanical and other difficulties required further study and consideration, it was decided.

The Rt. Rev. Hugh Latimer Burleson, of the Department, was appointed a committee of one to bring before the House of Bishops the desirability of having papers published in dioceses and missionary districts conform to a standard size or column width as a means of promoting cooperation between the Department of Publicity and the field.

MEETING OF THE DEPARTMENT OF MISSIONS.

A well attended meeting of the Department of Missions on April 26 gave its attention to a number of matters of importance in the domestic, Latin American and foreign fields.

Provision was made for the study of the missionary situation in the Diocese of Sacramento, in accordance with the communication received from the Diocesan Convention.

Steps were taken to inaugurate work among foreign-born Americans in South Dakota, necessitated by the increasing white immigration to the central part of the State.

The following women workers were appointed: Miss Margaret H. Viall for Lexington, Miss Marjorie Gasele for New Mexico, Miss Aline Cronshey for North Dakota, Deaconess Dorothea F. Betz for Salina, Miss A. E. Devlin for Upper South Carolina.

In all cases the support of these women will be drawn from appropriations already in existence and provided by the United Thank Offering of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Bishop Hulse reported the gift of land by a Cuban gentleman for the mission in Moron, and a plan to purchase land with local funds to increase our school facilities in Guantanamo.

The Department carefully reviewed the situation in China, although it did not find it possible, in view of existing uncertainties, to determine upon any definite policy. It is endeavoring to meet the requirements from day to day as they arise and as the bishops request.

The urgent need of providing a small additional monthly income for catechists, teachers and Bible women, whose salaries average in the neighborhood of $100 a year, still continues. The Bishops of Hankow and Anking especially are greatly distressed by these needs and beg for relief. The secretary reported with regret that less than $3,000 has been received so far for this purpose.

The Department approved of efforts made by the officers to place American members of the China staff who have had to leave their stations in other Oriental missions. A few have been transferred temporarily to the Philippine Islands for English-speaking work and a few to Japan.

About one hundred members of the Chinese staff, including wives and children, have come or are on their way to this country. Only one unmarried man has left China, and he was under the doctor's orders to do so immediately.

The Department heard an interesting report from Bishop Graves that steps have been taken to effect as many economies as possible to safeguard property and to maintain the Christian character of the schools. Approval was expressed of the action of the Bishop and his Council of Advice in these matters.

All of the American members of the staff of the Church General Hospital at Wuchang, having been obliged to leave the station, Bishop Roots was requested not to make any definite arrangements for restaffing the hospital until the commission the Department expects to send to China in September has opportunity for conference with him.

In order to meet the present high cost of living in Liberia, a small emergency allowance was added to the salaries of the American missionaries. A new plan for service in the field and for furloughs in this country was determined upon, with a view to avoiding, if possible, placing too heavy a physical tax upon missionaries, with consequent breakdowns. More frequent furloughs will require a considerable additional expenditure for travel.

In view of the fact that Bishop Campbell's home in Monrovia must necessarily accommodate American missionaries on their visits to Monrovia, an appropriation of $500 for its maintenance was made to relieve the Bishop of personal expense in providing the necessary hospitality.

Bishop Campbell submitted a proposal from the Liberian Convocation held in January, providing for the reduction of appropriations to some of the older stations on the coast, served by Liberian clergymen. The Department accepted the offer and recommended to the Convocation the desirability of a plan to bring about the self-support of all the coastal English-speaking congregations by 1936, when the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Liberian Mission will occur.

The Department of Missions has been fortunate in securing Dr. William J. Costar, of San Francisco, to relieve Dr. Grafton Burke for a year at the Hudson Stuck Memorial Hospital at Fort Yukon, Alaska.

Miss Ruth Jenkins, of Oregon, was appointed to fill a vacancy at St. Andrew's Priory, Honolulu.

A similar appointment was made of Dr. A. V. Hardy for St. John's University Medical School, Shanghai, the only part of the University now in operation.

Miss Mabel Hammond was appointed to fill a vacancy in the Philippine Islands.

Bishop Graves notified the Department that Professor H. F. MacNair, of St. John's University, has established a MacNair Fund from the proceeds of certain literary work done by him in addition to the service rendered to the University as Professor of Political Science and Government.

The Department recommended the Presiding Bishop to accept the resignation of Dr. William C. Sturgis. The Department recorded its regret in the following resolution:

Resolved, that with profound regret the Department of Missions recommends the acceptance by the Presiding Bishop of the resignation of Dr. William C. Sturgis. For eleven years Dr. Sturgis has filled one of the most important and exacting posts in connection with the Department of Missions with outstanding success. He is known to thousands of our people through his stimulating writing and his inspiring addresses. He has rendered service of especially important and far-reaching character in the courses of lectures he has given at the New York Training School for Deaconesses and the General Theological Seminary. The Department hopes that after the period of rest and change which Dr. Sturgis now considers essential, the Church may again have the benefit of his services at national headquarters.

Church Intelligence

Annual Convention and Conference, Y. P. S. L.

The third annual Convention and Conference of the Young People's Service League of the Province of Washington will be held in Pittsburgh May 13, 14 and 15. The program for these three days is as follows:

Friday Evening, Trinity Church.

5:00 P. M.—Registration office opens in Trinity Parish House.

6:00 P. M.—Cafeteria Supper.

7:45 P. M.—Opening service in Trinity Church. Address by the Rev. Mr. H. Boyd Edwards, rector of the Church of the Ascension.

8:45 P. M.—Social Hour.

Saturday Morning, St. Andrew's Church.

9:00 A. M.—Assembly in the Parish House.

9:15 A. M.—Brief addresses of welcome by Mr. William Barlow, President of the Y. P. L. of the Diocese of Pittsburgh, and Mr. Eliot S. Dallas, President of the Provincial Y. P. S. L.

9:30 A. M.—Address of welcome by the Bishop of Pittsburgh.

9:45 A. M.—Business Meeting—Appointment of the Nominating Committee.

10:00 A. M.—Conferences—(a) For Clergy, Adult Advisors and Officers; (Leader to be announced later); (b) "The Method of Discussion", by Mrs. W. W. Wishart; (c) "Objectives of the Y. P. L.", the Rev. Robert N. Meade, D. D., Chairman of the Committee on Young People's Work of the Province of Washington.

11:00 A. M.—Address to the Conference (speaker to be announced later). Summaries, Findings of Group Conferences.

12:00—Noonday Service conducted by the members of the St. Andrew's Y. P. L.

12:30 P. M.—Lunch.

Saturday Afternoon.

1:30 P. M.—Business Meeting (for delegates only) for the purpose of electing new officers.

2:00 P. M.—Conference, "Our Problems" (leader to be announced later).

3:00 P. M.—"Rubberneck Trip." Free to the delegates.

Saturday Evening.

6:30 P. M.—Banquet and Dance—Hotel Rittenhouse.

Sunday Morning.

8:00 A. M.—Corporate Communion and Breakfast, Church of the Ascension.

11:00 A. M.—Closing Service of the Conference, Calvary Church. Sermon by the Rev. E. J. Van Etten, D. D.

A cordial welcome is extended to all delegates.

All delegates are asked to communicate at once with the Chairman of the Hospitality Committee. It is necessary to have this information promptly in order to provide for the visitors in the homes of the people of Pittsburgh. Please address: the Rev. Robert N. Meade, D. D., 571 Darlington Road, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Conditions In China.

A cable from Bishop Roots, dated April 27, informs us:

That our Church property in Changsha and Siangtan, both in the Province of Hunan, has been confiscated—whether by soldiers or the workers' unions, is not stated. The Chinese workers in these stations have been temporarily withdrawn.

That contributions have been made from local sources, presumably Chinese, in the amount of $2,000 Mexican, for the purpose of increasing salaries of seventy catechists, Bible women and teachers for the months of April, May and June. The Bishop asks that a request in a letter evidently now on the way, asking for $4,000 Mexican from the Church in the United States for the same purpose, shall be granted.

That the tense situation as it affects foreigners is unchanged.

Miss Margaret Roberts, of St. Hilda's School, Wuchang, who was studying at the Peking Language School when it became necessary for her to leave under the advice of the American minister, and who is now in Seoul, Korea, is being transferred for a year to St. Margaret's School, Tokyo. Arrangements have been made to supply her with funds through the Presbyterian Board in New York and the Presbyterian Mission in Seoul.

A cable from Bishop Graves from Shanghai, April 27, informs us:

That the Bishop and Dr. Potts advise Prof. Walter H. Taylor, of St. John's University, to accept a position offered to him by one of the educational institutions in this country in its Chemistry Department for one year.

That Miss Elizabeth Roberts, of St. Mary's Hall, Shanghai, can be released for a year. Arrangements are now under way to transfer her to St. Agnes' School, Kyoto.

That Miss Katherine Cook of St. Mary's Hall, Shanghai, is returning to this country by way of Europe.

Bishop Graves, in a cable of April 25, asks that the Rev. John W. Nichols return to Shanghai during the month of August.

The cable also informs us that St. Mary's Hall is closed until September 1, 1928.

A cable received April 25 from Bishop Roots says that Edward Littell left Hankow on April 23 on the S. S. Tuckwo, carrying deeds. The situation is unchanged. The reference to deeds is understood to mean that Mr. Littell is taking to Shanghai for safe deposit there all deeds to property in the Missionary District of Hankow, held in the name of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society or the American Church Mission.

Help The Church Serve The Nurses.

To the Bishops and Clergy of the Church in the United States and Canada:

Great numbers of student nurses from elsewhere come to our Training Schools for Nurses in New York and many graduate nurses also come to this city for study, or to accept positions.

I should like to assure them of a personal welcome from the clergy and others in this diocese and to aid them in finding a Church home.

If you will send me the names of any who are connected with your dioceses or parishes, we will gladly arrange for some one to call upon them.

Those who come to New York as strangers are often slow to form parochial relationships, and for nurses this is sometimes especially difficult, owing to their hours of work.

Our parish clergy and chaplains in hospitals report to me the great devotion of the nurses whose work they observe, and we on our part wish to assure them that the Church welcomes them to New York and stands ready to aid them in every way possible.

I have asked the Rev. L. Ernest Sunderland, at 30 Bleecker Street, to receive the replies to this letter and to take action in regard to any names that may be sent to him.

William T. Manning,
Bishop of New York.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

Deaconess Williams Talks to College Girls.

During the early part of April Deaconess Maria P. Williams, of Dante, Virginia, conducted a series of life-work conferences with the Episcopal girls at several educational institutions in the diocese.

At Sweet Briar she spoke to about thirty young ladies.

At Stuart Hall, Staunton, she addressed the entire student body and afterward spoke to several groups and individuals.

In the Chapel at Hollins College, the Deaconess held the Litany service on Friday afternoon and afterward saw a number of the young ladies. She also visited Randolph-Macon Woman's College at Lynchburg.

One of the important matters discussed by Deaconess Williams at these conferences was volunteer missionary work within this diocese.

Each summer the women missionaries in the Associate Missions field in this diocese are assisted by volunteers who come both from Southwestern Virginia and from other dioceses as well. Being well qualified by her long experience in mission work, Deaconess Williams renders invaluable assistance to the Rev. H. H. Young, Dean of Associate Missions, in securing and placing and advising these summer workers.

T. A. S.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. H. St. Geo. Tucker, D. D., Coadjutor.

Rappahannock Valley Convocation.

The spring meeting of the Rappahannock Valley Convocation was held in Ware Church, Gloucester County, the Rev. R. A. Magill, rector, April 26 and 28, and proved to be of unusual interest and value.

The opening service, Tuesday night, featured an address on the Bishops' Crusade by the Rev. W. E. Cox, of Richmond. Mr. Cox pointed out that the Crusade was the logical development from the Nation-Wide Campaign and that in it a new movement was started that was to be a permanent part of the progress of the Church.

On Wednesday at the service of Holy Communion, the sermon was preached by the Rev. Floyd Cartwright, rector of the Churches in King George County, who emphasized the seriousness of the ethical teaching of Christ and the necessity of sincerity of living among Christians.

At the afternoon meeting Mr. Blake T. Newton, of Westmoreland County, spoke on the work that could be done by the laymen and the real need of laymen taking an active interest in the Church's program. He was followed by Mr. Robert Beverley, who reiterated Mr. Newton's plea and urged the laity to support to their utmost the Bishops' Crusade. A short address on the need of social service activity was made by the Rev. C. W. Sheerin, Convocational representative on the Diocesan Social Service Board.

At the business session, two important resolutions were passed. One urging the diocese to support the Virginia Churchman was presented by Mr. Robert Beverley, and one urging the Diocesan Council not to increase the budget was offered, and after due discussion passed. The representatives on the Diocesan Missionary Society, Mr. Newton and the Rev. Dudley Boogher, told of the activities and meetings of the year.

An unusual feature of the spring meeting was the gathering of the representatives of the Woman's Auxiliary. Their program was timely as addresses were made by Miss Elizabeth Barber and the Rev. R. A. Magill on the present situation in China. Miss Barber served for eighteen years in the interior of China and Mr. Magill was a missionary for several years. Letters were read from missionaries in China which threw light on the perplexed condition of the Christians in that country.

Other addresses were made by Miss Sallie Dean and the Rev. C. W. Sheerin. Miss Dean spoke of the work done all over the world by the Auxiliary, and Mr. Sheerin spoke on the practical necessity of a missionary program.

Jubilee Lenten Offering.

Offerings totaling $8,875.13 were made in the Lenten contributions of the Sunday Schools of the Richmond Churches, it was announced at the Jubilee Service, held in Grace and Holy Trinity Church Sunday afternoon, May 1. Reports to be received from several churches are expected to bring this amount to over $9,000.

The Rev. Philip A. Arthur, rector of the Church of the Ascension, Highland Park, presided at the services, assisted by the Rev. Reginald G. Davis, of Grace and Holy Trinity, and the Rev. William H. Laird, of St. Paul's Church. An address was made by the Rev. Hugh W. Sublett, D. D., rector of St. John's.

The offering from the Sunday School at St. Mark's led the list with $1,286, raised for the missionary work of the Church. St. Thomas' Church, Ginter Park, was second, with an offering of $1,200.

Crusade Follow-Up Mission.

During Easter Week a Bishops' Crusade follow-up mission was held in St. Paul's Church, Haymarket, the Rev. Warren A. Seager, rector. In spite of the bad weather which naturally affected the attendance, especially from outlying sections of the parish, those who attended felt well repaid for their effort. The missioner, the Rev. Robert A. Magill, preached most effectively. A special service of rededication, with the Holy Communion, was held the following Sunday morning.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland D. D., Bishop.

Thirtieth Anniversary of St. John's, Lansdowne.

Ministers of all churches in Lansdowne and members of their congregations on Saturday night, April 30, were the guests of St. John's Church in connection with the opening ceremonies of a two-days' commemoration of the Thirtieth Anniversary of St. John's.

Other special guests included the Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, Bishop of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, and Mrs. Garland; the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, Bishop of New York; the Rev. Lyman P. Powell, rector of St. Margaret's Church, New York City, and the Rev. Crosswell McBee, rector of historic Old St. David's Church on the Pennsylvania Main Line at Radnor. The latter three are former rectors of St. John's. On Sunday the present rector, the Rev. Charles E. Tuke, conducted a "Commemoration Service". There was a Sunday-School Rally in the afternoon, and at night a special service on "Memorializing the Past" was held.

New Rector of The Church of The Advocate.

The Rev. Thomas Leslie Gossling, rector of St. Paul's Church, West Whiteland, Pa., and Instructor in Science at the Church Farm School of the Diocese of Pennsylvania at Glen Loch, Pa., has accepted a call to the rectorship of the Church of the Advocate, Philadelphia.

The Advocate has been without a rector since last October, when the Rev. John H. Lever resigned to take work in another diocese, during most of which time the Rev. R. B. W. Hutt, formerly rector of the Church of Our Saviour, Jenkintown, has been serving as locum tenens. Dr. Hutt next September goes to Trinity College, Hartford, as Assistant Professor of Philosophy, and on October 1, Mr. Gossling will take charge at the Advocate.

Mr. Gossling is a Philadelphian. He is a graduate of Lehigh University and the Philadelphia Divinity School. For eight years before going to West Whiteland, Mr. Gossling was rector of St. Matthias Church, Philadelphia. Prior to that he served as an assistant at Grace Church, Mt. Airy, and was minister-in-charge of the Incarnation, Morrisville, Bucks County, Pa.

R. R. W.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstern, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Churchmen's Club.

The spring dinner of the Churchmen's Club of Maryland was held on Wednesday evening, April 20, at the Hotel Emerson. There were about three hundred and fifty men present, notwithstanding the Grand Opera, which was being given at the Lyric and the annual dinner of the graduates of the Yale University. A very interesting address was given by Canon H. J. Cody, of Toronto, Canada, on Westminster Abbey, the Shrine of the English-Speaking People.

Dr. Dame To Leave The Diocese.

The Rev. Dr. William Page Dame, rector of the Memorial Protestant Episcopal Church, Baltimore, has announced his decision to accept the call to become rector of Christchurch School, Middlesex County, Virginia.

His resignation from Memorial Church, with which he has been associated as assistant minister, associate rector and rector for twenty years, will take effect July 1.

Dr. Dame was born June 12, 1875, in Norfolk, Virginia. He was brought to Baltimore when a small boy, his father having accepted the rectorship of Memorial Church. He was ordained deacon in 1901 and priest the following year. His diaconate was spent in mountain work in Albemarle County, Virginia. In 1902 he came to Memorial Church as assistant minister. A year later he accepted a call to St. Bartholomew's Church, Baltimore, where he served six years. He then was made associate rector of Memorial Church, and on the death of his father in 1923 automatically became rector.

Dr. Dame has been very active in Diocesan and civic affairs and all Baltimore is grieving at the thought of losing him.

J. A. M.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

National Cathedral Association.

The Annual Meeting of the Committees of the National Cathedral Association was held on Friday, April 29, at Mt. St. Alban. A business meeting was opened in Whitby Hall and this was followed by the opening address by the Bishop of Washington, the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D. Others scheduled to make addresses were the Rt. Rev. James DeWolf Perry, D. D., Bishop of Rhode Island; the Rt. Rev. Philip Mercer Rhinelander, D. D., LL. D., D. C. L., and Mr. George Wharton Pepper, LL. D., D. C. L. The closing feature of the meeting was a tour of Cathedral Close and construction work, including the new Norman Chapel in the Crypts, conducted by the Dean of Washington. The Norman Chapel, known as the Chapel of the Resurrection and built as a memorial to the late Bishop Harding of Washington, was used for the first time on Easter, when Morning Prayer was said then by the Chancellor of the Cathedral, the Rev. William L. DeVries, D. D.

The Laymen's Service Association.

The annual meeting of the Laymen's Service Association in the Diocese of Washington was held at Diocesan House on Wednesday evening, April 27. There was a business meeting with election of officers, followed by addresses and discussion. Mr. Hugh T. Nelson, Executive Secretary of the Washington Committee making arrangements for the General Convention to be held in Washington, October, 1928, explained some of the plans of the committee and some of the things expected of the laity of the diocese in this connection. Col. John H. Finney led a general discussion on the subject, "The Bishops' Crusade, Its Effect and the Follow-up Work".

Presentation of The U. T. O.

The spring service for the presentation of the United Thank Offering of Washington was held in Epiphany Church, Tuesday evening, April 26. The service was conducted by the Rev. Dr. J. W. Morris and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Clarence Parker, rector of St. John's Church, Bethesda, Md. In the Diocese of Washington the United Thank Offering is presented twice a year at a special service and kept in charge by the custodian who presents the full amount at the General Convention meeting. This fund in the Diocese of Washington is now in the neighborhood of $5,000, with more than a year before its final presentation.

Meeting of The Church School Service League.

The regular spring meeting of the Church School Service League in the Diocese of Washington was held in St. Alban's Guild Hall on April 30. Children from all the different parish branches were represented. A short service was followed by a business meeting and address, and, according to an established custom at these meetings, refreshments were served for the children by the branch acting as host. Miss Emma W. Abbott, Diocesan Director of the League, reported interesting and important work done by the children, including Christmas presents provided by five hundred and fifty-three children of the diocese and a large sum of money raised by the children for offering in the five fields of service.

Meeting of The Churchman's League.

The annual meeting of the Churchman's League of the Diocese of Washington was held on Thursday evening, April 28, at the Cosmos Club, with Mr. George A. King, president, as chairman.

After a review of the year's work by President King the League elected officers as follows: George B. Selden, president; Dr. W. Sinclair Bowen, vice-president; Dr. Alvin T. Gregory, secretary; Dr. Charles Diedel, treasurer, and the following to act as an executive committee, together with the other officers: the Rev. George W. Atkinson, the Rev. E. P. Wroth, the Rev. C. T. Warner and Maj. F. G. Munson.

An address on English Cathedrals and the Washington Cathedral, illustrated with his own slides, was delivered by the Rev. Dr. G. C. F. Bratenahl.

The Choral Evensong in Bethlehem Chapel on May 1 was, by reason of several of its features, a service in commemoration of Admiral George Dewey, whose remains are buried beneath the Chapel. May 1, the twenty-ninth anniversary of the Battle of Manila, was referred to in the sermon preached by Bishop Freeman of Washington, and the music, under the direction of Edgar Priest, Cathedral organist, included as offertory anthem, "Souls of the Righteous", by Tertius Noble.

The Anniversary Service held every night during the week at the Gospel Mission on John Marshall Place, were brought to a close on Friday, May 6, when the sermon was preached by the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington. Services and meetings were held all during the week in celebration of the twenty-first anniversary of the mission and ministers of different denominations were the preachers.

M. M. W.

St. Mark's Church: Sunday, May 1, the Feast of St. Philip and St. James, was the fifth anniversary of the Rev. William Henry Pettus, as rector of St. Mark's Church, Washington. The Rev. Mr. Pettus came from St. James' Church, West Somerville, Mass., where he had been the rector for over nine years, succeeding at St. Mark's the Rev. Dr. Caleb R. Stetson, now rector of Trinity Parish, New York City. During these five years St. Mark's has made progress, spiritually and materially. Large numbers have been baptized and confirmed. A parish hall has been built, and improvements have been made in the church property.

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. C. M. Beckwith, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, D. D., Coadjutor.

Handsome Montgomery Church Completed.

Opening services in the newly completed Church of the Ascension, Montgomery, Alabama, were held the fourth Sunday in Lent, continuing throughout the entire week. Special preachers were Bishop McDowell, the Rev. Oscar deWolf Randolph of Birmingham, and the Rev. Charles A. Stakely, D. D., pastor of the First Baptist Church.

Seventeen years was the Church of the Ascension in building. The first unit, the nave, was finished in 1910, with a temporary chancel. In 1922, under the direction of the present rector, the Rev. Peerce N. McDonald, the second section was erected, including the foundation and walls of the crossing, transepts and chancel up to the first floor, with temporary roofing. The remainder was completed on March 25, 1927.

Plans were prepared by Cram, Goodhue and Ferguson, architects. The builder was Mr. Algernon Blair, Junior Warden, prominent in diocesan, as well as local affairs. In the great tower is a tablet bearing the following inscription: "Blair Tower. In grateful recognition of the long outstanding and exceptional services of Algernon Blair to the spiritual life of this parish, the vestry and congregation have named this tower in his honor and have caused this tablet to be erected. An honest man is the noblest work of God. A. D 1927."

The Rev. Peerce N. McDonald took charge of this church in December, 1919. Under his leadership the parish has grown in numbers and spirituality. He has quietly, but effectively led his people on to the completion of this church, they having meanwhile neglected no obligation to the Diocese or General Church.

G. W. R.

The New Church of The Ascension, Montgomery, Ala.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor

The Annual Pilgrimage To Cape Henry.

On Tuesday, April 26, the annual pilgrimage of the Norfolk Clericus was made to Cape Henry to commemorate the first landing of the English Expedition which finally reached Jamestown Island. This expedition stopped for a few days at Cape Henry and before leaving the Cape had prayers and erected a cross. Near this spot and under a large, rustic cross, the Norfolk Clericus holds a service each year. There were ten of the clergy present this year. After singing "Onward Christian Soldiers", a Scripture lesson was read by the Rev. D. W. Howard, D. D., rector of St. Luke's, Norfolk. The Rev. H. H. Covington, D. D., rector of Old St. Paul's, Norfolk, read the Creed and Prayers. The Benediction was pronounced by the Rev. Charles H. Holmead, Chairman of the Clericus and rector of Trinity, Portsmouth. The service closed with the singing of the hymn, "O God Our Help in Ages Past". In the Procession was borne a large English Church flag with the red cross of St. George on a white field. This flag, similar to the one probably used by the Chevaliers, was presented to the Clericus by the Woman's Club of Norfolk with the understanding that it be kept by the rector of Old St. Paul's, Norfolk, as custodian.

After the service had ended, appropriate patriotic exercises were held under the auspices of the Norfolk Woman's Club. A large crowd was present, and music was furnished by a band.

N. E. T.

MISSISSIPPI.

Rt. Rev. T. DuB. Bratton, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. M. Green, D. D., Coadjutor.

Crusade Commission Appointed.

The Diocese of Mississippi will continue the work of the Bishops' Crusade under the direction of the Rev. Phillip Davidson, rector of St. James' Church, who has been reappointed chairman. The following persons have also been appointed members of the Commission: The Rev. Messrs. Walter E. Capers, Jackson, Miss.; Val H. Sessions, Bolton, Miss.; Joseph Kuehnle, Natchez, Miss.; F. C. Penniman, Meridian, Miss.; Bartow B. Ramage, Gulfport, Miss.; Robert Emerson, Grenada, Miss.; Mrs. Tracy Welch, Laurel, Miss.; Mrs. P. L. Hennissey, Vicksburg, Miss.; Mrs. Geo. B. Forbes, Jackson, Miss.; Miss Catherine Compton, Vicksburg, Miss., and Hon. J. T. Thomas, Grenada.

The Commission held its initial meeting in St. Andrew's Parish House, Jackson, Monday afternoon, May 2.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. S Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, D. D., Suffragan

Memorial Windows Dedicated.

Three stained glass windows, which have been recently installed in St. James' Church, were dedicated Sunday morning, May 1, by the rector, the Rev. Dr. Crowder. They are the gift of Mrs. J. E. T. Rutter in memory of her husband, J. Edgar Thomson Rutter, and his parents, Thomas Rutter and Georgeanna Renaud Rutter. Three generations of this family have been members of the Vestry of St. James' Church.

The Rev. Annesley T. Young, for thirteen years an official chaplain on the staff of the New York Protestant Episcopal City Mission Society, has been appointed to the position of Field Work-

(Continued on page 22.)

Family Department

May.

1. Scond Sunday after Easter, SS. Philip and James.
8. Third Sunday after Easter.
15. Fourth Sunday after Easter.
22. Fifth (Rogation) Sunday after Easter.
23, 24, 25, Rogation days.
26. Thursday, Ascension Day.
29. Sunday after Ascension Day.
31. Tuesday.

Collect for Third Sunday After Easter.

Almighty God, Who showest to them that are in error the light of Thy truth, to the intent that they may return into the way of righeousness; Grant unto all those who are admitted into the fellowship of Christ's religion, that they may avoid those things that are contrary to their profession, and follow all such things as are agreeable to the same; through Our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

For the Southern Churchman.

The Gift.

E. J. W. Adams.

Would the offering of my soul
Were to Thee a garden sweet
Running over with fragrant flowers
To lay, Lord, at Thy feet.

Would the offering of my mind
Were to Thee a snowy height
Where dwelt thoughts serene and pure,
A mind for Thy delight.

Would the offering of my heart
Were to Thee a flame of love
Burning over with new zeal
To reach Thy throne above!

Daybreak.

Asaph, one of the psalmists, had grown envious at the arrogant, when he saw "the prosperity of the wicked"; his heart was bitter with jealousy, and he doubted divine justice—doubted until he "went to the sanctuary". But there he was reminded that no possible good can be compared with God's fellowship and love, and the full dawn broke upon him. Then sang Asaph:

"Nevertheless I am continually with thee,
Thou hast holden my right hand:
Thou shalt guide me by thy counsel,
And afterwards receive me into glory."

Under the juniper tree Elijah sank in despair, and asked that his life might be taken away; but at dawn, refreshed and strengthened, he started toward the mount of God. And it was high noon when at last, after being swept by wind, earthquake and fire, he heard the voice of the Lord. Rebuking his fears, and bidding him face his task, the Voice assured the prophet that the messenger of God is ever secure, the cause of God can never fail.

Captive Israel was finding it hard to sing the songs of Zion in a strange land, but to its every hopeless soul Isaiah proclaimed the message of the morning: "I, the Lord thy God, will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not; I will help thee."

Daniel, the patriot, was praying to his God in penitent confession when there came the joyous assurance that the seventy weeks of waiting were to end; Messiah, the Prince, was to come. Such was the promise. It was like the day-star in the deep night.

Suddenly, in Northern Galilee, the long-expected Saviour appears, great David's greater Son:

"The people which sat in darkness saw great light, and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death, light is sprung up."

Daybreak—it is daybreak for the world!

In time He who is the Brightness of His Father's glory is Himself cheered by David's message of the dawn. Even under the shadow of the cross He is lifted on wings of light when, lonely, forsaken, He asserts: "Yet I am not alone; because the Father is with me." This only begotten Son who is in the bosom of the Father is the Light of the World, and He sends forth His followers to proclaim His glorious gospel and to extend the knowledge of His presence into all the darkened earth. Amid their toil and hardships His servants are sustained by one supreme assurance: "Lo, I am with you alway."

His disciples also He calls "the light of the world". Such radiance greets their appearing, such splendor marks their message, such joy and hope and triumph crown their lives and so much of help and healing mark their ministry that they well may be described as moving on "the wings of the morning"; their coming brings to the world an advancing dawn.

St. Francis, of Assisi, was said to have met his Lord alone in the chapel on the mountainside, and then to have poured out his life in sacrificial service; he labored to dry the tears of sorrow, and to dispel the shadows cast by doubt and sin and pain.

Visions of the Light enabled St. Bernard, of Clairvaux, to teach the Church to sing of resting in the presence of Christ, and to go forth to service in His name. Even through the dark ages of ignorance and superstition great souls, in secret communion with their Lord, were dwelling in heavenly light.

Wycliffe and Tyndale soon were fashioning new wings to the widening dawn; they released the pages of Scripture, and sent out the radiance of its truth into all the world.

And now shines in darkness the herolight of a third David, follower of the psalmist's greater Son. In the heart of darkest Africa, David Livingstone, the light-bearer, is supported by the promise of the presence of his Lord. In his train follow a glorious brotherhood. Like Livingstone's is the experience of Carey and Judson and Morrison and Moffat, and all the company of apostles and prophets and messengers of Christ who have gone forth on their errand of light in every age and land.—Selected.

A School of 10,000 Orphans.

In Alexandropol, Armenia, that "City of Children" where the Near East Relief orphans are housed in former Russian army barracks, I used to stand before a group of a thousand children and give health talks. Of course, many things I had learned in my nursing course as important to good health had to be omitted from these talks. For instance, one could encourage an American child to take a daily shower or tub, but when there is a shortage of water in the orphanages, so that at times the children cannot even get the usual weekly bath, and in a city that has only two or three bathtubs, with none at all in the country districts, one must talk about sponge baths. Then in teaching how to balance foods in the daily diet one must be careful not to criticize the orphanage menu. It is impossible to insist on toothbrushes, as the orphanage does not furnish them. In a country where the thermometer goes down to twenty below zero, where the children sleep in dormitories that are never heated, and where some children sleep with only two thin cotton blankets on their beds, it would be difficult to insist on having all the windows open at night, American style. Such vigorous ventilation is for people who can afford to have enough blankets to keep them warm. It is hard to insist on all the necessary rules of hygiene, not criticize our own orphanage department, and still be thoroughly practical. We must not try to insist on the children doing things which are physically impossible in the surroundings in which they live.

Hygiene was taught of course, for the purpose of changing the habits the children had formed when they were homeless and without care or training. I soon realized that with so large a group it was almost impossible to check up on the children and discover whether the knowledge being imparted to them was really functioning. Then a new idea came to me. Out on the land which has been assigned to Near East Relief for its agricultural work we had built a very small "model village" of houses similar to those of the people of that country, in which one roof covers both the home for the family and the stable for the cattle, sheep and chickens. We had separate doors and a wall between the home and the stable. To this village children from the great orphanage were sent in groups and were given actual experience in taking care of the cows and the chickens, in making butter and cheese, in cooking meals for a small family, and in keeping the home and the habitation of the animals clean. Why not give our hygiene lessons to the children as they went out in these smaller groups? It was done, and this village was the place where we actually got results from our teaching of hygiene. We found it possible to really arouse the interest of the children, not merely give them something to memorize. We scored personal tidiness. We gave little demonstrations to emphasize the results of observing the laws of health, having a special costume for the child who took the part of the old witch Ignorance, who was the greatest troublemaker.

When winter came and the weather became so cold that the water mains froze and we had to send the ox cart to the river and break the ice to get water to fill the barrels, it became very difficult to keep the work up to the required standard of cleanliness—especially as the children did not have clothing warm enough for such weather. But we thought it would not be wise to lower the standards if we could encourage the children to work rapidly, and through exercise keep themselves warm. So a Saturday evening party was arranged, at which the orchestra of blind boys played, and simple refreshments were served. All the children who had worked satisfactorily during the week received invitations, while those who were slack in their work or had run away were not invited.

After the first party the number of slackers went down almost to zero, and those weeks in the model village made a decided change in the habits of the children.—Pauline Jordan.

For the Southern Churchman.

Easter Morn.

Josephine Teakle Flournoy.

The softly glowing radiance
That heralds the rising sun,
On Easter morn more beauteous
Proclaims the day begun.

The first bright beams appearing—
As in the olden days—
To those exalted, faring
Forth to God's House of Praise.

And there 'midst bliss fragrant
And flowers rare and sweet,
We kneel in blest communion
Our risen Lord to greet.

We kneel at Christ's own altar
The Cross its glorious sign,
And there 'midst Easter lilies
Our Sun of Life doth shine.

Invulnerable Belief.

From one point of view, you might measure the greatness of any power by measuring the amount of contradiction to itself and to its ultimate purposes which it can patiently suffer to continue. So, for example, the man in charge of men or of boys, who has real power, will discover, without agitation, a degree of liberty among his subordinates which would cause panic in a commander who had reason to mistrust the security of the order for which he was responsible. The decline, again, of Napoleon has been measured by the increasing inferiority of the ministers of whom he was able to make use. The subserviency of the ministers is an indication of the smallness, not of the greatness of the Potentate. Lyall has a sentence in his article on the free Rajput States of India: "It is a sound political as well as a mechanical truth that you can have no real support without resistance, or the capacity to resist." These truisms abundantly illustrate themselves in the affairs of parishes, Sunday schools, parochial church councils, industrial relations, international amities and hostilities. The power of a dominion can be measured by the liberty which it can allow to its subjects.

Looking at the world in the light of this truism, you can see that the pessimists are a perverse people. They are using an argument which argues all on the side of faith and hope as though it argued for pessimism. We are entitled to use against the unbelieving the very arguments on which they most rely; to turn against them their own guns. If they are armed with sixteen-inch guns, so much the worse for their position!

The Christian belief does this very thing. No one is more convinced of the badness of badness than the Christian. The Jew learned, as none of his neighbors seems to have learned, how to use the word sin. And the Christian added new meaning to the word. Every heightening of man's notion of the love of God deepens the ingratitude of the badness of men. The ghastliness of war, the cold-heartedness of Mammon, the coarseness of impure life, the meanness of pessimism, all show themselves blacker in a Christian light than in any other. Yet the Christian believes in God enduring, allowing, suffering all these to go on.

The Old Testament, contemplating the impossible, suggests that in the mind of God there might arise the thought of blotting out His creatures from the book of the living and beginning all over again, with Noah; with Moses. And Piers Plowman has the same thought: "He might amend in a minute-while: all that mis-standeth." But God would have to cease to be God to do that. He will not throw down and break the instrument because it takes time to tune the strings. Piers Plowman says:

My time is to abide.
Who suffreth more than God?

And that sentence—Who suffreth more than God?—takes you from the story which Jesus told of the farmer who made no short work with his field of wheat, to Jesus, the teller of the story. You look up, as it were, into the face of Jesus as He speaks. And there is He, seeing the world and its weediness; the perversions by men of every kind of faculty and power and success and influence with which they are endowed; the misuses going on alongside of the uses of every kind of strength and health. The Crucifixion is the supreme example of that. If we can gaze at Jesus on the cross and still believe in men, our belief is invulnerable. It believes in a love which can redeem man, even though man can do this.—Guardian (English).

A Word in Season.

When Bishop Charles B. Mitchell was pastor of St. James' Methodist Episcopal Church, Chicago, he was accustomed to play golf with a member of his congregation, a prominent business man, who was much absorbed in money-making, and had never joined the church.

Dr. Mitchell that day had rather a hard time; and his friend, who was a remarkably fine player, could not resist the temptation to refer to the preacher's lack of skill, while at the same time complimenting him on his ability in the pulpit.

"Doctor," said he, "if you could play golf as well as you can preach, you would beat us all."

An inspiration came to the pastor, and without a moment's hesitation he replied:

"Mr. A——, if you were as good a Christian as you are a golf player, how wonderfully God could use you!"

The business man's face dropped, but he made no reply to what was evidently a home thrust.

At the dinner table that evening his wife ventured to ask the cause of her husband's quiet and subdued manner. To her surprise he exclaimed:

"Dr. Mitchell thrust a knife into me today, and it hurts."

"Why, my dear," replied Mrs. A——, "that's very surprising. No man could be kinder than our pastor. I cannot see how he could say anything that would hurt your feelings."

Then the gentleman told what had happened on the golf grounds, which led to a long and serious conversation, ending with prayer and the complete dedication of that man's life to Christ.

A few Sundays after, he was received into the church, and soon developed into a most active Christian worker, consecrating his time and money to the higher things of life. In one year he gave no less than $100,000 to various religious purposes connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Dr. Mitchell's prophecy concerning him was amply fulfilled.

For the Southern Churchman.

I Sing.

Julia W. Cockcroft.

To tune an ear
To sweeter hear,
An eye to clearer see;

To tune a mind
To better think,
A heart more true to be;

To inspire a soul
Toward a goal
Higher and sublime.

This is the burden
Of my song—
Singing, as I climb.

The Living Christ.

It is the Christ of the present, and not merely the Christ of the past, with whom we have to do. Argue round and round the subject as we may, it is the living Christ who is the source and infallible attestation of what we know of God. It is Christ we need, Christ Himself, not theories about Christ, not simply the imitation of Christ; no, not primarily the attempt to realize the ideals of Christ in our common life. We want what unaided intellect can never demonstrate; we want to know, with the same kind of immediacy as attends our dearest relations with other souls in this world, a blessed fellowship that is not of this world. And this unspeakably precious experience has been from apostolic times the vital nerve of Christianity, the assured possession of the truly Christian soul. It is not so much in evidence just now as it ought to be in the life of the Church at large; we are putting the emphasis too much upon other things. But it is not, and never can be, wholly absent wherever Christianity is being faithfully witnessed to the world. And I will venture upon the prophecy that its revival will be the note of the next great religious awakening, whenever and however it may come.—Rev. R. J. Campbell, D. D.

The Personality of Jesus Christ.

Jesus Christ is alive, or He never was, and history fully deals with that point. He is a personality and not an abstraction. Boys are not attracted to abstractions, nor are adults, for that matter.

Let us hold before our boys a living, divine Christ, a Man, though a divine one, possessed of all the manly vigor and ruggedness which the gospel story discloses, a Man having all those fine qualities and characteristics which a boy instinctively admires and will so quickly emulate.

Let us show them that with all these grand human qualities He also has infinite wisdom, limitless power and understanding love. That He invites every boy to a very wonderful kind of comradeship with Him, and that no boy's highest ambition and aspiration can ever find fulfilment without Christ as his ever-present Helper and all-powerful Comrade.

Surely we can bring our boys face to face with Jesus Christ if we know Him ourselves, and, if we do not, here then is our own real opportunity.—St. Andrew's Cross.

For the Young Folks

I Shall Not Die.

I shall not die:
  I shall just fall asleep.
And pass away to that blest shore
  Where sorrow, pain or cause to weep
Can come nor trouble more.

I shall not die;
  This body must decay;
My spirit freed shall upward fly
  To realms of endless day;
I shall live on, and on, in yonder home on high.

I shall not die;
  But like a weary child
Asleep upon its mother's breast,
  My soul shall fly to pastures green,
No more to be by earthly cares opprest.

I shall not die;
  No, never, never die!
I am immortal. This glad soul of mine
  Made in God's image, to its home will fly,
To live forever in that realm divine.
—W. H. Myers, in The Christian Advocate.

For the Southern Churchman.

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

The Promises of Jesus.

M. L. G.

There are two things to learn about promises.

One is never to make a bad promise. Herod made one, when he promised the daughter of Herodias anything she might ask, to the half of his kingdom. She chose something that made him a murderer. Judas made one, when he promised to betray his Master for thirty pieces of silver. Herod was sorry afterwards and Judas was sorry—yet those dreadful promises were kept, and Herod and Judas lost.

But the promises of Jesus are all of life, rest, His presence with us, the gift of His Spirit, life everlasting in heaven with Him. Herod's promise and the wicked promise of Judas—these had better have been broken, though the breaking meant death. But on Jesus' promises we may rest, knowing they come from a heart that loves us, and wills only good to us.

The second thing to learn about promises is to keep a good promise when we have made it. And will Jesus do this? Let us think of some promises He made to His friends. "I will come and heal him"; "Go thy way; thy son liveth"; "After three days I will rise again"; "I will not leave you comfortless". How greatly these promises were kept! More richly than those to whom they were made could imagine, so that we read of the uncertainty of Thomas about the resurrection, and that later in Galilee "some doubted".

But we need not doubt. "Lo, I am with you alway"; "I will receive you unto myself"—these are promises He will keep as truly as any He ever made, for

He Is Faithful That Promised.

The Way Out.

Annie May was going over to Aunt Hettie's to spend the day. There was a new cousin there, one who had come out to spend a week, and, of course, Annie May wanted to meet her and play with her. Her name was Annie Marie, and she and Annie May had almost as near the same age as they had the same name; so it was almost like being twin cousins.

Annie Marie lived in a city in California and Annie May on a farm in Texas, and so it happened that they had never seen each other. That was really one reason why Annie May was so excited as she ran across the pasture to Aunt Hettie's.

"It's most the same as having a twin sister that you've heard about all your life but never did see," is what Annie May said to herself as she went tripping through the pasture in the bright November sunshine.

"I'm glad it's not raining and glad I have on a new dress and my hair looks nice and my shoes are clean, and oh! I've lots of things to be thankful for!" Annie May was conversing cheerfully with herself when she lost her way.

She didn't get very far out of the path, and she was sure it would not be hard to find again; but while she was finding it she stumbled into the bog that the cattle had made by the edge of Willow Brook.

The place looked smooth enough and had some bright green grass growing over the rough places, but just as soon as Annie May stepped on the bog she began going down in it. The ugly, sticky mud came up and over her nice clean shoes and her fresh pink socks, and it frightened her so that for a long minute she stood perfectly still.

Then "Oh-oh-o-o-oh!" she almost shrieked in her fright, for when she tried to pull her feet out of the mud she couldn't do it at all. If she tried to lift one out, the other only seemed to go farther down. It was certainly queer and made her feel so helpless and babyish that she wanted to scream and cry.

"It wouldn't do any good, though," she told herself, "for no one would hear me but the cows; so I'll have to get out by myself."

Then she began pulling and tugging at her feet until she could lift herself up high enough to catch hold of the branch of a tree, and with that to hold by she pulled herself out of the bog and up on to dry ground. She looked at herself then and felt like crying with disappointment, for she knew she should go back home and change her shoes; but just then there came Aunt Hettie and Annie Marie through the pasture gate and straight to where she stood in her muddy embarrassment.

"Mother telephoned that you had started," called Aunt Hettie, "and so we came down to meet you."

And then Aunt Hettie saw what a muddy thing Annie May was, and she began to laugh. Annie Marie, the new cousin, looked hard at Annie May to see what she was going to do about it, laugh or cry.

"Just as well laugh," said Annie May at last, "for crying would not do any good, and laughing makes you feel better than crying."

When Aunt Hettie began to ask questions, though, and when she found out how Annie May had been really stuck in the bog, she was sorry she had laughed. "But how did you get out, honey?" she asked anxiously.

"Oh! I kept moving both feet at once," answered Annie May, "because I knew if I didn't keep moving I would sink deeper and deeper and get stuck sure enough."

"And you were a wise girl to keep moving," answered Aunt Hettie as she helped Annie May change her muddy things for some of her cousin's clean ones.—Christian Advocate.

For the Southern Churchman.

The Jumping Jerboa.

Louis Tucker.

Once upon a time in the middle of Morocco there was a blue-eyed Berber and a jumping jerboa. The Berber's ancestors had lived in the same castle on a crag of the Atlas Mountains since the storming of Carthage by Scipic Africans; but the jerboa's ancestors had lived in a tiny cave in the base of the same crag since the Quarternary Epoch and so he looked on the Berber as a newcomer. Therefore he lived on the wheat that the Berber planted and was happy.

The Berber thought the jerboa was a very pleasant little person, bad in the wheatfield but good in the kitchen, so he tried to meet him and know him intimately, and one day he got him in a corner. Now jerboas look like mice on stilts, and the way they can jump is surprising. So the jerboa immediately, at once, without pause, jumped over the Berber's head and went home. The Berber got a crick in the back of his neck from looking up so suddenly to see where the jerboa jumped, so he went home too, very angry, and put wet cloths on his neck; and then he loaded his long gun and sat out in the wheatfield to shoot the jerboa.

The next night the jerboa came out for an armful of green wheat salad and the Berber shot him. At the flash of the gun the jerboa jumped into the air so that the bullet passed under him; and then he took his wheat and went home. As for the bullet, it glanced on a stone in the wheatfield and flew up the hillside and killed the Berber's best billy goat. So the next night the Berber loaded his gun with shot instead of a bullet, and missed the jerboa at least six inches. After that he was tired sitting up after bedtime and so he tried traps.

The first trap was made of string and the jerboa gnawed it to bits and took it home to make nests out of. The second trap was made out of leather and the jerboa ate most of it up and enjoyed it very much; while a friendly hyena from the hills came along and finished the rest. The third trap was made of wood and a bullock stepped on it; and the fourth of wire and a rabbit got caught in it; and the fifth was a steel trap and the jerboa sprung it with a stick. So the Berber gave up traps and tried poison.

First he put out some poisoned bread and the mice ate it and nearly ran him distracted, because they died all over the castle in holes in the wall. Then he put out some poisoned wheat and the sheep got it and he lost two ewes and a bell-wether. Then he poisoned some alfalfa and threw it in the jerboa's hole and the jerboa pulled it all out without eating any, because it smelled queer, and a goat came along and ate it and died of it. Then he poured water into the jerboa's hole, but it was too deep and he couldn't fill it up. Then he tried smoke, but the jerboa did not mind. Then he stopped up the mouth of the hole with stones and mortar, but the jerboa came out of another opening, and then the Berber saw why smoke and water would not kill him. So he stopped up all the holes he could find; and while he was working a cold wind came down out of the Atlas Mountains and chilled him through and he caught double pneumonia and died. So they buried him and the jerboa and his wife and family came out in the moonlight and danced because they had things their own way again.

For the Southern Churchman.

The Lord's Prayer.

Lillian F. Lewis.

The prayer the Saviour taught us
Includes the human race:
"Our Father," all may seek Him,
"In heaven," large the place;

"Thy kingdom came," is asking
His reign from sea to sea;
"Thy will be done," petitions
"On earth" in further plea.

We cannot offer rightly
That universal prayer
And not reach out in spirit
To mortals everywhere.

Johnny and Jamie and Grandma.

Johnny and Jamie had a grandma and she was the dearest and sweetest grandma in the wide world. When she came to see Johnny and Jamie, mother always had the old, old chair brought down from the attic and put in the spare room. Before grandma came the spare room always looked very spare and very empty, but when grandma dear was in it, it looked like a home all by itself, and Johnny and Jamie loved it best of any room in the house.

One cold, crisp day Johnny and Jamie came home from school and mother met them at the door.

"Hello, Jamie and Johnny," she said. "Who do you s'pose is here?"

"Grandma," cried Jamie.

"Grandma," squeaked Johnny.

And upstairs ran Johnny as fast as his two legs could carry him. And upstairs went Jamie after him. Sure enough, the spare room was not looking spare at all, and the old, old rocking chair was sitting side of the window and who should be in it but grandma?

"Hello, grandma!" shouted Jamie.

"Hello, grandma!" shouted Johnny.

"Why, hello, Johnny and Jamie!" Grandma's voice was very soft and glad sounding, and she held out her arms and Johnny ran into one and Jamie ran into the other. Grandma squeezed Johnny very hard and she squeezed Jamie very hard and she kissed Johnny, smack! on his forehead, and she kissed Jamie, smack! on his forehead, as grandmas will do.

"What did you bring us, grandma?" shouted Jamie, for he was very much excited.

"Oh, not so loud, grandson," and grandma gave Jamie a squeeze.

"Yes, what did you bring us, grandma?" shouted Johnny, for he was very much excited, too.

But, "Oh, not so loud, grandson," said grandma, and she gave Johnny a squeeze, too.

And Jamie grinned a very wide and silly grin and Johnny grinned a very wide and silly grin and they both giggled happily.

"Is it because they know that this foolish old lady always brings something for Johnny and something for Jamie that they are so glad to see her?" Grandma's eyes were very twinkling and merry, and she looked first at Johnny and then at Jamie.

"'Course not," said Jamie and Johnny, both at the same time.

"Well, then," said grandma, "I brought something large and something small, and I believe I'll give the large thing to Jamie and the small thing to Johnny."

Johnny looked at Jamie and Jamie looked at Johnny. Of course, you know, if you have a sister or brother, that, when grandmas bring things to grandchildren, they always bring exactly the same thing to both of them. Jamie thought to himself:

"My! Grandma must be getting old, forgetting about when she was a little boy," but he didn't say anything out loud.

Johnny thought to himself, "Oh my! Grandma must be getting old, forgetting about when she was little", but he didn't say anything aloud, either. Instead, he ran over to the table in the middle of the room and took a little square package off of it. And Jamie ran over to the middle of the room and pulled out a large bungly thing.

Johnny thought to himself, "Oh well, dad says the best things always come done up little", and he worked his fingers very fast, trying to open the bundle.

Jamie was so excited he didn't think at all, but just worked his fingers very fast, untying knots.

"O-o-o-o-o-h!" said Johnny, for what do you think he found? It was in a white box and it was round and it was yellow. "Money! Thank you, grandma, ever so much," and he ran over and kissed grandma, smack! but he was just a bit disappointed, because he knew daddy would make him put it in the bank and then what good was it?

"Ooo-ee! oo-eee!" cried Jamie, for what do you think he found? It was red and it had runners, and the front handles steered. "A sled!" and Jamie shouted very loud, and ran over and kissed grandma, smack! smack! "I'm glad I got the sled, grandma, because dad'll make Johnny put the money in the bank," and he smiled and was very happy.

And Johnny tried to smile generously.

"But you must be good and let Johnny use your sled, too," said grandma.

"Let's go out and slide," said Jamie.

"All right," said Johnny, and he went down cellar and got his old "Galloping Dick".

"I'm going to name it Red Terror, after my old one," said Jamie.

"Oh!" said Johnny.

Jamie was very generous and let Johnny ride on Red Terror once in a while. But Red Terror went very fast and only made Galloping Dick seem slow to Johnny.

Pretty soon it was supper time, and Jamie took Red Terror and Johnny took Galloping Dick and they trudged home together. Johnny didn't say anything to Jamie and Jamie didn't say anything to Johnny.

After supper grandma told Johnny and Jamie to come up and see her before bedtime. Johnny stood on one side of the old, old rocking chair and Jamie stood on the other side, and grandma put one arm around Johnny and one arm around Jamie.

"Johnny and Jamie," grandma said, "I made a mistake. The small bundle was supposed to be for Jamie and the large bundle was supposed to be for Johnny."

"Oh, and tomorrow's Saturday," said Johnny, and he jumped up and down and was very happy.

"Yes, tomorrow's Saturday," said Jamie, but he didn't jump up and down.

"But you must be very generous and let Jamie use the sled," said grandma.

Johnny ran and got his bank and a knife and he fished and fumbled and fished until, along with the pennies and nickels, out came the round yellow piece. And he gave it to Jamie.

"Thank you!" said Jamie.

"I think I shall name it galloping Dick, after my old one," said Johnny.

"Good night, grandma," said Jamie, and he kissed grandma, smack!

"Good night, grandma," said Johnny, and he kissed grandma, smack! smack! smack!

The next day was Saturday, and Johnny said:

"Let's go out and slide."

"All right," said Jamie, and he went down cellar and got his old Red Terror, and Johnny took brand new Galloping Dick.

And Johnny was very generous and let Jamie ride on Galloping Dick once in a while. But Galloping Dick went very fast and only made old Red Terror seem slower to Jamie.

Pretty soon it was lunch time and Johnny took new Galloping Dick and Jamie took old Red Terror and they trudged home together. Johnny didn't say anything to Jamie and Jamie didn't say anything to Johnny.

After lunch grandma told Johnny and Jamie to come up and see her. Johnny stood on one side of the old, old rocking chair and Jamie stood on the other, and grandma put one arm around Jamie and one arm around Johnny.

"Johnny and Jamie," grandma said, "I made a mistake. What I really intended to do was to bring a large present to Jamie and a large present to Johnny, and a small present to Jamie and a small present to Johnny. I'm getting old and a little forgetful, but you'll find the other two presents in the closet."

It didn't take Johnny long to open the big one and find a new red sled, and it didn't take Jamie long to open the little one and find a round shining yellow piece of money.

That afternoon Johnny and Jamie said, both together:

"Let's go sliding!" and Johnny took new Galloping Dick and Jamie took new Red Terror and they went sliding.

Johnny said to himself, "I guess grandma hasn't forgotten about when she was little after all".

And Jamie said to himself, "I guess grandma hasn't forgotten when she was a little boy after all".

Pretty soon it was supper time, and after supper grandma told Johnny and Jamie to come and see her.

Johnny went and stood on one side of the old, old rocking chair, and Jamie stood on the other side, and grandma put one arm around Jamie and the other arm around Johnny.

"Is it because they know that this foolish old lady always brings a present for Jamie and a present for Johnny that Johnny and Jamie are always so glad to see her?" Grandma's eyes were very twinkly and merry and she looked first at Johnny and then at Jamie.

"'Course not!" said Johnny and Jamie, both at the very same time.

"Well, I haven't forgotten when I was little," said grandma, and sighed and sighed.

"No!" said Johnny, and "No"! said Jamie.—M. C. Redfield.

"A Spring Morning."

The morning waketh bright and clear,
Birds are singing everywhere,
Earth, shrub, and tree in green are clad,
And all the country-side is glad.

For spring has come with beauty rare,
With joy and song beyond compare,
The joy of bursting bud and tree,
The song of nature's minstrelsy.

The sun from out the vaulted blue,
Benign and gracious, shineth true,
While violets and lilacs bloom,
And shed abroad their sweet perfume.

The dandelion and buttercup,
Their yellowed heads doth flower up,
While in the silent, flowing stream,
The shadowed hills are plainly seen.

So, sing, my soul, thy matin song,
To Him, the Wise, the Good, the Strong,
Who loveth bird, and flower and tree
And surely will watch over thee.

—Lee G. Crutchfield in Richmond Christian Advocate.

Choosing the May Queen.

Tramp, tramp, tramp, tramp—twenty pair of little feet were marching and twenty pair of glowing eyes were bright with excitement. The second grade girls were marching to the school yard to practice for the May Pole Dance. What fun it was to skip and dance around the May Pole, twining the bright ribbons in and out.

"Class, halt!" called Miss Whitman, and twenty pair of marching feet came to a stop. Every girl stood with head erect, shoulders back and hands to side. Not a single movement was seen up and down the line as Miss Whitman passed on her way to the front. There she paused and looked at the perfect line for a moment.

"I'm glad to see you marching so much like soldiers," said Miss Whitman. "Today we are to decide who shall be our May Queen, and, as you know, the one who pays the best attention during our rehearsals is to be chosen Queen."

Twenty little hearts beat very fast and nineteen pair of red lips said silently, "I hope it's me". But the other little girl said, deep in her heart, "I hope it's Annie. She makes the best marks in school."

Now, this little girl with this kind wish was Katherine O'Donnell, who had recently come to America with her mother and father from Ireland. She had not made any friends yet, but there were several little girls whom she liked very much. Annie was the one who always knew her lesson and Katherine hoped that some day she, too, would know as much as Annie.

Most of the little girls in the class liked Katherine, although they didn't know her very well. But they liked the funny way she talked and the sparkle in her eyes.

The practice went on. Each member of the class did her best for awhile, but then one little girl tripped her foot and several others laughed at her. Annie whispered something in the ear of the next little girl, and all the time Miss Whitman was watching closely. Katherine was so happy as she danced around that she imagined herself a fairy back in sunny Ireland. Her feet scarcely touched the ground.

"Class, attention!" This brought twenty pair of little feet to the ground and twenty pair of eyes looked straight at Miss Whitman. What would she say? What little girl would she choose?

"Our May Queen," began Miss Whitman, with a smile, "will be a little girl who comes from the land of the fairies. She has given perfect attention at every practice. Let's all cheer for the May Queen—Katherine O'Donnell."

Katherine blinked her eyes to be sure she was awake! It all seemed so much like a dream. The whole class clapped their hands because they were really glad to have Katherine for their May Queen. Of course, each little girl had wished that she might be the one chosen—but—well, anyway, they all liked Katherine.

At last the great day came. The May Pole stood in a grassy field next to the school. Mothers and fathers and friends were seated in chairs around the edge of the field. How pretty the little girls looked in their fairy dresses. Some were pink and some were blue and some were yellow. But prettiest of all was the little girl dressed all in white who looked just like a real queen.

Each mother looked at her little girl and each father was proud of his little daughter. But happiest of all was the mother and father who watched Katherine O'Donnell, for their little girl had been chosen May Queen.—Mrs. A. B. Brown.

The Conqueror.

It's easy to laugh when the skies are blue
And the sun is shining bright;
Yes, easy to laugh when your friends are true
And there's happiness in sight;
But when hope has fled and the skies are gray,
And the friends of the past have turned away.
Ah, then indeed, it's a hero's feat
To conjure a smile in the face of defeat.

It's easy to laugh when the storm is o'er
And your ship is safe in port;
Yes, easy to laugh when you're on the shore
Secure from the tempest's sport;
But when wild waves wash o'er the storm-swept deck
And your gallant ship is a battered wreck,
Ah, that is the time when it's well worth while
To look in the face of defeat with a smile.

It's easy to laugh when the battle's fought
And you know that the victory's won;
Yes, easy to laugh when the prize you sought
Is yours when the race is run;
But here's to the man who can laugh when the blast
Of adversity blows; he will conquer at last,
For the hardest man in the world to beat
Is the man who can laugh in the face of defeat.

—Selected.

Little self-denials, little honesties, little passing words of sympathy, little nameless acts of kindness, little silent victories over favorite temptations—these are the silent threads of gold which, when woven together, gleam out so brightly in the pattern of life that God approves.—F. W. Farrar.

True Economy

is practiced by the wearers of

BERRY CLOTHES.

Dependable; stylish; attractive; yet they cost no more.

Come and see

O. N. Berry Co.

RICHMOND, VA.

PARISH PAPERS

Any church, school or class can publish a parish paper by using our co-operative plan. A parish paper fills empty pews, keeps community informed, speeds up church work.

Free Samples and Particulars.

Our plan provides a paper for your church without cost to you.

The National Religious Press
Grand Rapids, Mich.

Kill All Flies! THEY SPREAD DISEASE

Placed anywhere, DAISY FLY KILLER attracts and kills all flies. Neat, clean, ornamental, convenient and cheap. Lasts all season. Made of metal, can't spill or tip over; will not soil or injure anything. Guaranteed.

DAISY FLY KILLER at your dealer or 5 by EXPRESS, prepaid, $1.25.
HAROLD SOMERS, 150 De Kalb Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

WINSTON-INTERNATIONAL
RED LETTER BIBLES
SELF-PRONOUNCING

BIBLES and TESTAMENTS that EMPHASIZE CHRIST
All the Prophetic Types and Prophecies in Old Testament and Words of Christ in New Testament are Printed in Red.

Send for Illustrated Catalog

THE JOHN C. WINSTON CO., Publishers
American Bible Headquarters
455 WINSTON BUILDING PHILADELPHIA

XANTHINE

Hair Restorative

Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.

Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.

XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

$25 TO $50 For Your Church or Society

Sell our Embossed Initial Tea Napkins packed three dozen to the package. Made of the finest Lynkloth Crepe Paper. Every package with your own initial in Old English. In ordering, kindly state the quantity of each initial you desire. This is an article that every home has use for, and, with our Sample Box, sales are easily made. Costs 13c.; sells for 25c. Sample box, 25c. With every order of 25 packages sample package free. Thirty days' credit, carrying charges prepaid.

Gillmore Bros., Publishers, Reading, Pa.

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.

Mississippi Flood Relief.

Rev. Francis Joyner..... $5.00

SPECIAL NOTICES.

PIPE ORGANS.

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, INC., Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices. Particular attention given to designing organs for memorials.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 209 East Franklin Street. Richmond, Va.

CHURCH LINEN.

PURE IRISH LINEN at wholesale prices for Church Guilds, Rectors and others. Samples on request.
MARY FAWCETT.
115 Franklin St., New York City.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS—CARDS.

CHURCH EMBROIDERIES, SILK AND LINEN. Imported religious cards for all occasions. G. L. Bender, 7421 Boyer St., Mt. Airy, Philadelphia, Pa.

COUNTRY BOARD.

COUNTRY BOARD AT MODERATE RATES in a convenient farm house and attractive neighborhood. Address Miss Anne Y. McDonald, R. F. D., Charles Town, West Va.

OLD ENVELOPES.

WANTED—Old Envelopes from letters written between 1845 and 1874. Do not remove the stamps from the envelopes Highest prices paid. GEORGE HAKES, 290 Broadway, New York.

STAINED GLASS

JAMES POWELL & SONS (Whitefriars), Ltd., London, England—Stained Glass. Designs and estimates submitted on receipt of full particulars. Distributor ADRIAN A. BUCK, 665 Fifth Ave., New York City.

TRAVEL.

SOUTHERN LADY, RETURNING TO VISIT relations, England and Continent, for summer, will chaperon small party. References Virginia and England. Address "Chaperon", care of Southern Churchman.

FOR RENT.

TO RENT FOR SUMMER MONTHS, furnished home in Shenandoah Valley, near Winchester. Cool brick house, large lawn. Address Mrs. E. S. Meade, White Post, Va.

COUNTRY BOARD.

NEAR WARRENTON, VIRGINIA BOARD for two or three. All modern conveniences; tested cows; own fruit and vegetables, shade. Horse back riding privileges included. References given and required. (Address Mrs. G. M. Wells, Jr., Casanova, Va.

INVITATION.

MIDDLE-AGED COPLE AT THEIR SUMMER home in Virginia, would like attractive girl, 16 to 30, to visit them as their daughter. Some remuneration. Address "L" care of Southern Churchman.

SITUATION WANTED.

A YOUNG ENGLISHMAN, WITH AN OXFORD background, recently come to this country, wishes a position for the summer vacation as tutor, or as traveling guide to party visiting England. Reference may be made to Dean Metcalf, or Dr. Lewis of the University of Virginia. Address "30", care of Southern Churchman.

LADY OF REFINEMENT AND CULTURE desires position as companion, or mother's help. Experienced in caring for invalids. Address Mrs. L. T. Anderson, Raleigh Apartments, 326 Harrison St., Richmond, Va.

POSITION WANTED BY WOMAN OF mature years in Deaconess orders; executive position in school or mission as teacher of Household Economics, nurse, housemother, chaperon, or household management. Excellent References. Address "Deaconess", 1002 W. 17th St., Anniston, Ala.

A WOMAN OF REFINEMENT AND CULture, qualifiel to make a home, experienced in college life of young women, has traveled in this country and abroad, desires a position as companion at home or to travel. References exchanged. Address "F. C.", Southern Churchman.

HELP WANTED

WANTED, IN A SOUTHERN ORPHANage, a gentlewoman to take charge of the boys' department, also the linen room. Address "C-4", care of Southern Churchman.

Deaths

JONES: Died, in Winchester, Virginia, April 22, 1927, WILLIAM RANDOLPH JONES, only son of the late Major Francis B. Jones and Susan Peyton Clark. A high-toned Christian gentleman.

"I heard the voice of Jesus say, come unto me and rest."

PASCHAL BUFORD HALL.

Inasmuch as it has pleased Almighty God, to whom alone belong the issues of life and death, to call unto Himself PASCHALL BUFORD HALL, our beloved Secretary.

We deem it fitting that we bear witness by the written word to those about us and to those who shall come after us, of what she was to us who loved her well.

The church was her home—this organization part of her life—and she served both with unfailing love and fidelity. Her influence remains.

From this room, which her memory hallows, we give thanks for the radiant life ended and reach out hands of comfort to those with whom she lived and moved and had her being. Hers was a life rich in spirit, rich in service. It is our heritage to guard the benediction of her abiding presence within the walls of the church she loved.

HARRIET V. WILSON, Chairman,
BETTY H. ARNOLD, Secretary,
Emmanuel Church Service League, Bristol, Virginia.

IN MEMORIAM.

Rev. John Francis Ribble, D. D.

After a long and painful illness, borne with Christian patience and fortitude, there passed, on Wednesday, March 30th, the soul of our beloved brother, REVEREND JOHN FRANCIS RIBBLE, D. D., to its final reward.

Born of Christian parents, who were Christians indeed, he grew up in the atmosphere of a real Christian home, and his life was a shining example of the character such influences produce.

Naturally, when he came to mature years his thoughts turned to the Christian ministry as his life work, and in due time he was ordained and entered upon his chosen calling. From that ordination day till stricken with his fatal illness, he wrought in season and out of season in the service of his Lord. As Pastor, Examining Chaplain, Professor—he did a full day's work and only laid down his task when his mortal body succumbed. A number of these laborious years he spent as Professor in the Bishop Payne Divinity School, and we, his colleagues in that institution, wish to bear our loving testimony to his fidelity and thoroughness in the discharge of his duties there. Neither Professors or students of his time can ever forget the impress for good that he made. (He went in and out amongst us a Christian gentleman and scholar and did work that will bear fruit in eternity.

To his dear ones who "sorrow most of all", we respectfully tender the sympathy of our hearts and pray that God may sustain and comfort them in this hour of sore trial.

F. G. SCOTT,
FLOURNOY BOULDIN,
J. C. WAGNER,
S. W. GRICE,
The Faculty of the Bishop Payne Divinity School.

MRS. NANNIE F. JOHNSON.

Entered into rest, at her residence, 2519 West Grace Street, Richmond, Virginia, MRS. NANNIE F. JOHNSON, widow of the late Major William J. Johnson.

On the morning of April 16th she fell asleep in that sunlight that knows no shadow, that morning that has no waning. Full of years, she was by nature of a bright and sunny disposition; a loyal supporter of the Episcopal Church, and a life-long resident of her native State which she loved; staunch and true to her own, kind and sympathetic to her neighbors and friends.

"Rock of Ages cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in Thee."

REV. JAMES DeWOLF PERRY, D. D.

Minute passed at the meeting of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, on the death of its President, the REVEREND JAMES DeWOLF PERRY, D. D.

"A choice vessel of God's grace was gathered unto his fathers, when, on the tenth instant, at his home in Germantown, the Reverend James DeWolf Perry, D. D., passed peacefully beyond the veil. At four-score and eight, his eye was not dimmed nor his natural force abated.

"With high praise and hearty thanks, the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Pennsylvania makes record of our beloved elder brother's abiding place in our memories. For forty years an honored member of this Committee, and for twenty-seven of those years its revered President, Dr. Perry met every requirement of his responsible position with rare ability and faithfulness. His virile personality and clarity of mind enriched by devotion to his Lord, loyalty to his Church, and sympathy with his fellowmen, were the more fruitful by reason of his singular charm and modesty.

"At four successive Episcopal elections here the Convention chose him as its presiding officer. His influence in every emergency was a benediction. It is in the nurture and crowning of such a type of man and minister that the Church is justified and conquers.

"As his associates we cherish his gracious friendship in our hearts. Our profound sympathy goes out to his bereaved family.

"May light perpetual shine upon him."

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 16.)

er among the families of Sing Sing prisoners.

In his new work, Chaplain Young will serve on the staff with Dr. Amos T. Baker, the psychiatrist, and Dr. Partridge, prison psychologist, who are directing the study of mental conditions of inmates "in the interest of the prisoners, of justice and of society".

During the recent years of his association with the Episcopal City Mission Society, Chaplain Young has been the official ministrant to non-Roman, non-Jewish patients and prisoners at Riverside Hospital, and Riker's Island, and at the New York State Reformatory for Women at Bedford.

Prior to that time he officiated at the Metropolitan Hospital and other city institutions at Welfare Island, as well as at various large hospitals in the city.

RHODE ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. DeWolf Perry, D. D., Bishop.

Memorials Dedicated.

On the morning of the second Sunday after Easter, May 1, 1927, preceding the regular service of Holy Communion at 11 o'clock, the rector of Trinity Church, Pawtucket, the Rev. Thom Williamson, Jr., dedicated certain gifts and memorials presented to Trinity Parish for use in church worship.

These include the following:

A brass altar cross for the Chapel of the Holy Child; also a brass candlestick and a picture; all given by Mrs. James Crook.

A rug for the chapel, given by Mrs. T. T. Anderson; two brass candlesticks, by an anonymous donor; a picture given by Mrs. William A. Leete, for the chapel; a brass candlestick, given by Mrs. Frank Doyle, in memory of Francis Crook Doyle; a white silk frontal and super-frontal, given for the chapel altar by Mrs. Joseph Ott; a fair linen cloth, for the chapel altar, given by Mrs. Charles E. Carpenter; a red velour kneeling cushion, for the altar step in the church, and several pieces of altar linen, given by the Altar Guild of Trinity Parish.

Mrs. Charles O. Read had the little chapel redecorated, and also loaned a beautiful and appropriate picture. Mrs. Thom Williamson, Jr., loaned the central picture over the cross in the chapel. Mr. David Kyle attended to the new electrical work and fixtures necessary.

The chapel is for small weddings and small weekday services.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop.

Y. P. S. L. Convention.

The Convention of the Young People's Service League of the Diocese was held in Sumter April 22-24. This was the third annual convention and the best in number of attendance. The addresses were inspiring and instructive. It is encouraging for the future of the Church that this movement is steadily growing and is being placed upon a firm basis. The officers elected for the ensuing year are as follows: President, Mr. Evans Cannon, Florence; Vice-President, Miss Caroline Gillespie, Hartville; Secretary, Herbert Haynesworth, Sumter; Treasurer, Miss Sarah Louise Starr, Charleston. The two Dioceses of South Carolina will again sponsor Camp Ellison Capers, Brevard, N. C., for the Y. P. S. L. June 18-July 1.

Woman's Auxiliary.

The spring meeting of the Charleston District of the Woman's Auxiliary was held April 27 in St. James' Church on historic James Island, near the city of Charleston. The little church could not accommodate the crowd attending to hear the reports of the work carried on during the winter and spring. Under the leadership of Mrs. Louis D. Simonds, chairman, reports were made and plans were laid for the next six months.

Porter Military Academy.

The canvass for Porter Military Academy for $85,000 in order to carry the school through this year and to reopen in September, is continuing under the Rev. Harold Thomas, chairman, $22,000, of which $7,000 is conditional on the full amount being raised, has been pledged to date. This Church School has made a distinct contribution to Christian Education. It is hoped that many friends will come to its aid now in its hour of need that it may carry on in September with a higher scholastic standard and continue its influence for Christian character.

R. H. J.

SPRINGFIELD.

The Golden Jubilee and the Synod.

Extensive plans are being made for the celebration of the Golden Jubilee of the Diocese in connection with the fiftieth annual Synod. The outstanding event is the Golden Jubilee dinner for men and women, under the auspices of the Church Club, and which is to be held at the St. Nicholas Hotel, Springfield, May 10. Mr. Arch Bassett, President of the Church Club, will be the presiding officer, and the toastmaster will be Dr. Elmer E. Hagler, one of the laymen of St. Paul's Church, Springfield, and the speakers are Bishop Woodcock, the Rev. John Henry Hopkins, Mrs. J. F. Morrison, President of the House of Churchwomen of the Diocese of Indianapolis, and Bishop White.

Most of the Bishops of the Fifth Province have signified their intentions to be present at the dinner, and some of them will remain over for the sessions of the Synod itself.

Bishop Shayler, of Nebraska, is to conduct the Quiet Day for women on Thursday, May 12, in Christ Church, the Rev. Jerry Wallace, rector.

Sunday-School Presentation Service.

Taking a page from the plans of the National Council in the observance of the Jubilee Anniversary of the Lenten Offering of the Church Schools, the missions at Salem, Mount Vernon, Carlyle, Nashville and Centralia, the Rev. R. Y. Barber, rector, met in St. John's, Centralia, on Sunday afternoon, April 24, for presentation service. All of the missions were well represented by both children and teachers. Two children were elected by each school to come, one to read a report and the other to bring the offering.

Last year there were only three Church Schools and the combined offering was less than $70. Today there are five Church Schools and the total offering was $182.45. This was the first year that some of the children had ever been asked to keep Lent. Next year each school will be given a quota to work for, to stimulate more interest in self-denial. It is felt that the set of posters and stories had something to do with the increased offering.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

A Visitor From Jerusalem.

During the past month this diocese has been fortunate in having the Rev. Eric F. F. Bishop of the C. M. S., residing within its bounds. Mr. Bishop has come direct from the Holy Lands, where he has been teaching on the staff of one of the English schools established in Jerusalem.

Scattered along the Monongahela Valley are many Syrians, who are nominally associated with our Church, nominally because of the language difficulties—particularly for the older people. Mr. Bishop speaks Arabic fluently. Holy Week and Easter Day saw him assisting in several churches in Pittsburgh, and also filling many mission stations where the Syrians had gathered for the Resurrection Story in their own tongue.

Young People's Service League.

The Diocesan League for Young People assembled at the Church of the Ascension, Pittsburgh, Tuesday, April 26, for the purpose of electing their officers for the ensuing year. A splendid group had gathered for the six o'clock service in the Chapel at which the Rev. Mr. Edwards, rector of the Church of the Ascension, spoke briefly but to the point on the text, "What do ye more than these"? May we not, for the moment, look into our own lives and think—What do we, as Christians, more than these who do not profess to be followers of Jesus!

Dinner was served by the members of the Girls' Friendly Society. After which Bishop Mann spoke on the Conneaut Conference to be held at Conneaut Lake during July. This was followed by the regular business session for the election of officers.

D. L. P.

Personal Notes

The Rev. F. S. Fleming, D. D., for the past twelve years rector of the Church of the Atonement, Edgewater, Chicago, Ill., has become rector of St. Stephen's Church, Providence, R. I.

The Rev. William M. Purce, of the Diocese of West Virginia, has recently been called by Bishop White to again take up work in the Diocese of Springfield, with residence at Harrisburg, Ill.

The Rev. R. P. Eubank, of Basin, Wyoming, has accepted the position as minister-in-charge of Trinity Parish, Louisa County, Va., for three months.

The Rev. Robert J. Belt, formerly a non-parochial minister of the Diocese of Pittsburgh, has accepted a call to St. James' Church, Mansfield, Pa.

The Rev. Sidney H. Dixon has accepted the call to be institutional chaplain and missionary in the archdeaconry of Dutchess County, N. Y. His new address is Y. M. C. A., Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and Elkton, Cecil County, Maryland.

DIVERSITY IN EXPERIENCE

DIVERSITY IN SERVICES

Whatever the financial problems of your line of business, among the officers of the First and Merchants you will find one or more who are familiar with them. Whatever banking facilities your business requires, this institution provides them.

FIRST AND MERCHANTS

NATIONAL BANK OF RICHMOND

JOHN M. MILLER, JR., President.

CAPITAL, SURPLUS AND UNDIVIDED PROFITS, $6,300,000

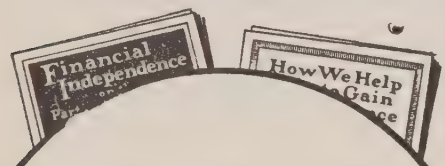
The Bell Book and Stationery Co.

ENGRAVED WEDDING ANNOUNCEMENTS
VISITING CARDS.
Fifth Street between Broad and Grace
RICHMOND, VA.

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.

Richmond, Virginia

THE SAFE EXECUTOR



Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

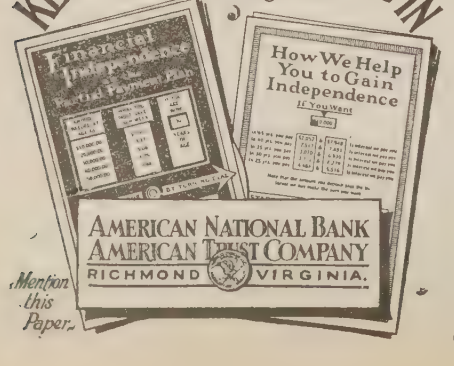
Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock $1,000,000.00
Surplus earned $1,500,000.00
Held in trust $30,000,000. (plus)

EARN $25 WEEKLY SPARE TIME
Writing for newspapers, magazines. Experience unnecessary. Details FREE. Press Syndicate, 1303 St. Louis, Mo.

A NEW PLAN YIELDING 6 PER CENT ON SAVINGS

SIMPLE SAFE SURE



By depositing weekly, monthly or at will in the Savings Department you accumulate.

Unite of $100.00 are automatically invested in 6 per cent First Mortgage Real Estate Gold bonds through the American Trust Company.

Bonds are held free; a Trust receipt given you for them and maturing interest is deposited in the Savings Department to make other units of $100.00 to buy more bonds thus compounding 6 per cent.

The turnover thus secured gets you remarkable results.

KEEP YOUR INCOME COMING IN
Ask for Booklet on Income Building Plan

Mention this Paper.

INCORPORATED 1832

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,398,462.62

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer
J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm . P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

A Complete Store of shops and --- more --- an Institution

Miller & Rhoads

"THE SHOPPING CENTER"

Richmond - Virginia

White Leghorn hens and males now half price. Thousands of eight-week-old pullets. Also baby chicks and eggs. Trapnested, pedigreed foundation stock, egg bred 27 years. Winners at 20 egg contests. Catalog and special price bulletin free. I ship C. O. D. and guarantee satisfaction.
GEORGE B. FERRIS 893 Union Grand Rapids, Michigan.

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.,
308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.
QUALITY—SERVICE

SYDNOR & HUNDLEY'S STOCK REDUCTION SALE

Complete Suites and Hundreds of Occasional Prices at

25 Per Cent, 33 1-3 Per Cent and 50 Per Cent Reductions.

7th at Grace — Richmond, Va.

The South's Best Book Store

HUNTER & CO.

105 E. Broad Street
Richmond, Va.
Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen.
Prompt and Reliable Service.

A NATIONAL CHURCH PAPER FOR ALL THE FAMILY.

Southern Churchman

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., MAY 14, 1927. No. 20.

CALL no faith false which e'er hath brought Relief to any laden life,
Cessation to the pain of thought,
Refreshment mid the dust of strife.

—Sir Lewis Morris.

IN THIS ISSUE

CHANGING PILOTS

PULPIT SERMON

By the Right Reverend Charles H. Brent, D. D.
Bishop of Western New York

EDUCATIONAL

The Virginia Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded.
Established 1892.
For terms and information address
MISS M. GUNDRY.

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-eighth year of this School for Boys opened September 15, 1926. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. Hoxton, B. A., Principal.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The Requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA.

prepares boys at cost for college and university. Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountians of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., Rector.

St. Hilda's Hall

Charles Town, W. Va.
Near Harper's Ferry.

Chevron School for Girls. Episcopal Junior College—four year' High School and two years' College Courses. Elective Music, Art. Business, Athletics. Limited numbers.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

The One Hundred and Fourth Session
Opened Wednesday, Sept. 15, 1926.

For catalogs and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria Va.

The Hannah More Academy

The Dioceasan School of Maryland, Founded 1832. A Country School for Girls—fifteen miles from Baltimore. College Preparatory and General Courses, Music, Art, Supervised Athletics.

Principal, LAURA FOWLER, A. B., Reistertown, Maryland.

SKIN IRRITATIONS

For their immediate relief and healing doctors prescribe

Resinol

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY,
Publishers,
112 North Fifth Street, - Richmond, Va.

LEWIS C. WILLIAMS.....President
MISS FENTON WILLIAMSON
News Editor
MISS SUSAN C. COOKE,
Circulation Dept.
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00 Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiritions unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	4
Editorials	5
The Pulpit of The American Church	6
The Future of Christianity in China —The Rev. Kimber H. K. Den..	8
Christianity and the Community..	9
Book Reviews	10
Letters to the Editor	11
Church Intelligence	12
Family Department	18
Children's Department	20
Personal Notes	23

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

St. Stephen's College

An Undergraduate Church College for men.

There are four curricula—Classical, Literary, Scientific and Social Scientific.

For tution $250.00 a year; for a room furnished and heated $150.00 a year; for board in hall $250.00 a year; a total of $650.00.

Address: BERNARD IDDINGS BELL, President

Annandale-on-Hudson, N. Y. (Railway Station, Barrytown, N. Y.)

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesvile; St. Margaret's School, Tapphannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.)

(About gifts or bequests, address the Dean, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR BOYS.
Richmond, Virginia.

Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 60 pupils.

RATE $700.00.

Reduction to sons of Clergymen, teachers and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., Headmaster.

St. Agnes' Episcopal School

Alexandria, Virginia.

Boarding and Day School for Girls on Braddock Heights overlooking the Potomac River.

On the interurban trolley and bus lines between Washington and Alexandria.

Athletics and open air life; sixteen-acre campus. Primary, Intermediate, General and College Preparatory Courses. Music.

For information apply to
THE PRINCIPAL.

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University.

For catalog address

The Dean.

HOBART COLLEGE, Geneva, N. Y

A Church College for men, founded 1822. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

CHATHAM EPISCOPAL INSTITUTE,
Box 13, Chatham, Virginia.

College preparatory school for girls. Certificate privileges. Also two years of advanced Academic work. Special courses, Music, Art, Expression, Home Economics. Modern equipment. 15 Acres campus. Pool, Golf. Terms moderate. 33rd session September 22, 1926.

Bishop of Diocese of Southern Virginia President of Board.

For catalogue address
MABEL ELEANOR STONE
Principal.

1927 CATALOGUE---JUST OUT

Sent on request. Seventy-two pages of religious books and music. Special Bargains. Write us at our new address

GLAD TIDINGS PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Catalogue Editor
FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

SUMMER RESORTS

GRAY GABLES INN

119 South Washington Street

WINCHESTER, VA

Miss Caroline S. Hunter, Proprietress

RIVERCREST FARM
An Ideal Place to Spend Your Vacation

Beautifully located on New River in Heart of Southwest Virginia. One and one-half miles from Railroad and Lee Highway. Fine for Fishing and Swimming. Always cool. Good food and beds. Rates reasonable. Apply

MRS. W. C. JENNINGS
Draper, Virginia

For the Southern Churchman.

Love Has Crowned Him.

F. B. Stone.

Before our Lord in reverent love we bow,
Bowed there as showers of blessing on us fall,
And from our knees we rise to find
Our love has crowned Him Lord of all.

And in our souls new springs of love o'erflow,
We bless Him for His answers to our call;
With lifted hearts, rejoicing praise,
For love has crowned Him Lord of all.

So near, so very near our Lord is now,
There's but a veil where once there stood a wall,
Love seeks His face behind that veil,
For love has crowned Him Lord of all.

And soon that veil itself shall disappear,
As at the trumpet's call its folds shall fall,
And all of us shall see His face
Whose love has crown Him Lord of all.

The Church in the World Today.

We need a Christianity which keeps prominently before the attention of men its genuinely spiritual quality. We need not so many wheels but "the spirit within the wheels". The tendency of recent years, particularly since the craze for efficiency came in with the war, has been to make the machinery of religion more and more complicated and to have that machinery driven by technically trained men and women who keep it going by humanly generated forces such as are often startlingly foreign to the spirit of Christ. The craze for up-to-date Church organization, with a multitude of societies to enlist the energies of men, women, and children, ramifying in every direction from the congregation to the nation, claiming the attention of hosts of secretaries and business agents, turning the pastor into a bewildered director of an administrative system, perpetually engaged in inaugurating, sustaining, reviving, and galvanizing into appearance of life a multiplicity of unnecessary organizations, has done not a little, while stimulating the physical energies of the Church, to diminish its real power and influence in the community.....

Not a little of the disbelief of the world today comes from the consciousness of a Church which in its lust for competitive organization, in its foolish habit of depending upon the reputation for statisticalized greatness, in its employment of methods more ingenious than religious to entrap men to the hearing of sensational piece sof self-advertisement, must surely be an offense against God and a blasphemy against Christ.

As soon as we turn the whole force of our ministry and the love and activity of our congregations into the task of spiritualizing the atmosphere of the communities in which we dwell, men will not be slow to appreciate the savor of our witness. To withdraw from the noisier world into the secret place wherein power is generated for the whole world's uses is not to relinquish the service of an active life. It is rather to manifest that new and higher type of activity which is not the less real for being primarily spiritual.—H. H. Gowen, in The Universal Faith.

Richmond Trust Company

3%

ON SAVINGS.

BANKING—TRUSTS—REAL ESTATE

Capital $1,000,000.00

Main at Seventh Richmond, Virginia.

The Seekers.

One asked a sign from God; and day by day
The sun arose, in pearl, in scarlet set,
Each night the stars appeared in bright array,
Each morn the thirsting grass with dew was wet.
The corn failed not its harvest, nor the vine.
And yet he saw no sign.

One longed to hear a prophet; and he strayed
Through crowded streets, and by the open sea.
He saw men send their ships for distant trade,
And build for generations yet to be.
He saw the farmer sow his acres wide,
But went unsatisfied.

One prayed a sight of heaven; and erewhile
He saw one dare for honor, and the smile
Of one who held a babe upon her breast;
At dusk two lovers walking hand in hand;
But did not understand.

—Victor Starbuck.

Little Boys and Little Sheep.

Joe came home with his clothes, and even his little curls, all wringing wet. "I just knew the ice wasn't strong 'nough," he grumbled.

"Then why did you slide?" asked auntie.

"'Cause all the other boys did," said Joe. "So I had to, or they'd laugh. And nobody wants the other boys to laugh at him, you know."

His aunt gave him dry clothes, sat him down by the fire, and made him drink hot lemonade. Then she told him a story:

"When I was a little girl, Joe, my father had a great flock of sheep. They were queer things. Where one went, all the rest followed. One day a big ram found a gap in the fence, and he thought it would be fun to see what was in the other field. So in he jumped, without looking where he was going, and tumbled to the bottom of an old dry well, where father used to throw stones and rubbish.

"The next sheep never stopped to think what had become of him, but jumped right after, and the next, and the next, though father tried to drive them back, and Watch, the old sheep dog, barked his very loudest. But they just kept on jumping and jumping till the well was full. Then father had to pull them out as best he could, and the sheep at the bottom of the well were almost smothered to death."

"My, what silly things!" exclaimed Joe. Then he looked up at his aunt and laughed—and became quite red in the face.—Selected.

For the Southern Churchman.

Buttercups.

Helen Bayley Davis.

The sun, aroused from a doze,
Peeped above the puffs of cloud
And seeing that dawn had come—arose
Arrogantly proud!

Tossing his yellow hair,
He shook from it the golden dew
That evening had sprinkled there
From a bowl of midnight blue,

Splashing it to earth where it lay
In the meadow beside the sunny lane—
Shining as small wild flowers of May
Or a shower of golden rain!

. . . . . .

And children, racing through the field,
Watching the yellow leaves unfold,
Shouted "Buttercups, Buttercups,
Where did you get your gold"?

We think we have seen our loved one die. If our inner eyes were opened to that world which is above, around, beyond the world of sense, we should see that not a second's check to the uninterrupted development of that dear soul's true life had ensued.—Basil Wilberforce.

$25 TO $50 For Your Church or Society

Sell our Embossed Initial Tea Napkins packed three dozen to the package. Made of the finest Lynkloth Crepe Paper. Every package with your own initial in Old English. In ordering, kindly state the quantity of each initial you desire. This is an article that every home has use for, and, with our Sample Box, sales are easily made. Costs 13c.; sells for 25c. Sample box, 25c. With every order of 25 packages sample package free. Thirty days' credit, carrying charges prepaid.

Gillmore Bros., Publishers, Reading, Pa.

True Economy

is practiced by the wearers of

BERRY CLOTHES.

Dependable; stylish; attractive; yet they cost no more.

Come and see

O. N. Berry Co.

Richmond, Va.

EVERYTHING FOR THE CHURCH

J. & R. Lamb
23-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED WOOD · METAL · ETC.

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS
Largest stock in the South. We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival
The Couper Marble Works
(Established 79 years.)
204-206 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

WOODY ART GLASS SHOP
Art Stained and Leaded Glass
Church Windows a Specialty
402 East Marshall St.
Richmond, Va.

"Palmer's book is a wonderful contribution to the subject," says Bishop Darst.

THE MINISTRY OF LAYMEN
A Plea for Lay Evangelism
By
LEON C. PALMER.

Over 2,000 copies sold before edition was off the press.

Postpaid: Single copies, 25c.; four for $1.00; nine for $2.00.

From
The BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW
202 S. Nineteenth St., Philadelphia.

Real Estate Loans
REASONABLE RATES AND TERMS
SOUTHERN BOND AND MORTGAGE COMPANY, INC.,
627 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.

FOUR POINT STAR SUMMER RANCH
ST. MICHAEL'S MISSION
WIND RIVER INDIAN RESERVATION
ETHETE, WYO.
Open from June 15th to September 15th.

Bring your family and friends to healthful Wyoming. (Opportunities for fishing, horseback riding, and motor trips to many of America's most beautiful spots, including Yellowstone Park, abound. Good home table with plenty of fresh products from our own ranch gardens and dairy. Here a unique vacation may be spent in the delightful atmosphere of St. Michael's Mission. Write for further particulars. Prices moderate.

A. ABBOTT HASTNIGS, Warden.

R. GEISSLER, INC.
56 W. 8th STREET, NEW YORK, N.Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER FABRICS + WINDOWS

XANTHINE
Hair Restorative
Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.
Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.
XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

Church and Sunday School Furniture
THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY, Hickery, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue.

Washington Cathedral
A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation
• • •
THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work, Missionary, Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.
Chartered under Act of Congress.
Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.
Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.
• • •
Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

Church Furniture
Pews · Pulpits · Chancel Furniture
Sunday School Seating
American Seating Company
General Offices 1029 Lytton Bldg., CHICAGO.
Catalogues on Request.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

It is the Guest who makes the feast divine.—Ex.

There is no use in praying to God about our difficulties if we mean to keep on fretting about them.

Love is the opposite of selfishness. If your first thought is for yourself, you are a stranger to love.

If the best man's faults were written on his forehead, it would make him pull his hat over his eyes.—John Trapp.

It is no use fixing the eye on the compass if the hand is not on the wheel. —Ex.

"Oh, by Thy love and anguish, Lord,
And by Thy life laid down,
Grant that we fall not from Thy grace,
Nor fail to reach our crown!"

"A little philosophy inclineth man's mind to atheism, but depth in philosophy bringeth man's mind about to religion."—Bacon on Atheism.

Tact is only half expressed when saying the right word. The other half, quite as valuable, is the practice of silence at the crucial moment.

Meditation is an universally difficult achievement for the modern American. It is the taking of a simple passage of Scripture and holding it in the mind until its significance sinks into the soul.—J. Edgar Park.

Such help as we can give each other in this world is a debt to each other, and the man who perceives a superiority or capacity in a subordinate, and neither confesses it nor assists it, is not merely a withholder of a kindness, but the committer of injury.—Ruskin.

"He hath given us an understanding heart that we may know Him." This is something the natural heart cannot know itself. This is something that genius and learning cannot find. This is something that eloquence cannot make plain. This is something that must come to us through the direct vision of the Holy Ghost.—Selected.

O matchless honor, all unsought,
High privilege, surpassing thought
That thou shouldst call us, Lord, to be Linked in work-fellowship with Thee!
To carry out Thy wondrous plan,
To bear Thy messages to man;
"In trust," with Christ's own word of grace
To every soul of human race."

When a man is told that the whole of religion and morality is summed up in the two commandments, to love God, and to love our neighbor, he is ready to cry, like Charoba in Gebir, at the ocean is this all Yes, all; but how small a part of it do your eyes survey? Only trust yourself to it; launch out upon it; sail abroad over it; you will find it has no end; it will carry you round the world.—Guesses at Truth.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., MAY 14, 1927. No. 20.

CHANGING PILOTS

With this issue the helm of the good ship "Southern Churchman" changes hands. My position as acting editor since last September has been purely temporary. My real work is that of City Missionary for the City of Richmond, and Executive Secretary for Social Service for the Diocese of Virginia. Editing the Southern Churchman has been an interesting and rather enjoyable avocation, and I thank the many subscribers who have been kind enough to express appreciation of my management.

Rev. James W. Morris, D. D., who has been selected as permanent editor is one of the most consecrated clergymen in the Episcopal Church. After graduating from Randolph-Macon College, the University of Virginia and the Theological Seminary at Alexandria, he went immediately to the mission field in Brazil, where he spent about fifteen years. Upon his return he served churches in Leesburg, Norfolk and Richmond. His heart, however, has always been in the mission field, and he had only returned on account of the health of his family. In 1920 his fervent missionary spirit could not resist the call to return to his old field, and he resigned a large city church to take up the arduous duties of Dean of the Theological School, Porto Allegre in far Brazil, thereby setting a fine example of Christian heroism. He returned from this work last November, on his triennial furlough. He will have the good wishes of a multitude of friends in his guidance of the Southern Churchman.

R. CARY MONTAGUE.

A PERSONAL APPEAL

The following letter, addressed to the Editor, seems so pressing, that we use it on the Editorial page:

May 6, 1927.

Dear Mr. Editor:

I have just received a letter from the Rev. L. W. Rose, the beloved and efficient rector of the Episcopal Church in Greenwood, Miss., from which I send you a few extracts which should be of interest to your readers, and may stimulate further practical response to the terrible need occasioned by this unprecedented flood disaster. I preached a mission early in February in Greenwood, and felt that I had never met a more devoted rector, "shepherdess" or people than I found there. Every Churchman should be proud to read this fragment of their story:

> "If you had been here on the twenty-third of April you would have seen about two hundred and fifty refugees, men, women and children in the Community House. Never did a Christian Church have a finer opportunity to make a practical demonstration of the Religion of the Christ that we are wont to talk about on Sundays. All we did was to open the doors and invite them to come in. They began coming about the middle of the week and before the Red Cross got into action we clothed the naked, fed the hungry, gave drink to the thirsty, gave the unclean a chance to wash up, etc. In short, we fulfilled the whole program of Christianity according to Christ. The workers, of course, were from all the Churches except the —— —— and some of the best of them were Jews. In about ten days the refugee camp was established and there are about six hundred down there now, white and black. I preached to them yesterday afternoon.
>
> "Mr. Hoover, the biggest man in the whole bunch at Washington, has been down here and no doubt you have read his radio speech. Words are feeble in describing the calamity. Two hundred thousand homeless people, many of them rich ten days ago. I have just heard that the Delta Planting Company at Scott, Miss., has just gone into the hands of a receiver, one of the biggest cotton plantations in the world and representing millions. It is estimated that half a billion dollars worth of property has been destroyed. . . . . But there is a lot of work yet ahead, for it will take about a month for things to get down to normal. The paltry $5,000,000 that the President writes about will be as the small dust in the balance to meet the needs of these tens of thousands of homeless people."

Yours truly,

ARTHUR B. KINSOLVING.

Baltimore, Md.

THIS WEEK'S PREACHER

THE RIGHT REVEREND CHARLES H. BRENT, D. D., Bishop of Western New York, was born in Canada, and received his college education in Toronto, and was ordained both to the Diaconate and the Priesthood by Bishop Sweatman, of that Diocese. He came to the United States, however, immediately after his ordination, and was one of the Cathedral staff at Buffalo, New York. From there he went to Boston as a member of the Order of St. John the Evangelist (Cowley Fathers), remaining there until 1901, when he was elected Bishop of the Philippine Islands, where he served for seventeen years, being elected the Bishop of Washington (D. C.) and New Jersey in the meantime, but declining both these positions to remain at his arduous post in the Philippines. During the war, General Pershing selected him to be the head of the Army Chaplains, and he rendered such valuable service in this position, that he received the Distinguished Service Medal from Congress. In 1918 he accepted the Bishopric of Western New York, and in 1926 he also became Bishop of the American Church in Europe. He has taken very active interest in the traffic in narcotics, having served on a number of international commissions dealing with this subject. He is also deeply interested in Christian Unity, participating in all the World Conferences on Faith and Order, and taking a leading part in them. Few of our clergy have been so honored with degrees from educational institutions, having received no less than nine Doctor of Divinity degrees, all from leading colleges, seminaries and universities. He is considered one of the ablest preachers in the Church, and his wide experience, both at home and abroad make him a leading figure in any gathering that he attends. A prolific writer, he has published many books, all on religious subjects. He always maintains a broad view, and the sermon that we are using this week was preached at the installation of the minister at the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church.

THE PULPIT OF THE AMERICAN CHURCH

THE GOOD SHEPHERD

By the Right Reverend Charles H. Brent, D. D.

"I am the Good Shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine."—John 10:14.

IT IS of the pastoral office that I would speak. No more fitting name can attach to the ministerial character than that of pastor. It is as the good pastor or shepherd that Jesus Christ presents Himself to us—"I am the Good Shepherd: the Good Shepherd giveth His life for the sheep." "I am the Good Shepherd, and know my sheep and am known of mine."

The Shepherd Psalm stands unmatched for the depth and the simplicity of the truth which it proclaims—that the Lord cares for each child of His through every conceivable experience, as though it were the "onliest lamb He had".

Pastoral beauty, hovers over the manger of the babe Jesus at His birth as certain poor shepherds came from under the stars on the Judean hillside, where they were watching their flocks, to pay Him homage. The pastoral thought and passion and practice drench the pages of the Gospel story. Without it the Evangelical message would be still born. Jesus seizes upon it to symbolize His most intimate and loving teachings. He spoke aloud in the exact terms of the unspoken language of His thought. His mode of thought was in allegory, symbol and parable. His speech is the window pane through which we see His mind in operation. So that He was not like the Good Shepherd. He was the Good Shepherd.

The last recorded words attributed to Jesus are couched in pastoral language in which He is evidently thinking of Himself as the Good Shepherd who has laid down His life for the sheep. "Feed my sheep—Tend my sheep—Feed my lambs," He says as He passes on to His representative disciples His highest function, His chief privilege, His supreme responsibility.

The story of Jesus, as we possess it, is largely a story of personal relationships worked out pastorally. His public ministry is fulfilled not up in a church steeple, but down among His people. If there are some fourteen instances of individual ministrations in the brief fragment of His biography which we have, there are intimations of countless others of similar sort. When He is alone it is for seasons snatched from service to refresh and renew His inner life by fellowship with God. He sometimes addresses multitudes, more frequently is He with His more intimate friends, and at other times He ministers to particular persons—the sick, the sorrowful, the seeking. He, the Good Shepherd, began by identifying Himself with His sheep so that He is but the foremost of the flock, the Lamb of God "as it had been slain" for the flock. Thus He becomes the representative layman. He never held office. He never sought it. His character was His office. He never wrote a book. He never asked that one should be written about Him. His vellum was the affections, the minds and the inner self of men. Here He inscribed His life and teaching in such wise that all the multitudinous waters of time can never obliterate it. So, behold the Good Shepherd!

In a real sense all of us have pastoral responsibility, if I am right in thinking of Jesus Christ as being the representative layman. But it is of the commissioned pastor whose prototypes are found in the Apostolate that I would speak. To these custom has given the time-honored title of pastors—pastors who by ordination are not separated from the flock, who are not formed into a caste, but are as the Good Shepherd was before them, representative laymen, foremost companions, whatever else they may be besides.

In the first place the Christian pastor must establish such contacts with his people as to know them and to be known of them.

Now it is the ambition of every student for the ministry to be a preacher. To this end he sets his studies and trains his tongue. The thought of swaying great crowds with the eloquence of the truth is entrancing. A large church with crowded congregations is a vision lying in the back of the mind of most novices envisaging their life in the ministry. But before one can reach multitudes so as to do more than interest or entertain them, he must know men at close range from familiar intercourse with them. The sermon is, by established custom, a monologue which the preacher delivers without fear of contradiction or interruption. Because of the amount of theory which ordinarily enters into it, and frequently through lack of knowledge of human life and how it is lived, preachers more often than not, miss the mark and help no one. This must be the case of the man who deems the chief function of the ministry to be preaching. If the amount of preaching counted, there would be today ample and to spare to convert the last reprobate on earth. Preaching is a definite means reaching after a definite end. As its power comes from knowledge won out of pastoral relationships, so its object is to establish new grounds for deepened and added pastoral relationships. The preacher should go from the individual to the many and from the many back again to the individual. The radio sermon has widened the reach of the human voice to points where otherwise it could not penetrate. But the voice without the personality and the prospect of individual pastoral touch is an influence that soon passes and spreads but thin comfort.

Recently attention has been caught by the method of interpellation adopted in one of our colleges where the preacher is interrupted by a listener and a coloquy ensues. If the preacher, who is now protected by laws prohibiting any interruption of divine service, were to expect the flow of his logic to be challenged or questioned, there would be fewer weak arguments and poorly constructed sermons. There is room in the Church for interpellations in preaching and for the method of the forum.

When I speak about preaching I am using the word in its evangelical sense—that effective pulpit speech which contributes toward man's knowledge of God, his conversion, and his edification. The amount of so-called preaching today is prodigious. The average pastor delivers more formal sermons to his flock in a month than Jesus Christ is recorded as doing in His whole ministry. Their influence is not commensurate with the amount of vitality expended.

Bishop Lawrence says: "Many people have the impression that the day for pastoral calling has gone by. Rectors say they have not time to go from house to house; that the people also are too busy, and that they must devote themselves to preaching and administrations; parishioners can sell them at their office. During the eight years of my rectorship I was continually in and out of the tenements and homes of the people. Most afternoons and many evenings were devoted to calling; for it is as important to meet the men as the women and children. Calls are of all kinds. If the rector be human, and of reasonable tact, he will meet conditions as he finds them; sometimes an earnest talk, sometimes a prayer, sometimes simply a cheerful friendly greeting. I remember that at a meeting of clergy years ago the subject of pastoral calling was discussed and one man after another spoke of its futility. 'Far better,' said they, 'to give the time to the preparation of the sermon.' Finally the chairman turned to Phillips Brooks, who had been silent and asked his opinion. He said: 'I wish that I could devote every hour of the day to calling on my people. I know of no happier or more helpful work that a pastor can do; and I call as much as I can. How is it possible for one to preach to his people if he does not know them, their doubts, sorrows, and ambitions?'

This is so profoundly true that I do not hesitate to generalize and say that though all good pastors are not good preachers, for more than pastoral faithfulness is necessary for good preaching, there is no good and influential preacher who does not get his main power from his pastoral faithfulness and knowledge. I am not thinking of fine lectures of which we get many from the pulpit. Much less am I thinking of the administration of pious soporifics which led Karl Marx with some justification to brand religion with the reproach of being the opium of the people. My thought is of the penetrative preaching of the Gospel which is as revolutionary as it is searching. Such preaching, I reiterate, cannot be had unless the pastor establishes himself by first winning the confidence of the people in their homes and gaining that knowledge of human life which is available only through personal contacts properly used.

Because of the decline in pastoral interest and understanding, country parishes are accepted only as stepping-stones for urban work. From actual surveys we learn that fifty per cent of our agricultural population is either frankly pagan or unchurched. A real pastor has a greater opportunity in the country than in the city by reason of the smaller number of his flock and the ease of establishing personal contacts. "If there is any curse upon the work of God, it is that restless fashion of considering that to succeed is to get out of the rural into the urban pastorate the unwillingness to serve a country parish longer than is imperative . . . Worldly reasons are obvious, why no pastor moves from a so-called 'leading church' into a great pagan rural community, but is there any spiritual reason why the thing should not be done without loss of caste? . . . . Not an ounce of self-sacrifice will be in the process, for I believe that the country is the place of greater joy, greater opportunity, and even greater honor, as soon as we have self reliance enough to laugh in the face of our profession, or to forget it." (Steepes Among the Hills, Hewitt, Pp. 16, 17).

I am glad to quote in a great city church these words of an ardent country pastor. My sympathy and interest go out to the country, where half of America's population lives. After all Jesus was country born and country bred and passed much more of His life in villages than in Jerusalem. It was the city that compassed His death.

Pastoral work is social case work in a supreme degree.

A leader cannot know and love men without getting to know and love the man. Our Lord, we are told, "knew all men and needed not that any should testify of man; for He knew what was in man". Jesus Christ arrived at this knowledge by the proper application of His incomparable intelligence to each person whom He met. Like all of His inner wealth it was not a ready-made birthright, but the fruit of steady and often painful effort to know His sheep. St. Paul's pastoral mind was of the same sort as that fragrant sixteenth chapter of his Epistle to the Romans illustrates. It is not just a hasty list of names, but a garland of delicate personal recognitions—Priscilla and Aquilla my helpers in Christ Jesus: Who for my life laid down their own necks. Mary who bestowed much labor on us. Andronicus and Junia, my kinsmen, and my fellow prisoners, who are of note among the apostles, who also were in Christ before me. Rufus chosen in the Lord, and his mother and mine.

The laboratory methods of today are amassing valuable information by observation of the behavior of human life as instanced in the individual. Though interested in his investigations, we may well hesitate to accept the hasty generalizations of the behaviorist in the light of his admitted assumption (1), the paucity of his facts (2), the inaccuracy of some of his observations (3), and his inconsistencies (4). Behaviorists are arrogating to themselves the sole claim to dogmatic assertion as other departments of learning are shunning it. Their unqualified denial of inherited traits, of instinct, of consciousness which, following Huxley, they relate to the body as the steam whistle is related to the engine (5), is valuable to students of human nature only as a warning against jumping by long or short leaps to conclusions. In that the psychology of Jesus Christ accepts moral responsibility and the vitalistic conception of life as the first principles of self-respect and progress—as of course human society in all its organized forms does as a fact of common experience for reasons of self-preservation—we cannot endorse the half-baked theories of psychologies which make us the toys of our glands and neurones or of "muscle-twichism". "All that is novel in the Behaviorist program is the resolution pretense that the facts of human consciousness are of no interest to the student of human nature, prevent no problems worthy of consideration and may profitably be ignored" (McDougall in Psychologies). It may be that a great weight of theory makes against or modifies the doctrine of moral responsibility, but on the other hand most of our experience makes for it.

Social workers are far in advance of the average pastor in their knowledge of human life. They have, by patient study of their "cases" secured a technique quite foreign to the experience of the clergy as a whole. The development of case work exemplifies their minute care of the individual. Nor are their explorations solely in the sphere of morbid psychology. They recognize that certain physical conditions modify the degree of responsibility which persons have for their actions. They distinguish in treatment of the normal, the subnormal and the moron. They use accredited science. Consequently their treatment is intelligent. I recall an instance a quarter of a century ago where I had to deal with one of the three phases of conduct in a woman suffering from dissociated personality. There was but little that I could do, as her case was psychopathic and needed the attention of an expert neurologist. The pastor should work hand in hand with the trained scientist; the trained scientist should work hand in hand with the trained minister of religion in all cases of morbidity In short the pastor should deal with each member of his flock, building up by conscious effort that which will ultimately become unconscious habit—I mean such a knowledge of his people as will approximate the perfect knowledge of our Lord, "who knew all men, and needed not that any should testify of man; for he knew what was in man".

The pastor is for all his flock a physician of souls ministering to them in sinsickness.

It is but recently that the Protestant world, largely under the stimulus of the Freudian hypothesis and its successful application, has been awakened to the desirability in most cases and the indispensability in others of the use of confession. Psychology lays down the thesis that suppressed emotion gives the most poisonous reaction to which human life is subject. It results in disordered character, nervous disturbance, physical breakdown, and in extreme cases insanity and death. A truly great physician once said to me: "I have probably heard more confessions than you." Doubtless he was right. He, a senior in the medical world, was one of the earliest in his profession to recognize that inner health is at least an aid to outer health and in some cases indispensable to it. "Thy sins be forgiven thee" is not infrequently the necessary preface to "Arise. Take up thy bed and walk". Medical materialism is only less mischievous than the repudiation of medical science.

The pastor should aim to secure the moral and spiritual confidence of every man, woman and child in his care. He should be known and trusted as well as know and trust. Relationship between pastor and parishioner should be so complete as to have no reserves. That is God's mode of dealing with us. He asks us to be transparently honest with Him because He is transparently honest with us.

The pastor must be the symbol and the promoter of Christian unity in his own constituency.

Controversy is slowly but surely giving way before the gentler method of conference. This is true in every department of life and markedly in religion. There are still probably burning souls eager to be identified with the thunderous destruction of error. But how much higher and finer and more effective is the way of that great man Gamaliel!—"If this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to naught; but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found to fight against God".

The pastor is the promoter of the truth—the truth about God as revealed in Jesus Christ, the truth about ourselves, the truth about others. This can for the most part be expressed best in positive language. Though Phillips Brooks was capable of invective, his normal mode was constructive and exalted. Ours should be likewise.

*(1) John B. Watson in THE PSQCHOLOGIES OF 1925, Pp. 13, 70, 74, 75. (2) Pp. 1, 10, 65, 74, 81. (3) Pp. 2, 73. (4) Pp. 72, 73. (5) p. 200 ff.

I recognize the horrible confusion that Christendom is in today and the apparent hopelessness of gathering its fragments into unity. But I also cling to the prayer of Jesus Christ that there may be one fold under one Shepherd as being the secure promise of Divine order eventually taking the place of human chaos. Briand is quoted as having said that disarmament "can come about only by the will to peace among all nations". That same will to peace must characterize all Churches.

It is an accepted conviction among thinking men that the brotherhood of mankind will ultimately be realized. Even our own great soldier, General Pershing, has just said: "Difficulties have always arisen as an aftermath of war, and it is no cause for despair that they exist today. Many of the jealousies and prejudices are petty and should be ignored. In general we are moving forward in the direction of goodwill, and it is my firm belief that peoples will rise above these things and achieve a better understanding, and that peace among civilized peoples is not a dream." Peace among the nations is built on an assumption and abstract speculation. Peace among the churches is built upon the prophecy of the living Person, Jesus Christ, who is the cornerstone of our foundation. It was He who brought home the truth that the human race can be thought of as a brotherhood because the God whom He came to declare is the Father of us all. The Churches need a common council table around which to gather just as much as, perhaps more than, the nations.

Today among both clergy and laity there is widespread ignorance, apathy, and even opposition to Church peace. Our very first duty is to clear up by patient and honest inquiry those vast areas of absurd prejudice and gross misinformation which block fellowship and understanding irrevocably while they stand. There are enough real difficulties to contend with after misunderstanding has been cleared away without also having to demolish men of straw. It is here that the pastor must be at his best, for he represents the Master who is the Truth as well as the Life and the Way. Why cannot we imitate in our ecclesiastical sphere the spirit of the noble Jewess who proposed to me the other day that the Jews of my city giving to their relief fund should do so in the name of some Christian who had been conspicuously kind and courteous to them The least we can do is to cultivate that inner spirit which looks on every professing Christian as a brother in a common family, and not as a spiritual alien or foreigner. Unity will come when we rally around Jesus Christ in His Spirit—not until then. The formula is simple, but the trouble is with ourselves who are singularly unsimple.

Finality of thought and fixity of interpretation is the stronghold of those who have ceased to think. The saddest epitaph a man can have is that he never changed an opinion since he was old enough to have one. There are boundless plains of thought awaiting your exploration. With an unblemished conscience, and firmly seated on the Pegasus of faith, you are safe wherever you may roam or soar. You may be a guardian of the Truth. Much more is the Truth the guardian of you.

"It fortifies my soul to know
That, though I perish, Truth is so:
That, howsoe'er I stray and range,
Whate'er I do, Thou dost not change.
I steadier step when I recall
That, if I slip, Thou dost not fall."

Do not be afraid if the Truth leads you into the narrow lane of minorities and unpopularity. Be afraid if a majority try to crown and corrupt you by popular applause. Go on learning, for to die learning is a noble ambition attained by few. In its gift is imperishable youth.

"Where lies the land to which the ship would go?
Far, far ahead, is all her seamen know.
And where the land she travels from? Away
Far, far behind, is all that they can say."

Tonight your ship is launched on uncharted seas. We wish you a safe, though perhaps not a smooth, voyage.

THE FUTURE OF CHRISTIANITY IN CHINA

By the Reverend Kimber H. K. Den

II.

THE NEW ATTITUDE.

AS we know, that our attitude towards Mission funds was "no taxation without representation", hence there must be Mission supervision and Mission control as long as the support comes from Mission sources. The native workers are employed as employees to do just the piece of work set for them to do and have no share whatever in the control and use of the funds designated for the Mission work. The weak point of this system lies in the fact that these people never have a sense of responsibility for the money used for them. They are like hired servants who wish to get as much as they can from their masters, for the service they render, but never have the same sense of responsibility for the money as if it were their own. It has been said once of a group of returned students working in a certain Chinese Christian institution that they are perfectly satisfied with the comparatively small salaries which are offered to them by the Chinese Board of Directors in whose hands the mission funds are entrusted. They have also each worked hard to raise the annual budget for the institution, because they feel it is their own work. While there was another case of a group of returned students in a Christian institution whose Board of Trustees and chief executives are foreigners who have to fix their salaries. These people, while getting larger pay and being no better trained than the first group mentioned above, do not seem to be at all satisfied, and this institution finds it difficult to hold them in the service. Why do they seem to lack such a sense of ownership and responsibility which the first group possesses? Is it not because of the fact that under the present form of organization of that institution, such sense of responsibility is difficult to create? A common proverb in China says: "You can never realize the difficulty of an undertaking unless you have the same experience of it." The same truth may be applied to the Mission attitude toward finances. The Chinese workers can hardly have a sense of responsibility for the Mission funds unless they have some relation to them. We all know that children can grow better and will be more ready to assume their responsibility to the family when they are so put in a responsible position. Sometimes they are given a certain amount of freedom of using their parents' money, even before they are able to earn for themselves. Then they are so trained with a proper judgment of using money before they come to take larger financial responsibility of their own. Oftentimes in China we see some fathers who would hesitate to turn responsibilities over to their grown-up sons for the reason that they fear that their sons, through lack of experience and mature judgment, might not be able to carry the responsibility. Hence we often find in China, heads of families providing food, shelter and clothing for all their sons and the sons of their sons and also determining the kind of work each member of the family is to do. The result is unfortunately on the one hand the fastening of a spirit of dependence on the part of the idle and inactive, and on the other the creation of a rebellious spirit, on the part of the ambitious youth. All the independent developments of the young Chinese Church in recent years, although they may not be interpreted as indicative of a rebellious spirit, are at least indications of a youthful ambition for self-expression and self-government.

Next to the proposed change of old attitude toward mission funds, is the need of a new attitude toward their fellow-workers. In the first stage of pioneering missions, all native workers, employed by the missions, were considered then, as the helpers and employees of the missionaries. Some of the early missionaries, by having authority of employing the native workers, naturally assumed a place of superiority and masterhood. Such an attitude, as we see, has certainly hindered the development of a sense of responsibility of the native workers. But, as missionaries, I think we should rather consider ourselves more as helpers to the native workers in building up a Native Church than as their employers and masters. Because, after all, the chief feature of the mission work is to serve as a temporal scaffolding for the construction of a permanent building—the Chinese Church of which the Chinese Christians will be the owners and masters. Hence, in view of the present situation, the type of missionary which is now greatly needed in that country is that group of men who have exceptional ability in training up native leadership and have the attitude of John the Baptist, who was glad when he saw a young man becoming more popular than himself, who could stand when his own disciples forsook him and said rejoicing, "He shall increase; I shall decrease".

THE NEW POLICY.

Again, it shows to us that the time has come for the missions to make a new readjustment of their policy in relation to the Chinese Church. Instead of still keeping the missions and the Native Churches existing as two parallel organizations as in past years, it is necessary that the Native Church should be recognized as the center of responsibility, through which the Mission Board may perform its functions. It would certainly help in a large extent to deepen the sense of responsibility and ownership on the part of the native Christians, if such things as determination of policies of work, allocation of Chinese workers as well as missionaries to various fields, the appropriation of funds from Chinese sources as well as from Mission Boards should be placed under the complete control of the Chinese Church—through the highest Church Council, which should consist of representatives from the Mission Boards as well as from the Chinese Church. At the present time the Missions have to do all this for the Chinese Church through the medium of the missionaries, who function as the representatives of the Mission Boards, and of whom the Native Church has no control. But if the Chinese Church, through the highest Church Council, should be encouraged and given the privilege to deal with the Mission Board directly in matters of mutual interest, there would be, of course, a closer fellowship and direct relationship established between the Chinese Church and the Churches in the West.

Such an adoption of new policy as outlined above would undoubtedly need an adventure of faith on the part of the mission to put into operation and practice. For the young Church, in China, being so immature in its experience, is bound to make some mistakes on her way of self-development. But, after all, it is good for a child, when trying to walk, to make a few falls, which will later lead to his independent movement. So it is not a thing to be discouraged about when that young Church in China is seen to make mistakes in her first stage of self-movement. It is just like what has been said by one missionary: "I would rather let the Chinese Church make some mistakes and then profit by them than for the missions to make a few mistakes by which the Chinese Church could not have profited." In conclusion we realize that whatever handicaps and difficulties the young Church in China may have in her endeavor of establishing the Kingdom of God on that soil, will by the Grace of God, not appear so much to her as stumbling blocks, but stepping stones to a fuller development of a healthy and strong Native Church in that part of the world.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE COMMUNITY

"The Kingdom Come, Thy Will be done on earth"

A RURAL PARISH HALL'S WINTER PROGRAM.

How a Parish Hall furnishes entertainment in the community and what activities enliven the small towns of our rural districts is shown by the number and variety of uses made of Emmanuel Parish Hall, Clarke County, Va.

The advent of the new year found a four-team men's bowling match in progress, the teams playing two nights a week; another night each week the bowling alleys were used by the young women of the town, including several members of the High School faculty. The two basketball teams (boys and girls) of the public school practiced two days and played one home game a week in the auditorium which is large enough for a regulation court. The men's town team had a similar schedule.

The Junior Auxiliary augmented its bank account by the receipts from a chicken and waffle supper, the hall being equipped with a kitchen and sufficient equipment to accommodate one hundred and twenty people at a sitting. The Young People's Service League held bi-weekly meetings with devotional and social periods. The community at large patronized two high-class musical concerts, which were put on by a National Lyceum Bureau. A "Father and Son" banquet was engineered by the agriculture classes of the High School, when sixty-nine fathers, sons and guests (several of whom were state officials) ate together; the girls of the Home Economics Department of the same school prepared and served the meal. One afternoon and a night the hall was used by the Methodists, who held a large inter-county convention of the Epworth League, and also a conference which was attended by over one hundred delegates from fourteen nearby churches. The local King's Daughters and Farmers' Union held their regular monthly meetings, and one night a big mass meeting was advertised for the organization of the coming season's baseball team. The High School League gave an entertainment, part of the proceeds of which went toward the purchase of new equipment for the school. A miscellaneous program was rendered, which featured an old-time fiddlers' contest, a popular number which was responsible for many of the five hundred and fifty persons present. The library is consulted daily by High School pupils looking for material for debates, essays and parallel reading. Over two hundred books were borrowed by the reading public, while the reading room and game tables were in nightly use.

With the coming of Ash Wednesday activities were confined to the lower floor, as a little Gothic Chapel of purple crepe-paper was erected in the auditorium occupying a cross section. This paper building is furnished with all the appointments of a small church and is used for the sessions of the Sunday School and the Young People's Friday services.

The Parish Hall is open three hundred and sixty-five days of the year, Sunday mornings for the Church School, week days from one to eleven o'clock. Of course, winter is the busy season, but the largest crowds are accommodated at the time of the High School commencement exercises, last year over 1,500 people were present on these three nights.

COMMENTS ON CHILD TRAINING.

By Mary Evelyn Brydon, M. D.

Article XVIII.—The Ten Commandments.

(Continued.)

The Eighth Commandment.—Thou shalt not steal. Honesty. Teach your child property rights.

The human baby is the most helpless of all young in the animal world. He receives everything, makes no effort to acquire anything for himself, and gives nothing in return. He grows naturally into taking everything he wants.

He learns very slowly and perhaps with difficulty—because of the haphazard way he is taught—that there are some things he may not touch, handle or keep for his own, because first, some things hurt him; second, some things will break; third, some things belong to some one else. So he learns to avoid the harmful things; to touch or handle very carefully precious things; and to keep hands off other people's property.

This matter of property rights is not a difficult thing to teach, one mother tells me, if you adopt the simple expedient of requiring the delinquent to give up a toy if he deprives a playmate of one. Certainly a child can be taught the difference between "my toys" and "your toys" at a very early age, at least by the time he can understand spoken language. But a deeper principle is involved than just a knowledge of the difference between mine and yours. If you hold too strictly to "what's mine is mine and what's yours is yours" you may tend to develop selfishness and discourage generosity. "A fair exchange is no robbery," but bargaining may lead to commercialism. A proper respect for the inherent, individual rights of others must be just as carefully learned.

We may steal many other things besides mere property:

a. Taking God's name in vain may lessen another's reverence for God.

b. Slandering is stealing another's good name or character.

c. Unpunctuality, being late to appointments is stealing another's time.

d. "Hogging the whole road," is taking the other driver's right of way.

There are innumerable ways of side-stepping strict honesty which make it difficult for men to live together peaceably. But the spiritually-minded mother will teach that every child is a child of God and, therefore, each child much learn to safeguard the rights of the other child, both property and individual, as carefully as he safeguards his own.

Usually when a child steals, he steals money—and he steals it not because he wants to hoard the money, but because he wants something that the money will buy. When he begins to steal, it is not his fault, but yours. Under such circumstances, there are two counts against you:

1. Either he was afraid to tell you what he wanted; or you did not explain to him your reason for refusing to let him have it; or did not substitute another interest for the present one. He must be satisfied so he will not steal.

2. You have not given him a money allowance to count on. Now I don't mean by the latter that all children who have no allowance steal, nor that all children who do have one, do not steal money. I believe the best way to teach a child not to steal money, is give him an allowance and teach him how to give, spend, and save; to give generously, to spend wisely, and to save thriftily for larger needs. As young as four years, a child can begin to learn the use of money. Gradually he learns in several ways. He may be entrusted with small purchases, handle the money and count the change in small amounts; help mother with the weekly budget; listen in or even take part in the family discussions—as long as they are peaceable; children have a clear, direct, unbiased point of view, their opinions sometimes are clear and to the point. They finally learn to handle a weekly allowance.

Possibly at four is early enough to start this allowance with five cents a week, annually increased at the rate of five cents weekly or even ten cents, if it is economically possible, and if certain small personal things, such as pencils, paper, etc., are required to be purchased out of the allowance money.

His allowance should be carefully budgeted. He should feel free to discuss with you how it should be spent and you should regard such discussion as a serious matter and not one to be ridiculed or lightly pushed aside. Advise him carefully as to the obligations that confront all people who have money.

First—Tithings: One penny out of the ten belongs to God. This penny he may put into the collection plate on Sunday and later when his allowance makes it possible to give a tithe of two pennies a week, he should have his own Church envelope and he begins, and should be told that he begins, to support the Church's activities.

Second—Thrift: One penny should always be saved—but saved for something he wants, not something you want him to want. To save just for the sake of saving is not wise; it engenders selfishness which may develop into miserliness. To have two banks (in Lent three) is a good plan—one easily opened, the other to be opened only by the bank and deposited as a savings account. In one he keeps his savings for some cherished object, in the other for his education; especially if the family is poor and the education of the children a remote possibility. A child who begins early to save for his education may come at college age to be able to handle his own funds most economically. Money gifts to the child could be placed in the education bank.

Third—Wise Spending: Do not supervise this spending too closely. Let the child learn by experience that if he buys this, he cannot buy that. Let him go without if he was too hasty. Help him to render a weekly account. In order to safeguard personality, do not inquire too closely into the item "Sunday". A child's weekly account book might stand at first thus:

Received	$ .10
Spent:
1. Tithe	$ .01
2. Bank Savings	.01
3. Education	.01
4. Candy	.02
5. Gave away	.01
6. Sundry	.04
	$ .10

Study this closely in the light of what the child would gain by keeping it, what he must learn in some other way, from others perhaps, if he doesn't keep it.

What to do if a child steals?

I believe he steals because he cannot get in any other way something he longs for; because he hasn't learned property and individual rights; because of some physical or mental abnormality. For the first two some such procedure described above will help you; for the second your family physician, or psychiatrist (one who tests the intelligence). State and City Health and Welfare Departments and larger educational institutions are encouraging the establishment of Habit Clinics. Ask your State or City Departments or your Juvenile Court Judge for the one nearest to your home. But if the child steals, don't forget there is a reason which must be sought for and corrected. A better way is to prevent, teach from infancy property rights, individual rights, and that every child is a child of God and therefore his rights are to be respected.

BOOK REVIEWS

GETTING ACQUAINTED WITH THE NEW TESTAMENT: By Frank Eakin, Ph. D. The Macmillan Company, New York. Pp. 487.

Although the size of this book makes it seem somewhat formidable, its purpose is to fill a place somewhere between the more or less technical works on the same subject, and the short and popular books that have been written as introductions to the various books of the New Testament. The author divides his subject into four parts. Beginning with the study of the New Testament, to which he devotes three chapters, he next takes up the history of the New Testament, to which he gives practically one fourth of his space. "The Background of the New Testament" (Part 3) deals with the historical and political setting in which the Epistles and Gospels were written, considering both Jewish and Greek religious and cultural conditions. He concludes with nine chapters on "The Matter of the New Testament", six of which are historical, two being given to the life and work of Jesus. This volume is too substantial to be of interest or value to any except students, or persons taking part in Sunday School education, but for them it will be exceedingly valuable.

CHURCH FACTS AND PRINCIPLES: By the Rev. T. Tracy Walsh. Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wis. Pp. 223.

The Rt. Rev. William Cabell Brown contributes a commendatory introduction to this valuable little volume, which is published in both paper and cloth. It contains sixteen chapters dealing with the history of the Church of England and its transference to this country, and its attitude toward the historic ministry and priesthood, the Bible and various practices, such as infant baptism, Sunday observance and departed souls. In the chapter on the Church and the Bible, Mr. Walsh says: "By accepting the fact that God's Word as revealed in the Bible is inspired by the Holy Ghost, the Episcopal Church has never committed herself to any one theory of inspiration. . . . . On account of this attitude of the Church towards inspiration there need be no controversy among her members on the subject of the Bible and the theory of evolution." Later in the same chapter the author says: "What is called modern criticism is not a mere search for discrepancies and errors; it involved a thorough scientific but reverent study of the Bible from every possible aspect. Literary and historical study is called higher criticism, while the critical examination of texts and manuscripts is called lower criticism. There are but few English speaking critics who may not be classed as orthodox in the essentials, and on the whole criticism has been a help to intelligent and devotional Bible study." This is a very fair statement of the advantage and usefulness of higher criticism of the Bible, and it is interesting to note that Bishop Brown of Virginia closes his introduction to this book with these words: "It gives me great pleasure, therefore, cordially to commend 'Church Facts and Principles', especially to the clergy of the Church, with the hope that they will make large use of it in their ministry." We add our commendation to that of Bishop Brown.

R. C. M.

THE MAKING OF A MINISTER: By Charles R. Brown, Dean of the Divinity School, Yale University. The Century Company, New York. Pp. 294.

Any book that is written by Dean Brown is interesting to the clergy by reason of the position that he occupies, as head of one of the largest and most influential Divinity Schools in the country; furthermore, anything that he writes is interesting to the general public on account of his style, because whether he is discussing prayer, or the setting for a wedding, he is human, interesting, and enlightening.

It is altogether impossible to do justice to this book in a brief review. One can hardly imagine a volume more valuable to the clergy, and more absolutely indispensable to a young minister. It details instructively and fascinatingly with every phase of the clergyman's life, from the things that constitute a call to preach to "The Modern Minister and the Lord". There are chapters on such practical subjects as: "The Minister Among Men," "The Minister With the Children," "Pastoral Calling," "Weddings," "Funerals," "The Minister's Wife," "His Money" and "Entering and Leaving a Parish," and a wonderful chapter on "Learning to Pray."

The material the book contains was first used as lectures. It has, therefore, the fresh directness of the spoken word, and the orderly arrangement of the written page (qualities that should be considered in all sermons, for every sermon should be written, but none of them should be read by the preacher).

The following quotations on two widely different subjects will give an idea of Dean Brown's style.

In his chapter on "His Money" he says: "The Church itself needs money to meet its expenses. It cannot live on air. When men join lodges and clubs, they expect to pay dues. They frankly face the fact that membership in any organization carries with it financial obligations. The Church had best make clear the fact that membership here also involves financial responsibility. It is best that this obligation should not be hidden away under a camouflage of oyster suppers and Church sales. The money needed is to be given by the Church members as part of their Christian duty.

How sensible Paul was at this point! He was not always passing the plate, but he furnished more texts for sermons on giving than any other one whose words are recorded in the New Testament. He preserved for us that rare saying of Christ which the authors of the four Gospels seem to have overlooked: "Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how He said, It is more blessed to give than to receive".

In his chapter on "Prayer", he says: "There are four elements in all prayer which is genuine; they should all be present, in the spirit certainly (if not in so many words), of every prayer. First, adoration—we are not chatting with a next-door neighbor. We are speaking to our Maker. Then thanksgiving—we have already received at His hands benefits unspeakable, more than we deserve. Gratitude is one of the finest traits in human character; show it when you enter His presence. The confession—in that sublime presence we are conscious of our lack. We have followed too much the devices and desires of our own hearts. We have done things which we ought not to have done. We have erred and strayed from the way like lost sheep. In honest fashion, own up and make your approach with the words of confession on your lips. And then, with these moods as a preparation, let there be petition. Ask, that you may receive. Seek, and you will find. Knock, and His door into the treasure-house of a world unseen will open. All this is not in the mood or the method of a mail-order business. Let your approach to God be according to that sounder method, and you will find it the intelligent and rewarding cooperation of mind and heart and will with a rational process!"

It is impossible to praise this book too highly or to commend it too warmly, both to the clergy, and the general public.

R. C. M.

WONDERFUL DREAMS OF THE BIBLE: By the Rev. W. E. Robertson. The Baptist Book Store, Richmond, Virginia. Pp. 111.

This little volume from the pen of a pastor of ripe experience gives a study of the dreams of Jacob, Joseph, Pharaoh, the Midianite soldier, Daniel and Nebuchadnezzar. It contains a brief historical sketch of the Children of Israel between the dates of each of these characters. Every dream is given an interpretation by the author, showing a message that comes to us today from these visions of the past, and it will be found a useful little book to those who like to study the unusual features of the Bible.

R. C. M.

THE STRUCTURE OF THE BOOK AND ITS BOOKS: By Layman Morse Denton, M. A., Th. D. Judson Press, Kansas City, Missouri. Pp. 221.

This is one of many modern books which in the space of a couple of hundred pages or so, attempts to deal with a subject that requires several large volumes. The very fact that so many such books come off the press proves the popularity of the Bible as a theme for investigation and study. The present volume presents a short sketch of all the books of the Bible, with test questions on each. Its condensed form will be seen from the fact that First and Second Samuel are given just two and a third pages, and Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians is analyzed and given its historic setting, and the occasion of its composition in five pages. Those who like Bible instruction in homeopathic doses may find this book interesting.

R. C. M.

KNOWING THE BIBLE: By Raymond C. Knox, S. T. D. Macmillan Company, New York. Pp. 277.

As might be expected from the Chaplain of Columbia University this book presents reviews of modern scholarship concerning the Bible, showing its origin to be entirely human, rather than divine, and applying the latest tests of recent research. This volume is arranged for study classes, and has sketches of "reference readings" and "question outlines" at the end of each chapter. It attempts to discuss the whole Bible, and, therefore, has to present its matter in very condensed form. The author divides his space almost equally between the Old and the New Testament, and the book will be found exceedingly useful for those who wish to teach the modern theory of the origin and interpretation of the Bible.

R. C. M.

THE MAGIC FORMULA AND OTHER STORIES: By L. P. Jacks. Harper Brothers, New York. Pp. 367.

One is surprised to find a book of short stories from the pen of the learned and distinguished editor of the Hibbert Journal. This volume contains twelve such stories, selected from a larger series which have been published in five volumes previously. In selecting these stories for American publication it has been the effort of the author to pick those with the keenest human interest, irrespective of date and place. In this attempt he has been eminently successful, and presents a group of stories that will hold the attention of readers of all classes, though it is impossible to review such a book in detail since each chapter constitutes a separate narrative in itself.

R. C. M.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

CORRECTING AN ERROR IN "THE SPIRIT OF MISSIONS".

Mr. Editor:

May I ask the favor in your columns to correct a bad typographical error in my article, "Mexicans on This Side of the Rio Grande" in the May issue of the Spirit of Missions, on page 272? It was a quotation from a letter of Bishop Creighton of Mexico, which by the unfortunate omission of the word "out" seemed to make him say what he certainly did not say.

The corrected quotation, with the word "out" inserted and in black is as follows:

> "Whatever you do in the United States will vitally affect this work. Many visitors in Mexico City call upon me to impress on me the importance of doing work for the Mexicans in the United States, calling my attention to the vast numbers out of the Roman Church who are potentially material for us. I am glad to cooperate in every possible way."

It is because they are outside of the Roman Church that they need our ministrations.

THOMAS BURGESS,
Secretary Foreign-Born Americans Divisions.
New York, May 7.

Church Intelligence

National Commission on Evangelism

A meeting of the National Commission on Evangelism was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Thorne, Harrison, N. Y., on April 27 and 28.

There were present the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, the Rt. Rev. G. Ashton Oldham, the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, the Rev. John S. Bunting, the Very Rev. George R. E. MacDonald, the Rev. A. J. Gammack, Mr. Samuel Thorne and Mr. Courtenay Barber.

Bishop Darst announced the resignation of Bishop Johnson, of Colorado, and of Mr. Davidson, and the appointment by the Presiding Bishop of Bishop Cook, of Delaware, to take the place of Bishop Johnson. Bishop Johnson was requested to continue as chairman of the Committee on Schools of the Prophets and as consultant to the National Commission.

The Commission nominated Mr. F. C. Morehouse to the Presiding Bishop to fill the vacancy among the lay members.

It has since been a great shock to the members of the Commission to learn of the death of the Rev. A. J. Gammack, who was thrown from a horse.

The executive leadership of the Commission was the first thing to be considered at the meeting. Bishop Darst had been released from the Diocese of East Carolina for the purpose of leading the active work of the Bishops' Crusade. The follow-up work of the Crusade, recognized as being quite as important as the Crusade itself, calls for the continued leadership of Bishop Darst. The Commission petitioned the National Council that in cooperation with the Diocese of East Carolina the Bishop might be released from diocesan work to continue as executive chairman for the rest of this triennium and for the following three years.

A careful appraisement of the Bishops' Crusade revealed the fact that the movement proved a success quite beyond all hopes. Many criticisms were reported and it was recognized that many not expressed were entertained. At the same time, a real awakening of the spiritual life of the Church has been secured.

Many suggestions were made with regard to procedure for the immediate future, but it was felt wise that they should be considered, digested, and coordinated by the Chairman and the Executive Committee before definite suggestions are made to the Church at large. No desire was expressed to standardize methods or impose programs upon any diocese or parish. At the same time, definiteness of suggestion was called for from many quarters, and the effort will be made to meet the demand.

The Bishops' Crusade, as such, closed with the end of the Epiphany Season. But the principles involved neither began with the Bishops' Crusade, nor can be regarded as ended with it. Its basic principle was the appeal to a spiritual awakening on the part of the whole Church with the strengthening of the individual parish by the cooperation of the whole body.

Attention will now be given to the development of evangelism in the various parishes—the encouragement of groups for the deepening of the spiritual life, and the binding together for mutual strengthening of those who are interested in the expression of their spiritual lives in cooperative prayer and in definite soul-winning.

A special committee recommended that the Crusade be continued in places where it has not yet been possible to have it; and that special attention everywhere be given to the principles and methods set forth in Mr. Leon C. Palmer's book, "The Ministry of Laymen".

A delegation from the executive board of the Woman's Auxiliary, bringing in a most encouraging report on the attitude and the activity of women in relation to the Crusade, stated the following as their conviction:

"That in places where careful preparation had been made, there was ready response to the Crusade.

That people both in rural and urban communities are eager for spiritual teaching and practical suggestions.

That there is much unused material in the membership of the Church—especially is there enthusiastic zeal on the part of the young people for reality and service.

That there is a change in the attitude toward religion which today makes it a normal and a natural experience.

That there is a growing sense of individual responsibility for personal evangelism.

That one can give in a spiritual way only that which one has gained in personal experience.

That there is a widespread desire for further help from the leaders of the Church in deepening the experience and expression of our rededication to Christ."

They added the following suggestions:

"In attempting to interest and to meet the needs of people in smaller parishes and in small groups, we propose the immediate preparation, particularly for summer use, of very simple outlines for discussion and prayer on 'Knowing Christ and Making Him Known'.

Because of the situation in China and the Orient, illustrating as it does the world's need of peace and of Christian international relations, we are making immediate effort to carry forward the objective of the Message relating to peace and international relations.

The 'call of the World Conference on Faith and Order' leads us to special prayer and study during the Octave of Prayer and through the summer, for the reunion of Christendom and the furthering of the objective on Christian Unity.

Finally, we are eager and ready to do whatever the National Commission on Evangelism may ask of us in helping to make the Message of the Crusade vital to the Church."

A communication from the Brotherhood of St. Andrew was brought in by Mr. Courtenay Barber, of Chicago, renewing the unreserved readiness of the Brotherhood to assist in every possible way in the continuing activity of the Commission and stating that hereafter the Brotherhood would recognize two kinds of Chapters: active chapters, as at present constituted; and Crusade chapters, any group of men organized with the consent of their rector for the same purpose as the Brotherhood and accepting the Brotherhood principles of prayer and service, but not under the official direction of the national Brotherhood.

THE CHURCH CONGRESS.

Program for the 1927 Church Congress to be held in San Francisco, Cal., from June 14 to 17. Complete list of speakers:

Tuesday evening, June 14—Popular meeting—

Subject: "Moral Standards In An Age of Change." Speakers: the Rev. Robert B. Gooden, D. D., Headmaster of the Harvard School in Los Angeles; the Rev. Henry H. Lewis, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Ann Arbor, Michigan. Mr. Lewis is in close touch with the student work at the University.

Wednesday morning: Corporate Communion—

Officiant: the Rt. Rev. John G. Murray, D. D., Bishop of Maryland and Presiding Bishop of the Church; preacher, the Rt. Rev. William T. Capers, D. D., Bishop of West Texas.

Wednesday afternoon: Round Table Conference—

Subject: "Do the New Thought and Health Cults Contribute Anything to Christianity?" Speakers: the Rev. Leslie Learned, D. D., rector of All Saints' Church, Pasadena; the Rev. George F. Weld, D. D., rector of All Saints' Church, Santa Barbara; Mrs. Ethel E. Patterson, of Los Angeles.

Wednesday evening: Popular Meeting—

Subject: "How Can Christianity Satisfy the Religious Needs of All Races?" Speakers: the Rev. Herbert H. Gowen, D. D., rector of St. Mark's Church, Seattle, and professor at the University of Washington; the Rev. William N. Guthrie, D. D., rector of St. Mark's Church, New York City.

Thursday morning: Round Table Conference—10:00 to 11:30 and 11:30 to 1:00—

First Subject: "In What Sense Our Church Should Be Catholic." Speakers: the Rt. Rev. Arthur W. Moulton, D. D., Bishop of Utah; the Rev. Arthur Rogers, D. D., rector of St. Mark's Church, Evanston, Ill. Second Subject: "In What Sense Our Church Should be Protestant." Speakers: the Rt. Rev. Nathaniel S. Thomas, D. D., Bishop of Wyoming; the Rev. Edward S. White, rector of the Church of the Holy Communion, St. Louis, Missouri.

Thursday evening: Popular Meeting—

Subject: "The Relation of Christianity to Political and Industrial Democracy." Speakers: Judge Benjamin F. Bledsoe, of Los Angeles; the Rt. Rev. William F. Faber, D. D., Bishop of Montana; the Rev. J. Howard Melish, D. D., rector of Holy Trinity Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Friday morning: Round Table Conference—

Subject: "Evangelism—Its Aims and Methods." Speakers: the Very Rev. George R. E. MacDonald, Dean of St. James' Cathedral, Fresno, California. Dean MacDonald was a member of the National Commission on Evangelism, which planned the Bishops' Crusade; the Rev. Granville M. Williams, S. S. J. E., rector of St. Paul's Church, Brooklyn, New York. Mr. Williams was until recently Assistant Superior of the Order of St. John the Evangelist in Boston.

Friday afternoon: Popular Meeting—devotional in character—no discussion—

Subject: "Some Aids to Personal Religion." Speakers: the Rev. Raymond S. Brown, rector of Trinity Church, Mount Vernon, New York, will speak on "Prayer"; the Very Rev. Robert S. Chalmers, Dean of St. Matthew's Cathedral, Dallas, Texas, will speak on "The Sacraments"; the Rev. Loring W. Batton, D. D., of the Faculty of the General Theological Seminary and Vice-Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Church Congress, who will preside at the 1927 Congress, in the absence of the General Chairman, Bishop Slattery, will speak on "The Bible".

The meetings of the Congress will be held at the Fairmount Hotel, San Francisco, and the hosts of the Congress are planning to entertain the officers and speakers at this same hotel.

With Missionaries in China.

A cable from Shanghai, May 5, informs us:

That Professor H. F. MacNair, of St. John's University and Mr. T. J. Eastman of St. John's Middle School, Shanghai, sailed for the United States via Europe on May 3 and May 7, respectively. Professor MacNair has accepted a post at the University of Washington for the academic year 1927-1928.

That Mr. H. A. Matsinger and Miss L. B. Pingree, both of the Diocese of Anking, have been transferred to Manila. Their address will be: Care Bishop Mosher, 567 Calle Isaac Peral, Manila, P. I.

That Mrs. E. J. Lee and children, of the Diocese of Anking, and Professor W. M. Porterfield and family, of St. John's University, Shanghai, sailed from Shanghai May 7 on the President Jefferson, due in Seattle May 23.

That the Rev. A. M. Sherman and family leave Shanghai shortly for the United States, via Europe. They expect to reach America from Europe in September. No European address has been given.

A cable from Tokyo informs us:

That Miss Margaret Roberts, of the Diocese of Hankow, who has been transferred to St. Margaret's School, Tokyo, has reached Tokyo safely from Seoul, Korea, where she spent a few weeks after a hurried departure from Peking early in April.

Bishop Roots, Mr. T. J. Hollander, Dr. Wakefield, Mr. John Littell still remain in Hankow. They are the only members of our mission staff who have not reached Shanghai or some other point where they may be considered entirely safe.

The Department of Missions deeply appreciate the courageous and patient way in which relatives and friends of our missionaries in China have borne themselves through these past months of great anxiety.

The successful, but deeply regretted evacuation of missionaries from their posts, was due to the watchful care of our Bishops in China, the splendid morale of the staff and the helpful advice and cooperation of the representatives of the United States Government.

Further reports with regard to the movements of missionaries will be supplied as received.

John W. Wood.

The Policy of The Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

The National Council of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, at its recent meeting in Philadelphia, unanimously approved the following resolution which had been previously adopted by its Executive Committee and had received a unanimous vote of appreciation and commendation from the National Commission on Evangelism at its meeting in New York, April 27:

Whereas, it is generally recognized that the necessity for the immediate and effective follow-up of the Bishops' Crusade presents to the Church an opportunity of unparalleled greatness and responsibility;

And Whereas, It is already apparent that one of the results of the Crusade will be an increased interest in Lay Evangelism, extending far beyond the present membership of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and similar organizations; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in this day of opportunity the Brotherhood of St. Andrew places itself, its organization, program, policies and personnel unreservedly at the service of the Church; and that as a Brotherhood we stand ready to help in every possible way any and all organizations of similar purpose in the Church, regardless of name or affiliation.

Resolved Further, That as one expression of this attitude the Brotherhood of St. Andrew will hereafter recognize two kinds of Chapters, as follows:

(1) Active Chapters: As at present constituted and defined.

(2) Crusade Chapters: Any group of men organized with the consent of their rector for the same purpose as the Brotherhood and accepting the Brotherhood principles of Prayer and Service, not under the official direction of, or paying dues to, the National Brotherhood.

Such Crusade Chapters as are recorded at the National Office of the Brotherhood for the purpose of securing the cooperation which we are prepared to give will be assured of such definite cooperation for a period of at least six months in order to help them function in the most satisfactory manner in relation to their parochial objective.

In this connection the executive officers of the Brotherhood desire to reaffirm their belief based upon long experience and observation that a relatively small group, definitely pledged to prayer and personal service, represents the most effective plan of organization to carry out the program of Evangelism in a parish. The executive officers further believe that parochial groups of laymen who give a fair trial to these working principles, will ultimately desire full affiliation with the organization, which includes similar groups throughout the entire Church. The Brotherhood, however, offers to cooperate with any group without any commitment on the part of the group to become affiliated with the Brotherhood.

Bishop Lawrence Retires.

On Saturday, April 30, the Rt. Rev. Wm.e Lawrence, D. D., retired as Bishop of the Diocese of Massachusetts.

He will continue his duties at the Cathedral in Boston.

Bishop Lawrence thus brings to an end his official rule over the diocese which he has executed with diligence and energy for a period of thirty-four years, and is automatically succeeded as diocesan by the Rt. Rev. Charles Lewis Slattery, D. D., who was consecrated Bishop Coadjutor in 1922.

The retirement of Bishop Lawrence comes as no real surprise to the Church as during the past few years more and more of the ecclesiastical authority of the diocese has been turned over to Bishop Slattery. Bishop Lawrence has long been prominent in the affairs of the state and nation as well as of the affairs of the Church.

The Plattsburg Memorial Chapel.

The conference of chaplains of the regular army, national guard and organized reserves which has been in session in the office of the Chief of Chaplains, U. S. Army, has given unanimous approval to the plan of building a memorial chapel at Plattsburg Barracks, New York, as sponsored by The Churchwomen's League for Patriotic Service. Mrs. William C. Sturgis, of New York, Chairman of the Committee on Army Posts of the League, said: "The Churchwomen's League is unique in that it was organized after the World War to conserve the energies of Churchwomen who had been active in war work. It has approved the principle and practice of military training camps and, since Plattsburg Barracks has had so large a part in training citizens for military service in time of emergency, it has decided to erect a chapel there as a memorial to soldier dead and to serve the religious needs of the young men trained there each year."

Plattsburg Barracks, situated on beautiful Lake Champlain, is an historic Army Post. Troops have been continuously stationed there for more than one and one-half centuries. It was fought over during the Indian Wars, the Revolution and the War of 1812. At present the garrison numbers about 2,000 persons and has a Sunday School of about one hundred and twenty-five children. It is entirely without a suitable place for worship and the military personnel on duty there is overjoyed at the prospects of having a well-appointed chapel provided them in the near future.

When completed the Plattsburg Memorial Chapel will be denominationally composite in type suited to the religious needs of men of all creeds and beliefs. Ample space will be provided to house the activities in religious education and for the necessary studies, sacristies, choir and robing rooms.

The approximate cost of the chapel when completed will be $250,000. It will fittingly express the spirit of religion, sacrifice and devotion to God and country. It will be non-sectarian in character and open to the ministers and priests of all religious beliefs.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. H. St. Geo. Tucker, D. D., Coadjutor.

Piedmont Convocation.

The one hundred and nineteenth semi-annual meeting of the Piedmont Convocation met in Emmanuel Church, Braddock, Alexandria, May 2, 3 and 4. Sermons were preached by the Rev. Warren A. Seager, Haymarket; the Rev. Fremont Hinkel, Markham; the Rev. Robert Johnston, D. D., Washington, D. C., and the Rev. Sandford L. Rotter, The Plains. The Quiet Hour was conducted by the Rev. Campbell D. Mayers, Middleburg. Holy Communion was celebrated by the Rev. A. Stuart Gibson, Dean, Manassas, assisted by the Rev. Fremont Hinkel and the Rev. Hugo Blankenship, rector of Emmanuel Church. The Rt. Rev. St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor, presided at the opening service. Upon the invitation given by Miss Margaret Chapman, Principal of St. Agnes' School, the convocation visited the school. The follow-up work of the Bishops' Crusade was discussed, the convocation pledged its support to this work and to help with the Parochial Crusades, which are to be held in the near future in several of the rural parishes. The convocation requested the laymen to reorganize a laymen's league. The Rev. Kensey Hammond, D. D., made a report concerning the Essays written by the scholars of several Church Schools. Dr. Hammond was requested to continue this work. The Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., spoke of the activities at the Virginia Seminary. The convocation adjourned to meet next fall in St. Paul's Church, Haymarket. The Rev. Fremont Hinkel was elected Dean, the Rev. P. D. Bowden was elected secretary, and the Rev. Percy Foster Hall was elected treasurer for the coming year.

H. B.

The Woman's Auxiliary.

The thirty-seventh annual meeting of the Virginia Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary was held at St. Paul's Church, Richmond, May 4 and 5, Miss Louisa T. Davis presiding.

The Rev. Henry Sterrett, of Washington, conducted the Quiet Hour Tuesday evening in a very impressive way.

After the celebration of the Holy Communion on Wednesday morning the regular session was begun with addresses of welcome by the rector of St. Paul's and Mrs. B. Rand Wellford, president of the branch. This was responded to by Mrs. Soule, of Alexandria. Foreign Missionary work was presented by Deaconess Putnam, Miss Venetia Cox and Dr. John W. Wood on China; Bishop Tucker on Japan and Dr. Wood on Brazil.

Archdeacon Neve spoke on Mountain Missions, and was followed by the Rev. Clayton Torrence and the Rev. George P. Mayo. The Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin spoke on Rural Work and the Rev. Cary Montague spoke on Social Service.

Bishop Brown gave a talk on the spiritual side of the work, and at noonday on Thursday spoke about the meeting for Christian unity to be held at Lausanne this summer.

Mrs. Wm. D. Hurd, president of the Washington branch, spoke on the opportunity of a Parish Branch, and Mrs. W. A. Powers brought greetings from the Daughters of the King; and Miss Lucy F. Gibson spoke of the Girls' Friendly Society and brought a message from them.

Mr. B. A. M. Shapiro gave an interesting address on his work in providing Christian Literature for the Hebrew people.

The reports of the Auxiliary officers showed increased interest and more work done. The "Message" and the Bishops' Crusade were a large part of the year's work.

A resolution was sent to the Council petitioning that body to continue the Virginia Church on the present basis. Bishop H. St. George Tucker spoke on the follow-up work of the Bishops' Crusade.

The Junior Auxiliary held its annual meeting on Wednesday. At the afternoon session Miss Elizabeth Barber, Miss Venetia Cox and Deaconess Putnam spoke and Bishop Brown pronounced the benediction. Mrs. Robert I. Barton presided at this meeting.

Section B of the Woman's Auxiliary held a most helpful conference on Wednesday evening.

Delegates to Synod elected were: Miss Louisa Davis, Mrs. Charles Picot and Miss Jellis Scott. Alternates: Mrs. Jacqueline Smith, Mrs. W. A. Baker, Mrs. James Hill.

The same officers were elected for the next year.

Preaching Mission.

A successful preaching mission has just been concluded in Christ Church, Luray, the Rev. Dennis Whittle, rector, by the Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, of Trinity Church, Fredericksburg. The missioner's message was forceful and helpful, and large congregations attended all services. Many from other churches in town attended and a fine spirit of fellowship existed. The service on the last evening of the mission was attended by the Girl Scouts in a body. Bishop Brown visited the parish on Sunday, May 8, and confirmed a class of six.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor

Crusade Mission at Bruton Parish Church, Williamsburg.

An inspiring mission of the Bishops' Crusade was conducted at Bruton Parish Church, Williamsburg, from Tuesday, April 26, to Sunday night, May 1, by the Rev. D. Wilmot Gateson, Dean of the Pro-Cathedral at Bethlehem, Pa., and Chaplain of Lehigh University.

The sermons given were heard by large congregations which increased every night until Sunday when the church was crowded to its fullest capacity. Dr. Gateson's sermons, which were searching and constructive, were addressed to the purpose of developing and enriching the spiritual life of the Church. On Wednesday morning Dr. Gateson spoke to the full assembly of the students of William and Mary College, and on Thursday and Friday to the assembly meeting of the Sophomore and Freshman classes.

The results of this mission will be abiding in the life of the people and the parish.

The official dedication and rededication cards were distributed on Friday night, and Sunday morning, and received and presented at the service on Sunday night. The result as shown from these cards was as follows:

To pray and read the Bible daily, 59; to have regular family devotions, with Bible reading, 12; to receive the Holy Communion regularly, 54; to attend at least one Church service each Sunday, 74; to join some class for the study of the Bible, 19; miscellaneous service, 22; total—277.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop.

Dr. Way's Twenty-Fifth Anniversary.

Sunday morning, May 1, the Rev. William Way, D. D., celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary as rector of Grace Church, Charleston.

Under Dr. Way's leadership Grace Church has modernized and built up its plant in all respects, constructing an adequate parish house, acquiring a permanent rectory, purchasing much of the property adjacent to the church in order to provide for future growth, erecting a building for the use of the Boy Scouts and the Girl Scouts.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Gilman On Conditions In China.

The Rt. Rev. Alfred A. Gilman, Suffragan Bishop of the Missionary Jurisdiction of Hankow, China, was in Washington during the past week, and was heard in addresses on several occasions. He was the speaker at a meeting for men at Diocesan House, on Monday, May 2, and again at the monthly meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary at Christ Church, Rockville, On Tuesday, May 3. This was an all-day meeting, beginning with a celebration of the Holy Communion, after which Bishop Gilman delivered an address. The Bishop's first-hand knowledge of the present situation in China qualified him to speak with authority on the subject and there were large numbers present to hear him. A box luncheon and business meeting constituted the remainder of the day's program of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Bishop Gilman was the honor guest at a dinner at Cosmos Club on May 2 given by Mrs. Hurd, president of the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary and Commander T. C. Jewell. Bishop Gilman gave interesting accounts of the present situation in China.

The annual festival of the Girls' Friendly Society in the Diocese of Washington was held during the week of May 2, with the program in charge of the president, Mrs. Edward B. Meigs.

On Sunday morning, May 1, there was a Corporate Communion for all communicants of the Society, both members and associates, in St. John's Church. At this service offerings were presented for the Eleanor Lewin Memorial Chapel at Holiday House, near Mount Vernon. A reception in celebration of the thirtieth anniversary of the Society was held in Epiphany Parish Hall, Monday, May 2, when special guests of honor were Miss Francis W. Sibley, National President of the Girls' Friendly Society and Miss Sarah Hopkins, vice-president of the Society in the Province of New England.

A luncheon at Holiday House, a business session at Epiphany Church and the annual service for condidates were other activities of the annual festival week of the Society.

M. M. W.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. S Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, D. D., Suffragan.

Bishop Lloyd's Birthday.

A committee, consisting of the Rt. Rev. Wm. T. Manning, chairman; Samuel Thorne, secretary; the Rev. H. P. Sliver, treasurer; the Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, the Very Rev. Howard C. Robbins, Miss Grace M. Lindley, Mr. Thos. J. Powers, Jr., Mrs. Samuel Thorne, and Dr. John W. Wood, arranged a celebration of the anniversary of the seventieth birthday of the Rt. Rev. Arthur Selden Lloyd, Suffragan Bishop of New York, by a service of Holy Communion in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on Monday morning, May 2, 1927, which was followed by a luncheon in the Undercroft of the Synod House in New York City. The occasion was enjoyed by all present.

St. Barnabas' House.

Thursday afternoon, April 28, in St. Barnabas' House, temporary shelter for destitute women and children maintained by the New York Protestant Episcopal City Mission Society, at 304-308 Mulberry Street, the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, D. D., Bishop of New York and the president of the organization, officiated at a service of dedication of improvements and new features made possible through the gifts of Elizabeth Curtis and Edwin Gould.

About a hundred prominent clergy, lay and social workers of the city attended.

In dedicating the new features which represent a response to present-day demands put upon an institution unique among houses of refuge, Bishop Manning called attention to the fact that "since 1864 the House has been maintained as a temporary shelter for women and children whom misfortune or ill usage have cast adrift".

Following the Bishop, the Rev. Ernest Sunderland, D. D., Superintendent of the Society, stated that "the enlarging and new equipment represent a move toward the goal which the Board for some time has had in mind for the new shelter.

"The purchase of the additional house by the Board and the new equipment made possible through the gifts, represent an expenditure of over $50,000.

At present one hundred and thirteen women and children are housed in the house each night. Last year 1,505 women and children were given shelter at the House.

FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. F. A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop.

Annual Convention of the Church Schools of the Diocese.

Nearly one thousand young people, clergy and Church School leaders of the Diocese of Florida met in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, on Saturday, April 30, at the third annual convention of the Church Schools of Bishop Juhan's jurisdiction. Numbers of them traveled from the western limit of Florida, over three hundred and fifty miles, and to these travelers were added several visitors from far distant points. Chief among these latter was the Rt. Rev. Isaac O. Stringer, D. D., Canadian Bishop of the Yukon.

Bishop Juhan, in his opening address, spoke of reading daily in the secular press of "Men and Women wanted for various activities of life" and impressed it upon his hearers that the great need of the Church throughout the world is for men and women, boys and girls, to rally to her standard—"Wanted, boys and girls for the service of the Christ", said the Bishop, "are you boys and girls of the Church Schools in Florida answering the call"?

Miss Marie J. Ravenel of the Church General Hospital in Wuchang, China, fascinated her hearers with a description of Chinese customs, the language, etc.

In the awarding of the banners for various diocesan contests, St. Paul seems to have been the patron saint of the three schools having a one hundred per cent attendance of its entire enrollment present, each of these schools having borne the name of St. Paul. They were located in South Arlington, Jacksonville Beach and Hilliard, all missions within thirty-five miles of the convention city. Another St. Paul's, the little mission at Federal Point, some seventy miles from Jacksonville, won the banners ror the largest attendance present, in proportion to the number of miles traveled, and the largest total Lenten offering presented by one of the mission schools. St. Paul's, Jacksonville Beach, also won a second banner, that for the largest percentage of increase in the Lenten Offering over that of 1926. The Church of the Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, presented the largest total parish offering, while St. John's School, Jacksonville, presented the largest per capita offering from a parish and St. Luke's School, Live Oak, presented the largest per capita offering from a mission school.

The total sum presented was $3,777, and it is expected that this sum will be increased when the offering is presented in Philadelphia next month.

C.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. L. Gravatt, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, D. D., Coadjutor

Mission at Ansted.

A very successful and helpful mission was recently held at the Church of the Redeemer, Ansted. The missioner was the Rev. Horace M. Brown, rector of St. Luke's Church, Charleston. The attendance averaged one hundred and fifty and the sermons of the missioner made a deep impression.

Young People's Service League at St. Matthew's.

The new rector of St. Matthew's Church, Wheeling, the Rev. J. H. A. Bomberger, has organized a Young People's Service League there and it bids fair to do excellent work. Confirmation was held in St. Matthew's Church by Bishop Gravatt on Palm Sunday.

Crusade at Keyser.

Crusade services were held at Emmanuel Church, Keyser, for three days. The Crusaders were Mrs. A. B. Mitchell, the Rev. Hunter Davidson and Mr. Harry Lee Doll. The services were marked by good-sized congregations, who listened with attention to the expositions of the various phases of Evangelism.

Trinity, Martinsburg.

The Church and Parish House of Trinity Church, Martinsburg, W. Va., the Rev. John L. Oldham, rector, has recently renovated all its property and placed the same in perfect repair. The interior of the Church has been frescoed a soft ivory, while the parish house walls have been done in a darker buff. New chandeliers and lighting system has been installed, both in the church and parish house. The wood-work on the outside of church, parish house and rectory has been painted.

A pair of Seven Branched Candelabra has been given to the Church by Miss Marie Langford and her sister, Mrs. Edgar Henshaw, in memory of their mother, and were used for the first time on Easter Day.

Easter Service at Grafton: One of the notable features of the Easter service at St. Matthias' Church, Grafton, was the attendance of the De Molay Commandery No. 11, Knights Templar, and the presence of Bishop Gravatt, the Grand Prelate of Knights Templar of West Virginia. Bishop Gravatt preached an inspiring sermon and the occasion was one long to be remembered by the guests and members of St. Matthias.

Christ Church, Fairmont: At the organization meeting of the vestry of Christ Church the following officers were elected, R. L. Kingsland, Senior Warden; George Brackett, Junior Warden; A. P. Brady, Treasurer, and P. L. Hamilton, Secretary. The boys' choir, recently organized, acceptably sang for the first time at the children's services on Friday afternoons during Lent.

St. Mark's, St. Alban's: The work here has been steadily advancing, marked by good attendance at services, increase in the Sunday School, activities of the Woman's Guild and the vestry.

Grace Church, Eckman: Two successful pageants were recently given, one at Grace Church, Eckman, and the other at the new mission, Burke Hollow. The Sunday School at the latter place has greatly increased, there being over thirty pupils in one of the three classes. The Auxiliaries are also doing good work, and a Young People's Service League is in prospect.

C. G. C.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Church Normal School Commencement.

The Seventh Annual Commencement of the Diocesan Church Normal School was held on Tuesday evening, April 26, and in spite of cold, wet weather, almost three hundred people assembled. A simple service was conducted by the rector of St. Ann's, the Rev. S. M. Dorrance, who is also Dean of the School. The Bishop of the Diocese, the Rt. Rev. Ernest M. Stires, D. D., gave the address to the School and presented the certificates and diplomas.

The Bishop presented three diplomas of the National Accredited Teachers' Association, thirty-five second-class certificates, twenty-three third-class certificates and two Diocesan Normal Schoo lDiplomas. Thirty-nine parishes were represented in the Normal School enrollment.

The exercises were followed by a meeting of the Teachers' Fellowship of the Diocese, held just one year from their date of organization. The system under which this Fellowship operates was fully explained. The officers of the first year were unanimously reelected. A social hour, with zone gorups discussing local matters, ended the evening.

Churchwarden of St. Gabriel's Dies.

George W. McNeil, a Churchwarden of St. Gabriel's, Flatbush, died Wednesday, April 27. Mr. McNeil was one of the originators of St. Gabriel's Mission in 1905, and has been Churchwarden since the parish was incorporated. He was one of a very few who had been members of that congregation continuously since its beginning. He was faithful in his duties, and an ardent Churchman. He will be greatly missed.

Colonial Churches Mark Anniversary.

The two hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the four colonial parishes was fittingly celebrated by a diocesan service of thanksgiving in Grace Church, Jamaica, Tuesday evening, May 3. The Rt. Rev. Ernest M. Stires, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, presided and made the first address. The rectors of the four parishes—the Rev. Rockland Tyng Homans of Grace Church, Jamaica; the Rev. George F. Taylor of St. George's, Flushing; the Rev. Edward M. McDuffey of St. James', New Town (Elmhurst), and the Rev. John S. Haight of St. George's, Hempstead—each had part in the service. An address was made by the Rev. Stanley C. Hughes, rector of Trinity Church, Newport, R. I., on behalf of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, and the offering of the congregation was sent to London to this Society, whose first official act was the sending of a missionary to Jamaica. Bishop Lloyd, Suffragan of New York, spoke on behalf of the National Council, and the Presiding Bishop, Dr. Murray, made an inspiring missionary address, emphasizing the responsibility of the American Church to carry on to others the benefits it had received in early days through devoted missionaries.

Preceding the service there was a dinner in Grace Memorial House, at which Bishop Stires was toastmaster, and the senior wardens of the four parishes made brief but effective speeches.

Each of the four churches had also its own parochial celebration of the anniversary. That in Jamaica included a historical pageant Thursday evening.

Eightieth Anniversary of Grace Church, Brooklyn.

The cele bration of the anniversary of Grace Church, Brooklyn, began Sunday, May 1. At the morning service the rector, the Rev. George Parkin Atwater, D. D., preached a historical sermon on the parish's eighty years. At this service a special offering was made for the endowment fund of the parish, and one hundred thousand dollars was the amount presented for this purpose. It is believed that with the addition to the capital Grace Church's future is as secure as anything human can be. At four-thirty on the same day, at Evensong, special recognition was given to the long and efficient service of the organist and choirmaser, Frank Wright, who has served he parish for thirty years; and to the faithful service of the sexton, William J. Robertson, for nearly thirty-one years.

On Wednesday evening, after a brief service, there were congratulatory addresses by three of the senior clergy of the diocese—the Rev. J. Clarence Jones, S. T. D., rector of St. Mary's Church; the Rev. St. Clair Hester, D. D., rector of the Church of the Messiah; and the Rev. Robert Rogers, Ph. D., rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd. The Presiding Bishop, the Most Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D., made an address on behalf of the National Council. Friday night there was a reception at the rectory. Sunday, May 8, the Octave of Commemoration was concluded.

Grace Church has always been one of the strong parishes of the diocese, able and willing to help generously in diocesan and general enterprises. Its missionary gifts have been large and frequent. Among its rectors have been such eminent Churchmen as Eugene Augustus Hoffman, afterward Dean of the General Theological Seminary; Benjamin H. Paddock, later Bishop of Massachusetts; Chauncey B. Brewster, now for nearly thirty years Bishop of Connecticut; Frederick Burgess, afterward Bishop of Long Island; and Chas. F. J. Wrigley, prominent figure in many sessions of the General Convention.

C. H. W.

KENTUCKY.

Rt. Rev. C. E. Woodcock, D. D., Bishop.

Small-Town and Rural Work Conference.

As an outgrowth of discussion and favorable action on the part of the Diocesan Convention in January, a Conference on Small-Town and Rural Work was held recently, in Bowling Green, under the combined auspices of the respective Boards of Missions, Social Service, Religious Education, and the Woman's Auxiliary. In addition to the Bishop of the Diocese, there were in attendance the Rev. H. W. Foreman, Secretary for Rural Work in the National Department of Christian Social Service, the Rev. Bradner Moore, engaged in Rural Work in Mississippi; Prof. M. C. Ford, of the Western Kentucky Teachers' Training College, at Bowling Green; the Rev. J. Luther Martin, rector of St. Paul's Church, Henderson, bringing wide experience in Rural Work in several Dioceses. The Woman's Auxiliary was represented by Miss Almstedt, Diocesan President; Miss N. H. Winston, and Miss Adelbert Thomas, Educational Secretary of the State Board of Health.

Camp Woodcock for boys between the ages of fifteen and twenty, will open its second year June 14 for a two weeks' session. So successful was its record last season that little doubt is felt for a much increased attendance during the one pending. Canon F. W. Hardy, of Christ Church Cathedral, will again hold the place of Chaplain; Mr. J. D. Alexander that of Director, while the Bishop of the Diocese will be a welcome and honored visitor. For fuller information, address John H. Isert, Thirteenth and Rowan Streets, Louisville, Ky.

A Discussion Group, working with the World Conference on Faith and Order, has been organized by the Louisville Churchwoman's Federation, similar to one conducted so successfully two years since, consisting of women of all denominations, for the consideration of topics to be discussed at the great Lausanne Conference for August 3-21. The group is led by appointed leaders chosen from the various churches, but the meetings are open, and discussion free to all.

L. L. R.

VERMONT.

Rt. Rev. A. C. A. Hall, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. S. B. Booth, D. D., Coadjutor.

Bishop Hall's Eightieth Birthday.

A dinner was given the Rt. Rev. A. C. A. Hall, D. D., on April 26, to commemorate his eightieth birthday, which occurred on April 12. The dinner was given by his coadjutor, the Rt. Rev. Samuel B. Booth, D. D., and took place at Hotel Vermont, Burlington. About fifty clergymen and prominent laymen assembled to do honor to New England's oldest bishop.

Bishop Booth acted as toastmaster and read a few of the many letters and telegrams of congratulation. These included one from the Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. John G. Murray, D. D., who provided a beautiful bouquet of red roses for the occasion.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. J. B. Cheshire, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. A. Penick, D. D., Coadjutor.
Rt Rev. H. B. Delaney, D. D., Suffragan.

Annual Convention of The Woman's Auxiliary.

Electing Mrs. Frank S. Spruill as its president, hearing reports of gratifying progress made in all phases of its work, and listening to addresses by four Bishops, the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese held its annual convention in St. Luke's, Salisbury, April 26-28. The address of the retiring president, Mrs. W. W. Way, was heard with great interest. She made a plea for an intelligent support of the whole program of the Church.

The four Bishops on the program were the Bishop and the Coadjutor of North Carolina, Drs. Cheshire and Pennick; Bishop H. G. Finlay of Upper South Carolina, and the Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson of Southern Virginia. Bishop Cheshire spoke feelingly of the great work accomplished in his diocese by the Woman's Auxiliary. Bishops Penick and Thomson made devotional addresses, and Bishop Finlay's address dealt particularly with rural work.

The report of the treasurer, Mrs. R. E. Davis, showed total receipts of the year of $10,120.63. The report of the custodian of the United Thank Offering showed receipts of $10,143.76 for the first two years of the present triennium.

A pleasant feature of the convention was a visit to a rural church for lunch, Christ Church, Cleveand. This is one of the best-equipped and most active rural churches in the state.

Mrs. Frank S. Spruill, the new president, has had wide experience, and her election insures a continuation of usefulness.

A pilgrimage to the Thompson Orphanage was made by some four hundred Church people of the Diocese of North Carolina, on May 2, to take part in the dedication of the Osborne Memorial Baby Cottage, named in honor of the first superintendent of the institution, the Rev. Francis Osborne, who died the past year in his ninetieth year, and to inspect the other magnificent buildings that now adorn the campus as a result of the successful campaign to raise funds several years ago.

Immanuel Church, Warrenton, is to be repaired and remodeled at a cost of some $20,000, according to an announcement recently made by the vestry. This church, which celebrated its one hundredth anniversary several years ago, has had an interesting history. Horace Greely was wed there in 1872.

T. P., JR.

SPOKANE.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Cross, D. D., Bishop.

Meeting of the Bishop and Council.

At the Bishop and Council meeting held in Spokane April 30, it was decided to hold a summer school at Lake Coeur d'Alene, beginning June 28, for ten days, and to hold a concerted mission throughout the jurisdiction of Spokane during November, each mission and parish mission to continue not less than three days.

The summer school will be held on the Episcopal grounds at McDonald's Point, the committee in charge being the Rev. Messrs. E. W. Pigeon, Yakima; E. R. Allman, Colville, and E. L. Rolls, of Spokane.

The faculty includes Dr. Philip E. Osgood, of St. Mark's Church, Minneapolis, giving a course in religious drama and pageantry and also in Church School ideals and practices. The Rev. Dr. Frank Hallock, professor of Old Testament ancient languages and literature at Seabury Divinity School, will give a course in "The Prophets and Their Relation to Modern Thought". Dr. L. G. Wood, Field Secretary for the National Church Council, a course on the "Church's Program in the Parish and Mission". Dr. Livingston Porter, professor of Modern History in Berkeley, California, will discuss "Continental Europe". Minor courses for young people and others will be given by Mrs. E. C. Schmeiser, Mrs. Jay W. Fancy, the Rev. Messrs. E. B. Christie and A. L. Bramhall. Bishop Cross will have charge and will hold a compline meditation each day.

The mission is designed to strengthen the relation of home and Church, emphasizing both of these subjects. Two national characters will lead the missions and will be assisted by the local clergy. During October cottage and group meetings and other preparatory steps will be taken.

The meeting also decided to fix the boundaries of the deaneries, to appoint a secretary to assist the deans to distribute literature to the isolated communicants and to request an annual meeting of each deanery to look after its local business.

Sunday-School Offerings.

The mite-boxes of this jurisdiction show a very marked increase in the Sunday-school offerings. All Saints' Church, Spokane, has increased over three hundred per cent; St. Peter's and St. James' over one hundred per cent. Almost as good, and in some cases the increase has been better throughout the district.

St. James' Mission, Spokane, has presented so far this year twenty-two for confirmation. This is the most for any mission or parish in the jurisdiction for 1927. It won the honor last year with a class of fifty-six.

T. A. D.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor.

Church Home School of Nurses Graduation.

Bishop Murray presented diplomas of graduation to twenty-two nurses of the School of Nurses of the Church Home and Infirmary at the Commencement held at the Home on April 29. Short addresses were made by the Rev. S. Taggart Steele, rector of St. David's, and the Rev. Dr. Arthur Chilton Powell, rector of St. Mary's, Hampden, and President of the Board of Trustees.

Rural Missions.

As part of the Follow-up of the Bishops Crusade in Maryland, the Committee on the Rural Crusade planned a number of Missions to be held by the Baltimore City clergy in the country churches, following Easter. Six of these Missions have already been held with marked success. They are as follows: Severn Parish, Gambrills, the Rev. L. P. F. Vauthier, rector, by the Rev. P. C. Adams; All Saints' Parish, Prince Frederick, the Rev. Douglas Hooff, rector, by the Rev. Wyatt Brown, D. D.; Middleham Parish, Solomon's Island, the Rev. J. Gibson Gantt, rector, by the Rev. R. A. Walke; Westminster Parish, the Rev. R. C. Cowling, rector, by the Rev. E. H. Gibson; St. John's Parish, Frostburg, the Rev. L. B. Browne, rector, by the Rev. E. L. Gettier; St. James' Parish, Tracy's Landing, the Rev. W. B. Dent, rector, by the Rev. James A. Mitchell.

Catholic Conference.

A Catholic Conference was held at St. Luke's Church, Baltimore, the Rev. H. N. O'Connor, rector, on May 3. The Rev. V. O. Anderson, of St. Agnes' Church, Washington, was the Celebrant at the Holy Communion, assisted by the Rev. Dr. McClenthen as Deacon, and the Rev. H. N. O'Connor as Sub-Deacon. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Frank L. Vernon, of St. Mark's Church, Philadelphia, who stressed the necessity for a more inclusive Christianity as the note of the Catholic movement in its fight against evil. Following luncheon a number of papers were read and an address was made by the Rev. S. L. Hughson, O. H. C.

Notes From St. Michael and All Angels.

The Lenten season at St. Michael and All Angels was in many ways greatly blessed. The Monday Children's Services were attended with interest by the children and their friends and parents. Special speakers were the Rev. James A. Mitchell, Church of the Messiah, and the Rev. Edmund L. Gettier, Memorial Church. On Fridays Bishop Helfenstein, Dr. Abbott, Dr. Lovett, Charles O'Connor and Mr. Dewart were the speakers. The Good Friday Three-Hour service was conducted by the rector. During the whole three hours the church was filled. The rector, Dr. Wyatt Brown, was the noonday preacher for a week at Epiphany Church, Washington, St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo, and Christ Church, Indiana.

A perfect Easter Day made it possible for a large crowd to attend all five services. The number actually received in Communion was greater than any previous Easter on record; 1,205 received Communion on Easter Day. An impressive Church School Pageant was presented Easter night under the direction of Mr. J. Moulton Thomas. Prizes were awarded for perfectness in attendance in the Church School and Lenten services.

J. A. M.

LEXINGTON.

Rt. Rev. L. W. Burton, D. D., Bishop.

Successful Mission.

A successful preaching mission, conducted by the Rev. Walter E. Bentley, has just been held in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Lexington, the Rev. Thomas L. Settle, rector. A special feature was the Question Box, which awakened keen interest, there being from ten to twenty questions asked each night. The services were largely attended and over one hundred Decision Cards were signed.

WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS.

Rt. Rev. Thos. F. Davies D. D., Bishop.

The Rising Tide of Missionary Interest.

Of financial work in Western Massachusetts during the past year, The Pastoral Staff, the Diocesan paper, says that although the total quota for general work was $53,100 and the amount given on that quota was $44,680 (and $30,000 was given for diocesan work), this is by far the best record of missionary giving in the history of the diocese.

"The year 1925 was our previous high-water mark, but 1926 exceeds it by nearly $10,000. When we consider the very unfavorable business conditions existing in many of our communities, these results are especially gratifying. We know that a great deal of self-sacrifice went into these offerings.

"Thirty-two parishes and missions met their apportionments in full and eight others reached ninety per cent or more. Several exceeded their apportionment.

"There is clear evidence of a rising tide of missionary interest throughout the diocese. And where missionary interest is strong, parish interest is sure to keep pace. We are gradually pressing on towards the goal of meeting our full diocesan apportionment, and we are confident that this day will not long be

(Continued on page 22.)

Family Department

May.

2. Scond Sunday after Easter, SS. Philip and James.
8. Third Sunday after Easter.
15. Fourth Sunday after Easter.
22. Fifth (Rogation) Sunday after Easter.
23, 24, 25, Rogation days.
26. Thursday, Ascension Day.
29. Sunday after Ascension Day.
31. Tuesday.

Collect for the Fourth Sunday After Easter.

O Almighty God, Who alone canst order the unruly wills and affections of sinful men; Grant unto Thy people that they may live the thing which Thou commandest, and desire that which Thou dost promise; that so among the sundry and manifold changes of the world our hearts may surely there be fixed, where true joys are to be found; through Jtsus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

For the Southern Churchman.

Mystery.

Mrs. B. F. Baker.

No warmth—no movement—yet the ray of light
That rests on rose-hued petals there
Beside your couch, lends color to your fair
And peaceful brow. E'en now it seems you might Awaken and, with sprightly words, delight
Your waiting friends. Around you everywhere
Are flowers crushing you with love, aware
Of all your ministry that made life bright.

Incredible! You grasp no lovely spray
With artist's tender touch; smile no assent
To anguished cry: Dear One, you'll never know
How much I love you!" Yes, you know. Though way
Of sweet response be checked, Divine Intent
Attunes the vibrant soul to heart-beat low.

For the Southern Churchman.

The Compass Error.

Louis Deschamps.

The study of navigation is both interesting and instructive. It is interesting because of the mysterious fascination of the sea and the appeal of world-wide travel. It is instructive not only for its practical value, but also for the many remarkable applications of its facts to matters of philosophy and morals. Facts of observation and experience applied to religion and ethics are known to be more helpful and instructive than volumes of abstract reasoning. There is much in the study of navigation that suggests truths in every-day life. The individual is like the captain of a ship on the sea of life, for he must determine his course and make some port. There are derelicts and shipwrecks on shore as well as at sea. Winds of fortune are as fickle as the weather and currents at sea. All need the courage and resourcefulness of true seamen. In matters of personal trial and spiritual experience, the individual is often as lone as a ship in mid-ocean. Again, it is significant that seamen must steer their ships in harmony with cosmic forces and utilize the firmament itself in locating their position. Though engaged in the monotonous work of transportation, they can not lose sight of the universal forces of sky and sea which probably accounts for the fact that the monotony of their lives is not objectionable.

In the vast solitude of the sea, the course of the ship is determined by one very important instrument, the compass. Day after day without apparent progress, the ship is kept on a course until the landfall is made and the harbor entered. But even the compass is subject to error. It does not always point true north. The cause of this error is threefold. The compass needle is affected by the varying magnetic forces of the location in which the ship happens to be, the construction of the ship itself, and also to the presence of magnetic storms in the air. Mariners must allow for the compass error.

Corresponding to the compass in navigation is conscience in human behavior. To neglect one's conscience is to drift. To disregard conscience is to steer a course that can not make the right port. Just as the navigator must allow for the compass error, so must the individual allow for the error in his own conscience. No one can steer a true course in life by absolute and unchanging adherence to any set reading of their own conscience. Strange as it may seem, conduct is relatively, not absolutely, good. Therein lies the disaster of those earnest, but dogmatic people on the one hand, and those indulgent, but careless people on the other, who find themselves in the shoals of helplessness by failure to correct their conduct by the variation due to ever-changing conditions. The compass error at sea is seldom very great, but in long voyages a few degrees makes a great difference in destination. Correcting one's conscience for errors due to the affects of association, prejudice, or spasmodic emotionalism may indicate that the course is wrong in either of the two directions of liberalism or of conservatism. Although the most accurate instruments are followed exactly, yet the navigator must determine his course, not in the chart room only, but out on bridge, where the knowledge of instruments and charts is adjusted to the current conditions of cosmic forces.

There are those who drift with the wind and tide, but all who have a port to make must study navigation. There are those whose lives have comfort and pleasure at the expense of purpose, but all who wish to give meaning to their lives must study spiritual navigation, which is religion. One's conscience may indicate careless indulgence or fanatical persecution. The "conscience error" is an important factor.

Religion and Insanity.

Dean Hathaway's funny story of the rector who always kept a monkey-wrench in his desk because there were so many "loose nuts" in his parish reflects the opinions common among men that there is often something queer about religious people and that religion is responsible for the unbalancing of many minds. That has long been a popular belief, especially among the intelligentsia, the Greenwich Vallagers all over the country—who, by the way, are often such "queer ducks" themselves. But like other hoary superstitions too hastily accepted as orthodoxy and too long respected for its age, it has recently been attacked and denied by some of those best qualified to estimate its worth. Thus Professor Schou, a Copenhagen alienist, is reported to have said that nowadays it is the general opinion among alienists that religion is a protection and defense against insanity. And Dr. Hyslop, of London, who has devoted his whole life to the care of the insane, declares that "constant and simple prayer must be given the first place among the hygienic resources that work against mental disorders, depressed conditions and all the painful consequences of a tortured mind". In addition, these eminent authorities suggest the use of prayer in church for the insane and commend just such work as our City Mission is doing in holding services at Byberry. What a long stride forward from the day when John Wesley was forbidden by the English government to preach in the prisons "lest the prisoners should be taken with enthusiasm and then fall into actual insanity".—Pennsylvania Church News.

The Mission of Sympathy.

Sympathy is a gift, not a habit—an art, not a profession. This fact lies within the knowledge of any who have ever felt the need of human consolation; and there can be very few who have passed the meridian of life without having touched the Cross mentally or spiritually and turned in their pain for comfort to their fellows.

The idea that those who are themselves great sufferers are best capacitated to give sympathy to others is not always borne out by practical experience. Sufferers in mind and body are often absorbed in their own misery; some become selfish and embittered, many can only bear their pain in solitude. We could not go to such as these in our trouble and expect sympathy; rather should we feel impelled to give it.

The heart-ache of the world today makes great demands on human powers to comfort, help and heal; to thousands of men and women—yes, and children—life at this moment is often a very grey affair, unrelieved by natural joy or pleasure. Europe, a seething mass of suspicious discontent, England distracted and torn with industrial strife; everywhere the misery of unemployment—the deadly aftermath of war—taking its toll of human life and happiness; on all sides the sense of failure, disillusion—of tremendous disappointment.

Nerve-racked humanity in its despair appeals for sympathy and demands a panacea for its pain and weariness; and the men and women who would respond to this demand and satisfy this craving must be strong and virile, selfless and whole-hearted; they must be among the number of twentieth-century saints, who have learned to hide their own pain, while they give to others that priceless sympathy which is born of bitter experience and reveals itself in a great love of souls and practical devotion to their service.

In the face of acute agony of mind or body the professional sympathizer is helpless and effete. They are kind-hearted, often deeply religious people, who seek out the bereaved, the invalid and the sinner and resolutely do what they conceive to be their duty by them, with a fine disregard for the feelings of the sufferers or the effect their standardized methods of condolence may have on widely different minds.

Those who thus make a business of sympathy are pathetic in their hopeless lack of perception—their obvious failure to understand the elementary meaning of the word. It would be impossible to convince them of the utter futility of explaining to some pain-stricken soul, staggering under the blow of an irreparable loss, that "time is a great healer" and that "everything comes right in the end". To the mourner, paralyzed by the first shock of sorrow, time is a long vista of empty days and lonely hopeless nights, of interminable hours of sickening longing and unsatisfied desires. It may be that the years will bring some merciful distraction and partial oblivion, that distance will soften the sharp edge of pain, but time alone will never heal the wound.

The loneliness that follows great tragedies in the lives of men and women has often driven them to despair, and in their moments of dull misery or reckless desperation something more is needed than irritating truisms, ill-timed advice or conventional forms of condolence.

It is here that the touch of the real artist is required in the use of the great gift of sympathy, if it is to be efficacious, remedial and lasting in its effects. We see them at work every day in the pain-filled places of the world; we watch them encouraging the weak, healing the wounded, rejoicing with the glad, comforting the wretched, not by the skill with which they say the right thing that consoles, but by the inspired instinct with which they leave unsaid the wrong thing that jars.

They are trained people these artists, for they have studied sympathy in the School of the Divine Master of this beauteous art, and have learned from Him the secret of the true remedy for pain, the only real panacea for sorrow, loss and failure. Inspired by His teaching and filled with His Spirit they have gone forth to minister to a suffering world with one clear purpose—to bring those who have been broken in the strife into sacramental union with the Great Consoler, where alone the mystery of suffering is solved and the sympathy that nerves men to endure is found in its perfection.

This is the true mission of sympathy that can only be conducted by great spiritual artists, who possess that wondrous power of enlightening and beautifying with their art the dark corners of men's lives.—Muriel Cooper, in Church Times.

Afraid.

Having had all the failings of children when we ourselves were young, we, as parents, determined to raise our boy to have none of them. In the first place we decided that he was never to know the meaning of fear. There were to be no imaginary wolves lurking in the darkness or under his bed such as we had suffered from in our childhood.

For the first three years of his life the word "afraid" was never used in his presence, or if it was, it was spelled so that he could not get a hint of its significance. Nobody was permitted to read "Little Red Riding Hood" to him or to jump out from behind a door with a startling "Booh"! He was put at a regular time in his little bed upstairs and left there to go serenely to sleep while his parents sat down below. Fine! It worked like a charm.

On his third Christmas, with our permission, a doting aunt presented him with a gallant little rocking-horse—mouth open as he strained at the bit and nostrils spread wide and red to indicate his indomitable spirit. The boy loved it. He stroked it and petted it in an ecstasy of delight. He patted its back and put his hand into the mouth to caress the red tongue and the white teeth; and at this point the aunt felt she must add a realistic touch to enhance the child's pleasure and cried out with mock alarm: "Look out, he doesn't bite you!"

There was a gasp from my little boy. His hand was snatched out of the mouth and he stood petrified, waiting to be bitten. The aunt laughed merrily. We parents assured him it was a joke and after a moment he went on playing with his wooden horse—but still out of range of a possible vicious bite from the gaping jaws. Before Christmas day was passed the incident seemed to have been dismissed for good and all. But it wasn't. My young son soon learned that his toy horse would not and could not bite, but he also learned that real horses do bite, and he gave them a wide berth on the street from that day on.

Then there came the night when he woke up screaming that a horse had bitten him, and from then on he associated fear of horses with the darkness. Other animals rapidly joined the ranks. It was useless to argue or explain. Fear is not a matter of logic. A single little sentence had startled fear into being but not all the sentences, however persuasive and reasonable, have yet been able to drive out fear. He is saddled with it until he shall reach an age when of itself it will go.

And until that time what are we two parents to do? How can we combat fear?

Some of our friends advise ignoring it; some of them advise discipline—put him in bed, blow out his light and leave him alone no matter what the boy does. Make him face it!

We are not taking anybody's advice, however. Parents never do. We are pampering our boy's fear of the darkness—at least so we are told—by letting him have a candle burning in his room till he has fallen asleep. I tried disciplining him just once and was convinced by his panic-stricken screams that if I kept it up I should be branding the fear more deeply into him, perhaps so deeply he would never get over it.

So I am pampering him, hoping to lead him by forgetfulness out of the dread clutch of fear. I know I can't discipline it out of him. I know I can't argue it out of him. But I have reason to think I am weaning it out of him, for the other night, when I was putting him to bed my boy said: "Blow out the candle, Daddy. I want to try sleeping the way you and Mother do in the dark."

So I blew it out and he went to sleep without a murmur.

I wish I could announce that from that night forth he never wanted the candle again, but that wouldn't be telling the truth. He wanted it the next night. I know, however, that the night isn't far off when he will again ask to have his candle blown out and that this will occur again and again until he has learned to prefer the darkness when he sleeps, just as his daddy and his mother do.—Russell M. Coryell.

For the Southern Churchman.

RENEWAL.

A. C. R.

November. . .

We planted our tulip bulbs today,
Red and yellow ones, bright and gay;
Planted them deep in the rich dark mold
Safe and warm from the winter's cold.

In faith and trust we left them there,
Sure that the spring's warm sun and air,
Will bring them forth when winter's done,
With lovely cups upturned to the sun.

May.

Our tulips have blossomed forth today,
Red and yellow, brave and gay,
Called from their bed in the earth's dark mold
By the spring's soft air, and the sun's warm gold.

So once again is the lesson taught,
That in patience and silence God's plans are wrought
And we take up life's burdens with courage new,
For we have proved His promise true.

And once again we our faith renew,
That loved ones hidden now from our view,
We shall see again with rapture bright,
In the golden glory of Love's clear light

Chinese Sermon.

Bishop Graves writes of a sermon he heard lately from a Chinese priest at St. Paul's, Nanking: Tong preached an admirable sermon to the students this morning on the text, "The Lord is my light, and my salvation, whom then shall I fear? . . . One thing have I desired of the Lord . . . that I may dwell in the house of the Lord forever". He calmly and simply faced the fact that there is much in China just now to make Christians fear, but just as calmly and sensibly, yet earnestly, made it clear and strong that we can find our light and our deliverance in God. And he spoke of "dwelling in the house of the Lord", not that David or we would want to live always in some spot behind walls in a temple, but that "the whole universe is the house of the Lord", and those who keep in communion with Him are always dwelling in His house.—Exchange.

"The same who
The number of the stars, can also count
The number of my sorrows, for Thyself
Hast felt them all! The mightiest of Beings
Is thus the kindest. I can upwards look
In trembling transport to Thy throne, and say,
'God! Yet my brother! Brother! Yet my God'."

For the Young Folks

Words.

Keep a watch on your words, my darlings,
For words are wonderful things;
They are sweet like the bees' fresh honey;
Like the bees, they have terrible stings,
They can bless like the warm, glad sunshine
And brighten a lonely life,
They can cut in the strife of anger
Like a cruel two-edged knife.

Keep them back if they are cold and cruel,
Under bar and lock and seal;
For the wounds they make, my darlings,
Are always slow to heal.
May peace guard your lips forever,
From the time of your early youth,
May the words that you daily utter
Be the beautiful words of truth.

—Selected.

For the Southern Churchman.

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

What Jesus Wants From His Friends.

M. L. G.

When the Master took Peter back into the circle of His apostles, He had but one question to ask him—"Lovest thou Me"? He might have said, "Simon, will you be faithful? Will you turn over a new leaf? Will you remember your weakness, and depend more upon My strength"?

But Jesus asked the one question Peter could answer. He could not promise, poor headstrong Peter, to be always faithful, to remember in time, to be brave when danger threatened him for Christ's sake and the Gospel's. Only one thing he could be sure of—that he loved his Lord—more than ever since he had sinned and been forgiven so much.

And that was enough. Loving Christ he held to Him and clung to Him, and Jesus did the rest. He gave Peter courage to preach, so that his boldness told that he had been in Jesus' company as surely as his Galilean speech had ever done. Peter was not perfect; he was Peter to the end, but he was Christ's Peter, and glorified God in his life and death.

What Jesus asked of Peter is what He wants from all His friends. We have only to love Him and to give ourselves to Him. The strength and courage we need He will give us. We will not be perfect here, but we will be His, and He will see to it that we do not fall from Him in the end.

For the Southern Churchman.

The Kangaroo's Parliament.

Louis Tucker.

Once upon a time all the kangaroos in Australia wanted representative government; so they met beyond the ken of man, in the middle of the Central Waste at the oasis which lies just north of Lone Tree Hill, to hold a Parliament. There were kangaroos as big as mice and kangaroos as big as rats and kangaroos as big as cats and kangaroos as big as dogs and kangaroos as big as sheep and kangaroos as big as calves and there was Old Man Kangaroo, who stood nine feet high when he rose up to fight and who had as mild a disposition as Moses. When they all got together, they danced up and down, as is the manner of kangaroos, but they did not know how to open Parliament.

So Old Man Kangaroo asked the Laughing Jackass, who lives in the bluegum on Lone Tree Hill, because, being a bird, the Laughing Jackass had once flown over the Government house at Sidney; and the Laughing Jackass said that the way to open a parliament was to shut your eyes and jump up and down and scream, "Mr. Squeaker! Mr. Squeaker"! So all the kangaroos, acres and acres of them, tried to call "Mr. Squeaker" and couldn't, and to shut their eyes, which they could, and jumped up and down, which was what they were best at. Now, when you jump up and down with your eyes shut, you cannot always land in the same place. So pretty soon the kangaroos, as big as mice, were mixed up with the kangaroos as big as rats, and the kangaroos as big as dogs were mixed with the kangaroos as big as cats, and the kangaroos as big as calves were mixed with the kangaroos as big as sheep, and Old Man Kangaroo, with his eyes shut, hopped into the middle of them all and stepped on the tail of a kangaroo rat by accident. The kangaroo rat squealed "Old Man Kangaroo's killing me" and limped off with a sore tail. Then all the kangaroo mice began to squeak "Old Man Kangaroo's killing us. Run! Run"! And the kangaroo rats squealed "Old Man Kangaroo's killing us. Run! Run!" And the kangaroos as big as cats squalled "Old Man Kangaroo's killing us. Run! Run"! And the kangaroo as big as dogs howled "Old Man Kangaroo's killing us. Run! Run"! And the kangaroos as big as sheep bawled "Old Man Kangaroo's killing us. Run! Run"! And the kangaroos as big as calves growled "Old Man Kangaroo's killing us. Run! Run"! And everybody took his own advice and ran. And Old Man Kangaroo ran after them to explain; and they must be running yet, because whenever a white man in Australia sees a kangaroo now he is running over the wire fences still, as fast as his tail can carry him.

The Hat That Sailed the Great Lakes.

Long, long ago, a little boy whose name was Andy lived on an island in the Great Lakes. It was a big island and was one of a group called the Beavers, because in the days of the Indians beavers used to live there.

If you wish to know exactly how to find the island where Andy lived, you must look on a map of Lake Michigan. There you will see the Beaver Islands at the head of the lake, which, of course, is at the top of the map.

On little Andy's big island was a good harbor. When storms were raging on Lake Michigan and on the Straits of Mackinaw, ships came flying into the safe harbor at Beaver Island to stay until the winds stopped their wild blowing and waves ceased booming on the shores. Those were the days of sailing vessels, when ships on the Great Lakes often looked like winged birds skimming over the blue water.

Sometimes ships came into harbor at the Beavers to unload or take on supplies, and there were always small boys ready to greet them at the wharves and to climb on board at the first possible minute. Ships that came in the springtime were the most gladly welcomed. Winter is long and cold at the Beavers, and ice stretches away in all directions for many frozen months.

In these days strong steamships that fear no gales have taken the place of the old-fashioned sailing ships and the time has gone by when harbors on the Great Lakes are filled with ships seeking refuge from storms.

Like all the other boys he played with little seven-year-old Andy, could swim like a fish and climb like a squirrel. He and his playmates were freely allowed to visit the ships in the harbor, to play on the decks and climb all over the rigging. Many of the sailors knew these boys by name before the seasons ended.

The spring when Andy was seven years old he was especially happy. After the ice had gone his mother went on a visit to the mainland. When she came home she brought her little boy a new white chip hat with a blue ribbon band around the crown. Andy was proud of that hat. It was intended for his Sunday best and was not to be worn commonly. Seventy-five or more years ago, away off on the Beaver Islands, a new white chip hat was a treasure for a boy or girl.

One morning when the harbor was full of ships, some with fine new white sails, some with old weather beaten sails patched with white, Andy put on his new hat when his mother wasn't looking and walked down to the wharf. He felt rather haughty that morning. Although he was barefooted he knew that his head was good looking. He didn't turn summersaults and he was even careful not to stub his toe. He intended to take good care that nothing should happen to his hat, so that his mother would learn that it could do no harm for a boy to wear a Sunday hat on week days.

In the beginning he didn't intend to go on board a ship that afternoon. Andy was merely out for a walk that all sailors might behold his new hat. But before very long he saw a schooner at the wharf that he could not pass.

The big ship glistened with fresh paint and every sail was new. The decks shone in the sunshine. The metal balls at the top of the masts were dazzling in their glory. Andy stepped on board. He gazed and gazed at the metal balls aloft. Many a time during the summer when he was six years old he had climbed the tallest masts of ships to touch the big metal balls that always crowned their tips.

Andy felt as if he would like to climb a mast that morning. He wished that some of his playmates were there to see him go shinning up to the top of the very mast he was touching with his hand that minute. There were no small boys in sight just then. Only sailors and deck-hands were there, busy with their duties.

Andy couldn't forget his new chip hat. He wished he had left it at home so that, carefree, he might climb to the top of the mast where the white gulls were flying and gaze far over the harbor. Andy made one last wish. He wished that the wind would not snatch his hat off his head while he climbed up the mast.

He pulled the new chip hat on tighter. Then up and up the little boy climbed to the very tiptop of the mainmast. The gulls flew seaward, but the wind didn't take his hat.

Away up aloft the little boy suddenly decided that he would try his new hat on the metal ball at the top of the mast. He did it. The hat fitted perfectly. Andy laughed aloud at the merry sight.

The next minute he stopped laughing. He could not get the hat off the ball. His new white chip hat with the blue ribbon around the crown fitted the metal ball as snugly as if it were fastened on with glue.

Andy worked and worked and worked, but he couldn't stir the hat. There it was, stuck so tight he could not twist it around and around. The hat acted as if it intended to sail the Great Lakes all summer. Andy pulled and pulled and pulled in vain. Then he slid down the mast and was surprised when he almost landed in the skipper's arms.

The skipper was waiting for him there on the deck below and that skipper was angry.

"Do you think, young man," said he, "that I am going to sail the Great Lakes with a little boy's hat at the top of my mainmast? Not much! Up you go after that hat and don't you dare come down without it! I'll thrash you if you do."

Up went the boy, up, up, up to the top of the mast. He worked and he worked and he worked to loosen the precious hat, but he could not do it, and he didn't dare come down without it!

The top of that tapering mast was so slender only a thin boy could climb high enough to reach the metal ball without danger of breaking the timber and having a terrible fall. The skipper shouted to Andy that he would be a sorry lad if he didn't bring the hat down from the ball on top of the mast with him!

So there was Andy up in the air between his beloved hat and the skipper. And there it looked as though he'd have to stay.

But fortunately the skipper was called away for a minute. Down slid Andy until he reached the big jib boom. Out he ran along the jib boom until he reached the end over the water. Down he dropped and swam toward shore like the scared little boy that he was.

When the skipper returned, he didn't know what had become of the boy, but he could very clearly see that he had left his hat behind him.

All summer that white chip hat with the blue ribbon band sailed the Great Lakes at the top of the schooner's mainmast. In the autumn gales when the schooner sought refuge in the harbor at the Beavers, the hat in rags and tatters still clung to the mast. Two there were who never met to talk about it. One was the skipper, the other was Andy.—The Continent.

The Wishing Ring.

Prue and Molly Stewart were very much excited when mother read the letter from Aunt Prudence, for it stated that she was coming to visit them the next day and would stay a whole month.

The little girls had never seen Aunt Prudence, who was their father's only sister, but father had told them about her. What a merry little madcap she must have been!

"She writes she is going to bring the wishing ring," said Prue "What is a wishing ring father?"

Father laughed. "When your Aunt Prudence was about your age, our father, your grandfather, went to New York on business, and bought the ring for her. It is a beautiful ring, really valuable, for it is set with a very good pearl. Our mother thought it too fine for a little girl, but your Aunt Prudence insisted upon wearing it, and father and we boys upheld her. Our mother was firm, however, that she could wear it only on Sundays and holidays. She would slip it on your Aunt Prudence's finger and make a nice wish for her. The wish was supposed to come true if the ring were not once taken off the finger until mother herself removed it.

"We children were very much interested in this, and, of course, our mother knew if Prudence didn't remove the ring, there wouldn't be much danger of her losing it."

"Did the wishes come true, father," asked Molly.

"Well, yes," answered father. "Those that mother wished usually did. She'd always wish that Prudence would have a happy time, or know her Sunday-school lesson, or not forget her rubbers, or lose her pocket handkerchief, or something like that.

"I remember I begged to wish it on once, and I wished she'd get a bulldog. That wish didn't come true, but Prudence explained that the reason was she had pulled the ring over the knuckle of her finger."

"I should think Aunt Prudence would give the ring to me," said Prue. "I'm the oldest, besides I'm named for her."

Mother smiled. "Aunt Prudence will, of course, decide that," she said. "Molly is her niece, too, you know. And now if one of you will go after some ice cream and the other set the table we can have an early lunch."

"I'll set the table," said Prue quickly. "The sun is so hot."

Molly put on her hat, and started for the grocery store two blocks away.

A tiny frown appeared on mother's pleasant face. After lunch, Prue chose to dry the dishes, but mother insisted that Molly was to choose. Molly smiled. but glancing from the pile of snowy towels to Prue's scowling face, she said: "I'll wash, I guess."

Mother hesitated a moment, then left the kitchen.

The next day they all went to meet Aunt Prudence. Father said she hadn't changed one single bit since he had last seen her twelve years ago. Later, he said he didn't believe she had changed a bit since she was a little girl, she was so merry, she said so many droll things, planned so many interesting and amusing things to do, and was so altogether the pleasantest company in the world.

She showed them the wishing ring that afternoon. It was a beauty, and fitted both Prue and Molly perfectly.

"It's going to be hard to decide which of you girls is to own it," said Aunt Prudence, looking from one rosy eager face to the other.

"Of course, I'm a whole year the older and am named for you," said Prue, holding the ring to the light.

"But little Molly is named for my mother, your grandmother, who was quite the nicest person I ever knew. She is going to look like her, too, I think. And now shall we help mother with the supper?"

Mother smiled at the three as they came into the kitchen.

"Will one of you girls fetch me an onion and the other put the frosting on the cake?" she asked.

"I'll frost the cake," said Prue quickly. "Onions make my hands smell and bring tears."

Molly went down cellar after an onion, and then washed, peeled, and sliced it for mother to use in the stew.

Aunt Prudence looked from Prue who was daintily finishing the cake to Molly who was washing her hands and streaming eyes. A thoughtful look came into her face.

During the following weeks, the thoughtful look came again and again. She suggested, ever so gently, once or twice, that perhaps Molly would like to choose part of the time, whereupon Prue would ask what difference it made, or why Molly didn't choose quickly as she did.

When Aunt Prue's visit was drawing to a close, she seemed not to want to talk of the wishing ring, and put it away in her purse.

On the morning of the last day she went all over the house "for a last look", she explained. Then in the afternoon she said: "I couldn't decide to whom to give the ring, so I have hidden it, and it belongs to the girl who finds it. Your mother doesn't know where it is."

"But Aunt Prudence—" began Prue.

Aunt Prudence smiled. "Of course, you girls will be fair and put everything back in its place."

"When may we look?" asked Molly, her blue eyes bright as stars.

"Right now, if you like," Aunt Prudence answered. "It should be found by supper time, I think. And dear," she added, turning to mother, can't we have another of your delicious stews for supper?"

Mother smiled her consent.

"I'm going to look through the bookcase," said Prue, so Molly looked along the window sills and under and around the couch.

They looked through all the rooms but didn't find the ring. Only the kitchen was left. Here Aunt Prue and mother were getting supper.

Mother looked up from the chopping bowl. She said: "Will one of you fetch me an onion? If we hurry supper a bit we can take Aunt Prue for a last drive before train time."

"Molly, you go," said Prue impatiently, from the pantry where she was looking for the ring.

Molly jumped down from the chair on which she was standing to examine a shelf and ran down the cellar stairs for an onion.

"The last one, mother," she said. "It's a big one but it looks as though it had been cut."

She washed and pealed it, then cut into it. The tears came as they always did when she cut onions, so she couldn't see why the knife wouldn't slip through.

"What's the matter with it, mother?" she asked. "I can't see."

"Why," exclaimed mother, "there's something in it!"

Molly hastily wiped her eyes, and unwrapped a bit of tin foil that was in the onion, and found the wishing ring!

Aunt Prudence kissed her and slipped the ring on her finger. "I wish that you always will be as unselfish and thoughtful as you are now," she said.

Then she turned to Prue whose eyes were filled with tears, though she hadn't peeled an onion. She took another ring from her pocket and gave it to Prue.

"Oh, Aunt Prudence," Prue sobbed, "won't you wish my ring on too? Wish that I may become like Molly?"—The Girls' Weekly.

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

PIPE ORGANS.

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, INC., Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices. Particular attention given to designing organs for memorials.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 209 East Franklin Street. Richmond, Va.

CHURCH LINEN.

PURE IRISH LINEN at wholesale prices for Church Guilds, Rectors and others. Samples on request.
MARY FAWCETT.
115 Franklin St., New York City.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS—CARDS.

CHURCH EMBROIDERIES, SILK AND LINEN. Imported religious cards for all occasions. G. L. Bender, 7421 Boyer St., Mt. Airy, Philadelphia, Pa.

OLD ENVELOPES.

WANTED—Old Envelopes from letters written between 1845 and 1874. Do not remove the stamps from the envelopes Highest prices paid. GEORGE HAKES, 290 Broadway, New York.

STAINED GLASS

JAMES POWELL & SONS (Whitefriars), Ltd., London, England—Stained Glass. Designs and estimates submitted on receipt of full particulars. Distributor ADRIAN A. BUCK, 665 Fifth Ave., New York City.

COUNTRY BOARD.

NEAR WARRENTON, VIRGINIA BOARD for two or three. All modern conveniences; tested cows; own fruit and vegetables, shade. Horse back riding privileges included. References given and required. (Address Mrs. G. M. Wells, Jr., Casanova, Va.

INVITATION.

MIDDLE-AGED COUPLE AT THEIR SUMMER home in Virginia, would like attractive girl, 16 to 30, to visit them as their daughter. Some remuneration. Address "L" care of Southern Churchman.

—CATHEDRAL STUDIOS—
Washington London.

Church Embroideries and Vestments, Silks, Fringes, Gold thread, Stoles with crosses from $7.60, Burse and veil from $15, Surplices and exquisite Altar Linens, Church vestments imported for the Churches free of duty.
MISS L. V. MACKRILLE,
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington, D. C. D. C. Telephone Cleveland 52.

FOR RENT.

TO RENT, FURNISHED, FROM JULY 1 TO OCTOBER 1, Apartment in Cambridge, Mass. Two rooms and bath. Will accommodate two or three adults. References exchanged. Address "L-4", care of Southern Churchman.

SITUATION WANTED.

A YOUNG ENGLISHMAN, WITH AN OXFORD background, recently come to this country, wishes a position for the summer vacation as tutor, or as traveling guide to party visiting England. Reference may be made to Dean Metcalf, or Dr. Lewis of the University of Virginia. Address "30", care of Southern Churchman.

LADY OF REFINEMENT AND CULTURE desires position as companion, or mother's help. Experienced in caring for invalids. Address Mrs. L. T. Anderson, Raleigh Apartments, 326 Harrison St., Richmond, Va.

POSITION WANTED BY WOMAN OF mature years in Deaconess orders; executive position in school or mission as teacher of Household Economics, nurse, housemother, chaperon, or household management. Excellent References. Address "Deaconess", 1002 W. 17th St., Anniston, Ala.

WANTED POSITION IN THE COUNTRY as mother's helper in the work of the home, by a widow with two year old child. References exchanged. Address Mrs. L. R. Smith, 911 Rivermont Ave., Lynchburg, Va.

A WOMAN OF REFINEMENT AND CULTURE, qualifiel to make a home, experienced in college life of young women, has traveled in this country and abroad, desires a position as companion at home or to travel. References exchanged. Address "F. C.", Southern Churchman.

WANTED, POSITION AS SUPERINTENDent of small home for dependent children, by trained executive. Address "Executive", care of Southern Churchman.

HELP WANTED

WANTED, IN CHURCH SCHOOL FOR boys, trained nurse for session beginning September 15, 1927. Address X, Y. Z. care of Southern Churchman, giving age and references.

Deaths

MRS. MARY ELLIS KNOWLES.

Died in New York City on April 28th, 1927. MARY ELLIS KNOWLES of Pensacola, Florida. She was the daughter of the late Governor John W. Ellis (who was Governor of North Carolina at the beginning of the war between the States), and his wife, Mary McK. Dans of New Bern North Carolina. Mrs Knowles was born June 6, 1859. She was married in 1885 to William H. Knowles of Pensacola, who with their five children survive her. The children, John Ellis Knowles, Mrs. Joseph L. Seligman, Mrs. Julian Fay, Peter Knowles all of New York, and William H. Knowles, Jr., of Pensacola.

WILLIAM WESTMORE GORDON.

An Appreciation.

"Corks and Curls" published annually by the Fraternities and literary societies of the University of Virginia, has in its issue for nineteen-twenty-seven the following;

"In Memoriam
WILLIAM WESTMORE GORDON
Born in Richmond, Virginia, January tenth, 1905.
Died in Richmond, Virginia, December 25, 1926.

William Westmore Gordon was a student of the University of Virginia from the Fall of 1924 until his sudden death on Christmas Day, 1926. He was born in Richmond, Virginia, (January 10, 1905, the son of Thomas Christian Gordon and Ruth Nelson Robins Gordon. He was the descendant of two distinguished families whose part has been a significant one in the history of the State. His paternal grandfather, Colonel William Westmore Gordon, for whom he was named, served in the war between the States under General Stonewall Jackson, and afterwards gained an illustrious name in law. His maternal grandfather was Colonel William Todd Robins, who served under General J. E. B. Stuart.

He received his preliminary education in Richmond, attending the Chamberlayne School from 1917 to 1920, and the John Marshall High School during the session 1920-21. After a year's absence (on account of illness) he went to the Episcopal High School in the Fall of 1922, remaining there for two sessions. There he prepared for the University of Virginia.

In the Fall of 1924 he entered the University where he matriculated in the department of Engineering. Shortly afterward he became a member of the Zeta Psi Fraternity. The following year he transferred to the Academic Department to prepare himself for the study of law. He continued in this course of study untill overtaken by an untimely death.

To know Billy was to love him. To associate with him was to feel a spirit of gentleness and kindness. His traits were those of another generation—ever dominated by a deference and love for his fellow man. An affectionate disposition, a life guided by a deep sense of honor and integrity, and a heart filled with kindness endeared a noble soul to us who knew him. Our memory of him is sacred, and ever will there rest the vision of gentleness—not dimmed by death. In his passing the University experienced a profound sorrow at the loss of a devoted son.

He bore an honored name as a gentleman without reproach."

J. E. S. Jr. and H. W. Jr.

MISS JULIA SELDEN.

JULIA SELDEN, a resident of Spartanburg, South Carolina, and Washington, D. C., daughter of the late Joseph Selden and Julia Lucas Selden, has passed on—"another adventure" she would say, for she faced death without fear. Her death occurred in St. Joseph's Hospital, Atlanta, Georgia, where she had gone for treatment after an illness of several months. Her body was carried to Spartanburg, where she had made her home with the Misses Lucas on East Main Street, and the services in Oakwood Cemetery were conducted by her pastor, Rev. W. H. K. Pendleton.

By the public, she will be remembered for her school and literary work, but by her inner circle for her marvelous gift of being a friend. She was the kind of person it is good to touch shoulders with: wholesome; vibrant with understanding, love, and good cheer; one who gave. Possessed always reaching out for what is best and sharing it with others. Lover of beauty, material and spiritual, she is perpetuated in all lovely things for the comfort of saddened hearts.

Some of the tenderness and the strength of her is disclosed in a few lines from one of her unpublished poems:

"Perhaps there is some reason for our state,
Deep sorrow makes us grow compassionate,
Through happiness we'd never reach as high
As facing fate; and standing firm defy
That fate to crush. It's struggle makes men great."

REBECCA DIAL.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 17.)

delayed.

"The outlook for 1927 is most encouraging. Forty-two parishes and missions have signified their intention of meeting their missionary apportionment in full. Fifteen of these will endeaver to send one-twelfth of their apportionment every month."

BETHLEHEM.

Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Coadjutor.

Dedication of Parish House.

On Thursday evening, April 28, 1927, the magnificent new Parish House of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Scranton, was dedicated in the presence of a large audience. Every nook of the fine auditorium was occupied. All walks of life and many distinct beliefs were represented—Catholic, Jew, Protestant, came to see and to pay a last tribute to the rector, the Rev. Wm. B. Beach, D. D. Under his administration, the new church was built and consecrated, costing over $200,000. Now comes the parish house at a cost of $150,000. This service of dedication was Dr. Beach's last service with his people, for on St. Philip's and St. James' Day, he began his new work in the Church of Our Saviour, Jenkintown, Pa.

Mr. Eli T. Conner, Chairman of the Building Committee, presided. The two Bishops made short addresses representing the Diocese and the Church. The Rev. Albert J. Weisely, D. D., pastor of the large Green Ridge Presbyterian Church, represented the Protestant bodies. Prof. M. J. Costello, represented the Roman Catholics. Dr. Beach made the last address and spoke of the many kindnesses he had received from the people of Scranton during his long rectorate of twenty-one years.

Dr. and Mrs. Beach were the recipients of many beautiful gifts from the parishioners and friends. Among others a platinum watch for Mrs. Beach and a bag of gold for Dr. Beach.

The parish house is built of gray

Indiana limestone. It has a beautiful auditorium, seating over seven hundred with a well-appointed stage for plays; a number of guild rooms, rector's study, guest room, gymnasium, class rooms for the Church School, which has more than doubled in attendance during the last year under the direction of Mr. Russell S. Moyer, the lay-superintendent.

Good Shepherd Parish is now well-equipped for aggressive work of all kinds.

The Archdeacon of the Diocese has charge of the services during the month of May.

The Rev. Horace W. Stowell, Towanda, who has so acceptably assisted the Rev. Dr. Kreitler, of St. Luke's Church, Scranton, Pa., during the Lenten and Easter Season, finished his work on St. Philip's and St. James' Day, May 1. He will devote his ministry again to the conducting of missions throughout the Church. He is ready now to entertain any calls, which may come to him from the various parishes and missions.

H. P. W.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Rt. Rev. H. L. Burleson, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. B. Roberts, D. D., Suffragan.

Large Lenten Offering.

The Lenten offering this year of Calvary Cathedral Church School, Sioux Falls, amounted to over six hundred dollars.

In consultation with the faculty of the School, the Bishop and the Superintendent selected objects to which $100 would be designated. The School raised a little better than $500 last year, so planned on more this year, of course. Fish for Bishop Rowe's dogs, the House of the Holy Child in Manila, Bishop Remington's Work in Eastern Oregon, the Hospital at Cape Mount, Liberia, a Gatekeeper in China, and Work in the Southern Appalachian Mountains each were allotted $100. Then each Sunday during Lent some boy or girl studied up on one of these subjects and presented it to the whole School in a five or six minute speech. Every class vied with all the others to keep up the total due on the various Sundays; dinners were served, candy sales made, smaller sums earned in a number of ways by individuals and by classes. The class of boys studying The Life of Christ arranged for a pageant of that. Every child in the School seemed to catch the idea of doing for some far-distant brother and in consequence sent to New York the largest Lenten offering ever made by this School, of less than two hundred boys and girls. The presentation of the objects by the pupils themselves is the secret of the success.

Easter at Dupree.

St. Philip's, Dupree, had the unique distinction of having its White congregation served at Easter by an Indian priest. The priest-in-charge, the Rev. George I. Baldwin, had to leave his charge on Easter Even by train in order to get to New York in time to meet the engagements made for him by the Department of Publicity. Roads were impassable, so using a motor was out out of the question. For this reason the Rev. Thomas J. Rouillard could not reach one of the isolated Indian chapels. But it is an ill wind that blows no good and this year on Easter Day the communicants at Dupree had a real Resurrection Day service. Mr. Rouillard celebrated the Holy Communion and preached. The congregation was small, due to the condition of the roads, but the townspeople reaped a rich spiritual gain gathered there in the little chapel before its new white altar adorned with the flowering house-plants of the devoted little band. Writing to her Bishop, one of the faithful members writes: "Our small vested choir of girls sang beautifully. We don't believe that there were probably any other white congregations in the United States presided over by an Indian priest on this Easter morning and we are very happy and proud of the distinction."

The Bishops' Crusade.

Palm Sunday saw the close of the Crusade in South Dakota. On this day all the clergy of the District occupied their own pulpits for the first time since the opening of the Crusade in February. Many of the clergy had been on crusade in distant parts of the District and several served for periods varying from one to four weeks. All reported satisfactory immediate results and look for more ultimate effects as the work of the Church goes forward the next months. It is acknowledged by all who had a part in this splendid effort that it is the greatest and best concerted activity ever undertaken in South Dakota.

Personal Notes

The Rev. George R. Hewlett, of Christ Church, Newton, Diocese of Newark, has accepted his election as rector of Trinity Church, West Pittston, Pa., and will begin his new work on Whitsunday.

The Rev. Samuel H. Sayre, missionary at Mobridge, South Dakota, has accepted a call to become assistant to the Rev. Dr. George H. Thomas at St. Paul's Church, Chicago. He entered upon his new work on May 1.

The Rev. Allan W. Cooke, Ph. D., has entered upon his work as rector of St. Luke's Church, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Gailor, D. D., Bishop of Tennessee, who has been ordered by his doctor to cancel all engagements and take a complete rest, has gone to his summer home in Sewanee, Tenn.

The Rev. Frederick A. Foster, formerly rector of Grace Church, Carthage, Mo., has accepted the call to be rector of St. Andrew's Church, Amarillo, Texas.

The Rev. Charles T. Hull, formerly rector of St. James', Bucyrus, Ohio, entered upon his duties as rector of the Church of St. Paul's-by-the-Lake, Rogers Park, Chicago, May 1.

The Rev. S. S. Hardy, formerly rector of St. George's Church, Goderich, Ontario, Canada, has accepted a call to St. Paul's Church, Marion, Ohio.

The Rev. George D. Ashley, formerly vicar of Grace Church, City Island Avenue, New York City, has accepted a call to be rector of Holy Trinity Church, Greenport, L. I., N. Y.

The Rev. Richard A. D. Beaty, formerly on the staff of St. Peter's Church, New York City, is now rector of Grace Church, City Island, New York City.

The Rev. Garrett R. Stearly, formerly assistant at St. Stephen's Church, Jersey City, N. J., is now on the staff of Calvary Church, New York City.

The Rev. William S. Shacklette, now rector of Trinity Parish, Charles County, Md., will become rector of Advent Parish, Washington, D. C., on May 16.

The Rev. William Watson, formerly missionary of Hobart Oneida Indian Mission, Oneida, Wis., has accepted a call to be S. P. G. missionary of "Thompson" Indians, Fraser River, Diocese of Cariboo, Canada, with address at Lytton, B. C., Canada.

The Rev. W. T. Reynolds has resigned as rector of Grace Parish, Georgetown, D. C.

The address of the Rev. H. J. Pulver is changed from Alexandria, Va., to 1301 Herr Street, Harrisburg, Pa.

The Rev. J. B. Caughey, rector of Immanuel Church, Winona, Miss., has received four months' leave of absence, and, accompanied with Mrs. Caughey, will visit with their two sons in England. His address from June 1 to October 1 will be 6 Railton Avenue, Blackburn, Lancashire.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Charles Henry Wells, rector of St. Anderw's Parish, Newark, N. J., died on Saturday, April 23, in St. Barnabas' Hospital, Newark.

Funeral services were held on April 26, the Rt. Rev. Edwin Stevens Lines, D. D., Bishop of Newark, and the Rt. Rev. Wilson R. Stearly, Bishop Coadjutor, officiating, assisted by the Rev. M. A. Barnes of Long Branch, and the Rev. Curtis H. Dickins of the U. S. Navy, and the Rev. Rowland F. Nye.

The Rev. Simon Blinn Blunt, D. D., rector of All Saints' Church, Dorchester, Boston, died after a brief illness on Monday, April 25.

Dr. Blunt was formerly secretary of the board of missions, Diocese of Chicago, chairman of the commission on work with foreigners, Diocese of Rhode Island, and a deputy to the General Convention in 1907, 1910, and 1921.

The Rev. Henry Bridges Jefferson, non-parochial minister of the Diocese of West Missouri, died on Palm Sunday in his home in Kansas City after a prolonged illness. He was seventy-eight years old.

The funeral was held in St. Mary's Church, Kansas City, Tuesday, April 12, the Rt. Rev. Sidney C. Partridge, D. D., Bishop of West Missouri, and the Rev. Edwin W. Merrill, rector of St. Mary's Church, officiating. Interment was in Forest Hill Cemetery, Kansas City.

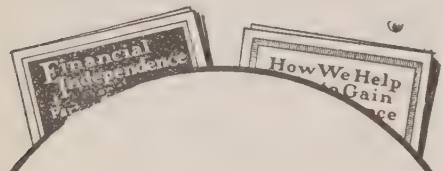
The Bell Book and Stationery Co.

ENGRAVED WEDDING ANNOUNCEMENTS
VISITING CARDS.
Fifth Street between Broad and Grace
RICHMOND, VA.

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.

Richmond, Virginia

THE SAFE EXECUTOR



Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

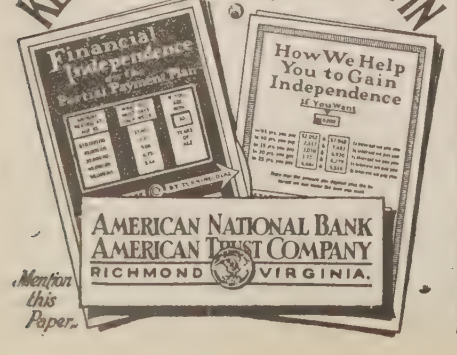
Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock $1,000,000.00
Surplus earned $1,500,000.00
Held in trust $30,000,000. (plus)

EARN $25 WEEKLY SPARE TIME
Writing for newspapers, magazines. Experience unnecessary. Details FREE. Press Syndicate, 1303 St. Louis, Mo.

A NEW PLAN YIELDING 6 PER CENT ON SAVINGS

SIMPLE SAFE SURE



By depositing weekly, monthly or at will in the Savings Department you accumulate.

Units of $100.00 are automatically invested in 6 per cent First Mortgage Real Estate Gold bonds through the American Trust Company.

Bonds are held free; a Trust receipt given you for them and maturing interest is deposited in the Savings Department to make other units of $100.00 to buy more bonds thus compounding 6 per cent.

The turnover thus secured gets you remarkable results.

KEEP YOUR INCOME COMING IN
Ask for Booklet on Income Building Plan

Mention this Paper.

INCORPORATED 1832

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,398,462.62

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer
J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm . P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

A Complete Store of shops and --- more --- an Institution

Miller & Rhoads

THE SHOPPING CENTER

Richmond - Virginia

BIG PROFITS

For Your Church Organization
The Handy Household Helper
Write for full information
METAL SPONGE SALES CORP.,
Dept. G, Lehigh Ave, & Mascher St.,
Philadelphia.

Use Cuticura Soap And Ointment To Heal Sore Hands

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.,
308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.
QUALITY—SERVICE

SYDNOR & HUNDLEY'S STOCK REDUCTION SALE

Complete Suites and Hundreds of Occasional Prices at

25 Per Cent, 33 1-3 Per Cent and 50 Per Cent Reductions.

7th at Grace — Richmond, Va.

The South's Best Book Store

HUNTER & CO.

105 E. Broad Street
Richmond, Va.
Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen.
Prompt and Reliable Service.

A NATIONAL CHURCH PAPER FOR ALL THE FAMILY.

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS FRUSTRA NISI 1835

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., MAY 21, 1927. No. 21.

WHAT is thy grief to-day?
A mind mute—burdened with its heavy sorrow,
A soul too faint to see the hopeful morrow?
A life that longs death's drapery to borrow?
Take heart!
He knoweth all thy way,
And makes thy inmost grief His chosen part.

What is thy joy to-day?
A mind in wonder at its own keen knowing?
A soul wherein God's planted truth is growing,
A life with eager, happy love o'erflowing?
Rejoice!
He knoweth all thy way,
And hears with perfect love thy praising voice.

—George Herbert Clarke.

EDUCATIONAL

The Virginia Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded.
Established 1892.
For terms and information address
MISS M. GUNDRY.

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-eighth year of this School for Boys opened September 15, 1926. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. Hoxton, B. A., Principal.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Course for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The Requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA.

prepares boys at cost for college and university. Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountians of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to
REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., Rector.

St. Hilda's Hall

Charles Town, W. Va.
Near Harper's Ferry.

Chevron School for Girls. Episcopal Junior College—four year' High School and two years' College Courses. Elective Music, Art. Business, Athletics. Limited numbers.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

The One Hundred and Fourth Session
Opened Wednesday, Sept. 15, 1926.

For catalogs and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria Va.

The Hannah More Academy

The Diocesan School of Maryland, Founded 1832. A Country School for Girls—fifteen miles from Baltimore. College Preparatory and General Courses, Music, Art, Supervised Athletics.

Principal, LAURA FOWLER, A. B., Reistertown, Maryland.

St. Albans

The National Cathedral School for Boys

Thorough Preparation for Leading Universities splendid equipment, unexcelled location on Mt. St. Alban overlooking Washington.

Eight years' course. Athletics for Every Boy.

Address:
WILLIAM H. CHURCH, Head Master, Washington D. C.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY, Publishers,
112 North Fifth Street, - Richmond, Va.

LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS..President
MISS FENTON WILLIAMSON, News Editor
MISS SUSAN C. COOKE, Circulation Dept.
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00 Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful	4
Editorial	5
Evolution and the Supernatural—The Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, D. D.	6
Christianity and the Community...	9
Letters to the Editor	10
Diocesan Councils and Conventions	11
Church Intelligence	12
Family Department	18
Children's Department	20
Personal Notes	23

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

St. Stephen's College

An Undergraduate Church College for men.

There are four curricula—Classical, Literary, Scientific and Social Scientific.

For tution $250.00 a year; for a room furnished and heated $150.00 a year; for board in hall $250.00 a year; a total of $650.00.

Address: BERNARD IDDINGS BELL, President

Annandale-on-Hudson, N. Y. (Railway Station, Barrytown, N. Y.)

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesvile; St. Margaret's School, Tapphannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.)

(About gifts or bequests, address the Dean, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR BOYS.
Richmond, Virginia.

Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 60 pupils.

RATE $700.00.

Reduction to sons of Clergymen, teachers and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D. Headmaster.

St. Agnes' Episcopal School

Alexandria, Virginia.

Boarding and Day School for Girls on Braddock Heights overlooking the Potomac River.

On the interurban trolley and bus lines between Washington and Alexandria.

Athletics and open air life; sixteen-acre campus. Primary, Intermediate, General and College Preparatory Courses. Music.

For information apply to
THE PRINCIPAL.

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University.

For catalog address
The Dean.

HOBART COLLEGE, Geneva, N. Y

A Church College for men, founded 1822. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

CHATHAM EPISCOPAL INSTITUTE,
Box 13, Chatham, Virginia.

College preparatory school for girls. Certificate privileges. Also two years of advanced Academic work. Special courses, Music, Art, Expression, Home Economics. Modern equipment. 15 Acres campus. Pool, Golf. Terms moderate. 33rd session September 22, 1926.

Bishop of Diocese of Southern Virginia President of Board.

For catalogue address
MABEL ELEANOR STONE
Principal.

National Cathedral School

A Home and Day School for Girls.

The Bishop of Washington, President Board of Trustees. Jessie C. McDonald, M. S., Principal. Helen L. Webster, Ph. D., Academic Head. Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

Saint Mary's School

A Junior College.

Rev. Warren W. Way, A.M., Rector.

An Episcopal School for Girls. Four years High School and two years College Courses. Accredited. Special courses: Music, Art, Expression, Home Economics, Business.

20 Acre Campus, Gymnasium, Field Sports New, Indoor, Tiled Swimming Pool Advent session opens September 14, 1926. For catalogue address

A. W. Tucker, Bus. Mgr., Box 19. Raleigh, N. C.

Rockford College for Women

Founded in 1847

for Modern Women

A college of distinguished graduates, fine traditions, and high standards of Christian scholarship. Chartered on February 25, 1847; this year is the 80th anniversary of Rockford College for Women. A. B. and B. S. degrees. Majors in the regular academic subjects or Education, Art, Social Service. Home Economics, Music, and Secretarial studies. A campus of wooded acres on Rock River, 88 miles from Chicago. All students participate in athletics. An intimate college with many student activities.

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE AND BOOK OF VIEWS

Wm. A. Maddox, Ph. D., LL. D., Pres.
BOX S. C. ROCKFORD, ILL.

The Divinity School of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia
42nd and Locust Streets.
Graduate Courses in Theology, Privileges at the University of Pennsylvania.
Address: The Rev. G. G. Barlett,
Address: The Rev. G. G. Bartlett,

True Economy

is practiced by the wearers of

BERRY CLOTHES.

Dependable; stylish; attractive; yet they cost no more.

Come and see

C. N. Berry & Co.

Richmond, Va.

$25 TO $50

For Your Church or Society

Sell our Embossed Initial Tea Napkins packed three dozen to the package. Made of the finest Lynkloth Crepe Paper. Every package with your own initial in Old English. In ordering, kindly state the quantity of each initial you desire. This is an article that every home has use for, and, with our Sample Box, sales are easily made. Costs 13c.; sells for 25c. Sample box, 25c. With every order of 25 packages sample package free. Thirty days' credit, carrying charges prepaid.

Gillmore Bros., Publishers, Reading, Pa.

The Lord loves to be helped.—Irish proverb.

He who ceases to be better ceases to be good.—Oliver Cromwell.

Richmond Trust Company

3%

ON SAVINGS.
BANKING—TRUSTS—REAL ESTATE
Capital $1,000,000.00

Main at Seventh Richmond, Virginia.

A moving picture of the Buzz Family

FLIT spray clears your home of flies and mosquitoes. It also kills bed bugs, roaches, ants, and their eggs. Fatal to insects but harmless to mankind. Will not stain. Get Flit today.

DESTROYS
Flies Mosquitoes Moths
Ants Bed Bugs Roaches

"The yellow can with the black band"

© 1927 STANDARD OIL CO (N.J.)

DIVERSITY IN EXPERIENCE

DIVERSITY IN SERVICES

Whatever the financial problems of your line of business, among the officers of the First and Merchants you will find one or more who are familiar with them. Whatever banking facilities your business requires, this institution provides them.

FIRST AND MERCHANTS
NATIONAL BANK OF RICHMOND

JOHN M. MILLER, JR., President.

CAPITAL, SURPLUS AND UNDIVIDED PROFITS, $6,300,000

XANTHINE

Hair Restorative

Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.

Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.

XANTHINE CO.. Richmond, Va.

Kill All Flies! THEY SPREAD DISEASE

Placed anywhere, DAISY FLY KILLER attracts and kills all flies. Neat, clean, ornamental, convenient and cheap. Lasts all season. Made of metal, can't spill or tip over; will not soil or injure anything. Guaranteed.

Insist upon DAISY FLY KILLER from your dealer.

HAROLD SOMERS Brooklyn N. Y.

SUMMER RESORTS

GRAY GABLES INN

119 South Washington Street
WINCHESTER, VA
Miss Caroline S. Hunter, Proprietress

THE INN

Located in Historic
CHARLES-TOWN, WEST VIRGINIA
In the beautiful Shenandoah Valley. Two hours from Washington on the National Highway. Large shady lawn; home atmosphere; home cooking.
Address
THE INN,
Charles Town, West Va.
Mrs. John P. Briscoe.

EVERYTHING FOR THE CHURCH

J. & R. Lamb
25-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED · WOOD · METAL · ETC.

WOODY ART GLASS SHOP
Art Stained and Leaded Glass
Church Windows a Specialty
402 East Marshall St.
Richmond, Va.

R. GEISSLER, INC.
56 W. 8th STREET, NEW YORK, N.Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER
FABRICS + WINDOWS

In Selecting a Memorial to a Loved One what could be a happier, a more fitting thought than a living memorial of Golden-Voiced
Deagan Tower Chimes
serving through the years to keep alive the faith of those who have it, and helping, as no other means can, to re-awaken childhood reverence in those who have strayed. Write for literature. Standard Sets $6,000 and up.
J. C. DEAGAN, Inc., 112 Deagan Building, Chicago, Ill.

We are Headquarters for CHURCH BOOKS
and
CHURCH SCHOOL SUPPLIES
Send for a copy of our Complete Catalogue
GEORGE W. JACOBS & COMPANY
Booksellers-Stationers-Engravers
1726 CHESTNUT STREET
PHILADELPHIA

Church and Sunday School Furniture
THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY,
Hickery, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue.

Washington Cathedral
A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation

THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work Missionary Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.

Chartered under Act of Congress.

Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.

Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.

Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS
Largest stock in the South. We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival
The Couper Marble Works
(Established 79 years.)
204-206 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

"Palmer's book is a wonderful contribution to the subject," says Bishop Darst.

THE MINISTRY OF LAYMEN
A Plea for Lay Evangelism
By
LEON C. PALMER.

Over 2,000 copies sold before edition was off the press.

Postpaid: Single copies, 25c.; four for $1.00; nine for $2.00.

From
The BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW
202 S. Nineteenth St., Philadelphia.

MOLLER PIPE ORGANS
three thousand churches. Every organ specially designed for the church and service in which it is be used and fully guaranteed. Specifications and estimates on request. Correspondence solicited.
M. P. MOLLER,
Hagerstown, Maryland.

CHURCH VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Surplices, Stole,
EMBROIDERIES
Silks, Cloths, Fringes.
CLERICAL SUITS
Rabats, Collars, Shirts.
COX SONS & VINING,
131-133 E. 23d St., New York.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS
Gold, Silver and Brass.
Church and Chancel Furniture
Write for Catalogue for Episcopal Churches.
W. & E. SCHMIDT CO.
308 THIRD ST. MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Cassocks
Surplices, Stoles, Altar Hangings, Bookmarkers and Embroideries Altar Linens, Materials, Rabats, Rabat Vests, Birettas, Collars, Cuffs and Shirts. Clerical and Custom Tailoring.
Moderate prices.
J. M. HALL, Inc.
9 East 35th St., New York
Tel. Caledonia 8648

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

In this world there are few voices, but many echoes.—Tennyson.

Let us not think of change as only danger and evil: it is also opportunity and hope.

He that saveth his time from prayer shall lose it; but he that loseth his time in communion with God shall find it in blessing.—Wilde.

"Hear the just law, the judgment of the skies,
He that hates the truth shall be the dupe of lies."

"We may still differ," says Professor Wm. Adams Brown, "in much and feel bound to defend our differences; yet we shall differ as fellow-disciples and as fellow-worshippers."

Praise is the best auxiliary to prayer; and he who most bears in mind what has been done for him by God will be most emboldened to supplicate fresh gifts from above.—Henry Melvill.

O wings, remember when you take the sun
The upward struggle from the twilight slime!
Grow stronger yet, for growth is never done.

The Scripture gives four names to Christians, taken from the four cardinal graces so essential to man's salvation; saints, for their holiness; believers, for their faith; brethren, for their love; disciples, for their knowledge.—A Fuller.

We receive far more than we deserve. What are we that God should do so much for us? What are we doing to prove ourselves worthy of His gifts? Are we trying to be what He wants us to be? The Advent Season follows close upon the Thanksgiving festival and presses this question for our answer.—Rev. E. W. Couper.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY
NEW PRIZE CONTEST
BEST TRACTS
First Prize, $100.00 and Gold Medal. Second Prize, $50.00. Third Prize, $25.00.
ANNUITY BONDS
Especially Attractive. Safe and Satisfactory.
Send for particulars concerning award of prizes and the Annuity Bonds.
AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY,
7 W. 45th St., New York City.

America's Heaviest Laying Strains
Leghorns, $8.50; Park's Barred Rocks, R. I. Reds, Sheppard's Anconas, White Rocks, $9.50; Heavy Assorted, $7.50; Assorted, $6.50. Postpaid. 100 per cent alive. Sixteen breeds. Free book, "Secrets of Poultry Success". Member I. B. C. A.
ILLINOIS HATCHERY,
Dept. 115, Metropolis, Ill.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., MAY 21, 1927. No. 21.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Having purchased control of the Southern Churchman Company, I desire to say that so long as I am in control of the company publishing the Southern Churchman, the policy of this paper will be to support belief in the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures as contained in our Bible of today and so clearly set forth by Bishop McIlvaine of Ohio in 1832 as follows:

"The distinct proposition to which your attention is called, I would express partly in the language of St. Peter: 'The Scriptures came not by the will of man; but holy men of God wrote as they were moved by the Holy Ghost'; or in the words of St. Paul, 'All Scripture is given by inspiration of God'.

"By inspiration is understood, 'such a communication by the Holy Spirit to the minds of the sacred writers, of those things which could not have been otherwise known, and such an effectual superintendency as to those particulars concerning which they might otherwise obtain information, as sufficed absolutely to preserve them from every degree of error in all things which could in the least affect any of the doctrines or precepts contained in their writings, or mislead any person who considered them as a divine and infallible standard of truth and duty'.

"This definition is perfectly consistent with what a critic would regard as a fault of style in a book of Scripture; or a philosopher, as scientifically inaccurate; or a rhetorician, as a departure from the rules of rhetorical writing. It is entirely compatible with the evident fact of the several authors having written in such various idioms and styles as their respective talents, habits, associations, or circumstances rendered most easy and natural; while, at the same time, it places all the sacred writers, however various their modes and minds, on the same footing of divine authority, and gives to all portions of the Bible an equal claim to be received as the oracles of God. Thus, over the just interpretation of each single verse, is written, infallibility.

* * *

"It is manifest from the testimonies adduced, that the Scriptures of the New Testament were treated among the primitive Christians, not only as true and possessed of inspired authority in reference to all questions of doctrine and obedience, but as very precious—more to be desired than gold'. They loved them as an inestimable treasure; they kept them, consulted them, and exalted them in their hearts and houses and assemblies, as a companion for every trial, a guide in every difficulty, a gift of God, for the preservation and honor of which they were ready to shed their blood. They felt them to be 'profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness'. How does all this rebuke the lukewarmness with which the Scriptures are regarded by too many professing Christians of the present day. In primitive times, believers would read them, though they paid for the privilege with their lives. In these days, multitudes who call themselves believers can hardly be persuaded to search the Scriptures, though every facility is afforded and the Bible is in honor. What a tremendous account must he give to God, who neglects his word! Let us imitate not only the affectionate devotion with which the primitive Christians read the Bible, but also the diligent zeal with which they surmounted innumerable obstacles in circulating copies of its books through the world. We possess facilities for such an object which they had not. The press is placed in our hands for this very purpose. It is our gift of tongues. Let us realize the responsibility we are under for the improvement of so rich a talent, and speed its work and multiply its branches of application, till the sound of the gospel has gone out into all the earth, and the words of Jesus to the ends of the world, and there is nothing hid from the light thereof."

and more definitely set forth in Article VI of our Church, which says:

"Holy Scripture containeth all things necessary to salvation: so that whatsoever is not read therein, nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man, that it should be believed as an article of the Faith, or be thought requisite or necessary to salvation. In the name of the Holy Scripture we do understand those canonical Books of the Old and New Testament, of whose authority was never any doubt in the Church.

OF THE NAMES AND NUMBER OF THE CANONICAL BOOKS.

Genesis,
Exodus,
Leviticus,
Numbers,
Deuteronomy,
Joshua,
Judges,
Ruth,
The First Book of Samuel,
The Second Book of Samuel,
The First Book of Kings,
The Second Book of Kings,
The First Book of Chronicles,
The Second Book of Chronicles,

The First Book of Esdras,
The Second Book of Esdras,
The Book of Esther,
The Book of Job,
The Psalms,
The Proverbs,
Ecclesiastes or Preacher,
Cantica, or Songs of Solomon,
Four Prophets the greater,
Twelve Prophets the less.

And the other Books (as Hierome saith) the Church doth read for example of life and instruction of manners; but yet doth it not apply them to establish any doctrine; such are these following:

The Third Book of Esdras,
The Fourth Book of Esdras,
The Book of Tobias,
The Book of Judith,
The rest of the Book of Esther,
The Book of Wisdom,
Jesus the Son of Sirach,
Baruch the Prophet,
The Song of the Three Children,
The Story of Susanna,
Of Bel and the Dragon,
The Prayer of Manasses,
The First Book of Maccabees,
The Second Book of Maccabees.

All of the books of the New Testament as they are commonly received, we do receive, and account them as Canonical."

and which all ordained ministers of the Protestant Episcopal Church accept in writing at the time of their ordination.

At ordination the Bishop asks:

"Are you persuaded that the Holy Scriptures contain all Doctrine required as necessary for eternal salvation through faith in Jesus Christ? And are you determined, out of the said Scriptures to instruct the people committed to your charge: and to teach nothing, as necessary to eternal salvation, but that which you shall be persuaded may be concluded and proved by the Scripture?"

and the minister being ordained answers:

"I am so persuaded, and have so determined, by God's grace."

It is our duty to oppose all forces that are now engaged in attacking the authenticity and credibility of the Bible, or engaged in the so-called "reinterpretation" thereof, and this paper will stand for an absolute, exact belief in the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds as the charter of that Church, whose one foundation is Jesus Christ her Lord, which is laid for your faith in His excellent Word.

Armed with the sword of the spirit, which is the Word of God, we propose to fight the good fight with all our might, for Christ is our strength and Christ our right.

We believe that God has concealed the great truths from the so-called worldly-wise and prudent and revealed them unto those of simple faith.

So long as I have the power of direction, this paper will stand for the simplest, evangelical faith, free from the unnecessary and diverting frills of misleading ritualism.

The policy of this paper will be to oppose all the vagaries and the imaginations of the self-styled modernists and so-called evolutionists who have been working their imagination overtime at the expense of credulous individuals.

LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS.

EVOLUTION AND THE SUPERNATURAL

By the Reverend W. H. Griffith Thomas, D. D.

DURING the past fifty years no idea or word has been more in evidence than Evolution, for in almost every sphere of life it has been used with reference to the world and things animate and inanimate. And yet there is scarcely any term which needs more careful definition because it is often misused.

I. The Meaning.

The word comes from the Latin "evolvere", to unroll, and in a perfectly right sense it is often used to indicate any process of "unrolling" or "development". It is possible to speak of the "evolution" (meaning the development) of a plant or an animal or a bird, and when used in this way the term is natural and, perhaps, inevitable. There are those who hold that the record in the first chapter of Genesis reveals a system of development from the lowest form to the highest. Then, too, when our Lord spoke of "first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear", it is, of course, possible and legitimate to speak of this as "evolution".

But the strict scientific meaning is quite different and calls for special attention. In this connection Evolution means a change wrought by internal force without external aid or volition. Among the many definitions of Evolution in its purely scientific aspect, perhaps the best is by Professor LeConte: "Continuous progressive change according to certain laws and by means of resident forces." It would be decidedly satisfactory if this view could always be understood when the term is employed. In this scientific sense it is usual to divide the subject into sub-organic, organic, and super-organic. The first refers to the development of matter without life, and is applied to the evolution of the solar system from some cruder conditions of life. Organic Evolution is intended to describe a process of derivation or development "by means of resident forces of vegetable and animal life". Super-organic Evolution refers to the same principles in metaphysical and non-material spheres.

II. The History.

The theory of evolutionary development can be traced back to the ages of Greek thinkers several centuries before Christ. As the mind seeks for fundamental and unifying principles, it was natural for the keen Greek mind to aim at discovering some principle which would account for the many and varied forms of inanimate and (specially) animate nature. But in modern times, while philosophers in the eighteenth century discussed the hypothesis of Evolution, it was not until the time of a Frenchman, Lamarck (1744-1829), that the question received thorough consideration in relation to life. Lamarck's views were not widely accepted, but the idea of Evolution became known and almost universally accepted among scientists through Charles Darwin, who in 1859 published his great work, "The Origin of Species". His fundamental principle is known as Natural Selection, an idea which was independently and simultaneously discovered by Alfred Russell Wallace who, however, allowed Darwin to have all the honor connected with the promulgation of the new view. By Natural Selection is to be understood the development of all living forms according to certain laws, and these, in the reproduction of plants and animals, kept alive those which individually were best fitted to survive the struggle for existence. Since the time of Darwin the theory of Evolution has become profoundly modified by further scientific research, and in 1914 Professor Bateson, president for that year of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, gave striking proof of these modifications of the Darwinian theory. Among other things he said:

"The principle of Natural Selection cannot have been the chief factor in delimiting the species of animals and plants. We go to Darwin for his incomparable collection of facts; we would fain emulate his scholarship, his width and his power of exposition, but to us he speaks no more with philosophical authority."

Professor Bateson referred again to this matter at the meeting of the American Association in Toronto in January, 1922, rejecting Darwin's theory and saying, "we have no acceptable account of the origin of species".

And yet, notwithstanding this modification, Evolution is still maintained as a general principle by many scholarly and scientific men. The abandonment of the particular view of Darwin is not to be understood as the abandonment of Evolution in general. The fact is still regarded by many as settled, and on this account it is necessary and important to give it full consideration. It is also true that opposition to Evolution has been shown from the very first by men of high position in the scientific world, who opposed it on scientific grounds. Virchow, the great pathologist, and Sir William Dawson, the eminent geologist, wrote in the strongest terms against the doctrine as a system destitute of all proof; and even Professor Tyndall said in an article:

"There ought to be a clear distinction made between science in the state of hypothesis and science in the state of fact, and inasmuch as it is still in its hypothetical stage, the ban of exclusion ought to fall upon the theory of Evolution. I agree with Virchow that the proofs of it are still wanting, that the failures have been lamentable."

These differences of opinion among scientists, together with the general prevalence today of some theory of Evolution, make it imperative to give the matter thorough attention, and to note that at every stage the one requirement is evidence. Like Tyndall, we must distinguish between fact and hypothesis, and only after adequate testimony from facts covering the widest possible area could we rightly regard Evolution as true in the strict scientific sense as defined by LeConte.

III. The Question Stated.

The doctrine of Evolution has been briefly stated by Graebner in "Evolution: An Investigation and a Criticism", substantially in the following words: In some infinitely remote period in the past, matter and force appeared, and with matter and in association with force there also appeared in primordial cell in which there was a spark of life, and from this cell all things animate have emerged being controlled by certain laws. These laws in connection with the modifying influences of surroundings like soil and climate, etc., explain the various species that have existed in the past and now exist upon the earth, man included. There are no gaps in the process but a steady ascent from lower to higher (that is, simple to more complex) forms of life until man is reached, who is the acknowledged highest product of Evolution.

Extreme evolutionists maintain that all the power of the universe was included in that primordial cell, and that all things have been worked out apart from any external agency and only by "resident forces". This is often called Causal Evolution since it rules out the necessity of a First Cause. If we admit that the solar system has always existed, it would be necessary to believe in the eternity of matter, but nothing in the universe more clearly points to a beginning than the solar system, and great scientists like Lord Kelvin and Sir Oliver Lodge are quite definite in their conviction that only by means of a First Cause can we account for things as they now are. Even Herbert Spencer was compelled to speak of an "Infinite and unknowable Energy from which all things proceed", thereby admitting a First Cause and at the same time showing his own inconsistency in asserting it to be "unknowable". He could have called it unknown, that is, unknown to him, but to use the term "unknowable" is to beg the entire question. Whatever, therefore, may have been the precise method by which the universe has come to be, an orderly succession suggests cause and effect and the law of Causality implies and demands an intelligent First Cause. So we dismiss this idea of Causal Evolution because it is plainly anti-theistic.

The other view regards Evolution as Modal; that is, as the method employed by God to produce the world and all that is in it. On this assumption Evolution cannot get further back than the condition of things mentioned or implied in the second verse of Genesis, for science is unable to afford proof of the origin of matter, since it cannot explain how it has come into existence. But now arises the question as to the real meaning of Evolution as the method of the Creator's work. According to Huxley, life originated in a low form of matter, which passed into higher forms by a constant succession of transmutation of species until at length mankind was reached. On this hypothesis it is necessary to inquire whether all life sprang from one cell or from two, one for vegetable and one for animal, and if from two, why may there not have been more? The question must, therefore, be settled by evidence.

This latter view is sometimes called Theistic Evolution and many men see no reason why if the doctrine of Evolution is proved, it should not be regarded as thoroughly in harmony with Theism. But such a position is merely the retention of the name of Evolution with an entirely new interpretation of it which men of science scarcely ever accept. If by Theistic Evolution is meant God's way of working, it is, of course, a conceivable and legitimate position, and the only question would be whether such a doctrine of Evolution is capable of proof. But whether this form of the theory would be accepted by most of the scientists who teach the general idea of Evolution as a great principle of nature is very uncertain. Theism and Evolution can be made correlative terms, but as a rule they are regarded as contradictory, because Evolution is generally so well defined that its fundamental idea is at least deistic, often a-theistic, and to empty a word of its usual meaning and to make it something different is at least confusing, and is hardly likely to be generally adopted. For our present purpose, however, it is quite unnecessary to distinguish between Evolution that is theistic and Evolution that is non-theistic, since in both cases the supreme and, indeed, the only requirement is adequate evidence, and this is wanting. Evolution should be regarded for the present as a working hypothesis, not an assured result.

IV. Evolution and Christianity.

It is already evident that the evolutionary theory has a very definite, close, and vital relation to the various problems connected with the Christian religion. It is sometimes said that Christianity has suffered much from not accepting the modern scientific doctrine of Evolution, but it is well for those who think so to remember that Evolution as originally proclaimed to the world sixty years ago was announced not merely as a scientific theory, but also as an ally of a philosophy which by its materialism boasted that it would be capable of driving Christianity out of existence. The Christian Church could hardly be expected to welcome a theory put forth under these auspices, and it is not surprising that the memory of this early time abides, especially as scientists of the highest eminence have materially and fundamentally modified the view of Evolution put forth by Darwin and also their attitude toward Christianity. People in the present day hardly realize the exultation with which the doctrine of Evolution was hailed as the complete explanation of the universe and as the supreme proof of human knowledge and enquiry. It seemed to be the solution of all the problems of life, though Darwin himself was far more modest in his claims and more thoroughly true to the facts than many of his followers. That this is not an incorrect statement may be seen from the words of the great American authority, Professor Henry Fairfield Osborn, who in his book "The Origin and Evolution of Life" says:

"In truth, from the period of the earliest stages of Greek thought, man has been eager to discover some natural cause of Evolution and to abandon the idea of supernatural intervention in the order of nature."

It will thus be necessary to inquire how the acceptance of the doctrine of Evolution as stated by LeConte and others affects the main doctrines of the Christian faith. In particular the following points will need thorough attention: the relation of Evolution to (1) belief in God; (2) the origin of life; (3) the origin of man; (4) the origin of religion; (5) the appearance of Christ; (6) the fact of sin; (7) the fact of redemption. It will be seen that the subject includes practically everything connected with a supernatural revelation. Once again it must be emphasized that the imperative necessity is for adequate evidence. Nothing merely hypothetical will suffice to lead thinking men to accept any view which cannot produce adequate evidence based on facts to support it.

V. Evolution and Creation.

As it is necessary to distinguish between the fact of Evolution and its method, it is usual for scientists to avoid accounting for the origin of matter on the basis of Evolution, but as the theories of the method of Evolution are so varied it is really impossible to avoid considering the fact as well as the method, because all the profound differences in regard to method raise doubt as to whether Evolution is a fact. Certainly it cannot account for the origin of things, which is a matter for philosophy. And yet, inasmuch as Evolution is a theory connected with the universe, it is essential to inquire whether it has anything to say in regard to the origin of matter. The a-theistic scientists claim that Darwin's view has annihilated the dogma of creation, but the theistic evolutionist confidently asserts that this involves a misapprehension, that Evolution is not opposed to creation but is only a method by which the Creator proceeded in His work. But on any theory of Evolution, two things have to be predicated, matter and force. The universe is made up of matter, and this is in a state of flux, so that the origin of matter and force remains unsolved, perhaps is an insoluble mystery, because science is unable to get behind the facts of matter and force in order to explain their origin. Even Laplace with his Nebular Hypothesis illustrates and proves this contention. The hypothesis of Laplace assumes a mass of nebular matter revolving with velocity and throwing off rings which form the planetary system, but even this theory is now being set aside by science and a new theory promulgated of the origin of matter through electrons. But on either view science cannot explain how these things came to be. For this we are compelled to go farther back and concentrate attention on the teaching of Genesis 1:1, which shows that the universe was not self-originated but was due to a First Cause.

But if it be asserted that Evolution was the method by which God worked after the creation of matter and force, let it be emphatically repeated that the one requirement which must be pressed at every stage is that there be adequate evidence; and whether reference is made to the heavenly bodies or to the state of the earth,, the facts are not only inadequate to sustain this theory, but they point in an entirely opposite direction. Darwin's theory has been rightly described as marked by three things: a denial, an assumption, an assertion. Darwin denied the existence of purpose or mind in nature, setting aside what has been called Teleology, the science of purpose. His assumption was that Evolution proceeded by a slow gradation. And his assertion was that this process started with the lowest forms of life and went forward until it reached the highest point in creation—man. But as it is now well-known, science gives ample evidence of proceeding by "leaps" instead of by slow and unbroken processes, and also that there is an unbridged gap between the non-living and the living. From this it is clear that if Evolution is true, then not only is it impossible to accept the literal Genesis but any view at all, because Genesis is absolutely opposed both to the view as stated by Darwin and also to the modifications of it as generally held by scientists. There are, it is true, several points in which Genesis and a certain theory of Evolution can be said to be in harmony, but the question is whether such an evolutionary theory would be accepted by scientific authorities. Thus, there is one word used in Genesis 1 for the act of creation as distinct from that of making or moulding from materials, and it is significant that this term occurs at three points only, in connection with the spheres of matter, v. 1; of life, v. 21; and of man, v. 27. Mr. A. R. Wallace, who, as already stated, shared with Darwin the distinction of pioneer in the modern Evolution theory, maintains that there must have been three interpositions of a Divine or supernatural flux to account for things as they now are, and this coincidence with Genesis is decidedly striking. There is certainly a gulf between matter and nothing; between life and the non-living; and between man and the lower creation; and science, whether by means of Evolution or otherwise, cannot bridge any of these gulfs. Then, too, the first chapter of Genesis has the same order of events as are to be seen in scientific records today. Comparative anatomy teaches that the types of life proceed upward from the lowest to the highest, and are determined by the proportion of the amount of the brain to the spinal cord, the order being fish, reptiles, birds, mammals, man. This is exactly the order of Genesis, and it is pertinent to ask how the author of that chapter came to be familiar with facts which were only discovered by science between two and three centuries ago. Further, the unity of animate and inanimate nature as recorded in Genesis is exactly in accordance with scientific thought. Man is seen to be at once united with nature and yet separate from it. Even a materialist like Haeckel testifies to this remarkable fact, and the late Professor Romanes and others speak in strongest terms of the way in which Genesis has anticipated the order of events so far as they are discoverable by science. It is, therefore, significant that although naturally not setting down scientific truths in scientific phraseology, the writer of Genesis has not set down anything inconsistent with scientific results. No scientific error has yet been proved to exist in Genesis, and its language allows, without any straining, of agreement with modern discoveries. Many leading geologists like Buckland, Miller, Dana, Dawson and Hitchcock have expressed the opinion that geology is in harmony with the account in Genesis. But whether all this, which is impressive to a Christian thinker, would be accepted by a thorough-going evolutionist is more than doubtful, and so once again the call is for facts which will provide evidence for the theory of Evolution as usually understood, and it must be admitted that no such facts are as yet forthcoming.

(To Be Continued.)

SEE THE CONQUEROR

The Ascension of Our Lord is the vindication of the Resurrection triumph. The Conqueror is acclaimed the Victor by those and by Him to Whom He returns. The Resurrection is a working of irresistible might. The Ascension is a manifestation of absolute authority. Death being vanquished by invincible love, captivity is henceforth openly led captive and gifts abound amongst the children of men.

I.

This fact is full of significance to those who still in the thick of the battle being waged by the Church militant, are following "in his train". The battle we wage is, indeed, ours. Yet it is much more, for essentially it is His, and He has already been vindicated as Victor. The crucial engagement, decisive of the final issue, He has won; already He is in possession of His throne; our skirmishes here are but completing the victory. In the nearer range we have uncertainty and failure, but at the same moment in the farther range we behold the End securely held for us. Who shall separate us from that? We are not allowed to leave our Leader half way; we follow Him through to the right hand of God.

The New Testament writers, it has been well said, "dwell with a tender irony on the humiliation of their Lord; they are not trembling lest after all He should fail; they know the sequel. They are not giving memorials of an exile King, who may at the last come to His own; but they are sure that their King has come to His own, and his own is the right hand of God. . . . They have henceforth to do with a Lord ascended and mighty. The great role of the Church must always be one of assurance and confidence. It should be the Great-heart of the nations. . . . When faith can see no sure evidence that things are going well with the Kingdom in the present it can 'thither ascend where Christ is'. There is an area of contingency there is all the excitement of a good fight; much depends upon each member of the Church of Christ who must act as though everything depended upon himself. But outside that area and embracing it, there is the kingdom held securely in the hands of the Son of Man."

II.

It is quite right that we should keep on "taking stock" of our visible resources. It is honoring to God that we should proclaim to the world the Church's achievements in a day when so many are ready to advertise its apparent failures. Nevertheless, not here is our ultimate assurance of the final triumph. This we shall find when the earliest and the latest disciples alike have found the secret of genuine confidence—in the vision of the Lamb upon the throne!

"Peace, perfect peace, the future all unknown?
Jesus we know, and He is on the throne!"

That was a truly inspired message given by the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews to his discouraged converts —We see not yet all things subject to Him, hence the reason for our depression and perplexity; but be of good cheer, for what we do see we see so certainly that our wavering can be only for an instant; we do see Jesus already crowned with glory and honor. Wherefore we keep on running the race, steadily looking unto Him who because He is the Author will assuredly be also the Finisher of our faith, and of our fight.—The Canadian Churchman.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE COMMUNITY

"The Kingdom Come, Thy Will be done on earth"

COMMENTS ON CHILD TRAINING.

By Mary Evelyn Brydon, M. D.

Article XIX.—The Ten Commandments.

(Continued.)

The Tenth Commandment—Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife, nor his servant, nor his maid, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor anything that is his.

Contentment:

Teach your child not to covet or desire other men's goods, but to be content with his own.

It has been argued by some of my advisors that contentment does not cover the teaching of this Commandment. I should be glad of a more comprehensive word, but I have not found one. I am told that to be content like a cow is fatal to desirable ambition. That would be true if the two words had any relationship to each other, but as it is, the Tenth Commandment refers to things, not to social or economic or educational, conditions. Not to covet other men's goods. The seven cardinal sins are said to be pride, anger, envy, sloth, greed, gluttony, lust; and two of them are exemplified by this law; envy and greed.

Every child is acquisitive by nature. He wants every thing that attracts his eye. How are you going to teach him to discriminate against those things that are his neighbor's? In Article XVII when we discussed property rights we intimated that merely to refrain from taking what is our neighbor's does not confer immunity against continued wanting it. This continually wanting a thing another child owns leads to envy; and envy leads to hatred, injustice, and final destruction of the finer qualities of character.

How are you going to teach him not only not to desire his playmate's things but to be content with his own? I confess it is a hard proposition, but I suggest one or two possible solutions:

1. To make him content with his own, allow him the fewest possible number of toys. The more he has the cheaper they are in his sight. I knew a poor little wealthy boy who had a room full of expensive toys accumulated from Christmas to Christmas. They were piled on shelves, tables and floor. He hated to go into that room and often when sent there amused himself by smashing them.

If a child has only a few toys he will love them and enjoy more playing with them. One mother I know stores away right after Christmas all except a few of the toys given the children, and brings out a new one every now and then through the year. These children are not so apt to wish for what others have.

2. Teach him to make toys. Thus he learns values; also resourcefulness and tastes the joy of achievement. A child who can make toys is rather independent of the toys of others. Is this not so?

3. Teach him team work. Two or three can pool their resources and dig deeper trenches, build bigger bridges or dams, run races, etc. An only child in a family is a lonely child. He needs the companionship of his contemporaries. He cannot learn to love a neighbor who isn't there to be loved, neither can he grow strong in contentment if there is nothing upon which contentment can be exercised through comparison of values. On the contrary envy of other children is far more apt to be fostered, and the team work so desirable in later adult life cannot be learned.

4. Finally, I believe contentment can best be taught by that courteous consideration for others which we usually term unselfishness. No matter how selfish the other child is, my child must be unselfish. No matter how rude, inconsiderate, acquisitive the other child is, my child must be courteous, generous, and considerate of the other's feelings.

It is mostly a matter of mental attitude towards the neighbor. Decide what attitude you want your child to show and you have met your problem half way towards its solution. And, as in other things, example largely completes the other half of the way.

The Upbuilding of the American Church

By The Reverend O. A. Sauer.

If we follow God's plans and specifications, success in building is assured, but we must not expect the Church to be built without laborers. Our Master Builder is almighty. He could build without the help of any man, if He so willed. But it pleases Him merely to encourage, to guide, to strengthen the laborers. The laborers are not only the pastor and officers of the Church, but all who claim to be members of the Church are co-workers with the Holy Spirit in building up the Church. The Master Builder expects His laborers to be steady workers.

In building up the Church, we must look to its foundation. The Apostle Paul says: "Ye are built upon the foundation of the prophets and apostles". The apostles and prophets, though dead, still live and work, through their writings. To be built upon the foundation of the prophets and apostles means to be built upon Christ, the sun and center of all their writings.

A Christian congregation is not built upon any human being, not upon Peter or Paul. It is not built upon the decrees of any self-constituted leader of thought or judge in spiritual matters; nor upon the shifting sands of human opinions, but upon the bed-rock of Holy Scripture, upon the firm foundation of God's eternal, unchanging truth as we have it revealed in the writings of the apostles and prophets.

If we are wise we shall build only upon the solid rock of Christ's Gospel; and then, though the rain descend, and the floods come, and the winds blow and beat upon the house, it will not fail, for it will be founded upon a rock. Yea, the very gates of hell will not be able to overthrow the Church if it be firmly grounded on the only sure foundation of which the apostle says: "Other foundations can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ".

In building up the Church, we must see to it that we choose our cornerstone wisely; for upon our wise choice will depend the future strength of the Church. Which is the chief cornerstone that should be laid in Zion, that is, in every Christian congregation? The apostle says that the Church should be built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief cornerstone.

He is the cornerstone which God Himself has laid; for thus says the Lord through the mouth of the prophet, Isaiah: "Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious cornerstone.." Let us choose Jesus Christ as our cornerstone. Let us build our hopes on Him, the Rock of Ages.

Youth is one of the precious opportunities of life—rich in blessing if you choose to make it so, but having in it the materials of undying remorse if you suffer it to pass unimproved. You can suffer your young days to pass idly and uselessly away; you can live as if you had nothing to do but enjoy yourselves; you can let others think for you, and not try to become thoughtful yourselves, till the business and the difficulties of life come upon you unprepared, and you find yourselves like men waking from sleep, hurried, confused, with all the faculties bewildered, not knowing right from wrong, just because you have not given yourselves time to learn what is good. You cannot repair that in after life. Oh! remember every period of human life has its own lesson, and you cannot learn that lesson in the next period.—F. W. Robertson.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

AN URGENT APPEAL FROM MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. Editor:

Greenville, a city of fifteen thousand, was in the direct path of the first rush of water, April 21, from the break of the levee at Stop's landing. It was completely inundated and within a few hours fifty thousand people of this county were reduced to beggary. One hundred and twenty-five thousand industrious and self-sustaining inhabitants of the Delta fled from their homes; saving little more than life itself from the deluge. A million dollars will not replace the clothing, household goods and other property destroyed in this city alone. In the suburbs many homes were swept away. More than two-thirds of the live stock, necessary to the tilling of the soil, has perished. There has been loss of life. Hundreds of families in this vicinity have not only lost their possessions, but their means of support. The American Red Cross is performing a mighty task in aiding our unfortunate people, but it cannot attempt the rehabilitation of those who need actual cash assistance to take up daily life with some hope of success. Very many of these people turn to our clergy and Church organizations for help. They need not only funds but bedding and clothing for men, women and children. The Rt. Rev. William Mercer Green, Coadjutor Bishop of Mississippi, Meridian, Miss., will have charge of receiving and disbursing funds in this diocese. Checks for this purpose should be sent to him. Clothing and other supplies for the sufferers may be sent to any one of the following clergy in charge of work in or near the devastated area: The Rev. L. W. Rose, Greenwood; the Rev. E. R. Jones, Yazoo City; the Rev. Edward Maxted, of Indianola; the Rev. Tate Young, of Rosedale; the Rev. Gordon M. Reese, and the Rev. Charles E. Woodson, of Vicksburg, and also to myself.

PHILIP DAVIDSON,
Rector St. James' Church.

Greenville, Miss.

THE SPIRIT OF LAWLESSNESS.

Mr. Editor:

I have a way of putting aside a thing that stirs me to thought and of taking it up again when I have more time. I put aside the editorial in the Southern Churchman for September 11, 1926, called "Rollicking Blades". I have read it over several times at intervals.

There is one side of the question you discuss that has not been brought out in the religious press, so far as I have read. I refer to the spirit of lawlessness taught by the preachers for the past seventy years. One of the clearest statements of this spirit I have seen comes from S. Parkes Cadman, D. D., President of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. In his column in the Richmond Times Dispatch of May 24, 1926, he speaks of setting the claims of justice and humanity above a statute, which nullified those claims. He was referring to the clause in the Constitution which provided for the return of a fugitive bound to service.

It is the right and the duty of a citizen to try to have the Constitution amended so as to be in line with what he may think are the claims of justice and humanity; but while I regret to differ with so prominent a divine as Dr. Cadman, I cannot see that a citizen ought to disobey a law because it does not represent his individual opinion of what is right, or because it does not represent the opinion of a majority.

Dr. Cadman used the fugitive servant clause of the Constitution as an example of a law that a citizen ought to violate. The principle, however, is the same as the one on which "Rollicking Blades", or some of them, base their action. Some time back I was in a company where the prohibition law was under discussion. One of those present took the ground that any citizen has a right to break that law if it conflicts with his own ideas of right and wrong. He, the grandson of clergymen on both sides of his house, referred to the teaching of the preachers in support of his principle; and I had to admit that the preachers have often taught his principle.

The preachers probably do not see the principle for what it really is. When a man who is opposed to prohibition sets the law aside, they may see it. But they do not recognize it as their own principle.

I have thought that those preachers who broke the fugitive servant law and taught their congregations that it was a duty to break it were in part responsible for the War Between the States. But we do not have to go back to that. Our young people hear the same principle from the preachers of today. Like Dr. Cadman, they talk of "extraordinary instances which justify rebellion against constituted authority". They confuse the right of protest against a law, or against the unlawful act of an official, with disobedience. The fruit of such preaching is disregard for the law.

ALFRED ACKERMAN.

Atlanta, Ga.

The Lausanne Conference

The widest dissemination in advance of the World Conference on Faith and Order of statements and views concerning matters to be considered at Lausanne is highly desirable, in the opinion of the Business Committee, provided the circulation of such statements does not partake of the nature of propaganda. This was the unanimous opinion expressed at the last meeting of the Committee and recorded in the Minutes just issued by the Secretariat.

The question originated from a request by a religious group, which has declined the invitation to participate in the Lausanne Conference, for permission to present at the Conference a statement explaining their attitude upon the subject of discussion. The Business Committee decided that while participants in the Conference should have the widest latitude in expressing their views, the business of the Conference should not be interrupted or delayed by a discussion of the positions of groups which have decided not to send official representatives.

The Secretariat announces that the Business Committee has cooped as members of the Lausanne Conference three members of the Church of Russia, who represent a large constituency now exiled from Russia and living in other parts of Europe. These cooped members are the Very Reverend Euloge of Paris, Metropolitan of the Church of Russia, the Rev. Fr. Sergius Bulgakoff, of Paris, and the Rev. Professor Nicholas Arseniew, of Koenigsberg.

Three seats have been reserved at the Lausanne Conference for representatives to be appointed by the Orthodox Church of Poland, and five for representatives to be appointed by the National Union of the Reformed Evangelical Churches of France. The Very Reverend S. O. Sigmond, of Brooklyn, of the Norwegian Lutheran Church of America, has been cooped as a member of the Conference.

A total of thirty-five seats has been reserved for representatives of the Protestant Churches of Germany.

The Rev. Nehemiah Boynton has been obliged to resign as a member of the Continuation Committee, and upon his nomination the Rev. Henry A. Atkinson, of New York, has been elected a member of the Continuation Committee in Dr. Boynton's place, the election to take effect July 30. Dr. Atkinson is one of the official representatives of the National Council of Congregational Churches in the United States, which has a total allotment of ten seats at Lausanne.

The Secretariat has received many requests from persons interested in attending the Conference concerning admission to the Conference hall. Inasmuch as space in the hall is limited and virtually all the available seats will be needed for the official representatives, arrangements are being made for public meetings to be held in Lausanne Cathedral and possibly in other places during the period o fthe Conference which will be open to the general public.

Sweet is the smile of home; the mutual look
When hearts are of each other sure;
Sweet all the joys that crowd the household nook,
The haunt of all affections pure;
Yet in the world even these abide, and we
Above the world our calling boast:
Once gain the mountain-top, and thou are free:
Till then, who rest, presume; who turn to look, are lost.

—John Keble.

DIOCESAN COUNCILS AND CONVENTIONS

EAST CAROLINA.

The forty-fourth annual convention of the Diocese of East Carolina met in Christ Church, Elizabeth City, N. C., May 4 and 5, and showed great happiness because of the return of their Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., who has been absent from the diocese for several months on account of his work as chairman of the National Commission on Evangelism.

The Rev. W. M. Milton, D. D., rector of St. James' Church, Wilmington, N. C., preached the opening sermon, and Bishop Darst was the celebrant.

It was announced that during the past four years parish house property has increased from $78,000 to nearly $400,000. A resolution recommending that the salaries of the rural clergy be raised to a minimum of $2,100 and house was passed. Report of the treasurer showed that East Carolina met every financial obligation, diocesan and general, during the year 1926, including the assessment of $7,000 for work at Thompson Orphanage. Though details were left to the Diocesan Commission on Evangelism, great interest was shown in the proposed plan to have intensive educational and inspirational meetings in every parish and mission as a part of the "follow-up" of the Bishops' Crusade. An intense moment of the convention was the first evening when Bishop Darst briefly outlined the accomplishments of the Bishops' Crusade, and called upon his people to rededicate themselves and manifest a more serious purpose in the service of the kingdom.

The officers of the diocese were generally reelected. New elections were as follows:

Executive Council: The Rev. G. F. Cameron, Mr. John G. Bragaw, and Mrs. A. H. Worth. Standing Committee: the Rev. James E. W. Cook, Greenville, N. C. Delegates to the Provincial Synod: the Rev. W. R. Noe, the Rev. George W. Lay, D. C. L., the Rev. R. S. Drane, D. D., the Rev. Alexander Miller, the Rev. G F. Hill and the Rev. Stephen Gardner, Messrs. W. P. Skinner, George C. Royall, John G. Bragaw, Judge George Rountree, Col. R. R. Cotten and Dr. William Cobb Whitfield.

At the final service Thursday evening, Bishop Darst administered the rite of Confirmation, and the Rev. G. F. Cameron, of Ayden, preached the closing sermon. Before giving the benediction, Bishop Darst made an appeal to the delegates to conserve the zeal and accomplishments of the convention in service in their respective parishes and missions.

The convention voted to meet in St. Peter's Church, Washington, North Carolina, the first Wednesday in May, 1928.

G. F. C.

EASTON.

The fifty-ninth annual convention of the Diocese of Easton was held at St. Andrew's Church, Princess Anne, Md., May 2, 3 and 4, with the Rt. Rev. George W. Davenport, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, presiding, and about sixty clerical and lay delegates, and many visitors in attendance.

Preceding the formal opening of the convention a dinner for the clergy and laymen, numbering over a hundred, from all points of the diocese, was held at the Washington Hotel. The after-dinner speaker was the Most Reverend John Gardiner Murray, D. D., Bishop of Maryland and Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church in the United States of America. After the dinner a public service was held in St. Andrew's Church at which Bishop Murray made an eloquent appeal for greater missionary activity in the Church.

The opening service of the convention was a celebration of the Holy Communion, Tuesday morning, May 3, the Bishop of the diocese acting as celebrant, assisted by the Rev. George C. Sutton, D. D., the Rev. C. L. Atwater, and the Rev. R. R. Gilson, rector of the parish. Mr. S. E. Shannahan was elected Secretary, and Mr. John S. McDaniel, Treasurer.

The main business of the morning session was the presentation of the various reports of committees and organizations of the diocese.

In the evening there was a mass meeting in the interest of Religious Education. The Bishop presided and introduced the speakers, the Rev. C. L. Atwater and Mr. Leon C. Palmer, General Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

Elections resulted as follows:

Standing Committee: The Rev. Geo. C. Sutton, D. D., the Rev. William D. Gould, D. D., the Rev. C. L. Atwater, Hon. William H. Adkins, Mr. Edwin Dashiell.

Delegates to the Synod: The Rev. Messrs. L. I. Insley, R. R. Gilson, R. W. Lewis, R. M. D. Adams; and Messrs. E. Thomas Massey, Cassius Dashiell, Dudley G. Roe, Claude Bailey.

Executive Council: The Rev. John White, the Rev. S. R. MacEwan, the Rev. William McClelland, the Rev. R. W. Lewis, Mr. Clayton Wright, Fred Webb, Dudley G. Roe, Cassius Dashiell.

A. C.

NEW YORK.

An outstanding fact of the New York Diocesan Convention this year was the sending of its cordial greetings to the Church of England, as the Mother Church, its recognition of debt the American Church and all America owes to England and its Church; and the earnest desire of the Daughter Church in America for the peace, prosperity and long continued service by the Church of England. One reason for the more than cordial greetings is the fact that Bishop Manning is to preach the sermon in Yorkminster on the occasion of the thirteen hundredth anniversary of that ancient fane.

Another fact was the felicitation of the Christian Churches upon the forthcoming Lausanne Conference, which New York and other American delegates are to attend this summer. In his convention address Bishop Manning gave large space to the World Conference on Faith and Order.

While the convention was in session citizens of New York City and immediate vicinity were being asked for $41,000,000 as gifts, and this in addition to the $300,000,000 a year which they regularly give to maintain and advance religion and its institutions, local and general. The $41,000,000 includes that asked to complete the Cathedral. There were felicitations to Bishop Manning and the diocese that it has helped to wipe out the general deficit of the Church, has met its apportionment as a diocese, and has gone far in other directions.

Institutions of the diocese were reported to be in excellent shape. The convention was free from any differences over details, and the women made splendid reports. Including Church properties, New York and environs have $1,000,000,000 invested in land and buildings for the promotion of religion.

C.

ATLANTA.

The twentieth annual council of the Diocese of Atlanta met at St. James' Church, Cedartown, Georgia, on Wednesday, May 11, the Rt. Rev. Henry J. Mikell, D. D., presiding.

The following officers were elected: the Rev. F. H. Harding, Milledgeville, Ga., Secretary; the Hon. Robert C. Alston, D. C. L., Atlanta, Chancellor; the Rev. Thomas Duck, Atlanta, Registrar; C. L. Bunting, Macon, Treasurer; Mac D. Dexter, Columbus, Assistant Treasurer; Thomas H. Austin, Atlanta, Treasurer of the N.-W. C.

The following were elected members of the Standing Committee: The Rev. S. Alston Wragg, Columbus; the Rev. W. W. Memminger, Atlanta, and the Very Rev. Thomas H. Johnston, D. D., Atlanta; Col. Z. D. Harrison, Atlanta; Messrs. Philip Alston, Atlanta, and F. F. Baker, Macon.

The following were elected delegates to the Provincial Synod: The Very Rev. T. H. Johnston, D. D., the Rev. Messrs. C. E. Bentley, N. R. High Moor, W. W. Silliman, W. F. Mosss, W. I. Gubbins; Messrs. L. A. Shirley, W. J. Parker, Jr., St. Elmo Massengale, O. A. Coleman, and M. W. Savage and Roy Moore.

The reports presented to council showed a very satisfactory condition of growth throughout the diocese.

Dr. Benjamin Finney, Vice-Chancellor of the University of the South, addressed the Council on the subject of the University. The Council took action looking toward the fulfilling of its full obligation made by pledges to the University.

Much interest was manifested in the resolution offered looking to a new Cathedral for the Diocese of Atlanta, to be erected in Atlanta. It was brought out that on account of the present Cathedral being situated close to the commercial center of this rapidly growing city, it must at no distant date give way to the march of progress and seek a location more appropriate. It was realized that the planning, financing and erection of such a Cathedral would likely be a work not only for the present, but for future generations. A committee was appointed to make a report at the next annual meeting of this council in regard to suitable site and to recommend to the council a mode of procedure in the preliminary of such an undertaking.

The annual convention of the Woman's Auxiliary met at the same time and place as the council and at a joint service in the Palace Theatre were addressed by Miss Margaret G. Weed, Provincial Representative to the National Board of the Woman's Auxiliary, and the Very Rev. Thomas H. Johnston, D. D., Dean of St. Philip's Cathedral, Atlanta.

Miss Marie Ravenal, returned missionary from China, who during September was under fire, addressed the Council on conditions in China and the desire of each missionary to have the Christian Chinese understood.

The next meeting of the Council will be held on the last Wednesday in January, 1928, at St. Peter's Church, Rome.

F. H. H.

WASHINGTON.

The thirty-second annual convention of the Diocese of Washington was held May 11 and 12, in Ascension Church. The time of meeting of the convention was changed from February to May by the authority of the Convention last year and at the request of delegates residing in rural neighborhoods, and it is believed that this change has proven a wise one. The Bishop's annual address to the convention was delivered on the Tuesday evening preceding the convention in Epiphany Church, where a large number of delegates and other Church people were assembled.

The Bishop opened his address by fitting words of remembrance of the clergy who had entered into Eternal Life during the year.

A resume of the year's work of the diocese was given by the Bishop and encouraging points brought out here, were the facts that the diocese had paid in full its missionary apportionments, had given $80,000 for the fund for Japanese relief, and had furnished one-fifth of all the lay crusaders sent out during the recent Bishops' Crusade. He referred to the Cathedral by expressing the hope that building might be carried forward sufficiently to accommodate the General Convention to be held in Washington in 1928, speaking especially of the great opening service and the service of the presentation of the United Thank Offering. It was of interest to many to hear that over 225,000 people visited Washington Cathedral last year.

The latter half of the Bishop's address constituted a charge to the clergy and laity to see to it that the Church take its rightful place in the solution of the problems of present-day life and set forth in a forceful and stirring way the great opportunity of the Church in a time, regarded by many, as a crisis in our national life. This service at Epiphany Church was followed by a reception at the Willard Hotel to which the Bishop and Mrs. Freeman had invited all the delegates and their wives and the vestries of all the parishes.

The convention, itself, began on Wednesday morning at Ascension Church, with a celebration of the Holy Communion, which was followed by breakfast in the parish hall. The formal assembly of the convention took place at ten A. M., and continued throughout the day with recess for luncheon. On Wednesday evening, after the day's session had concluded, the Bishop gave his annual dinner for the delegates, in the parish hall of Ascension Church. Thursday was given over to a continuation of routine business and discussion and the convention was brought to a close in the afternoon of that day.

This was the first meeting of the convention since the Executive Council of the Diocese had been in operation and reports which otherwise might have required much time and fatigue were shortened and presented more in summary form, because they had already been taken care of in the Executive Council. This change in administration appears to have been a good one.

Reports, disbursements, budget needs and new business occupied much of the time and brought to the forefront several outstanding matters of importance. Of these, some may be of general interest. St. Mary's Parish was formed, being now an independent parish, with the Rev. Oscar L. Mitchell as rector. St. Mary's Chapel has been a mission of St. John's Church, and now with its new status is the only independent parish for Colored people in the diocese.

Mr. Monell Sayre, of New York, visited the convention on Wednesday and explained the pension fund system, by which all the parishes in the diocese automatically subscribe.

The convention authorized the changing of the boundary lines of Brookland Parish to the extent that St. John's Church, Mt. Rainier, of St. Matthew's Parish, be allowed certain property for the building of a new church on land which was up to this time a part of Brookland Parish. St. John's Chapel is now under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of the Diocese, and is administered through the Department of Missions of the Diocese of Washington.

A reduction in appropriations named in a recommended budget for the year ending December 31, 1927, makes necessary a discontinuance of the diocesan paper, "The Church Militant", and a curtailment of activity in the Department of Publicity. In this connection the minds of the people of the Church in many cases are directed to the work of Commander T. C. Jewell, who has resigned his position as Secretary of the Department of Religious Education. Commander Jewwl with an office at Diocesan House has done a splendid work for religious education, publicity, and other phases of Church work in Washington.

The convention will hold its next meeting in St. Phillip's Church, Laurel, Maryland. This will be the first time in the history of the Diocese that its convention has met outside of Washington.

Elections were made as follows:

For Standing Committee: The Rev. Messrs. G. F. Dudley, D. D., Joseph Fletcher, Herbert Scott Smith, Enoch M. Thompson; Messrs. Marcus Benjamin, H. M. Bowen and Dr. Wm. C. Rives.

For Deputies to the Provincial Synod: The Rev. Messrs. G. W. Atkinson, D. D., C. W. Whitmore, W. W. Shearer, G. C. F. Bratenahl; Messrs. H. P. Blair, E. L. Stock, S. E. Kramer and Dr. W. S. Bowen.

For Executive Council: The Rev. Messrs. W. L. Devries, D. D., Z. B. T. Phillips, D. D., Robert Johnston, T. W. Cooke, G. F. Dudley, D. D.; Messrs. H. K. Boss, B. S. Adams, Wm. Stanley, H. P. Blair, W. S. Bowen, S. E. Kramer.

In addition to these elected to the Executive Council, the Bishop appointed three persons as follows: the Rev. C. M. Young, the Rev. I. J. Browne and Mr. H. T. Nelson.

Officers of the diocese were elected as follows: Treasurer, Mr. H. L. Rust; Executive Secretary, the Rev. D. Wellington Curran, and Convention Secretary, the Rev. H. Allen Griffith.

M. M. W.

Church Intelligence

The National Federation of Church Clubs.

In his address before the annual conference of the National Federation of Church Clubs of the United States, E. A. Harriman, President of the Federation, declared that standardization of all human activities is a very dangerous thing and "much of the lawlessness of the times is due to an attempt to standardize human beings and human organizations by law beyond the limit to which it can be carried without rebellion". Mr. Harriman pointed out that reports of the different clubs showed there to be no standard of Church Club activities and there should be none, but he maintained that there is a spiritual standard to which all must conform to be useful.

Reviewing the work of the Federated Church Clubs before the delegates to the conference, Mr. Harriman urged the wider cultivation of friendships among the members of the Church and declared that in neglecting to do this the Church Clubs would fail in their spiritual mission.

The annual conference which was held at Briarcliff Lodge, Briarcliff Manor, New York, from May 5-7, was well attended from the informal social gathering which opened activities until the closing annual dinner. Beginning with Holy Communion at St. Mary's at Scarborough, the first day of the conference was given over to business meetings, presidential address and discussion. What the work of the laity should be, was the subject for discussion.

E. Osborne Coates, of Philadelphia, spoke on the work in the parish; R. M. Everett, of Boston, discussed the work in the diocese, while work of the laity in the nation was covered by Dr. John W. Wood, Department of Missions, National Council of Churches. Cooperation among organizations of laymen was discussed by Floyd E. Waite, of Cleveland. The president's address was followed by addresses by representatives of lay organizations. Douglas Smith represented the Brotherhood of St. Andrew; Captain Arthur Casey the Church Army; Edmund R. Beckwith the lay reader; Robert B. Wolf represented Toc H and Samuel Thorne the Bishops' Crusade.

Following Holy Communion at All Saints' Church at Briarcliff the morning of the last day was given over to addresses by representatives of women's organizations. Mrs. Samuel Thorne spoke for the Woman's Auxiliary to the National Council, and Mrs. Arthur Sutcliffe for the National Church Club for Women. In the afternoon the delegates were taken on a motor trip up the Hudson River to Bear Mountain Park and the U. S. Military Academy.

New officers of the Federation elected at the annual conference were as follows: President, Colonel George W. Burleigh, of New York; vice-presidents, W. B. Patterson of Chicago, R. M. Everett of Boston and Floyd E. Waite of Cleveland; secretary and treasurer, Edward R. Hardy of New York; assistant secretary, Joseph E. Boyle.

Latest News From China.

A cable from Shanghai received May 13, advises that: Sister Constance Anna, Sister Ruth Magdalene, Sister Helen, Deaconess E. L. Ridgely and the Rev. Amos Goddard are leaving for San Francisco on May 13 on the President Lincoln, due in San Francisco June 7.

That Miss Sophia Igo sails on the Empress of Asia May 14, due in Vancouver May 29.

That Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Ely are leaving for Australia.

That Miss Lila S. Stroman is in Shanghai.

Bishop Roots, Mr. T. J. Hollander, Dr. Paul Wakefield and John Littell are still in Hankow.

The majority of our staff is still remaining in China, hopefully waiting for the opportunity to return to various stations. The outlook, however, is not favorable. In some quarters, radical activity is marked. Church, school buildings and residences are being occupied by the militia, and sometimes where the influence of the Southern Government extends, the Chinese clergy and workers have been driven out.

Here are two quotations from a recent personal letter:

"Changsha is in a terrible state. I understand our work there has gone all to pieces. Gary Fang had to flee last week. He left his family behind and turned up here. The well-to-do families are leaving at the rate of over two hundred a week; that is, those who are able to escape. Many are robbed and killed. The farmers' and laborers' Unions seem to have everything in hand. They have taken over the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A., the Union Theological School premises and many other foreign buildings. Yale is, I understand, also being confiscated and Dr. Keller's fine, large plant. If this is allowed to continue I fear many of the Chinese Christians will have to pass through a time of great trial and suffering.

"The Unions of various kinds are all powerful here in Hankow and there is no appeal. If you do not agree to their demands pickets are placed at your doors and no one is allowed in or out. If this is to continue it will soon be impossible for either missionaries or business men to carry on. Many business houses have already sealed up their premises with stock inside and left the port."

The Church In Haiti.

One of the reasons the Rt. Rev. H. R. Carson, Bishop of Haiti, desired an American priest to assist in the work in Haiti, was to hold services in English for the people of the American Church and the Church of England. During the past Lenten season this opportunity was given by the Church and was enthusiastically accepted by many. There were services each Wednesday and Friday at five P. M. During Holy Week the Holy Communion was at nine o'clock and special devotions at five. On Good Friday the Three Hour Service was conducted by Bishop Carson. Although this is the most trying part of the day in the tropics, there was a good attendance.

During Lent the first group of Americans was prepared for Confirmation. There were three boys, one girl, and a lieutenant of the Gendarmerie. The parents of these children are either in the navy or marines, or have positions with the Haitian Government. This step in the religious lives of these people will doubtless remain vivid all their lives, for the surroundings and atmosphere of this tropical country cannot easily be forgotten. In a land far from home environment, it takes thought and willingness, on the part of those confirmed, to accomplish this step which is so easily the privilege of those in the Church at home.

The Holy Eucharist was celebrated on Easter Sunday at nine and the chapel was crowded. In the afternoon the confirmation class received the Laying on of Hands and a large number of friends were present.

This chapel, the Church of the Ascension, is six miles from the centre of Port au Prince. It is surrounded by mango trees and waving palms, bordering a singing stream. As one rides along the road to this chapel, one sees the sapphire blue of the bay with the ever-changing mountains across the water. The chapel was built in 1926 from the proceeds during the first two years of the Industrial School for Girls conducted by Mrs. E. S. Royce, U. T. O. Worker.

From The Treasurer.

Looking Backward.

May 1, 1926.—We congratulated ourselves on the fact that twenty-seven dioceses had paid or overpaid their minimum amount due and also on the fact that the total received from the Fourth Province was more than one thousand over the minimum due.

Present.

May 1, 1927—We find that there are nineteen dioceses that have paid or overpaid their minimum amount due. We have received $78,661.11 less this year than we had to the same date a year ago. This is a fact. It cannot be changed now.

Looking Forward.

The summer is coming. We hope you enjoy it. But if you forget to "Pay As You Go" we know what will happen at headquarters. Heaven forbid! Besides we have destroyed all those "We Promise to Pay" bank notes that we had and we do not want to have more printed.

Charles A. Tompkins,
Assistant Treasurer.

The American Seamen's Friend Society.

In celebration of ninety-nine years of service to sailors in ports throughout the world, The American Seamen's Friend Society, Sunday, May 8, held their ninety-ninth anniversary service in the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, at the morning service. The Rev. Charles C. Albertson, D. D., pastor of the church, preached the sermon; the Rev. George Sidney Webster, D. D., secretary of the Society, reviewed its history.

In connection with the ninety-ninth annual report Dr. Webster said that in the Sailors' Home and Institute on the North River water front, 165,505 sailors had been in attendance, and that 75,323 rooms and beds had been rented. This, he said, reflects the great activity in shipping circles in the port and the need which sailors feel for such facilities as the Society affords. Other figures showed that 4,490 sailors had attended religious services at the North River Institute, and more than 7,000 had been in attendance at concerts. The extension work of the Society was carried on to the extent of more than 10,000 men being interviewed on ships, 6,872 packages of literature being distributed and two hundred and thirty-seven comfort bags being given out. The sailor is also a prodigious letter writer judging by the fact that 33,621 letters were written and received at the Institute.

The annual report also includes the resume of work done at Gloucester, Mass., Newport News, Va., Norfolk, Va., New Orleans, La., Galveston, Texas, Toronto, Canada, Rio de Janeiro and Buenos Aires, Brazil, Genoa, Leghorn and Naples, Italy and Nagasaki, Japan.

During the year loan libraries of the Society were placed on ships to the number of two hundred and twenty-one containing 9,504 volumes and being accessible to 16,000 seamen during their watch below. The whole number of new libraries that has been sent out by the Society since March, 1859, is 13,030 and re-shipments of these libraries bring the total to 29,299. The number of volumes in the libraries total 695,034.

The Rev. Charles Clingman Elected Bishop Coadjutor of Lexington.

The Rev. Charles Clingman, rector of the Church of the Advent, Birmingham, Ala., was elected Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Lexington (Ky.) at a special council of the diocese held in Trinity Church, Covington, last week.

Mr. Clingman, who was nominated by Dean Massie, of Lexington, was elected on the tenth ballot, when he defeated the Rev. James D. Gibson, rector of Trinity Church, Covington. The Rev. William Dern, of Ft. Thomas, Ky., withdrew from the election after the sixth ballot and the Rev. Henry D. Phillips, of Columbia, S. C., withdrew following the ninth ballot.

Mr. Clingman is a native of Covington, and his first charge was St. Paul's Church, Newport, Ky.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. H. St. Geo. Tucker, D. D., Coadjutor.

Crusade Mission in Ware and Abingdon Parishes.

In every way the Bishops' Crusade follow-up mission which was held in these parishes during the first two weeks of May has been a success. With large attendance and increasing interest the mission moved forward and carried the people with it, and resulted in a splendid response from both parishes, in renewed loyalty and re-dedication. The entire community took great interest in the services and hence the results too reach beyond the limits of the immediate congregations. The Ven. W. Roy Mason, Associate Archdeacon of the Blue Ridge, began the mission in Abingdon Church and at once caught the people with his earnest and stirring appeal. That note was sustained throughout the second week of the Crusade, which was held in Ware Church, by the Rev. Dudley Boogher, rector of St. George's Church, Fredericksburg.

Successful Crusade.

The Crusade held at St. Matthew's Church, St. Anne's Parish, Essex, conducted by the Rev. William H. Burkhardt, of Richmond, assisted by the rector, the Rev. R. U. Brooking, was a remarkable one in many ways. Such an attendance, continued through nearly a week, has never been surpassed within the memory of the oldest residents. All denominations attended, joined in the services and mission hymns, and added to the inspiring services and sermons; and except for the solemnity it approached the nature of a revival.

The success of the Crusade was due much to the earnest prayers and work of the rector months ahead; to the Laymen's Association, who had pledged themselves to attend every meeting and bring others; and last, but not least, to the earnest and forceful sermons of Dr. Burkhardt.

Rededication and reconsecration was attested to by the crowds who filled this country church and signed the cards.

B.

Lay Cornerstone For New Church.

The cornerstone of the new building for St. Stephen's Church, Westhampton, Richmond, the Rev. Giles B. Palmer, rector, was laid on Saturday afternoon, May 14. Bishop Brown presided and was assisted in the service by the rector of the church and a number of the clergy of Richmond. Tuckahoe Lodge No. 347, A. F. and A. M., with Mr. Paul L. Ruehrmund presiding, had charge of the Masonic ceremonies, and a brief address was made by Mr. Frank R. Watson, of Philadelphia, architect of the new church building.

Preaching Mission.

A successful preaching mission was held during the week of May 9 to 13 at Trinity Church, Fredericksburg, the Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, rector. The missioner was the Rev. Dennis Whittle of Luray, Va. On the final night a beautiful service of rededication was held and many cards pledging renewed Christian activity and life were handed in.

Diocesan Assembly of the Daughters of the King.

The Order of the Daughters of the King in the Diocese held their annual assembly on Tuesday, May 10, at St. Mark's Church, Richmond, beginning with a celebration of the Holy Communion. The Rev. William D. Smith, rector of St. Mark's Church, was the celebrant, and the sermon was delivered by the Rev. Giles B. Palmer, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Westhampton.

Every chapter in the diocese was represented, save one, and that one sent in an excellent report. The annual reports gave specific evidence of great and varied activities.

The meeting concluded with the election of officers for the ensuing year, which resulted as follows: Mrs. W. A. Powers, president; Mrs. Edith Clark Cowles, first vice-president; Mrs. Alice Fitz, second vice-president; Mrs. Cabell Trueman, secretary-treasurer. Mrs. Alice Ruffin is honorary vice-president.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor.

Convocation Meets and Changes Its Name.

The spring meeting of the convocation, formerly known as the Central Convocation, was held in Trinity Church, Brunswick County, May 10 and 11. The meeting was opened by the Rev. F. G. Ribble, D. D., who conducted a short devotional service. Following a business session, Morning Prayer was read by the Dean, the Rev. T. C. Page. At the close of Morning Prayer convocation reassembled and heard an essay by the Rev. T. C. Faulkner, of Chatham, on the subject, "The Real Meaning of the Word 'Called' as Used in St. Paul".

In the afternoon business session, the proposal was made to hold the convocation only one a year; but this proposal was defeated. A telegram of sympathy was sent to Bishop Tucker who was unable to be present on account of illness in his family. The Rev. Myron B. Marshall of Halifax was welcomed to the membership of the convocation. A welcome was extended to the former Secretary, the Rev. Herbert Nash Tucker of Suffolk, who was present.

A motion was made and carried to change the name of this convocation from "Central" to "South Side" Convocation, the idea being that since the division of the diocese this convocation is no longer central.

After considerable discussion, it was decided to memorialize the Executive Board that they recommend to Council to send The Diocesan Record to every family in the diocese without charge and to put the charge for this on the Church's program and to make its payments as obligatory as the payments to the Church Pension Fund. The Rev. Myron B. Marshall and the Rev. Wm. Moody were appointed a committee to prepare the Memorial.

A discussion of Rural Work was led by the Rev. Myron B. Marshall, who spoke on Community Service as a part of the work of the rural church. A paper on the Rural Church School by the Rev. E. R. Carter, D. D., was read. The Rev. T. C. Page read a paper on "The Church Service Adapted to Rural Conditions and Needs". Convocation decided to make room in the program of the fall meeting for a thorough discussion of rural work.

Tuesday night Evening Prayer was read by the rector, the Rev. William Moody, and the sermon preached by the Rev. Herbert N. Tucker, of Suffolk. The Rev. N. E. Wicker, Jr., presented a review of the book, "What to Preach", by the Rev. Henry Sloan Coffin.

Wednesday morning, the Bishop Coadjutor, the Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., preached and was celebrant at the Holy Communion, assisted by the Rev. T. C. Page and the Rev. Wm. R. Moody.

The Rev. Frederick Sapp read an able and carefully prepared essay on "The Church and Rural Work".

Bishop Thomson led a Quiet Hour for the clergy and congregation. Convocation was closed by the Dean, the Rev. T. C. Page.

N. E. T.

Old Mansion Now Parish House of Bruton Parish Church.

On Tuesday, May 10, the Old Wythe House, completely restored, was formally opened as the Parish House of Bruton Parish Church, Williamsburg.

Attending the services were representatives of the Colonial Dames of America and the Virginia Colonial Dames. Preceding the services held in Bruton Parish Church adjoining the Wythe home a reception of hundreds of visitors was held in the old home. Dr. W. A. R. Goodwin, rector of the church, presided at the services, and told the history of the home and its restoration. A prayer written by George Washington was read during the ceremonies. The principal address was made by Mr. Rosewell Page, of Richmond. Invaluable Colonial furniture has been lent for furnishing the house which will serve the purpose also of a museum. The property was acquired by the Church about a year ago from the Sherwell family of Norfolk, with the assistance of Chapter 3, Colonial Dames of America and other liberal contributions.

Now considered to parallel Monticello and Mount Vernon in beauty and historical significance the Wythe house has been restored from rack and ruin to its original appearance as nearly as possible at an approximate cost of $40,000. Without changing any of its dimensions a sun parlor has been added to the rear of the home for the use of Bruton Sunday School.

Its old walls of sixteen inches are still standing as they were in 1755, when the house was built by Richard Taliaferro, whose daughter was the wife of George Wythe. With the assistance rendered by the American wing of the Metropolitan Museum, walls, decorations, fixtures and the interior, have been restored to the original.

Pilgrimage to Old Brick Church.

On May 18 the annual pilgrimage was held at the Old Brick Church, Isle of Wight County, the Rev. William Brayshaw, rector. This is the oldest Protestant Church standing in America, being built in 1632. Morning Prayer and a celebration of Holy Communion were held at eleven o'clock.

An offering was taken to help preserve this beautiful old shrine. Its upkeep is dependent entirely upon members of other churches, as there are now no communicants of its own left to keep it from falling into decay. The ladies of Christ Church, Smithfield, served a luncheon on the grounds, free to the guests.

TENNESSEE.

Rt. Rev. Thos. F. Gailor, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J. M. Maxon, D. D., Coadjutor.

New Organ For St. Mary's Cathedral.

Announcement that St. Mary's Cathedral, Memphis, is to have a splendid new organ, the gift of Mrs. Blanche Steele Coate, was made recently by Dean Israel H. Noe.

The new organ will be built around the original unit which was given in 1903 by Mrs. Susan M. Benton in memory of her husband. This organ was used in the temporary Cathedral and later in the completed building until some two weeks ago when it was damaged when the Cathedral was struck by lightning.

This organ will be increased in size and rebuilt to suit the Cathedral erected as a living memorial to Bishop Thomas F. Gailor.

Mrs. Coate is a former member of St. Mary's choir and the new organ will be installed in loving memory of her friends and fellow choristers.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland D. D., Bishop.

Death of The Rev. J. J. Moore.

The Rev. J. J. Joyce Moore, rector-emeritus of St. Andrew's Collegiate Chapel, West Philadelphia, died May 11, of broncho-pneumonia. Funeral services were held in the chapel on Saturday afternoon.

Mr. Moore was born in Danville, Pa.,

but came to Philadelphia in early childhood. His most important work was done in the twenty-five years he was rector of the Church of the Covenant, Philadelphia, and the thirteen years he was rector of Old St. Andrew's on Eighth Street, until it was sold. He was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania, and the Philadelphia Divinity School, being ordained in 1879.

While in the class of '76 he specialized in track sports, winning several university champoinships. He became a life member of the University Athletic Association and never missed a meeting of that body.

The Church Training and Deaconess House.

Bishop Garland has announced the appointment of the Rev. E. M. Jefferys rector of Old St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia, as Warden of the Church Training and Deaconess House, to succeed to the vacancy created by the death last month of the Rev. J. DeWolf Perry, who, since the foundation of the Deaconess House more than thirty-one years ago, served as Warden. Dr. Jefferys' appointment as Warden does not change his many years' rectorship of historic St. Peter's Church. He still remains rector of St. Peter's. The Church Training and Deaconess House was founded by the late Bishop Whitaker. In addition to training women to serve as Deaconesses, it also trains them for foreign, domestic and city mission work, and for work in the field religious education and social service and to become parish workers. Its graduates are now serving in all parts of the world.

Mr. George W. Wilkins, Superintendent of the Galilee Mission, and Miss Florence Melvin were married in the Chapel of the Galilee Mission, Philadelphia, on Thursday, May 5. The Rev. Dr. M. E. Trotter, a friend of the bride's family, officiated. Mr. Wilkins has been the Superintendent of Galilee Mission for several years.

The Protestant Episcopal Sexton's Association of the Diocese of Pennsylvania held its twenty-third anniversary meeting May 10 at the Chapel of the Mediator, West Philadelphia, at which Bishop Garland made the principal address.

R. R. W.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

Memorials at Wytheville.

At a recent service in St. John's Church, Wytheville, the Rev. DeVall L. Gwathmey, rector, set apart with appropriate prayers two hymn boards given in loving memory of Mr. Volney Haller Gibboney by his sisters. Mr. Gibboney was Junior Warden of St. John's when he died one year ago on Palm Sunday.

Services Continuing at Waynesboro.

Since Easter, when the Rev. Theodore H. Evans resigned his rectorship of St. John's, Waynesboro, services have been held each Sunday by students of the Virginia Seminary; Messrs. J. J. Ambler, Jr., Lloyd W. Clark and William Christian. It is probable that arrangements will be made to continue regular services at St. John's until a new rector takes charge.

The Rev. Arthur Vaughan Colston sailed on April 30 for England, where he will visit members of his family for about three months. Mr. Colston is rector of Trinity Church at Buchanan, Grace Church, near Buchanan, and St. Mark's at Fincastle, all in Botetourt County in this diocese.

T. A. S.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor.

Presentation of Church School Easter Offering.

The annual presentation of the Easter offering of the Church Schools of the Diocese was held at the Lyric Theatre on Sunday afternoon, May 8, before a gathering of children and parents which filled the huge main floor and boxes, and overflowed into the gallery. The presentation was made as part of a pageant arranged by the Committee on Pageantry of the Diocese, the Rev. Roger A. Walke, Chairman, following a brief service conducted by the Rev. Benjamin Lovett, D. D., Chairman of the Church School Commission. Bishop Murray received the offering and blessed the workers as they knelt before him.

The offering this year was the largest in the history of the diocese, reaching $20,000, an increase of $2,300 over last year's presentation. The banner for the largest percentage of increase over the three years previous went to All Hallows, Davidsonville, with seven hundred and thirty-six per cent increase. Honorable mention in the order named to: Holy Cross, Trinity, Ten Hills and St. Mark's, Lattans. The banner for the largest offering was won by Grace and St. Peter's with $3,300.55; Messiah second, and St. Michael's and All Angels, and Memorial next.

The largest per capita amount was made by St. Paul's, $9.70; with honorable mention to Holy Apostles, Halethorpe; St. James, Westerport, and Emmanuel, Cumberland.

Church Normal School Graduation.

The Normal School for Church School Teachers has completed a most successful year under the able directorship of Miss Jane Millikin. During the year one hundred and fifty teachers have been enrolled from thirty-one Church Schools. The work was brought to a fitting conclusion with commencement exercises in St. Mary's Church, Hampden, the Rev. A. C. Powell, D. D., rector, on Sunday, May 8, when the sermon was preached by the Rev. Douglas Hooff. Twenty-seven teachers received certificates, one a departmental certificate.

Clericus.

The monthly meeting of the clericus was held in the new parish house of Grace and St. Peter's, the Rev. Almon Abbott, D. D., rector, on May 9. Addresses were delivered by Mrs. Charles Dankmeyer on "Anti-Vivisection", and Dr. John B. Oliver, Psychiatrist of the Courts of Baltimore, on "Fear". The former speaker met with courteous, but decided opposition; Dr. Oliver's address was most enthusiastically received. The material presented was in line with his remarkable address before the Church Congress in Richmond last year.

J. A. M.

ARKANSAS.

Rt. Rev. Jas. R. Winchester, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. W. Saphore, D. D., Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Demby, D. D., Suffragan.

Conditions in The Diocese.

The Diocese has been under a severe strain for mpre than a month. There seemed to be no limit to the amount of rain that could pour down. Rivers refused to recognize their banks. There are more big rivers running across Arkansas than in almost any other state. So when rain fell all over this part of the country at the same time, the rivers widened, until in some places they became one river.

Of course, in such cities and towns business is at a stand-still, the rural districts are deserted. People escaped from their homes, as best they could, and they were rescued from levees, treetops and house-tops.

Of course, the Church has suffered. How much is not yet known.

The convention was to have met April 27. Had it met then, only two ministers in the diocese could have been present. It has been postponed to meet on May 25. The Church in El Dorado will be host to the convention.

Mr. W. P. Witzell has recently taken charge of Christ Church, Little Rock. He is an able and a consecrated man. Fine results of his leadership will be noticed quite promptly.

The churches in Newport and in Helena are without rectors.

In St. John's, Camden, the Rev. Randolph R. Claiborne, rector, the three hours' service was held on Good Friday. Addresses were made on the words of the cross by the Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist ministers. The attendance has increased each year. And more from other communions remain throughout the service.

The Easter offering at St. John's was devoted to the Church's quota for missions. That and the Mite-Box offering amount to more than ever before.

R. R. C.

EAST CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop.

Unique Community Sunday School.

St. John's Sunday School, Pitt County, claims the distinction of being rather unique. It is rural, being situated some seven miles from the railroad; and for the past three years has averaged an attendance of over one hundred every Sunday. It seeks to serve the whole community, and is supported by men, women and children from various denominations, including the Methodist, the Disciples, the Free Will Baptist, and the Presbyterian.

The opening exercises of the school consist of the Apostles' Creed, the Lord's Prayer, selected prayers from the Book of Common Prayer, and popular religious hymns of the denominations represented. An international leaflet is used for class instruction. The superintendent is an Episcopalian; the adult Bible Class is taught by a member of the Methodist denomination; a large boys' class is instructed by a member of the Free Will Baptists; in short, it is a union school in the most real sense.

Once a month an offering is given for the orphans. At the end of the year these offerings are divided into four parts, one part being sent to each of the following orphanages; the Methodist Orphanage, Raleigh, N. C.; the Free Will Baptist Orphanage, Middlesex, N. C.; the Southern Christian Home (Disciples), Atlanta, Ga.; and the Thompson Orphanage (Episcopal), Charlotte, N. C.

Completest harmony reigns in the school; and the rector, officers and teachers strive constantly to increase its power and usefulness in the community.

News Items of Interest.

The beauty of the Easter service at St. Cyprian's Colored Church, New Bern, N. C., the Rev. R. I. Johnson, rector, is becoming known far and wide. Last Easter the church was nearly filled at 4:45 A. M. for the sunrise service, visitors being present from Wilmington, Wilson, Rocky Mount, Beaufort, and other points. Many motored through the night in order to be on time. The day-break cantata was preceded by the Negro spiritual, "Were You There When They Crucified My Lord"?

At the Virginia Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va., there is a Missionary Society composed of the entire student body. Every year the student body, assembled as the Missionary Society, elects, a preacher to deliver the annual missionary sermon at commencement. This year Bishop Darst, of East Carolina was chosen, and will deliver the sermon June 8.

The Rev. James E. W. Cook, of St. Paul's, Greenville, N. C., began a mission as part of the Bishops' Crusade, in Whiteville, N. C., Monday, April 18, but was forced to discontinue the following Wednesday on account of illness; and upon the advice of his physician cancelled sixty-one engagements scheduled in addition to his regular appointments.

G. F. C.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Florence Nightingale Memorial Service.

Nine hundred and fifty nurses in uniforms attended St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn, Sunday night, May 15. The occasion was the first Florence Nightingale Memorial Service under the auspices of the Nurses' Association of the Counties of Long Island, a subsidiary of the New York State Nurses' Association. Such a service in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in Manhattan on the corresponding Sunday the last two years brought together so large a congregation of nurses that it was deemed advisable to divide the territory, and hold a separate service in Brooklyn. The sermon was preached by the Bishop of this diocese, the Rt. Rev. Ernest M. Stires, D. D. The rector of St. Ann's, the Rev. Samuel M. Dorrance, officiated, and spoke appropriate words of greeting. Because of the numbers expected he had invited his own congregation to attend church elsewhere that night.

Delegations were present from twenty-four hospitals, representing both the Schools of Nursing and also the Alumnae Associations, and including city hospitals, Church hospitals of the Roman Catholic, the Methodist, the Norwegian Lutheran, and the Episcopal bodies, and Jewish hospitals. Though most of the hospitals represented were in Brooklyn, yet Jamaica, Flushing, Mineola and Long Island City were also present. Organizations of graduate nurses also represented were the Visiting Nurse Association, the Red Cross Nursing Service, the Maternity Center Association, the Industrial Nurses Club, and Jane Delano Post of the American Legion.

It is expected that this will become an annual service on the Sunday nearest to Miss Nightingale's birthday (May 12).

Hospital Campaign Initiated.

At a luncheon in the Hotel Bossert Friday, May 13, Bishop Stires disclosed to a hundred laymen of his diocese his plans and ambitions for a new St. John's Hospital. The Board of Managers of the Church Charity Foundation have determined to begin at once the construction of the first unit of this hospital. About half the cost of this first unit is in hand. But Bishop Stires wishes to raise not merely enough to pay for the first section, but to build the entire hospital without delay. He has accordingly inaugurated his appeal for one million dollars for this purpose. No contributions were asked at the luncheon, but it was plain that all present were desired to enlist themselves for the success of the great project. Bishop Stires declared that it was of the essence of Christianity that the Church should care for the sick. A church-hospital in any community ought to be the best, in every sense, that the community can boast. Such St. John's Hospital has been, when it was built in 1882; but now the building is obsolete, and it must be replaced with an entirely new hospital. Again, the endowments of the Church, Charity Foundation, which after seventy-five years' accumulation, have now reached the total of two and a half million of dollars, offer a practical guarantee of the permanence of the institution. Donors to the new building fund have every assurance that their gifts will be perpetuated in human service.

The Bishop is confident that the people of the Diocese will rally to his support on this project which he rates as the first in importance in the diocese at present.

Memorial to the Late Rev. John Williams.

In Calvary Church, Brooklyn, was dedicated Sunday morning, May 8, a new altar rail of brass and oak, erected in memory of the late rector of the parish, the Rev. John Williams. The rail is the gift of Mrs. Williams and her son, John Williams, Jr. Young Mr. Williams has lately applied to Bishop Stires to be received as a Candidate for Holy Orders.

Young People Present Religious Drama.

"The Fool of God," a religious drama of the life of St. Francis of Assisi, was presented by young people of the diocese, under the auspices of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education, in the opera house of the Brooklyn Academy of Music Monday evening, May 2. The play was written by two of our own young people, Miss Miriam Denness Cooper, parish worker of Grace Church and daughter of the Rev. J. W. D. Cooper of Geneseo, N. Y., and Parker Crossby Webb, a student of the General Seminary and son of a clergyman of this diocese. The coach was Miss Mildred W. Brown, who is well-known as a teacher of pageantry in the summer conferences in Hobart, Princeton, Ocean City and Wellesley. The authors played the leading role of Brother Francis and Sister Clare. More than fifty people took part as principals, troubadours, monks, villagers, etc. The stage settings, simple yet artistic and effective, were from the Howlett studios. The organ music was by Maurice Garabrant, organist of the Cathedral at Garden City, and the vocal music by the Class Club of Christ Church, Bay Ridge.

Bishop Stires spoke an effective foreword, appreciative of the efforts of his young people and extolling their motive and spirit.

C. H. W.

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

Pine Lake "Seminar".

Thirty clergymen of the Diocese of Michigan have just completed a week of intensive study under the direction of the Rev. Frederick C. Grant, D. D., professor of systematic theology at Berkeley Theological Seminary. The general subject, Science and Religion, was dealt with in eleven lectures which were in themselves searching and illuminating studies under such titles as "The Gospel and the Modern Mind", "Religion and Biology", "Theology and Modern Philosophy", "Immortality and Modern Thought". This "conference" might better be called a "seminar", and was the result of much planning on the part of Bishop Page, who has long been concerned with the question: "How shall the clergy keep up in their reading"? Accordingly, the spring calendar was cleared of the annual convention by setting this forward to February: in consultation with Dr. Grant carefully selected book-lists were sent out some months ahead. Thus much careful thought was given to the subject by the clergy before they assembled at the G. F. S. Holiday House at Pine Lake, a few miles from Detroit. The animated and general nature of the discussion following each lecture was good evidence of the fact a considerable body of the clergy of Michigan are alive to the problems of the day.

Dr. Grant's presence was made possible by the extension plan by which the Berkeley Seminary is making such a wonderful contribution to the intellectual needs of the working clergy. The Michigan clergy feel that the "Pine Lake Seminar" has met so vital a need in their lives that it must be made a regular part of the year's program, and they believe that through their Bishop they have been enabled to participate in the beginning of a great new movement of tremendous significance for the life and leadership of the American Church.

St. Paul's Church, Brighton, has been reopened after being closed for two years. It is one of many old churches of the diocese to be ropened after being closed for a shorter or longer period, under the vigorous activity of the Archdeacon of the Diocese. The policy in the reopening of many closed churches and missions has been to send in a woman worker to organize a Church School and social activities, later on following this up by assigning the parish or mission to the part-time care of a clergyman.

One thousand nurses from twenty-five hospitals and nursing associations attended the Florence Nightingale Memorial Service sponsored by the Guild of St. Barnabas for Nurses in St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, Sunday evening, May 8. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Edgar De Witt Jones, minister of the Central Christian Church, The service was conducted by the Very Rev. Herbert L. Johnson, Dean of the Cathedral.

Miss Dorothy Hughitt, formerly director of Social Service in the Diocese of Michigan, has been appointed a member of the Church's National Commission on Divorce, erected by the General Convention in 1925.

The annual convention of the Episcopal Young People's Association of the Diocese of Michigan was held at St. John's Church, Detroit, May 13, 14 and 15. Discussion of young people's problems was led by Mr. E. E. Piper, Diocesan Director of Religious Education.

The annual presentation service for the children's mite-boxes in the Diocese of Michigan was held at St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, Saturday, May 21. The offering was in the neighborhood of ten thousand dollars.

St. John's Church, Detroit, extended its hospitality to five thousand Detroit Eastern Orthodox Christians on the occasion of their celebration, according to the Julian Calendar, of Easter, which began at 11 P. M. April 23. Detroit has ten Eastern Orthodox congregations. Two of these have transferred from the Julian to Gregorian Calendar, and celebrate the movable feasts at the same time as the other Catholic churches.

Who is the oldest lay reader in the Episcopal Church? At St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, Mr. Robert W. Smylie has held his license for sixty-four years. A retired vice-president of the People's State Bank, he was, as a young man, the classmate in Oxford University of three young Irishmen who later became famous as Bishops of the Canadian Church—Carmichael, Sullivan and Du Moulin.

McE.

WESTERN NEBRASKA.

Rt. Rev. Geo. A. Beecher, D. D., Bishop.

The Convocation.

The annual convocation of the Missionary District of Western Nebraska was held at Christ Church, Sidney, the Rev. J. J. Crawford, rector, on April 19, 20 and 21. At a joint session of the convocation on April 20 Bishop Beacher read his annual address, which was based on the work of the Church in the District.

Missionary services were held each day at noon. Two addresses were given, the first by the Rev. H. P. J. Selinger, who spoke on "The Divine Right of Missionary Work" and the second speaker, the Rev. J. N. MacKenzie, told of the "Results of a Missionary Program".

The Rev. H. M. Peck, rector of the Church of Our Saviour, North Platt, preached the Convocation sermon and took as his subject, "Having an Objective".

Miss Elizabeth Beecher, Educational Secretary, gave an interesting account of her recent experiences in the Missionary District of Honolulu.

At the public service on the last evening of the Convocation, seven of the district clergy spoke briefly on the "Results of the Bishops' Crusade".

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

Good Friday Community Service.

For the seventh year, a special service, arranged by the Rev. William Porkess, D. D., rector of St. Stephen's Church, Wilkinsburg, was held on Good Friday by the Inter-Church Federation of Wilkinsburg, from twelve to three in St. Stephen's Church. Addresses on The Seven Last Words From The Cross were made by the Rev. W. T. Duncan, D. D., of the Emory Methodist Church; the Rev. James G. Clark, of Grace Evangelical Church, Wilkinsburg; the Rev. Thos. D. Edgar, D. D., of the Second United Presbyterian Church, Wilkinsburg; the Rev. Ralph W. Lloyd, of the Edgewood Presbyterian Church; the Rev. Oliver H. Sisson, of the First Baptist Church, Wilkinsburg; the Rev. Sheridan Watson Bell, D. D., of the South Avenue Methodist Church, Wilkinsburg, and the Rev. William Porkess, rector of St. Stephen's Church.

Dean Scarlett at Calvary Church.

The men of Calvary Church, Pittsburgh, held a dinner Friday evening, April 29, at the University Club, at which Dean Wm. J. Scarlett, of Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, Mo., was the guest of honor. The Bishop of the Diocese and over three hundred men assembled and heard an excellent and timely address by the Dean on "Russia of Today".

In addition to Dean Scarlett's address there were presented the marvelous new talking motion pictures, through the courtesy of the Bell Telephone Company of Pennsylvania.

D. L. P.

OKLAHOMA.

Rt. Rev. E. C. Seaman, D. D., Bishop in charge.

Trinity Church, Tulsa.

The Rev. John A. Gardner, minister-in-charge of St. Thomas' Church, Pawhuska, has accepted a call to be assistant at Trinity Church, Tulsa, the Rev. A. E. Saunders, rector. The other assistant is the Rev. J. J. H. Reedy.

Trinity, Tulsa, has recently inaugurated work among the Colored population of Tulsa and is looking for a Colored minister to organize a mission among them.

During the year and a half in which Mr. Gardner was in charge of Pawhuska, the debt has been paid, the church rebuilt and a lot secured for a rectory.

St. Philip's Church, Ardmore.

The Service League of St. Philip's Church, Ardmore, has given the large window in the front facade of the new church. The design is "The Angel of the Resurrection and the Three Marys, at the Tomb". Eight memorial windows have been given, including the rose window over the altar, given by the Guild in memory of the Rt. Rev. Francis Key Brooke, pioneer Bishop of Oklahoma; and a window in memory of John and Alice Carden, father and mother of the Rev. Joseph Carden, rector of the parish.

J. C.

BETHLEHEM.

Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Coadjutor.

Lenten Offering.

The schools went over the top in this jubilee year. On Saturday, May 7, in St. Stephen's Church, Wilkes-Barre, $12,096.92 was presented at the annual rally. If the schools whose reports are missing will give the same as they did in 1926, the total will be $12,570.24. The total for 1926 was $11,743.30.

The Department of Religious Education presents three banners at this time for the following achievements:

The highest per capita offering. This went to St. Peter's School, Hazleton, for the third time—the average being $8.04. One little girl earned $87.65 by selling doughnuts. The Rev. John H. Dickinson is the rector. The next highest was the Mediator, Allentown, whose per capita offering was $4.89. This school received the second banner, the Rev. R. N. Merriman, rector.

The third banner is awarded for the highest per cent of increase. This went to St. Michael's School, Birdsboro, their increase being three hundred and ninety-two per cent. The Rev. A. B. Vosler is the rector.

The services in connection with the annual presentation were well attended.

Bequests.

By the will of the late John V. R. Stehman, of Birdsboro, an estate that is believed will run over $300,000 is bequeathed to religious and charitable institutions. After making certain specific bequests to his widow and sister, the balance is to be given to certain institutions at the death of his wife. The Church Home for Children of the Diocese is to receive one-half of the estate in trust; the First Presbyterian Church of Reading one-tenth in trust; one-tenth for the Reading Hospital; one-tenth for St. Michael's Church, Birdsboro; one-tenth to the Y. M. C. A. and Community Memorial, Birdsboro, and to the Visiting Nurse Association, Birdsboro.

Mr. Stehman was not an Episcopalian, but for a number of years attended St. Michael's Church, Birdsboro.

The Bishop has received notice of another bequest for the Church Home of $30,000 and for Leonard Hall of $50,000. But the donor does not wish his name to be known at this time.

New Mission Opened.

On Sunday, May 8, 1927, St. Ann's Chapel was opened for regular service in Winton. This is a small mining town of about six hundred people. There never was any church here of any kind. The Rev. D. Pugh Griffiths, the rector of St. Paul's Church, Peckville and St. James', Jermyn, began to visit these people a few years ago. He soon gained their confidence and love, began to baptize their babies—more than eighty in the last three years, and had a number of them confirmed in St. Paul's.

Bishop Sterrett was present, made an

(Continued on Page 22.)

Family Department

May.

1. Scond Sunday after Easter, SS. Philip and James.
8. Third Sunday after Easter.
15. Fourth Sunday after Easter.
22. Fifth (Rogation) Sunday after Easter.
23, 24, 25, Rogation days.
26. Thursday, Ascension Day.
29. Sunday after Ascension Day.
31. Tuesday.

Collect for Fifth Sunday After Easter.

O Lord, from Whom all good things do come; Grant to us, Thy humble servants, that by Thy holy inspiration we may think those things that are good, and by Thy merciful guiding may perform the same; through our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

Collect for Ascension Day.

Grant, we beseech Thee, Almighty God, that like as we do believe Thy only Begotten Son our Lord Jesus Christ to have ascended into the heavens; so we may also in heart and mind thither ascend, and with Him continually dwell, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

The Song of the Lamb.

In the heaven of the heavens hath He gone;
Sittieth He now in the joy of the throne;
Weareth He now of the kingdom the crown;
Singeth He now the new song with His own.

Dwelleth the light of the glory with Him,
Light of a glory that cannot grow dim,
Light in its silence and beauty and calm,
Light in its gladness and brightness and balm.

Past are the darkness, the storm, and the war,
Come is the radiance that sparkled afar,
Breaketh the gleam of the day without end,
Riseth the sun that shall never descend.

Soundeth the heaven of the heavens with His name,
Ringeth the earth with His glory and fame,
Ocean and mountain, stream, forest, and flower,
Echo His praises and tell of His power.

Ever ascendeth the song and the joy,
Ever descendeth the love from on high,
Blessing and honor and glory and praise,
This is the theme of the hymns that we raise.

Life of all life, and true Light of all light,
Star of the dawning, unchangingly bright,
Sun of the Salem whose lamp is the Lamb,
Theme of the ever-new, ever-glad psalm!

Give we the glory and praise to the Lamb,
Take we the robe and the harp and the palm,
Sing we the song of the Lamb that was slain,
Dying in weakness, but rising to reign.

Blessing and honor and glory and power,
Wisdom and riches and strength evermore,
Give ye to Him who our battle hath won,
Whose are the kingdom, the crown, and the throne.

—Dr. Horatius Bonar.

Burning Hearts.

The New Testament is a story of burning hearts. When Jesus came into the world He overturned many old altars, and smothered their fires in the ashes of oblivion. But He made amends for it gloriously. He made holy altars of the hearts of men and women, and He has kindled an undying fire in countless human breasts.

The testimony of the nameless two who walked from Jerusalem to Emmaus is the testimony of an innumerable multitude. While He talked with them by the way, and opened to them the Scriptures their hearts burned within them. It has been so in the experience of millions. The words of the risen Christ have been making hearts burn from that resurrection day until now. Whenever and wherever Jesus walks with Men He kindles altar fires in their souls.

"Paul," says Dr. Lynn H. Hough in his recent book, "Evangelical Humanism", "Paul became literally the most vital man in the Roman Empire. He had a somewhat definite system of thought, for his mind was by nature and discipline orderly, but it was his vitality which triumphed as he traveled about the Mediterranean Sea. Men might have resisted his arguments. They could not resist, the light in his eye. They could not resist the joy which throbbed in his voice. They could not resist the triumph which gleamed in his face. They could not resist the dauntless courage of his activity. They could not resist the quenchless zeal of his personality. They could not resist the shining goodness of his character."

Note the figure that runs through that glowing paragraph. What was it that made the Apostle Paul the flaming herald of the new era? It was a burning heart. It was the fine fire that the risen Christ had kindled in the Apostle's soul. And it has been exactly so in the case of every other mighty Christian leader.

Why do Luther and Calvin and Knox stand out like pillars of fire against the dark and ugly background of the sixteenth century? Because they were men of burning hearts. They were not the only men or the first men who recognized the evils of the age. But Martin Luther, standing before duke and king and emperor and papal legate, defying death and torture for the sake of God's Truth, saying, "Here I stand, I can do no other. So help me God"! is the sixteenth century's most heroic exhibition of the burning heart.

Eighteenth century England was cold and cynical. The fires on evangelical altars were burning low. The souls of men were shivering in a cold and rationalistic atmosphere. The world was sorely in need of new spiritual leaders. God raised them up. The greatest of them was John Wesley. There came a great night when John Wesley was attending a Moravian meeting in Aldersgate Street, London. Now mark precisely what happened, for it is famous in the annuals of Christianity. While some one was reading a portion of Martin Luther's commentary on Paul's Epistle to the Romans—mark the names, and think of the burning hearts that those nations stand for—John Wesley says, "I felt my heart strangely warmed". That was the beginning of the mighty revival that brought the great Methodist Church into being, and kindled evangelistic fires in every other branch of the Church in Christendom.

"Did not our heart burn within us, while He talked with us by the way?" said the two who traveled to Emmaus. "I felt my heart strangely warmed," said John Wesley, and John Wesley's experience became his message. It was the mighty burden of his life-long ministry. He was a prophet of the burning heart. He emphasized the fact that salvation must come through spiritual experience. There must be the burning heart. Men are saved when Christ kindles on the altar of the soul fires of faith, and love, and holy aspiration.

Back of all effective Christian service today there must be burning hearts. Whatever other equipment the minister may bring or may not bring to his pulpit, he must bring there the burning heart. A Sunday-school teacher may bring to her class mental preparation and personal charm, but unless she brings also a heart that is really aflame with love and with a fine spiritual passion, she is not going to do the thing for which Sunday-school classes afford a glorious opportunity. The only thing that will kindle fire is fire. The only thing that will kindle faith is faith. The only thing that will kindle in a young life a passion for pure and righteous living and for heroic Christian service is the touch of another heart in which that fine fire is already burning.—Christian Observer.

Love the Liberator.

Love is the great liberator. The coming of love is the opening of the prison. If the men and women whose memory we most cherish had lived and labored with any other motive, then would they have been less than we now know them to be. They would not and could not have transformed, as they did, the disappointments and disillusions which sometimes appeared to be their only reward. Their large fine spirit is perfectly expressed in the words of the Apostle Paul: "I will very gladly spend and be spent for you, though the more abundantly I love you the less I be loved."

Could the whole spirit of Jesus be more fitly or more fully interpreted? And the fruit of that spirit? It is "the opening of the prison to them that are bound".

Love is the great liberator. It is as when the warm sunshine of spring speaks the word of release, and a new spirit breathes in the air and shines in the light; a tender green begins to clothe the brown clods, the orchard and woodland awake to wondrous loveliness, and there is music everywhere as when the morning stars sang together, and all the Sons of God shouted for joy.

"Now the Lord is that spirit: and where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty."

Browning is right!
Now would I face the world with my new life,
With my new crown.
How soon a smile of God, can change the world!
How we are made for happiness—how work
Grows play; adversity a winning fight!

The coming of Christ, which is the coming of love, is life's superb awakening. Everywhere prison doors fly open. Faith that was bound, hope that was bound—see them now. They range the open spaces free to all the light and the sweet air. A new gleam in the eyes, a new lilt in the heart, a new vigor in the stride. With every uplifting of the heart to Him fresh powers unfold, and the voice of the taskmaster is heard no more.

* * * * *

Here and there on the road of life we encounter a wayfarer who has known the truth, whom the truth has made free, and in him we have seen destroyed "the face of the covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all nations". He has given us a glimpse of a life, here and now, in which "death is swallowed up in victory, and the Lord God wipes away tears, and the rebuke of His people takes He away from off all the earth".

Should he speak to us, this wayfarer, of the liberating truth that is in Him, that makes His mere presence a shining surprise, what would he say? Would he not say in that day: "Lo, this is my God. I have waited for Him, and He is saving men: This is the Lord; I have waited for Him; I will be glad and rejoice in His salvation."

He has seen his life at last in the light of a love which is a ministering power and a plentiful peace, and because of him the dreariest road comes to be the way home.—Baptist Times.

A Strong Argument For Immortality.

Love tells us that there is no destruction in death—that the comradeship of the spirit is beyond the reach of interference. This experience of immortality, which it is possible for us all to have while we are still on earth, softens the loneliness of the physical separation that death brings. Death with a gentle touch comes to some who are weary with life, and whispers softly, "There, you are tired now. Rest awhile upon the Everlasting Arms". And the sick one answers, "Yes, I am tired now and will gladly rest, but I refuse to sleep forever. When I am refreshed I want to wake and to have another chance to work and laugh and love". By our continued experience of uninterrupted fellowship we whose spirits are in close comradeship with the spirit of Him whose pilgrimage on earth has ended, know that He has awakened and is living, is rested and active.

True, our physical ear no longer hears the accent of his voice. True, our lips no longer speak our message to Him. But we do not have to be forever talking to realize the presence of the loved ones of our heart. There is a comradeship of the spirit with no words spoken. As we sit together within the same room we often discover that words interrupt the depths of comradeship that silence gives. We are at our work, reading, writing, thinking, and our wife is at her work, reading, sewing, planning. No word passes between us, and yet we are conscious of one another's presence and the work that we are doing is the better done because of that silent comradeship of spirit.

It may even be that we are not in the same room and yet that mysterious comradeship of eternal spirits is the most definite experience in our consciousness. So, when the spirit of him whom we have loved has been released from the limitation of the flesh, we know that the comradeship of the spirit is in no way interrupted. Love has never and never will acknowledge that its fellowship will be destroyed. Here on earth we live in one of the smaller rooms, in God's great house; at death we pass into a larger and brighter room in the one house of the one Father. A wall within a house can never separate eternal spirits who are believers in God and in His creative love. The ceiling in God's House is high, indeed, and we on earth and they in heaven live together under it.

When the evidence is all in—the universal belief in immortality, the God-given yearning within every soul that comes to maturity, the intuitions of our own hearts, our experience of comradeship with loved ones passed from earth, the powers that we possess, powers too great for a short life to be lived only upon the earth, the desire of the soul at its best for perfect holiness, the promises of Him who would not tell a lie, we sing with Alfred Tennyson:

"Thou wilt not leave us in the dust;
Thou madest man, he knows not why;
He thinks he was not made to die,
And Thou hast made him; Thou are just."

—A. N. Hoath.

Vision.

Jesus crystallized the idea of Faith which is held in solution throughout the Bible, and rests on the assumption of two worlds. There is the physical world which lies round us on every side, and of which our bodies are a part. This is one environment, and the instrument of knowledge here is sight. There is the spiritual world which is hidden by the veil of the physical and of which our souls are a part. This is another environment, and the instrument of knowledge here is faith. There is an order in the education of humanity, and the first lesson is not faith but sight. The race, and each individual in his turn, begins with the experience of the physical; seeing visible objects, handling material possessions, hearing audible voices, looking at flesh-and-blood people. It is a new and hard lesson to realize the spiritual: to enter into the immaterial, inaudible, invisible, intangible life of the soul; to catch a voice that only calls within, to follow a mystical presence through a trackless wilderness, to wait for an inheritance that eye hath not seen, to store our treasure on the other side of the grave. This is to leave our kindred and our father's house, and to go into a land which God will show us. It is to emerge from the physical, it is to enter into the spiritual spheres. It is an immense advance; it is a tremendous risk. Any one who shifts the centre of his life from the world which is seen to the world which is unseen deserves to be called a believer. Abraham was the first man in history who dared to make this venture and cast himself on God. He discovered the new world of the soul, and is to this day the father of the faithful.—Ian Maclaren.

For the Southern Churchman.

Three Prayers for Every Day.

Pollie Westcott Branham.

Early, dear God, in the morning,
My thoughts with the sun arise,
Fresh as the day that is dawning,
Clear as the waking skies;
Teach me to live in beauty
Now that the day has begun;
Help me to make each duty
Radiant as the sun.

Noontide, dear God, in its glory,
Brief though the shadows be,
Can be but transitory,
So let me kneel to Thee;
Show me each fault in my being
Here is the sun's full light,
Make me to see, and seeing,
Help me each fault to right.

Now that the sun is descending
Thanks for the day arise,
Rapt as the glow that is lending
Effulgence to the skies;
Wipe out, dear God, with my sorrow
Each wrong that today I have done,
Strengthen my faith, that tomorrow
It may look up with the sun.

A Rabbi's View of Jesus.

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise said in New York not long ago: "Jesus was not a being come down from heaven, but one who attained to heavenly heights. He was not a God who walked on earth like a man but a human who walked with God on earth. He was not a God who lived humanly, but a man who lived divinely. He was not a being who died that others might live, but a man who so lived that men need not perish. Let it never be forgotten that He was ours (he was speaking to Jews) and we might have been His, as in truth and spirit we are His. To us He belongs—not His Church, but He—the man, the Jew, the prophet." This utterance, coming as it does after nearly two thousand years marked by Jewish negation of Jesus, has, as might be expected, deeply stirred both Christians and Jews. But the spirit in which Dr. Wise made this statement was not unfriendly but decidedly the opposite. There is certainly in the statement great encouragement. The distinguished rabbi has not reached the highlands of Christian faith but he is on the way. He sees "through a glass darkly", but the encouraging thing is that he is beginning to see. How nations would be "born in a day" if the great Jewish populations of the world should snddenly come to accept the Christian Christ as the Hebrew Messiah!—Presbyterian of the South.

All God's perfections are but manifestations of His love; the offers of the Gospel are the invitations of His love; the threatenings of the law are the warnings of His love; the afflictions He sends are the chastisements of His love; the incarnation of Jesus is the richest illustration of His love; and heaven is the seat and consummation of His love.—Dr. H. Macmillan.

I often think that what we do not know of God inspires us with that fear which is the beginning of wisdom, and what we do know of Him as revealed in Jesus Christ, inspires that love which can be so rich as to be all consuming.—Bishop Brent.

For the Young Folks

For the Southern Churchman.

As Jesus Taught.

Martha Shepard Lippincott.

Dear Father, Thou hast sent Thy Son,
To teach us what is right,
And may we all be following
His blessed, guiding light.
He taught us how that we should live,
Life's happiness, to find,
By following the Golden Rule.
And always being kind.

Then may we follow in His steps,
And do as Jesus would;
Then soon our souls will cease to wish
For aught but what is good.
We, the greatest happiness, will find
In helping other souls
And teaching all mankind to seek
Life's highest, noblest goals.

For the Southern Churchman.

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

The Ascension of Jesus.

M. L. G.

Jesus and His friends walked out from Jerusalem over the road they knew so well. They were talking together of the Kingdom, and He was showing them that He meant not to make Himself a King at Jerusalem, but that His Kingdom would be an everlasting Kingdom, reaching to the world's end. They were not to be courtiers but witnesses, and however strange it might seem to them, He would be with them always and everywhere.

But to be with them always He must leave them now. They rounded the slope of Olivet, where He had wept over Jerusalem, and drew near to Bethany. And there some green slope felt the last pressure of those wounded feet. He blessed them even as "He was parted from them", for He was not changed, and He had blessed them many times before.

Then a bright cloud, and angels! "Why stand ye here gazing up into Heaven? This same Jesus shall come again."

This was not death, not loss. He was to be more theirs than ever—not with them only, but in them; and not theirs only but the Saviour of all through the ages, until He so comes as they saw Him go, in glory.

Rover's Mission.

Our Barn Folk were particularly well cared for and had every reason to be perfectly happy and contented, but they did not realize how well off they were until one late October day, when Rover, the House Dog, in good old Dog Fashion, opened their eyes.

Now, the Hens started it all. At least, old Madam Hen, late in the afternoon of a very cold day, got all fussed up, and, running from Hen to Hen, started a commotion that was well-nigh a panic by the time Mr. Farmer and Rover came to do the evening chores.

"Of all the places in the world, this is the worst spot of all," spluttered Madam Hen, who was disgruntled because the cold wind ruffled up her feathers.

"Why so?" shrilled Miss Pert Pullet, impudently cocking one eye at Madam Hen.

"Why so? Why so? You little worm—keep still!" and Madam Hen scratched the dirt right up into Miss Pert's open beak. "Work, work, work—day in, day out—all the time—all for nothing. Laying eggs and having them taken away—every night. Cluck, cluck, cluck."

"Yes, and when Sunday morning comes, we know from experience that one of us will be missing. I wonder who will be the next." Old Timer stopped strutting long enough to add this much to the conversation.

"Why do you worry, Old Timer?" said Miss Pert Pullet. "Mr. Farmer will never take you. You are too old and tough." Miss Pert Pullet was really very much afraid of Old Timer, but she never missed an opportunity to tease the old rooster.

"Cock-a-doodle-do, any dude will do!" ignorantly piped Young Rooster.

"Talk about trouble! What's worst than bringing up children? I've brought up one brood this year and here is a second family to scratch for. No wonder I'm thin," and Mrs. Old Hen clucked and called to her family, for she had just found a nice, fat worm.

"I call that overwork, just plain overwork. One way or another, we're all overworked, overworked, overworked." Pretty Plymouth Rock Hen put in this—not that she really cared, but she always made it a practice to agree with everything the other Hens said.

Then the Hens, young and old, and the Roosters, too, took upon themselves a real chorus of complaint which could be heard for a great distance.

The Pigs heard; in fact they were awakened from their afternoon nap.

"Those Hens!" and White Pig lazily got to his feet. "No more sleep now."

"I am hungry and there's nothing to eat. Why can't they feed us five times a day, instead of three? I think we need that much, don't you, brother?" Black Pig was so lazy he didn't try to get up, but such a squealing as he and his brother, White Pig, set up!

The Cows, waiting to be milked, entered their complaint.

"You folks, Hens and Pigs, are right. What's the use, anyway? We give and give and give milk, and what do we get out of it?" Daisy lashed her tail and gave a loud "Moo, moo".

Her sister Cows agreed that no good came to them, and Buttercup, the old black bossy, claimed that their children were being robbed of their rightful heritage. And the Cows lashed their tails, clashed their horns against the sides of the stalls, and joined in the general uproar that was gradually spreading.

All this time the First Mail Horse had been trying to get in his word, but the Cows gave him no chance. Just as he was about to speak, "Ker-plunk, ker-plunk, ker-plunkity plunk", sounded Second Mail Horse's feet on the barn floor.

"What's all the row about?" he asked.

"Oh, we're all complaining because we have so much to do. These Cows and Hens and Pigs—inferior animals!—think they are being ill-treated, but who has to work any harder than we do?" answered First Mail Horse.

"Let them go out every other day and cover thirty miles of road, delivering the United States Mail to all the farmers from Sweden Corner to Tangle Ridge—they'd have some reason to holler then. I say, I'm hungry"! retorted Second Mail Horse, tossing his head and stamping his feet impatiently, after being tied in his stall by Mailman, who, not understanding Animal Talk, immediately left the barn.

By this time, the "Big Team" were through plowing in the field and the Farmer's Helper brought them to the barn. Now, the "Big Team" were together so much that they had formed the habit of talking in unison.

"Work," they said, "who knows anyting about work, except us? From early morning till late evening for the past two weeks we have been plowing the rockiest soil in this country. Goodness, you Folk have a cinch, not excepting you Mail Horses."

"Stamp, stamp," went the heavy feet and "Thump, thump," sounded their heads against the sides of their stalls.

Meantime, Mr. Farmer had arrived at the Barn with the milk-pails, and together with his Helper they began to card and brush the horses, and then pitched the straw and hay from the mows, bedded the horses and cows, and prepared the evening meal for the Barn Folk.

Rover, the House Dog, had been around the Barn for some time and had heard all the complaints as he was waiting for the men to come up from the field. The men did not understand Animal Talk and took no notice of the complaining sounds coming from every direction, but Rover did, and just as soon as he got into the Barn, he went about among the Barn Folk and began to reason with them.

"For shame, for shame!" he barked. "If you Barn Folk only knew how hard Mr. Farmer works and plans to give the best care and right food to all you Folk, no matter what your station, you wouldn't complain any more. You Hens, how can you fret? Even if Mr. Farmer does take your eggs from you every night, he only does it that he may get money to buy good grain."

Then, dashing past the Pig Pen, he called, "You gluttons, here's Mr. Farmer with your supper. What would you do without your three square meals a day, let alone getting five"?

Not waiting to hear the "Ooph, ooph", of the Pigs as they snoozled and bubbled in the trough into which Mr. Farmer poured the warm corn-meal mush, Rover ran into the stable and said to the Horses and Cows:

"Be quiet, Foolish Ones. Did Mr. Farmer ever abuse you? You have the kindest of treatment, not to mention pure drinking water, sweet hay and oats to eat, and clean straw beds to lie on at night. Why aren't you willing to give your services to Mr. Farmer in return for all these things?"

Then the Barn Folk began to be just a little ashamed, and if Mr. Farmer and his Helper could only have understood Animal Talk a little better than they did, they would have noticed that at the moment the "Big Team" gave the signal, there floated up from the Hen Yard, the Pig Pen, and the Stable a distinctly contented sound which told Rover that the Barn Folk really did appreciate food and shelter and proper care, after all.—Maude V. Ebbett, in Zion's Herald.

The Wires.

Whenever I go out to walk
With daddy, we just talk and talk.
I ask him questions, too, although
He often answers: "I don't know."

And so I asked the other day
About the wires along our way.
They stretched above us, high and tight,
From pole to pole, clear out of sight.

He told me that those wires were meant
To carry messages we sent
By telephone and telegraph
All 'round the world. I had to laugh.

I seemed to see them creeping past
Upon the wires, all going fast,
And some had legs and some had wings,
Those messages were funny things.

Now, when I'm left alone at night,
Tucked in my bed, without a light,
I think about those wires out there
And all the messages they bear.

I do not look for I might see
A message never meant for me;
But as I lie awake and hark
I hear them singing in the dark.
—Laura Lee Randall, in St. Nicholas.

For the Southern Churchman.

Anette and the Mountain.

Louis Tucker.

Once upon a time there was an ant who climbed a mountain. The ant was out hunting honey-cows in the green grass-forest, and climbed in the regular way of business and not in search of adventure. She was a very ordinary, every-day ant, exactly like ten thousand others in her city, and her name was Anette.

The mountain's name was Susannah, and she spent a great deal of time sitting in the grass looking at the sky because she toddled when she walked and sat down when she stood still. She and Anette were exactly the same age, which was twenty-two months; but Susannah knew that Anette was alive while Anette had not the slightest suspicion that Susannah was anything else than the mountain which she seemed.

Anette started up the foothills, which were black and shiny, like an outcrop of coal. After a long climb she reached a white district with a blue border to it, which was fuzzy and very hard to get over. Then she reached a fat and chubby expanse that was warm and wriggled, so she hurried over it to the vast snow-fields that stretched up and up almost to the mountain-top. She had just gotten a good foothold on the edge of the snowfield when there was an earthquake and the mountain rose up in the air. It moved forward unsteadily, crushing down the grass-forest and going as far in a minute as an ant could do in half a day and then it sat down, with a jar which nearly threw Anette off, and the snowfield billowed into new ridges and contours. Then there came a long, hard, slow climb up and up until Anette reached a blue expanse, nearly vertical, like blue glacier-ice; but when she crossed it, it was warm and silky and smooth. At the upper edge of the blue cliff the white snowfield began again, and Anette toiled up and up that for a long, long time. At last she came to another warm, soft, chubby formation, and she had not gone ten steps on it when the mountain had another earthquake and a piece of it flew up and almost hit her. So she hurried across as fast as she possibly could and reached the woods on the other side; and then the mountain began to make a curious noise. "Ma—," it said, "Ma-Ma, Ma-ma-ma." Anette thought it was a volcanic eruption or else a tempest among the mountain-peaks, and stood still and listened for a while. Then she tried to hide deeper in the forest, and the mountain immediately made more noise than ever. Then a larger mountain came swiftly, shaking the ground, and picked Anette's mountain up and fluffed the forest on top of it so that Anette fell out and landed on a tall grass stem, which broke her fall. And then both mountains went away.

Anette was lost in the grass and took two days to get home; and when she reached her city the queen sent for her at once to tell where she had been; for in Anette's city there is a curfew-law and everybody is expected to come home every night. Anette told exactly what had happened, no more and no less; because she was a very ordinary, working ant with no imagination. Then the queen and council went into executive session over her. They said that if she had told about one mountain, they would have given her the Noble prize for discovery, because other ants had seen mountains though they had never climbed one; but when it came to two mountains and one picking the other up, they could not endorse it. So they changed her name to Dr. Cook and put her in prison, because nobody ought to be so big a liar and go free. So poor Anette died in jail; but the next queen of the ant-city ordered a statue made to her in the City Hall as the ablest writer of fiction their race had ever produced. And so poor Anette was honored by mistake long after she was dead. As for Susannah, she never had the slightest idea of the harm she had done.

A Story of Two Arabs.

Lamartine, the French poet, tells the following:

There was a famous horse in the tribe of Nagdeh, and an Arab of another tribe wished to have it. He offered for it all his camels, but the owner would not sell it. One day he stained his face, clothed himself in rags and waited by the roadside where he knew the horse was to pass.

When he saw Naber approaching on his fine horse, he cried out in a weak voice, "I am a poor stranger; for three days I have been unable to move from this spot to seek for food; I am dying; help me, and heaven will reward you"!

The Bedouin kindly offered to take him upon his horse and carry him home; but the rogue replied, "I cannot rise; I have no strength left".

Naber, touched with his distress, dismounted and with great difficult set the seeming beggar on the horse's back.

No sooner did Daher feel himself in the saddle, than he set spurs to the horse and galloped off, calling out as he did so, "It is I, Daher! I have got the horse and am off with him"!

Naber called after him to stop and listen. Certain of not being pursued, he turned and halted.

"You have taken my horse. I wish you joy of it; but I do beg you never to tell any man how you obtained it."

"And why not?" said Daher.

"Because," said the noble Arab, "another man might be really ill, and men would fear to help him. You would be the cause of many refusing to perform an act of charity for fear of being duped as I have been."

Daher struck with shame at these words, was silent for a moment, then, springing from his horse, he returned it to its owner. Naher made him accompany him to his tent, where they spent a few days together, and became fast friends for life.—Selected.

A Golden Heart.

Melinda lived with her grandmother, who gathered herbs in the deep forest. All the playmates the girl had were squirrels and rabbits, but one day even they went away, and she was left alone. This is how it came about.

There was a small grassy open spot near their home with a little brook flowing through it. The whole year round it was gay with pretty flowers. The rabbits would come there and eat the tender plants and drink the clear, cool water. Melinda often brought them cabbage and lettuce from her grandmother's garden.

One day some careless boys left a bonfire, which burned the little glade over and scared the little wild creatures away. Melinda was very sad, for her grandmother told her that her little playmates would not come back until the ground was covered with flowers again.

So the girl went out and tried to find some, but they had all gone too far away. She sat down by the little brook and tears came to her eyes as she thought of her lost comrades. When the little brook found out what was troubling her it hurried away to ask the lovely flowers to come up and live.

When it invited the daisy to come, it said, "Oh, I couldn't do any good going up there and living all alone".

The clover also refused, saying that it had all it could do now, without going anywhere else. The dandelion replied that it was too far away from home.

The kind little brook tried to get them all, but they all refused. At last it asked the forget-me-not, a tiny plain blue flower. It answered the brook at once and said it would be glad to go. So the little plant traveled away with the brook until it came to the glade. There it grew faster and faster, by hundreds and thousands.

One day, when Melinda came sadly down to the glade, it was all covered with the tiniest blue flowers, looking like a bit of blue sky, dropped down from above. There was the rabbit, hopping around with her little ones, and the squirrel was sitting up and holding its paws for corn.

Now, Mother Nature saw the kind thing the forget-me-nots had done. "You truly have a golden heart, for you have done what you could," she said.

The next morning, when the sun shone on the forget-me-nots, every one had a golden heart.—Selected.

For the Southern Churchman.

Try Praising Jesus.

F. B. Stone.

When Jesus seems so far away,
Indifferent to your thought,
And you are tired and anxious, too,
And all your nerves o'erwrought,

Try praising Him and thanking Him,
And lift to Him your heart,
A sense of loving nearness then
Will Christ to you impart.

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

PIPE ORGANS.

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, INC., Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices. Particular attention given to designing organs for memorials.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 209 East Franklin Street. Richmond, Va.

CHURCH LINEN.

PURE IRISH LINEN at wholesale prices for Church Guilds, Rectors and others. Also Handkerchiefs. Samples on request.

MARY FAWCETT.
115 Franklin St., New York City.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS—CARDS.

CHURCH EMBROIDERIES, SILK AND LINEN. Imported religious cards for all occasions. G. L. Bender, 7421 Boyer St., Mt. Airy, Philadelphia, Pa.

OLD ENVELOPES.

WANTED—Old Envelopes from letters written between 1845 and 1874. Do not remove the stamps from the envelopes Highest prices paid. GEORGE HAKES, 290 Broadway, New York.

STAINED GLASS

JAMES POWELL & SONS (Whitefriars), Ltd., London, England—Stained Glass. Designs and estimates submitted on receipt of full particulars. Distributor ADRIAN A. BUCK, 665 Fifth Ave., New York City.

COUNTRY BOARD.

NEAR WARRENTON, VIRGINIA BOARD for two or three. All modern conveniences; tested cows; own fruit and vegetables, shade. Horse back riding privileges included. References given and required. (Address Mrs. G. M. Wells, Jr., Casanova, Va.

FOR RENT.

COMFORTABLE ROOM, VERY REASONABLE. Object to have some one in the house. If necessary will furnish breakfast reasonably. Address Miss T. C. Gordon, Main Street, Fredericksburg, Va.

BOARDING.

WANTED, IN COUNTRY HOME IN Northern Neck of Virginia, six or eight children to board; ages five to thirteen years. References given and required. Address Mrs. C. T. Peirce, "The Oaks", Nuttsville, Va.

CLERICAL.

WANTED, A PARISH FOR JULY AND AUGUST, by a clergyman and wife, Boston, New York or the West. A man past fifty but up-to-date, with a splendid message. Would serve as assistant in larger church greater length of time. Address "Valuable", care of Southern Churchman.

MEETING OF TRUSTEES.

THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia will meet at the Seminary on Wednesday the 8th day of June, 1927, at noon.

S. SCOLLAY MOORE,
May 5, 1927. Secretary.

FOR SALE.

FOR SALE, VERY CHEAP, BISHOP'S CHAIR, credence table, hymn board, prayer desk, and double stall, communion rail with brass bar and standards. Fine quality oak, perfect condition. Address Rev. D. C. Mayers, Middleburg, Va.

RIVERCREST FARM

An Ideal Place to Spend Your Vacation

Beautifully located on New River in Heart of Southwest Virginia. One and one-half miles from Railroad and Lee Highway. Fine for Fishing and Swimming. Always cool. Good food and beds. Rates reasonable. Apply

MRS. W. C. JENNINGS
Draper, Virginia

SITUATION WANTED.

POSITION WANTED BY WOMAN OF mature years in Deaconess orders; executive position in school or mission as teacher of Household Economics, nurse, housemother, chaperon, or household management. Excellent References. Address "Deaconess", 1002 W. 17th St., Anniston, Ala.

WANTED POSITION IN THE COUNTRY as mother's helper in the work of the home, by a widow with two year old child. References exchanged. Address Mrs. L. R. Smith, 911 Rivermont Ave., Lynchburg, Va.

WANTED, POSITION AS PARISH VISItor, mother's assistant, or companion, by an Episcopal Souther nlady. Address "A. L.", 1823 Pyratania Street, New Orleans, La.

HELP WANTED

WANTED, IN CHURCH SCHOOL FOR boys, trained nurse for session beginning September 15, 1927. Address X, Y. Z. care of Southern Churchman, giving age and references.

WANTED, A WOMAN WORKER FOR A Mountain Mission. State experience and give reference. Address "A. S. F.", care of Southern Churchman.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

(Continued from page 17.)

address and baptized a grandson of Colonel Waters, who was born in Winton and is now one of the principal citizens of Scranton. The Colonel made a short address, saying how glad he is that a boyhood wish at last is fulfilled—Winton has a church. Dean Holmes of Trinity, Carbondale, Miss Zattan Gordon, the Supervisor of Religious Education of the Diocese, and the Archdeacon each made short addresses.

H. P. W.

SPRINGFIELD.

Rt. Rev. John C. White, D. D., Bishop.

The Jubilee Celebration and The Synod.

The diocese celebrated its Golden Jubilee May 10, 11 and 12.

Under the auspices of the Church Club of the Diocese there was held at the St. Nicholas Hotel on Tuesday evening the largest dinner of men and women ever brought together in the history of the diocese. Two hundred and ninety-one were actually present. At the speakers' table were Bishop and Mrs. White; the President of the Church Club, Mr. Arch Bassett; and the toastmaster, Dr. Elmer E. Hagler. The principal speakers of the evening were the Rt. Rev. Charles E. Woodcock, D. D., Bishop of Kentucky; the Rev. John Henry Hopkins, D. D., rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Chicago; and Mrs. J. S. Morrison, President of the House of Church Women of the Diocese of Indianapolis. Other guests were the Bishop of Fond du Lac; the Bishop of Nebraska; the Bishop of Milwaukee; the Suffragan Bishop of Chicago; and the Rev. Edward Haughton, rector of St. Paul's Church, Springfield; the Rev. Jerry Wallace, rector of Christ Church, Springfield; Mr. Pascal E. Hatch, treasurer of the Church Club, and Mr. Franklin H. Spencer, secretary of the Church Club. Miss Grace H. Parker, Field Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, was also a guest at the dinner.

The attendance of men and women was representative, all but three or four missions in the diocese being represented. A reception preceded the dinner.

During Tuesday afternoon at St. Paul's Parish House was largely filled by women who had come to hear Miss Grace Parker tell of the work of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The fiftieth annual Synod opened officially with a Corporate Celebration of the Holy Communion in St. Paul's Church on Wednesday morning, at which Bishop White was the celebrant. Others assisting in the service were the Bishop of Fond du Lac; the Bishop of Nebraska, and the Bishop of Chicago. All of the clergy were present and St. Paul's Church almost filled with the delegates and visitors to the Synod and to the Woman's Auxiliary.

At the organization meeting Mr. Franklin H. Spencer, the Executive Secretary of the Diocese was elected Secretary of the Diocese. Mr. Spencer, appointed with the approval of the Synod, as the Assistant Secretary, the Rev. Henry F. Selcer, of St. George's Church, Belleville.

At the anniversary service, which was in charge of the Bishop of the Diocese, the sermon was preached by Bishop Woodcock.

Mr. Raymond M. Tingley, of St. Paul's, Alton, was elected by a concurrent vote of the clergy and laity as treasurer of the diocese. Elections to the Standing Committee were the Rev. J. G. Wright; the Rev. Edward Haughton; the Rev. Jerry Wallace and the Rev. R. H. Atchison; Mr. Dan G. Swannell, Mr. F. N. Morgan, Mr. H. M. Andre and Mr. Pascal E. Hatch. Delegates to the Provincial Synod elected were the Rev. Henry F. Selcer, the Rev. R. H. Atchison, the Rev. H. L. Miller, the Rev. S. A. Macdonnell, Mr. Dan G. Swannell, Mr. F. N. Morgan, Mr. Harry J. Elliot and Mr. Marcus Goldman.

An interesting missionary service was held in St. Paul's on Wednesday evening, at which strong and helpful messages were delivered by Bishop Shayler, of Nebraska, and by Archdeacon Weller and the Rev. George L. Whitmeyer, who is in charge of the work at Herrin.

The Woman's Auxiliary elected as President Mrs. John Chanler White.

East St. Louis was selected as the meeting place of the Synod next year.

F. H. S.

Personal Notes

PERSONAL NOTES.

The Rt. Rev. Theodore Payne Thurston's address is changed from 3420 Park Boulevard, to 3431 Park Boulevard, San Diego, Calif.

The Rev. Paul F. Williams, formerly minister-in-charge of the Church of the Resurrection, Starkville, Miss., has accepted a call to be assistant at St. George's Church, Schenectady, N. Y.

The address of the Rev. C. H. C. Sergel is changed from Livramento, to Caixa 763, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

The Rev. Henry W. Dowding, formerly of the Congregational Church, who is preparing for Holy Orders, is supplying temporarily at St. Bridge's, Berkley, Norfolk, Va.

Until further notice the address of the Rev. Lloyd Craighill is 20 Minghong Road, Shanghai, China.

The Very Rev. Theodore R. Ludlow, formerly Dean of Grace Cathedral, Topeka, Kansas, has accepted his appointment to be secretary of adult education under the National Council, effective June 1.

The address of the Rev. Herbert D. Cone is changed from Clinton, N. C., to 37 Charles Street, Berkeley Square, London W-1, England.

The Rev. George La Pla Smith, formerly curate of Trinity Church, New York City, has accepted the call to be assistant chaplain of the County and City Mission Society, Los Angeles.

The Rev. Henry F. Hine, rector of Christ Church, Stratford, Conn., will become rector of Trinity Church, Torrington, Conn., in July.

The Rev. F. Vernon Venables, formerly in charge of St. Andrew's Church, Port Angeles, Wash., has accepted the call to Christ Church, Anacortes, Wash.

After June 1, the address of the Very Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl will be Brace's Cove, Gloucester, Mass.

The address, after June 1, of the Rev. Edgar Van W. Edwards, will be Atmore, Ala.

ORDINATIONS.

On Saturday morning, April 23, 1927, in St. Luke's Church, Scranton, Pa., the following persons were ordained to the diaconate:

Mr. Paul Stevens Olver, a graduate of Hamilton College, and the General Theological Seminary.

Mr. George L. Grambs, a graduate of Lehigh University and of the General Theological Seminary.

Both these men are members of St. Luke's Church.

Mr. Gordon Tyron Jones is a graduate of Lehigh University and of the General Theological Seminary. Mr. Jones is from Edwardsville, Pa.

Messrs. Olver and Crambs were presented by the rector, the Rev. R. P. Kreitler; the Rev. James Thomas presented Mr. Jones.

Bishop Talbot, assisted by Bishop Sterrett, ordained the men. Bishop Sterrett celebrated the Holy Communion; the Rev. Percy Silver, D. D., read the Litany, and the Rev. John Talbot Ward, of Burlington, N. J., preached the sermon.

The Rev. Thomas S. Kell, a deacon serving St. Luke's, Anchorage, and St. Thomas', Lyndon, was recently ordained to the priesthood in Christ Church Cathedral by the Rt. Rev. Charles E. Woodcock, D. D., Bishop of Kentucky. His presenter was the Very Rev. Richard L. McCready, D. D., dean of the Cathedral. The Rev. Harry S. Musson, rector of the Church of the Advent, was the preacher, and the epistle and gospel were read by the Rev. Frank W. Hardy, senior canon, and the Rev. A. H. Austin, rector of Grace Church, respectively. Several of the clergy of the diocese assisted in the laying on of hands, and in the administration of the Holy Communion. Mr. Kell is an Englishman by birth, and came to the Diocese of Kentucky about a year and a half ago from the DuBose Memorial Training School.

On Palm Sunday, the Rt. Rev. John Chanler White, D. D., Bishop of Springfield, ordained to the diaconate Dr. Stanley L. Krebs, well known as a psychologist.

The candidate was presented by the Rev. Robert Hall Atchison, rector of St. Paul's Church, Alton, who also preached the sermon.

In St. Paul's Church, Burlington, Vt., the Rev. Christopher Quimby, deacon, was advanced to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. A. C. A. Hall, D. D., Bishop of Vermont, on March 15. He was presented by the rector, the Rev. George L. Richardson, D. D., the Bishop preaching the sermon.

The Rev. Paul Reese, Deacon-in-Charge of the Good Shepherd, Sapulpa, Okla., was ordained to the priesthood on the first Sunday after Easter, at Sapulpa, by the Rt. Rev. E. C. Seaman, assisted by the Ven. H. B. Smith, Archdeacon of Eastern Oklahoma. Bishop Seaman preached the sermon. Mr. Reese will continue his work at Sapulpa.

Next to the brightness of Easter Day no event has meant more to the many people and friends of All Souls' Church, Waterbury, Conn., than the ordination Saturday, April 30, of Conrad Herbert Gesner, son of the rector, the Rev. Anthon T. Gesner and nephew of the Rev. Dr. Richmond H. Gesner, rector of Trinity Church, Newtown, Conn.

There were several unusual features that added interest ot the service. The candidate for the Diaconate was presented by his father, the ordination sermon was preached by his uncle, and he was ordained by the Rt. Rev. Hugh L. Burleson, D. D., Bishop of South Dakota, who administered baptism to him in his infancy. Also the day was the anniversary of the departure from this life of the late Rev. A. Herbert Gesner, whose long and faithful ministry at St. Mary's Church, Scarboro-on-the-Hudson will be remembered by many. The Litany was read by the Rev. John F. Plumb, D. D.

After graduation in May from the General Theological Seminary, the newly ordained deacon expects to begin his ministry in South Dakota, of which Missionary District he had recently become a candidate.

Mr. H. Campbell Dixon was ordained deacon at the Church of St. Paul's-by-the-Lake, Chicago, Sunday, May 15, by the Rt. Rev. Sheldon Munson Griswold, Suffragan Bishop of Chicago.

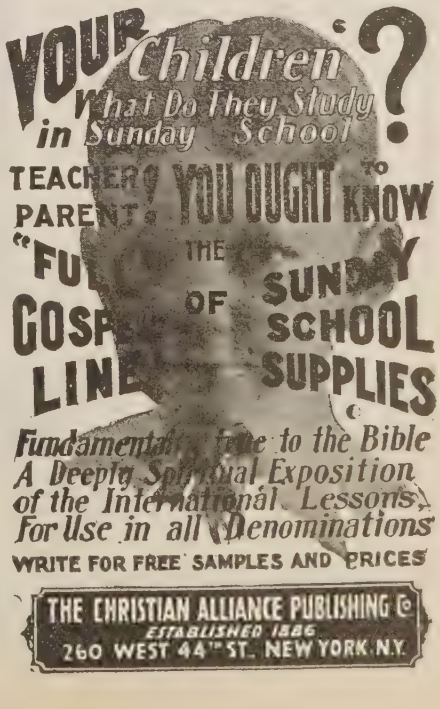
The Rev. Paul R. R. Reinhardt of Kankakee presented the candidate and the Rev. Edwin J. Randall, D. D., preached the sermon.

Mr. Dixon is a native of Edinburgh, Scotland, and a graduate of the University of Chicago and the Divinity School of the University of Chicago. He was a Field Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew for four years. During the last year he has been lay reader in charge of St. Ignatius', Antioch, St. Andrew's, Grayslake, and All Saints', Trevor, missions of the Diocese of Chicago. He will remain in charge of the missions after his ordination, with residence at Antioch, Ill.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Thomas Henry Montagu Villiers Appleby, D. D., non-parochial priest of the Diocese of Missouri and a former Archdeacon of Minnesota, North Dakota, and Duluth, and a resident of Tacoma, Washington, since 1913, died early Tuesday, May 3, at his home at the age of eighty-three years.

Dr. Appleby was born in London, England, in 1843, and was ordained deacon in 1865 and priest in 1866. He came to the United States and Canada in 1865 as the missionary for the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, spending the time until 1881 among the pioneers and Indians along the frontiers.



The Rev. Thatcher Raymond Kimball, rector for a number of years of the Church of the Epiphany in Dorchester, Mass., died suddenly on May 7.

Mr. Kimball was minister-in-charge of St. John the Evangelist's, Duxbury, rector of St. James' Church, West Somerville, and associate minister of St. Stephen's Church, Boston, before becoming rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Dorchester.

Cleansed.

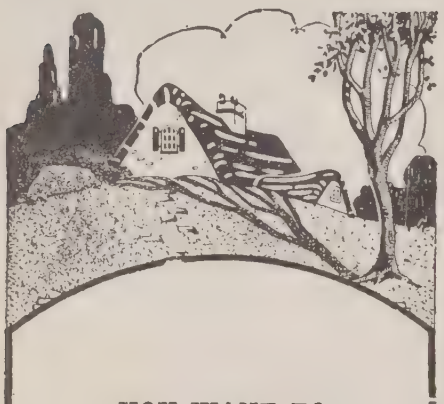
"Blessed are they that wash their robes, that they might have a right to the Tree of Life", has the clear ring of the New Testament music about it, and is in full accord with the whole type of doctrine that runs through this book. If men are clean, it is because they are cleansed. If we are clean, it is because we have been made so. The first beatitude that Jesus Christ spoke from the mountain was, "Blessed are the poor in spirit". The last beatitude that He speaks from heaven is, "Blessed are they that wash their robes". And the act commended in the last is but the outcome of the spirit extolled in the first. For they who are poor in spirit are such as know themselves to be sinful men; and those who know themselves to be sinful men are they who will cleanse their robes in the blood of Jesus Christ.—Alexander Maclaren.

Remember that the ground of our Lord's "compassion on the multitude" is that they are "as sheep having no shepherd"; and that a shepherd is one who "calleth his own sheep by name". Individualizing care lies at the heart of every true evangelist and speaks through his lips. Passion for souls, rather than love for humanity in general, is the motive and measure of ministry in the Name of the Good Shepherd.—Bishop Rhinelander.

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.

Richmond, Virginia

THE SAFE EXECUTOR



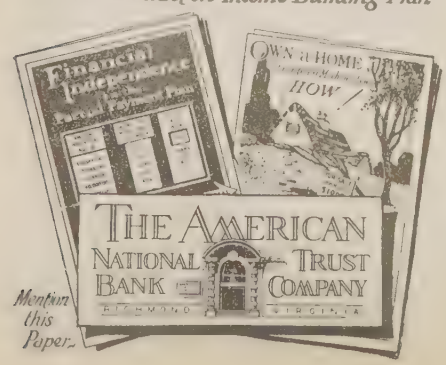
Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock $1,000,000.00
Surplus earned $1,500,000.00
Held in trust $30,000,000. (plus)

EARN $25 WEEKLY SPARE TIME
Writing for newspapers, magazines. Experience unnecessary. Details FREE. Press Syndicate, 1303 St. Louis, Mo.



YOU WANT TO

OWN A HOME

We will gladly send you a little dial by which you can tell how long it will take to raise the cash required or the purchase price, and a booklet explaining a new method by which you can begin to plan now.

It can also be used to get other worth while things.

Ask for Booklet on Income Building Plan

Mention this Paper

INCORPORATED 1832

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,398,462.62

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer
J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm . P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

A Complete Store of shops and --- more --- an Institution

Miller & Rhoads

"THE SHOPPING CENTER"

Richmond - Virginia

The Bell Book and Stationery Co.

ENGRAVED WEDDING ANNOUNCEMENTS
VISITING CARDS.
Fifth Street between Broad and Grace
RICHMOND, VA.

Let Cuticura Soap Keep Your Skin Fresh and Youthful

Sample Soap, Ointment, Talcum free. Address: Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. J, Malden, Mass.

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.,
308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.
QUALITY—SERVICE

SYDNOR & HUNDLEY'S STOCK REDUCTION SALE

Complete Suites and Hundreds of Occasional Prices at

25 Per Cent, 33 1-3 Per Cent and 50 Per Cent Reductions.

7th at Grace — Richmond, Va.

The South's Best Book Store

HUNTER & CO.

105 E. Broad Street
Richmond, Va.
Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen.
Prompt and Reliable Service.

A NATIONAL CHURCH PAPER FOR ALL THE FAMILY.

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS FRUSTRA NISI 1835

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., MAY 28, 1927. No. 22.

The Revelation of the Bible is Complete :: Its Doctrines Immutable :: Its Truth is Invincible :: And its Authority is Absolute :: :: ::

IF we have not learned that God's in man,
And man in God again,
That to love thy God is to love thy brother,
And to serve thy Lord is to serve each other—
Then Christ was born in vain!

If we have not learned that one man's life
In all men lives again;
That each man's battle, fought alone,
Is won or lost for every one—
Then Christ hath lived in vain!

If we have not learned that death's no break
In life's unceasing chain,
That the work in one life well begun
In others is finished, by others is done—
Then Christ hath died in vain!

If we have not learned of immortal life,
And a future free from pain,
The Kingdom of God in the heart of man,
And the living world on heaven's plan—
Then Christ arose in vain!

—Charlotte Perkins Gilman.

EDUCATIONAL

The Virginia Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded.
Established 1892.
For terms and information address
MISS M. GUNDRY.

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.

The eighty-eighth year of this School for Boys opened September 15, 1926. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.

A. R. Hoxton, B. A., Principal.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.

The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.

Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.

The Requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA.

prepares boys at cost for college and university. Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountians of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., Rector.

St. Hilda's Hall

Charles Town, W. Va.
Near Harper's Ferry.

Chevron School for Girls. Episcopal Junior College—four year' High School and two years' College Courses. Elective Music, Art. Business, Athletics. Limited numbers.

MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

The One Hundred and Fourth Session
Opened Wednesday, Sept. 15, 1926.

For catalogs and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria Va.

College of William and Mary

WILLIAMSBURG, VIRGINIA.

Winter and Summer Sessions.

Regular courses for Bachelor and Master Degrees. Special courses in Teacher Training, Pre-Medicine, Pre-Engineering, Home Economics, Jurisprudence, Business Administration, Physical Training, etc.

J. A. C. CHANDLER, President.
H L. BRIDGES, Registrar.
Catalog sent upon request.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY, Publishers,
112 North Fifth Street - Richmond, Va.

LANGBORNE M. WILLIAMS..President
REV. JAMES W. MORRIS, D. D...Editor
ALFRED B. WILLIAMS..Assistant Editor
MISS FENTON WILLIAMSON
News Editor
MISS SUSAN C. COOKE,
Circulation Dept.
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager

Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.

For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.

RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.

Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.

Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.

Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.

News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful.....	4
Editorials	5-6
Evolution and The Supernatural—The Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, D. D.	6
Preachers—Alfred B. Williams ...	8
Christianity and the Community..	9
Letters to the Editor	10
Diocesan Councils and Conventions	11
Church Intelligence	14
Family Department	18
Children's Department	20

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.

For catalogue and information apply to Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean, Petersburg, Va.

St. Stephen's College

An Undergraduate Church College for men.

There are four curricula—Classical, Literary, Scientific and Social Scientific.

For tution $250.00 a year; for a room furnished and heated $150.00 a year; for board in hall $250.00 a year; a total of $650.00.

Address: BERNARD IDDINGS BELL, President

Annandale-on-Hudson, N. Y. (Railway Station, Barrytown, N. Y.)

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.

FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesvile; St. Margaret's School, Tapphannock.

(For Catalogs, address Principals.)

LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.)

(About gifts or bequests, address the Dean, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR BOYS.
Richmond, Virginia.

Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 60 pupils.

RATE $700.00.

Reduction to sons of Clergymen, teachers and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.

REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., Headmaster.

St. Agnes' Episcopal School

Alexandria, Virginia.

Boarding and Day School for Girls on Braddock Heights overlooking the Potomac River.

On the interurban trolley and bus lines between Washington and Alexandria.

Athletics and open air life; sixteen-acre campus. Primary, Intermediate, General and College Preparatory Courses. Music.

For information apply to
THE PRINCIPAL.

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Affiliated with Harvard University.

For catalog address

The Dean.

HOBART COLLEGE, Geneva, N. Y

A Church College for men, founded 1822. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address

REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D., Pres.

CHATHAM EPISCOPAL INSTITUTE,
Box 13, Chatham, Virginia.

College preparatory school for girls. Certificate privileges. Also two years of advanced Academic work. Special courses, Music, Art, Expression, Home Economics. Modern equipment. 15 Acres campus. Pool, Golf. Terms moderate. 83rd session September 22, 1926.

Bishop of Diocese of Southern Virginia President of Board.

For catalogue address
MABEL ELEANOR STONE
Principal.

STUART HALL

STAUNTON, VA.

1843 1926

FORMERLY VIRGINIA FEMALE INSTITUTE

Oldest girls' school in Virginia—Episcopal. Location healthful and beautiful. General and college preparatory courses. Loyal alumnae find here for their daughters the familiar atmosphere of culture and refinement, combined with modern equipment and teaching methods. Supervised outdoor sports. For catalogue, address MRS. H. N. HILLS, A. B., Box P.

The Hannah More Academy

The Dioceasan School of Maryland, Founded 1832. A Country School for Girls—fifteen miles from Baltimore. College Preparatory and General Courses, Music, Art, Supervised Athletics.

Principal, LAURA FOWLER, A. B., Reistertown, Maryland.

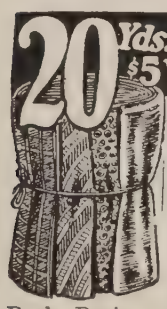
The Racine School of Religion

FROM JULY 12TH TO AUGUST 2D, 1927.

The following courses are offered:

CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE
The Holy Spirit, the Church and the Means of Grace. The Rev. M. Bowyer Stewart, D. D.

NEW TESTAMENT,
Church Literature of the First and Second Centuries. Professor A. Haire Forster.



CHURCH HISTORY
The Church Since the Reformation, with particular reference to the Anglican Communion. Professor Percy V. Norwood.

APOLOGETICS
A discussion of the present relations of Science and Religion. The Rev. D. A. McGregor.

MINOR COURSES
On the Background of the Gospel, Christian Morals, the Prayer Book and its Antecedents.

For further information apply to

MRS. GEORGE BILLER,
Taylor Hall, Racine, Wisconsin

ONLY $1.69

only $1.69 Plus Postage. Useful Gifts FREE. Where Cash Accompanies the Order. Sold on Money Back Basis. Only 100 orders at This Price.

NATIONAL IMPORT CO.,
4138, Insurance Bldg.,
Washington, D. C.

STUBBORN SORES

and inflammations quickly yield to

Resinol

Real Estate Loans

REASONABLE RATES AND TERMS

SOUTHERN BOND AND MORTGAGE COMPANY, INC.,

627 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.

Richmond Trust Company

3%

ON SAVINGS.
BANKING—TRUSTS—REAL ESTATE
Capital $1,000,000.00

Main at Seventh Richmond, Virginia.

Summer Tutorial School for Girls

Between the Ages of Fourteen and Twenty.

Capacity twelve. Individual tutoring. All forms of out-door recreation available. Large, cool house with every modern convenience. Two extra rooms for guests at reasonable summer rates.

Write for announcement and Richmond references.

Box 248—Buena Vista, Virginia.

Betty Buzz stars in screen comedy

FLIT spray clears your home of flies and mosquitoes. It also kills bed bugs, roaches, ants, and their eggs. Fatal to insects but harmless to mankind. Will not stain. Get Flit today.

For the Southern Churchman.

Spring's Message.

Ruth Lindsay.

The birdie's on the bough,
He chants his matins now,
The tree tops sway;
I arise in sheer delight,
To greet this welcome sight,
The dawn of day.

I wander forth this morn,
Like earth, I feel reborn,
I carol, too;
The dew-tipped flowers nod,
Arising fro mthe sod,
They'll speak to you.

I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand.—Jesus.

We shall never be freed from anxieties in this life; they are the stuff through which our characters are trained. It is the way in which we meet them and deal with them that determines our progress in the Christian life. We need not be pressed down by them, for when we have applied our powers of thought diligently we can commit our way unto the Lord and be confident that He will direct our paths. His Spirit will enlighten our judgment, and in the midst of perplexities and anxieties our hearts will be at peace.—The Healer.

SUMMER RESORTS

GRAY GABLES INN

119 South Washington Street
WINCHESTER, VA
Miss Caroline S. Hunter, Proprietress

EVERYTHING FOR THE CHURCH

J. & R. Lamb
23-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED · WOOD · METAL · ETC.

WOODY ART GLASS SHOP
Art Stained and Leaded Glass
Church Windows a Specialty
402 East Marshall St.
Richmond, Va.

R. GEISSLER, INC.
56 W. 8th STREET, NEW YORK, N.Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER
FABRICS + WINDOWS

XANTHINE
Hair Restorative
Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.
Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.
XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

BIG PROFITS
For Your Church Organization
The Handy Household Helper
Write for full information
METAL SPONGE SALES CORP.,
Dept. G, Lehigh Ave, & Mascher St.,
Philadelphia.

PARISH PAPERS
Any church, school or class can publish a parish paper by using our co-operative plan. A parish paper fills empty pews, keeps community informed, speeds up church work.
Free Samples and Particulars.
Our plan provides a paper for your church without cost to you.
The National Religious Press
Grand Rapids, Mich.

Church and Sunday School Furniture
THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY,
Hickery, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue.

Washington Cathedral
A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation
• • •
THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work, Missionary, Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.
Chartered under Act of Congress.
Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.
Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.
• • •
Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS
Largest stock in the South. We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival
The Couper Marble Works
(Established 79 years.)
204-206 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

"Palmer's book is a wonderful contribution to the subject," says Bishop Darst.
THE MINISTRY OF LAYMEN
A Plea for Lay Evangelism
By
LEON C. PALMER.
Over 2,000 copies sold before edition was off the press.
Postpaid: Single copies, 25c.; four for $1.00; nine for $2.00.
From
The BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW
202 S. Nineteenth St., Philadelphia.

True Economy
is practiced in wearing
BERRY CLOTHES
They are stylish—dependable—attractive; yet they cost no more.
COMPARE!
O. N. Berry Co.
ESTABLISHED 1879
GRACE at Sixth
Richmond, Va.

Church Furniture
Pews · Pulpits · Chancel Furniture
Sunday School Seating
American Seating Company
General Offices 1029 Lytton Bldg., CHICAGO.
Catalogues on Request.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

The tides of the Eternal are with us when we resolve to be true.

When people begin to lose their religion, they first become critical.

The cross is of all our problems the most baffling, or it is the solution of them all.—P. T. Forsyth.

We shall never fully know in this world what our souls have been saved from, in that all things we wanted did not come our way.—Rev. William Porkess.

An old garden is like an old life. Who plants from age to age writes a record of the years in leaf and blossom, and the spot becomes as sacred as old books and old friends.—Eliza C. Hall.

When overarched by gorgeous height
I wave my trivial self away;
When all I was to all men's sight
Shares the erasure of the day;
Then do I cast my cumbering load,
Then do I gain a sense of God.
—Selected.

Missions are the climax of unselfishness. Missionaries are the heroes of unselfishness. Those that give to missions are aiding in Christianity's great venture in self-giving. Missions take up the cross and carry it to the ends of the earth.—Ex.

Seek holiness rather than consolation. Not that consolation is to be despised or thought lightly of; but solid and permanent consolation is the result rather than the forerunner of holiness; therefore, he who seeks consolation as a distinct and independent object will miss it.—Selected.

When we take our burdens to God we can be delivered from them in a real way so that they are no longer ours; we may still feel them, yet we are not possessed or obsessed by them; they are in other Hands than ours; the crushing weight is gone; to acute mental stress there has succeeded calm.—Selected.

Difficulties make men of us. Summer sailors, yachting in smooth water, have neither the joy of conflict nor the vigor which it gives. Better the darkness, where we cannot see our way, and the wind in our faces, if the good of things is to be estimated by their powers to "strengthen us with strength in our soul!"—Alexander Maclaren.

How fond we are of thinking about what we have not, instead of thinking about what we have! It has been well said, "Some people's cast-off happiness, like their cast-off clothes, would make some other people very happy. The most cheerful lives are not those that have the most, but those that appreciate the most. Every one of us has a gold mine of unworked joy close at hand. But gold needs searching for.

"My final message to my friends:
Put first things first;
Make Christ central in your lives;
Live the life eternal in the life temporal."

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., MAY 28, 1927. No. 22.

ANNOUNCEMENT

At a recent meeting of the stockholders of the Southern Churchman Company the Rev. James W. Morris, of Virginia, recent missionary to Brazil, was elected editor-in-chief of the Southern Churchman, but owing to other engagements Dr. Morris will not be able to assume the duties of office for some months to come, hence I propose to publish on our first page a series of lectures delivered manyyears ago by Bishop McIlvaine, of Ohio, on the authenticity and credibility of the Bible, which contain most valuable and most interesting history. These lectures will be continued in serial articles in the coming consecutive issues of this paper.

LANGBOURNE M. WILLIAMS.

ARTICLE I.

Authenticity of the Bible.

All of these considerations are at least sufficient to impress us with the eminent importance of the most serious attention to the spirit and manner in which one proceeds in the study of the evidences of Christianity.

Let me urgently recommend docility in this pursuit. By this I mean nothing resembling credulity; but an open-hearted and humble-minded readiness to weigh evidence with simplicity of purpose in the most even scales of truth; and then to submit to and follow the truth wherever it may lead, with singleness of heart, in the fear of God.

Let me also recommend a deep seriousness of purpose in this pursuit. I mean that calm and settled earnestness of mind, which a just sense of the unspeakable importance of the subject and of the responsibility under which all, even the most indifferent, must treat it, will necessarily inspire.

Lastly, prayer is by all means to be employed in this pursuit. It is written most wisely, "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God". But do I forget that I am speaking from the chair of a lecture-room instead of the pulpit of a church? Prayer? How do I know but that I am addressing many who are already on the side of infidelity? Would I say to them, Study the evidences of Christianity with prayer? Is it not equivalent to begging the question? Is it not asking them to do what, as professors of infidelity, they object to? In one sense, I verily believe it is begging the question. A spirit of serious, earnest prayer for the knowledge of truth is utterly inconsistent with the spirit of infidelity. Who does not feel the singularity involved in the idea of seeing a thorough infidel engaged in secret, earnest prayer to be preserved from all bias in the search of truth, and to be led in the way in which God would have him go? And yet, if he be not an atheist, he can have nothing to say against the propriety of such a step. But is it true that infidelity and the spirit of prayer are practically so inconsistent? Is it true that we have already accomplished at least half our work of conviction, when we have persuaded an unbeliever to make religious truth a subject of serious supplication at the throne of grace? What does this say for the gospel?

The man who is desirous of being allowed to remain in unbelief will not seek a spirit of prayer. He would not like to ask God for what might break up all his present fancied security. But if any one feels that he lacks wisdom in this great concern of eternity and desires to know the way of light and life, "let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." Jas. 1:5.

Authenticity of the New Testament.

Our last lecture was only introductory to the important subject to which I have undertaken to lead your attention. In the present we enter directly upon one of its principal branches.

The study of the evidences of Christianity may be either brief or extended, according to the object with which it is pursued. If it be merely the possession of some one distinct and conclusive train of reasoning, perfect in itself, the investigation may soon be ended. The student may take any single miracle or fulfilled prophecy; he may choose his premises from the narrative of the resurrection of Christ, or the conversion of St. Paul, or the propagation of Christianity, and confining his argument to the point selected, may deduce a finished proof of the divine authority of the gospel. But if he desire not only rational satisfaction for his own mind, but a full view of all those great highways of evidence which, from every quarter, concentrate on Christianity—if he would behold not only that it is capable of conclusive proof, but how variously and wonderfully its divine Author has encompassed it with proofs of every kind, drawn from innumerable sources, and prepared at all points for every objection, he may lay himself out for a work of extensive research, as well as of rich gratification and improvement.

The evidences of Christianity are classed under two general denominations, external or historical, and internal evidence. Under the latter are included whatever proofs of the divine original may be drawn from the doctrines of the gospel; its incomparable system of morality; the adaption of the religion of Christ to the condition and wants of mankind; the holy and elevated character of its Founder; together with all those incidental but striking and various marks of uprightness, accuracy and benevolence, which appear in the spirit and manner of the New Testament writers, or which are seen by a comparison of their several books one with another. Such are the principal heads of internal evidence. Under the name of external or historical evidence we find whatever exhibits the need of a revelation, as apparent in the state of opinion and practice among the most enlightened nations at the commencement of the gospel; the argument establishing the authenticity of the Scriptures, and the credibility of the history contained therein; the proofs arising from miracles; from fulfilled prophecy, from the propagation of Christianity, and from the social and personal benefits which have always accompanied its promotion, according to the degree in which its native character and influence have had room to appear. Such are the principal heads of external evidence.

The present course of lectures, for want of time to carry it further, will be confined to the last described; which is chosen in preference to the others, not because it is more important or conclusive, but as more capable of having justice done it in a series of discussions such as that to which the circumstances of these lectures restrict us.

Should we embrace in our view of this grand division of evidence whatever belongs to it, your attention would first be called to the indispensable necessity of a divine revelation, as the history of the ancient world displays it, and as it is still exhibited in the dark places of the earth. This, however, we have not room to include in our course. Though extremely impressive and worthy of investigation, it is not an essential argument. The straightforward method of philosophical inquiry directs its attention to the testimony simply that an event did occur, and will not suspend assent till the need of such an event shall have been fully explained. If convincing evidence be adduced to the matter of fact that a revelation has been given, we may be reasonably content, while our limits forbid the proof that it was needed. Whoever may desire to read on this head will find it well discussed in the first volume of lectures on the Evidences, etc., by the Rev. Daniel Wilson, afterwards Bishop of Calcutta; or in the admirable letters on the same subject, by Olinthus Gregory, LL. D., Professor of Mathematics at the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, one of the most scientific and pious laymen of the age; or more at large in the learned volume of Leland, on The Advantages and Necessity of a Divine Revelation.

Let us begin with the AUTHENTICITY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. We possess a venerable volume under this title, consisting of twenty-seven independent books and writings, reputed to have been composed by eight different authors. It professes to contain, and is continually appealed to as containing, not only an accurate account of the history and doctrine of Jesus Christ, but an account written in the first age of Christianity by its earliest disciples and advocates, who were contemporaneous with its author, and were most of them eye-witnesses of the events related. Now, before we can be reasonably warranted in placing implicit reliance in the New Testament, as the book of the facts and doctrines of the gospel, two important questions must be determined. First, is there satisfactory evidence that the several writings of which it is composed were written by the men to whom they are ascribed? This involves the Authenticity of the New Testament. Secondly, is the New Testament deserving of the implicit reliance as to matters of historical detail, so that we may receive any narrative as unquestionably true, because contained therein? This refers to the Credibility of the New Testament.

Thus you perceive that whether a volume be authentic and whether credible are two widely separated questions, neither necessarily implying the other, however the evidence of one may bear upon the proof of the other. Writings may be authentic, composed by the men whose names they bear, and yet not credible. They may be credible, because correct in their statements, and yet not authentic. The question of authenticity refers to the author, that of credibility to the narrative. "The Pilgrim's Progress" is authentic, because it was actually composed by John Bunyan, to whom it is ascribed; though, being an allegory throughout, it is credible only as to the truthfulness of its spiritual meaning. The book entitled "Travels of Anacharsis the Younger" is credible so far as it exhibits a view of the antiquities, manners, customs, religious ceremonies, etc., of ancient Greece; but it is not authentic, having been written in the eighteenth century by Bartholemy, and fictitiously ascribed to the Scythian philosopher. "Marshall's Life of Washington" is both authentic and credible, being true history, and worthily honored with the name of that eminent and excellent man from whose pen it professes to have come. That the New Testament is also authentic and credible we undertake to show. We exclude the more ancient portion of the sacred volume, not because of any deficiency in its evidence, but for the sake of unity and clearness in our inquiries; and because, when the argument for the New Testament is set forth in conclusive form, the authenticity and credibility of the other is rendered, as will hereafter appear, a necessary inference. The two questions will be the subjects of different lectures. To that of authenticity our attention will this evening be confined. Let us begin with the following:

How does it appear that the several writings composing the volume of the New Testament were written by the men to whom they are ascribed, the original disciples of Christ, and are consequently authentic?

We pursue precisely the same method in determining the authorship of the New Testament, as in ascertaining that of any other book of a past age. For example, we possess a celebrated poem entitled Paradise Lost. It bears the name of Milton. How do we know that Milton composed it? The answer is easy. Our fathers received it as his production from their fathers, and they from theirs. By such steps we ascend to the very year in which the book was first published, and find it invariably ascribed to Milton. Moreover, the history of the age in which he lived speaks of it as unquestionably and notoriously his work. Writers of every succeeding age refer to it and quote it, as well known to be his. The language of the poem bears the characteristic marks of Milton's times. Its spirit, genius and style display the distinctive features of Milton's mind and character. And finally, though Milton had many enemies, and lived in a time of great divisions, and this poem redounded greatly to his praise, and many must have been disposed, had they been able to discover some false pretensions to his claim to its authorship, no other person in that age was ever mentioned as disputing his title; but all united in acknowledging him the writer of Paradise Lost. On this evidence, although the poem professes to have been written as far back as the year 1674, we are so perfectly certain of its authenticity that the man who should dispute it would justly be suspected of idiocy or mental derangement. And had Milton lived in the seventh instead of the seventeenth century, a similar body of evidence would have been equally satisfactory. If, instead of the seventh century, he had lived in the first of the Christian era, similar evidence, reaching up to his time, would still prove beyond a question that he wrote Paradise Lost. Thus it is evident that time has no effect to impair the force of such a proof. Whether a book be ascribed to the Christian era or to five centuries before or after, the evidence being the same, it is equally satisfactory. It as well convinces us that the history ascribed to Herodotus, in the fifth century before Christ, was written by that historian, as that the Aeneid was written by Virgil a little before the birth of Christ, or the "Faerie Queene", by Spenser, in the fifteen hundred and ninetieth year after that event. We are no less satisfied of the authenticity of the orations of Demosthenes than that of Newton's Principia, though between the dates of their publication there is an interval of more than two thousand years. So little does the age of a book affect the evidence required to establish its authenticity.

(To be Continued.)

EVOLUTION AND THE SUPERNATURAL

By the Reverend W. H. Griffith Thomas, D. D.

II.

VI. Evolution and the Origin of Life.

The fundamental principle of modern evolutionary theories is that all living things from the lowest up to man originated from one very simple form of life by purely natural laws. But this obviously assumes what is called "spontaneous generation" or the fact of life coming from that which is non-living in a purely natural way. Yet it is well known that science has never proved, but on the contrary has frankly admitted the impossibility of proving, this theory. Indeed, it may be said to be an axiom of science that life can only come from life, and as to how life originated Huxley allows that "we know absolutely nothing". Virchow has said: "The attempt to find the transition from animal to man has ended in total failure." Darwin admitted that the origin of life constituted an unsolved problem, and he accepted a view that life was "originally breathed by the Creator into the first forms or into one". But if, as it has been often pointed out, it was necessary for the Creator to give life at the outset, why may it not have been necessary for the same divine power to interpose at other and subsequent stages?

The same result is seen from a consideration of the various species of life. If life originated by evolution it would be essential to have proof of the way in which the development proceeded until at length mankind was reached. We know that life is expressed in different species. Species has been defined as "a constant succession of individuals; and capable of reproducing each other" (so Buffon and Cuvier). If, therefore, life sprang from one original cell, there should have been at least some proof of the progress from one species to another, but in spite of all the scientific research and discussion, there is no proof of anything like a change or transmutation of species. Species today are practically what they have been for ages; there is no trace of one ever crossing over to another. Dr. Etheridge, the Superintendent of the Department of Natural History in the British Museum, has declared: "In all this great museum there is not a particle of evidence of transmutation of species." And scientists, including Darwin himself, are compelled to admit that no instance of a new species has ever been found. These are the words of Darwin:

"When we descend to details we cannot prove that a single species has changed."

In the face of this it is not surprising that Etheridge should say that nearly all the writing of evolutionists is "not founded on observation and is wholly unsupported by fact". Indeed, he goes further and says that "they adopt

The article, "EVOLUTION AND THE SUPERNATURAL", by the Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, D. D., is copyrighted, and is being published by permission of The Sunday-School Times, Philadelphia. The article in pamphlet form may be had for 25 cents per copy, or $2.50 per dozen, from The Sunday-School Times Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

a theory and then strain their facts to support it". In view of these contentions, Christian thinkers are amply justified in asserting that no facts in the realm of natural science give as yet any support to the theory of evolution in regard to the origin of life.

VII. Evolution in Relation to Man.

The question of man is of supreme importance in this connection. The Bible plainly teaches that God created man, that man was a special creation, and was in no sense the result of evolutionary development. Strict evolutionists maintain that man ascended from lower animals, and they adduce certain features of man's body, and also the mental and moral state of the savage, to prove this contention. But although this doctrine of the descent of man is held by many, it is still only a hypothesis and not an established fact. Naturalists who pay attention to facts alone never identify these with assumptions. Not only did Virchow and Dana oppose the doctrine many years ago, but as recently as 1900 Reinke said: "We must confess unreservedly that there is not at our disposal a single unexceptionable proof of its correctness." Two years later, in still stronger language, he affirmed that science knows nothing of the origin of man. (Bavinck, Philosophy of Revelation, p. 148.) It is also significant that "at the International Congress of Zoologists at Berlin, in 1901, Branco bore witness that palaeontology knows no ancestors of man, but that man suddenly and immediately appears before us in the diluvial age as a perfect homo sapiens". (Bavinck, p. 148.) But even supposing it were true of the body (for which there is no real evidence), there is still the conscious, thinking mind to be faced, for man is not man unless the entire personality is included. He is not a machine, and his life is more than physics and chemistry. Anthropology bears witness to man's complex nature, implying a complex origin. Physiology is inadequate to account for him; psychology must be predicated as well. The memory is a proof that both physical and mental elements are required. The brain is at once physical and the seat of the faculty of recollection, so that when the brain is injured memory suffers; yet no one can explain how the physical matter of the brain is connected with the non-physical element of memory. The mental and physical gap between animals and man is as wide today as ever and scientists acknowledge that "what intervenes between the highest anthropoid brain of 500 cubic centimeters and that of the lowest man, 1,150 cubic centimeters, is almost as lost as a sunken Atlantis." (Bavinck, p. 149.)

It is also untrue to identify primitive man with the savage of today, for anthropology, to say nothing of the Bible, gives proof that the savage is the result of degeneration. Sir William Ramsay has described Rom. 1:21-32 as "Paul's Philosophy of History". If it be asserted that man has been derived from the lower animals, it may fairly be asked which of these is the ancestor of man, because there is not only one, but a number of links missing between the highest animal and the lowest type of man. Even assuming that man is the product of theistic evolution, it is not too much to say that such a method as derivation from lower animals would be unworthy of a God who intended man to exhibit morality and also to hold fellowship with Himself.

"If He created man with the purpose to bring him into communion with Himself, we cannot easily believe that when the human race appeared on earth it was in the lowest stage of humanity from which it could not emerge until many centuries had passed." (Andrews.)

It is surely unthinkable that a perfect Divine Being would create man so low in the scale of being that it would be uncounted generations before he could come to any adequate knowledge of his Creator. And so it may be said without question that evolution cannot account for the facts of mind, of language, of conscience and of personality. It is also curious that quite recently certain scientific authorities have come to the conclusion that man is not descended from the ape, but the ape from the man. This is an astonishing change, because in all the leading works on evolution the chief arguments adduced in favor of the animal origin of mankind are those drawn from alleged similarities between man and the ape world. There is the argument from comparative anatomy, the argument from palaeontology, and the argument from geological strata; and yet the new theory destroys the value of practically all the evidence hitherto depended upon by biologists to prove the animal origin of man. What is in some respects still more important, the President of the Section of Zoology, at the meeting of the British Association some years ago, Professor D'Arcy Thompson, said:

"The whole meaning, bearing and philosophy of evolution has been discussed by Bergson, on a plane to which neither Darwin nor Spencer ever attained; and the hypothesis of a vital principle, or vital element, that had lain in the background for near a hundred years, has come into men's mouths as a very real and urgent question, the greatest question for the biologist of all." And again: "The problems of consciousness and intelligence and the mystery of the reasoning soul—these things are not for the biologist at all, but constitute the psychologist's scientific domain."

And so, after careful consideration of all the arguments adduced by science, it is necessary to say quite plainly that, if the Bible is true, evolution cannot be true; man is represented in Scripture as God's special creation, and nothing which can be derived from science gives the slightest reason to reject the plain meaning of the familiar words, "God made man in His own image; in the image of God created He him".

VII. Evolution and Religion.

St. Augustine's oft-quoted words are: "Thou hast made us for Thyself." This means that "man is a religious animal". What then is the relation of religion to evolution and of evolution to religion? It has been pointed out that probably there is no proposition on which the higher religious philosophy of the past century is more agreed than this, that all religion originates in revelation (Orr, "Revelation and Inspiration"). Now, is evolution consistent with revelation? Take the Old Testament; scholarship has endeavored to rearrange its books so as to indicate the development of Israel's religion along evolutionary lines, but "when this historical criticism has analyzed and rearranged the books of the Bible . . . the problem of the religion of Israel remains still unsolved . . . what profit is there in the analysis of the documents if Israel itself with its religion remains in the midst of the peoples unexplained"? (Bavinck, p. 189.) Israel was admittedly unique among the nations of antiquity. Wellhausen once asked why Chemosh, the god of the Moabites, never developed into the universal God as did Jahweh of Israel. He could not answer because he did not believe in a supernatural revelation. The same principle is seen in connection with the New Testament. At a given time in the history of the world Christianity began, but it is impossible to account for it except by means of a divine interposition, which is wholly inconsistent with purely natural development. One of the outstanding features of this divine revelation is the fact of the Bible, and its position as a divinely-authoritative book, cannot be explained apart from its being the record of a divine revelation. And so "with the reality of revelation Christianity stands or falls" (Bavinck, p. 20). The same thing is seen in connection with the Comparative Study of Religions. All the highest authorities combine to show the impossibility of accounting for the various religions of the world by any process of evolution. It is a matter of historical fact that no religion is known to have developed upwards from animism through polytheism into pure monotheism without the aid of a supernatural revelation. Polytheism invariably degenerates into pantheism and never of itself reaches up to monotheism (Bavinck, p. 185). From these considerations it is clear that no emergence from the brute can explain religion in man, for religion must of necessity be based on revelation, both in regard to its origin and also as to its truth (Bavinck, p. 169).

Both the Bible and man's nature combine to show this. Man's original position was that of one made in the image of God who had fellowship with his Creator. This position involved and was due to what may be called primeval revelation. But it was lost through sin, and when man fell from this high estate, while he did not lose his capacity for religion, he certainly lost his capability to become religious by his own unaided efforts. On this account he needed revelation both to show him his sin and also to point out the way of salvation by means of the divine gift of regeneration, which restores him to his original position of a life lived in fellowship with God. But it is abundantly evident that all this is incompatible with any natural and evolutionary process.

IX. Evolution in Relation to History.

This subject must, for our present purpose, be limited to the two questions which specially concern the relation of evolution to the Christian religion. According to evolution the progress of history has been upward, but the teaching of the Bible indicates a downward tendency as well. Paul in Rom. 1 shows how man started from an adequate knowledge of God and through self-will descended to the lowest depths of moral degradation. This is in harmony with all that is known of history, ancient and modern. There are many facts which support this view of a primitive culture followed by a definite degeneration, and as a writer has said: "The dogma of a gradual development from a lower to a higher level is not sustained by the history of the Oriental peoples." (Quoted in Bavinck, p. 179.) The same sad results are seen in human demoralization during modern times, for the history of Europe and even of America proves this beyond question, while the recent war grew out of the moral collapse which characterized the German nation. Not only so, but the present wave of crime and corruption is another proof that evolution cannot account for the facts of history. "The conception of evolution, when applied in history to a family or a tribe and a people or to humanity, has an entirely different sense from that which it bears in individual organisms. . . . Society is not a biological organism." (Bavinck, p. 117.)

Another evidence from history of the impossibility of explaining everything by evolution is the fact of the appearance of great personalities. It is known that in almost every age some outstanding individual has appeared, and his personality calls for explanation. How is the history of the world to be explained except by means of the appearance of great men like Caesar, Luther, Cromwell, Lincoln and very many more? Sir Oliver Lodge rightly asks: "Does any one think that the skill of the beaver, the instinct of the bee, the genius of a man arose by chance, and that its presence is accounted for by anything done and by survival? What struggle for existence will explain the advent of a Beethoven? What doubtful instinct for earning a living as a dramatist will adduce for us a Shakespeare? These things are beyond science of the orthodox type. Then let it be silent and let it deny nothing in the universe until it has at last made an honest attempt to grasp the whole." (Hibbert Journal, Vol. 1, p. 218.) The conclusion is that "a genius like Goethe is far from explained when we know that he inherited his stature from his father and his cheerful disposition from his mother. Evolution is a great word, but it turns its back on difficulties and sums up a rich and complicated reality under a vague formula." (Bavinck, p. 120.) These considerations show the need of the greatest possible care lest authority in biology and geology should be thought necessarily to remain when the same man speaks about history and religion. There are few matters so serious amidst the complexity of modern knowledge as the danger and even the tyranny of specialism. "So long as matter in its essence is unknown, and the resident forces of creation are not exhausted by us, all formulation of laws is necessarily tentative, and a large degree of modesty is the proof of a scientific spirit." (Bavinck, p. 101.)

X. Evolution in Relation to Christ.

On the theory of evolution man has developed through many stages until he has reached his present condition. Hegel applied the principle of evolution to history and this in turn was applied by Strauss to account for Jesus Christ on purely naturalistic principles. Since that day Wellhausen has made the same application to the Fourth Gospel, with the result that his view of Jesus Christ is purely natural and human. But the problem of Christ is not to be solved in this way, for as we ponder His personal character and sinlessness, His claim to represent and express God, the element of the unusual (since we must not beg the question by saying supernatural) in His life, and, not least of all, His remarkable influence through the ages—these find no explanation in evolution. Christ is either the product of a divine revelation or He is to be rejected altogether, while, if He is regarded as a Divine Incarnation, evolution necessarily becomes disproved. This is the conclusion drawn by a well-known British scientist, Professor Henslow, himself a believer in modal evolution in regard to at least a part of the world, and he has written a treatise with the title, "Jesus Christ No Product of Evolution". It is now a long time since Christ appeared on earth; but if evolution be true some more perfect characters and better men than He ought to have been produced; yet this has not been so, for notwithstanding the nineteen hundred years since the appearance of Christ, there has been no life like His and no one who can in the slightest degree be compared with Him. For these reasons we hold that the Incarnation of Jesus Christ was the coming of God into human life, and as such it was the culmination of the divine purpose to reveal Himself to man. As a necessary consequence, it is incapable of being accounted for by any process of evolutionary development.

(To be continued.)

PREACHERS

By Alfred B. Williams

THIRTY-FIVE years ago a much loved old negro Methodist preacher died in a Southern city. His funeral sermon was by an old negro Baptist preacher before a thronged congregation of both colors. Devoid of rhetorical effects, with hardly an adjective and in words so simple that the most illiterate could understand, his eulogy was one of the noblest and most effective ever spoken .

The living man told of the days, before the Civil War, when he and the dead man were slaves, toiling on neighboring plantations, with love for man and reverence for God ebullient in their humble hearts. They worked six days at their appointed tasks and on Sundays preached at meetings appointed for their respective denominations. Having kindly and sympathetic masters, they were allowed use of buggy and horse. As they traveled, side by side, the survivor said, all their talk was of the men and women of their race and congregations, what appeals and arguments would bring and hold them to faith in Christ, hope for the hereafter and right living here. One by one, the wicked and the wavering, the professed and apparently actual converts, would be discussed and considered. with their varying weaknesses and temptations and qualities and sources of strength.

What magnificent aristocrats, what princely givers, these two poor slaves were compared with Sinclair Lewis, popular novelist of this moment, seeking filling for his pitiful pockets and support for his flimsy fame by criticism and derision of the Christian ministry in his recently published book!

They did their uttermost to help the poorest and humblest of mankind within their little sphere of influence. They gave freely all they had, their ability to read, with much labor, to comprehend, by crude processes, great truths clearly and to express high thought in lowly language to lowly people and, with these, their one day of rest.

There have been, there are, and, thank God there will be always many of their self-chosen profession like them, of both colors, of all denominations, in country and city and in all classes and stations of life. Men of their kind were doing and giving, showing how to live usefully and cleanly, to endure faithfully, to trust triumphantly, and to die fearlessly and rejoicing before Mr. Lewis and his like were born or known. They will continue long after he and his kind are forgotten. He and the others, of this sort, or school, are ephemeral things, coming into light and vanishing within a day, assailing feebly the ministers of eternal and changeless verities.

Yet these ephemera are symptoms and exponents of a present fashion of flabby cynicism and shoddy philosophy. College and university professors, with minds refined until all vital force and human instinct and impulse have been extracted, announce skepticism on religion with evaporated phrases. Callow and shallow young men do likewise. None of them has the plain, every-day common sense to understand that their impotent utterances are aimed against the foundations of our civilization and safety. None of them has the ordinary instincts of decency to restrain him from trying to snatch away from the storm stricken the one refuge, from the heart hungry the one food, from the sorely stricken the one alleviation, from tear-streaming eyes the one glint of consolation. Boastfully and blatantly, to obtain money and newspaper notice, they try to thrust on us doom to perpetual darkness and nothing while destroying belief in eternal light and rest and happiness.

The easiest, cheapest and most convenient plan for winning the laughter of fools—dear to the ears of all fools—is to sneer at sacred things. The shortest route to publicity and some dollars for the common literary fop and pretender to intellectuality is to try vaingloriously to insult the Deity and to deride the holiest longings and most hallowed aspirations of the soul.

Oliver Goldsmith knew little of the art and science of self-advertisement, but he associated on equal terms with men of majestic mind and of real power and achievement and will live and be loved and singing in millions of hearts long after the sensation-mongers of today have found the oblivion they seek to teach as the universal lot. He knew and honored the unpretending devoted preacher—

"But in his duty, prompt to every call,
He watched and wept and prayed and felt for all."

As it has been, so it will be. Generation after generation young men will consecrate their lives and what abilities they may have to the highest and finest ambition humanity may know—the kindling to glory and beauty and to glorious and beautiful deeds of the spark of divinity living within all of us, the raising of mankind to citizenship in the everlasting and serene kingdom of God. Always there have been, always there will be, here and there among the preachers some false hearts, some weak characters, some surrenders to greed and vanity. The huge majority of them will be, as they have been, loyal to their allegiance through every stress and in all their widely differing places and spheres of work, dauntless, willing, unselfish and diligent servants of the Almighty, inspirations to righteousness and purity, staunch and potent foes of evil and corruption. They will go on, as the long shining procession of them have done through the centuries, healing and blessing, pointing and showing the way upward, comforting and strengthening, lighting the path and guiding faltering footsteps through the Valley of the Shadow, carrying consolation and peace and promise to the dark gates of death.—Greenville, S. C., News.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE COMMUNITY

"The Kingdom Come, Thy Will be done on earth"

COMMENTS ON CHILD TRAINING.

By Mary Evelyn Brydon, M. D.

Article XX.—The Ten Commandments.

(Continued.)

The Ninth Commandment—"Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor".

Truthfulness:

Teach your child to tell the truth. This Commandment has to do mainly with the tongue, that organ which St. James called the "unruly member", Solomon called a "tree of life" and Isaiah, a "devouring fire". It is, therefore, a thing to be reckoned with; it can destroy the peace and joy of life; it can build for happiness and love. Cannot children be taught the power of the unspoken word?

The spoken word or language has manifold uses; its most powerful use perhaps is to present the truth about life. When we go to Webster for a definition of truth we find: "Veracity: conformity to fact or reality; exact accordance with that which is, or has been, or shall be." But our Commandment enjoins us particularly regarding the relations of truth as applied in our dealings with our neighbor. Let us look at this matter from two standpoints.

I. Demonstrating facts to our neighbor.

II. Demonstrating mental attitudes towards our neighbor.

I. If we carefully studied our child as to why he occasionally or habitually misrepresents facts or assumes adverse mental attitudes we would understand him better and perhaps would be less inclined to dub him a liar.

Let us take up first why children lie. I absolutely do not think that there are polite degrees of truth-telling. A fib or a story is a lie and not merely a "perversion of the truth". In regard to a known fact a thing is true or it is not true. Yet the interpretations of facts are relative, that is, a fact may be interpreted according to the individual viewpoint of the person or the child. Therefore it is probably wise for you to teach your child the difference between I know" and "I think" and also "I pretend". In other words, cannot a child be taught at the same time the seriousness of misrepresenting known facts and the delights of imagination?

Why Children Lie:

1. Through ignorance of the thing or name of the thing. This may occur as result of (a) poor vision; (b) failure to understand the nature of the thing.

2. Natural tendency to see things larger—exaggeration.

3. Suggestion from others—"Don't tell anybody about this".

4. Fear of punishment.

5. Revenge—desire to "get even".

6. Conceit—desire to stand in limelight,

7. Discrimination.

"You wouldn't tell me a lie, would you?" says Mother, as if he may tell a lie to the whole world except herself. "I won't tell Father this time"; discriminates as to time to tell the truth—deceptive mental attitude.

8. Example of elders.

Adults are often careless in speech, ignorant of the facts in the case, too busy to choose the right word—these and many other factors influence adults in subverting the facts; and while they doubtless make the most of a semblance of the truth, they fail to take into account the effect on the child. He registers in his brain what he sees you do and what he hears you say. Making little deceptions and telling (so-called) "white lies" in his presence are just as surely—perhaps more surely—stored up in his brain to be reproduced later as the clearest presentation of the truth.

How to Cure Lying:

As with other evils in life, to prevent is far safer than to cure. To teach a child to be truthful he should be surrounded by truthful people from infancy, and without any effort on your part the child will be apt to acquire this habit of mind in the same way he acquires other mental attitudes, good and bad. But even with the most careful of parents, a child may be found to be untruthful. It is then necessary to take steps to correct this tendency; and the sooner you set about it, the better the results.

1. Go carefully over all the above causes for lying and discover if you can, why he lies. If you can find the reason you can then set about his cure more intelligently.

2. Be careful that you yourself tell the truth always.

3. Keep all promises yourself and explain to him your reasons for doing so even when keeping them works a hardship. It is well to be cautious about making many promises to your child.

4. Train him to observe carefully what he sees and hears in his daily walks or play and report the facts to you as accurately as possible—provided he does not "tattle" about his playmates.

5. Be ready to fall in with his spirit of "play like" or "pretend".

Johnny tipped cautiously into the room, carrying a paper sword. "What are you looking for?" asked Mother. "Sh-h, Mother! There's a great big bear under the porch!" "Why, Johnny, you wicked boy! You know there's no bear out there. The idea of your telling me a lie like that!"

Another mother handled a similar situation thus: "Horrors! Did you kill him? Don't let him get in here at Baby!" "No, Mother, don't you worry. I'll protect you." "Oh, what a brave boy you are!" Which mother do you think handled the situation better?

6. Be careful to remove all temptations to lie. The hasty punishment, the unfair judgment will encourage in him a fear of what you will do or say when you find out and tend to lessen his confidence in your fair treatment of him and the results of his activities. He is tempted to deceive sometimes also when the thing he did is not wrong, but he can't explain to you why he did it. Therefore, don't question him too closely. Take him on faith, and above all get his confidence and hold it.

II. Our attitude towards our neighbor in this Commandment has special reference to what we say against or about him; and in the Catechism we are enjoined to keep our "tongue from evil speaking, lying and slandering". Read St. James' Epistle to see what he says about the unbridled tongue. You can tame beasts but not the tongue. "A very small helm" turns about a great ship; the tongue, the "little member", "a fire" he calls it, can start a conflagration in which lives are wrecked and homes destroyed.

The little child must never learn at his mother's knee to speak evil of others. Such speaking too often leads to false statements—to words that cannot be substantiated or to unkind prejudice.

When the table talk is concerned with malicious or even unsympathetic speculations about the neighbor, is the child being trained in the right attitude towards that neighbor? To speak the truth always and to speak kindly about a neighbor who has not been kind, is indeed hard; but how will you train your child to speak the truth and deal gently with every one if you do not set him the example? I should like to know.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions. No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

"CATHOLIC" PROPAGANDA.

Mr. Editor:

One of our loyal Protestant Episcopal Bishops recently said: "Facts have a way of speaking for themselves."

There has come to my desk a copy of the "Christ Church Reminder", a weekly bulletin issued by Christ Church, Chattanooga, Tenn., which I am enclosing to you, so that you can read it for yourself.

Immediately under the picture of the Church are the words, "Christ Church (Episcopal), McCallie Avenue at Douglas". The word "Protestant" (a part of the official name of the Church) does not appear, and that word seems to be in bad repute in that parish.

Week-day services are scheduled as follows:

"Low Mass on Monday and Thursday at 8 A. M.
Low Mass on all other days at 7 A. M.
Requiem Mass on Saturday at 7 A. M.
Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament, Wednesday at 7 A. M.
Hours of Confession: Saturday, 4 to 5; Wednesday, after Benediction and by appointment."

Article X of the Constitution of the Church declares that the services of the Church shall be as prescribed by the Prayer Book. Careful reading of that volume fails to reveal any authority for the celebration of "Masses", "Low" or "Requiem", and where in that Book there is provided any such service as the "Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament" Protestant Episcopalians have thus far failed to discover. And what authority exists for the establishment of Auricular Confession in any Protestant Episcopal Church forms another interesting inquiry.

But these by no means constitute the most interesting features of this bulletin. That document furnishes one of the most striking illustrations of the smooth and subtle "Catholic" propaganda, gnawing at the very vitals of the Protestant Episcopal Church, which has yet come to the attention of the writer. This consists of an article entitled "Our Prayer Book", reading as follows:

Our Prayer Book.

"It will probably be of interest to our readers to refresh their memories concerning the purpose and meaning of some of the prayers in their Prayer Book, and also concerning the origin of the various services therein.

We will take up first the service which stands first in order of importance, namely the Mass. The Mass, as the service stands at the present time, is the result of many centuries of growth. Anciently it consisted essentially of the recitation of the narrative of the institution of the Sacrament including the words used by our Lord together with certain manual acts which carried out the action implied by the narration. To this were added a statement of the sufficiency of the Sacrifice of Christ on the Cross, and later certain intercessions for those in whom the celebrant was interested both in a private capacity and also as a citizen and Christian.

At this stage it is manifest that there could not be any set form of words used for the service, save the actual words of consecration. The Bishop used those which came to his mind and which most clearly expressed his intention and object of his prayers. However, by constant repetition each Bishop gradually moulded his service into a more or less constant form, which in course of time he taught to those who had been ordained and who looked to him for instruction. By this means there grew up gradually by the addition of such prayers as a form of confession called forth by the sense of the unworthiness of the celebrant and his assistants to participate in so solemn an office, and prayers of thanksgiving, a series of constant forms of the service, each differing a little from the other, according to various differences in language and methods of thought and expression in the different parts of the world in which the Church was first developed.

With the growth of Christianity and the greater accessibility to each other of separated towns or provinces due to improved methods of transportation, these varying forms began to be gradually modelled on one of the largest or most important diocese in the province, until there were finally in existence a comparatively few liturgies, as they were very early called, and these again finally resolved themselves into two general classifications, namely Eastern and Western. These two main divisions still exist, and we find still in use under the head of Eastern Liturgies that of St. John, Chrysostom and St. James, and under the head of Western Liturgies those of Rome and the Anglican Churches. To the latter, of course, our American Liturgy or Mass belongs.

We shall see, how in the development of our Liturgy, there have been three periods. The first was of growth and was constructive and includes the general development of the Liturgy of the Church of England out of the various Liturgies of Sarum, Hereford, etc., ending with the translation of the service into the common tongue. The second was one of destruction, starting soon after the Reformation in England, and attempting to destroy all resemblance to the Liturgies of the early Church in order to destroy the ancient teachings of the Liturgies. The third is one of reconstruction, which period is still with us, and is finding its latest expression in the work of our own General Convention in its nearly completed task of Prayer Book revision and in the recent revisions contained in the alternative Prayer Book produced by the Bishops of the Church of England. The trend of this period is to restore to the Liturgy such matters and order as is truly primitive and with those to emphasize and make quite clear the fact that the Anglican Communion is at one with the early Church in its Catholicity of worship.

This very brief survey will give at least a slight background for our study of the service. We will now proceed to the service itself.

First as to its title. In the Prayer Book, it is called The Order for the Administration of the Lord's Supper, or Holy Communion. The thing which strikes us immediately is that this is a very unwieldly and cumbersome title. Furthermore, it refers to only two of the aspects of the service, viz., that of the commemoration of the Last Supper, and that of the reception by the faithful of the Sacrament. It leaves out altogether the New Testament conception of the service as the great Thanksgiving, or Eucharist, and also the conception of its relation to the sacrifice of Christ on Calvary. In the first English Prayer Book, namely the first of Edward the Sixth, there was retained the following in the title of the service 'commonly called the Mass', this being the general use of the Western Rites. This was later dropped as being Romish. It is gradually growing into use again and rightly, for the reasons that it is first of all a very much less cumbersome way of referring to the service, and also because, by its ancient use, and the very lack of meaning which we shall see the word has, it does not imply any one particular aspect of the service, but includes them.

The exact derivation of the word is rather obscure. However, one that will answer all practical purposes is that it is a corruption of the word 'missa' which occurs in the Latin rites in the phrase, 'Ite, missa est', both before the more solemn part of the service (after the sermon) when the catechumens were dismissed, and also at the end of the service for the dismissal of the congregation. It is very easy to imagine that these parts of the service could be called the Missa Catechumenorum, and the Missa Fidelium (Dismissal of the Faithful) and that in the process of shortening in English the word Mass was invented.

Be that as it may, the word is used by many of us for the above reasons, and also because it connotes the ideas of the service which, both in Western and Eastern Liturgies, have always been connected with it (namely those of worship, thanksgiving, sacrifice, commemoration and communion) collectively."

The The Prayer Book, declared by the Constitution of the Church to be its standard of worship, provides "The Order for the Administration of the Lord's Supper or Holy Communion". If it had been intended that the Church was to celebrate Mass, we would have had "The Order for the Celebration of Mass", but there is no such thing in the Prayer Book. But in this bulletin Protestant Episcopalians are told that this is a cumbersome title, in the opinion of the writer of the article, wherefore, the Constitutional law of the Church is to be overriden—relegated to the scrap pile—and that service is to be denominated a "Mass"!

Obviously, the idea is to lead the people, by gradual process, to call the Holy Communion "Mass", get them accustomed to the use of that term, and then the next step will be the substitution of the Roman Missal for our Protestant Episcopal Holy Communion. Frankness compels the admission that it is an admirably devised plan.

"Catholics" become highly incensed when the statement is made that they are undertaking to override the law and subvert the Constitution of the Church, but here is a concrete illustration, emanating from their own camp, which the writer respectfully commends to the thoughtful atten- Protestant Episcopalians. It furnishes irrefragible evidence of the correctness of the assertions heretofore made by the writer in these columns as to the aims and purposes of the "Anglo-Catholic" Party in the Protestant Episcopal Church.

When will Protestant Episcopalians begin to think and act?

C. L. MARSILLIOT.

Memphis, Tenn.

DIOCESAN COUNCILS AND CONVENTIONS

DELAWARE.

Delaware rotates her annual convention among her three counties, and this, together with combining the annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary with the convention, insures a widespread interest. A third feature, on the first evening of the convention, is the annual dinner, which adds to the sense of corporate unity in the diocese. This year the Convention was held in Christ Church, Milford, May 10 and 11; and the invited speakers at the dinner were Dr. Margaret Richey, of the Church General Hospital in Wuchang, China; Miss Wood, the enthusiastic worker for better librarians for China; and the Rev. L. G. Wood, of the Field Department of the National Council.

Remarkable advances in giving for Church support have again been made during the past year. The Church School Lenten offering, passing the $6,000 mark, is beyond all previous records. The payment of the $15,000 pledge made by the Bishop at New Orleans having been written into the diocesan budget accounted for a new record in contributions from the diocese.

Dr. Alban Richey, reporting for the Department of Missions, indicated all parts of the diocese covered by regular ministrations of the clergy.

Bishop Cook, in his address, urged and requested an annual conference or mission in each parish. One result of the Bishops' Crusade was the increased number of confirmations.

The erection of new churches, rectories or parish houses, recently completed or in progress, makes for increased efficiency in the future.

A comment which found general acceptance among the laity at the convention was that the diocese was never before so efficiently manned with capable clergy as at present.

Among the officers and committees elected are the following:

Secretary, Hon. Charles M. Curtis; Treasurer, Frederick Bringhurst; Registrar, Geo. W. Hollett; Trustee, Henry I. Beers, to succeed the late Jefferson B. Foard.

Standing Committee:. The Rev. Messrs. C. W. Clash, Joseph H. Earp, Benj. F. Thompson; Messrs. A. Felix duPont, Victor C. Records.

Executive Council: Elected at this convention, the Rev. Frederick T. Ashton, the Rev. E. H. Ford, Mr. Macmillan Hooper, Mr. J. Wiley Trought.

Deputies to Provincial Synod: The Rev. Messrs. Joseph S. Hinks, Robert S. Whitehead, Joseph H. Earp, and Ernest A. Rich; Messrs. John R. Lambson, Edmund S. Hellings, Frederick Baker, Samuel Elliott.

The next annual convention will be held in St. Andrew's Church, Wilmington.

J. H. E.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

The eighth annual council of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia was held in Emmanuel Church, Covington, May 17 and 18, 1927; the Rt. Rev. Fobert Carter Jett, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, in the chair.

The Laymen's Meeting.

On Monday evening, the sixteenth, there was an interesting laymen's mass meeting, held under the auspices of the Laymen's League of the Diocese; Captain E. Walton Opie, of Staunton, presiding. The principal speaker was Dr. Larkin W. Glazebrook, of Washington, D. C., who made an inspiring address on personal work in the Church. Short talks were also given by Major Roy W. Wonson, Headmaster of Staunton Military Academy, on "The Diocesan Paper"; Mr. H. Minor Davis, of Lynchburg, on "Parish Finances"; Mr. John M. Horton, of Roanoke, on "Where Your Money Goes", and Captain Opie on "Advance Work".

"Diocesan Night."

On Tuesday evening there was another mass meeting devoted to the consideration of the work and general conditions in the Diocese. The Rev. G. Otis Mead read at this time the report of the Executive Board, in which were reviewed the activities of the Board as a whole, and of its several departments during the past conciliar year. Mr. Charles P. Macgill, of Pulaski, spoke on "Progress in the Diocese", and the Rev. Claudius F. Smith, of Big Stone Gap, on "Missions in the Diocese".

The Business of Council.

The council was largely taken up with matters of a routine nature and there was comparatively little debate. Quite a good deal of interest was evoked by the report of the Committee on Constitution and Canons. In 1923 the Council adopted a new Constitution and in 1924 this was ratified and became effective. In that Constitution the old definition of parishes by geographical boundaries was practically discarded and a new system was inaugurated, in which each church was to be considered a parish, organized mission or mission station; its classification being determined by its financial strength, number of communicants, etc.

The committee presented and the council adopted, with little opposition, a revision of this section of the Constitution, providing for a return to the former system of geographical definition of parishes; it being planned, however, that if this revision is ratified at the next annual council and then becomes effective, a canon will be proposed under which representation in council will still be determined on a basis of strength rather than geographical size.

Another resolution which will doubtless prove of general interest was prompted by dissatisfaction felt by many persons with some of the Hymnals in use in the Diocese. In accordance with this resolution Bishop Jett appointed a committee of three: the Rev. Messrs. F. Ernest Warren of Bristol and Thomas M. Browne of Lynchburg and Mr. Gordon H. Baker of Roanoke, to make a careful study of this whole question with a view to the possible offering of recommendations on the subject at the Provincial Synod to be held in Roanoke next October.

Appointments and Elections.

Chancellor: Mr. Chas. Francis Cocke.

Historiographer: The Rev. J. Lewis Gibbs.

Executive Secretary-Treasurer: Mr. Thos. A. Scott.

Members of the Executive Board to Serve Three Years: The Rev. Thos. M. Browne, the Rev. John J. Gravatt, Jr., Col. W. M. Brodie and Mr. C. Edwin Michael.

tSanding Committee: The Rev. Drs. Thos. D. Lewis, W. G. Pendleton, the Rev. Thos. M. Browne; Mr. C. S. Hutter, Col. William King, Jr., and Col. W. M. Brodie.

Deputies to the Provincial Synod: The Rev. Messrs. Alfred R. Berkeley, J. Manly Cobb, C. J. Gibson, D. D., John F. Coleman; Messrs. E. G. Hirons, Mayo C. Brown, Col. Wm. King, Jr., and Mr. Chas. L. Mosby.

Emmanuel Church, Covington, is at present without a rector, but the Rev. E. R. Rogers, Ph. D., is deacon-in-charge. Everything possible was done by Dr. Rogers and his local committee, of which Mr. E. G. Hirons was chairman, to insure the success of the Council, and the hospitality of the people was greatly appreciated by the members of the council.

An invitation was accepted to hold the next annual council at St. John's Church, Bedford, the Rev. W. A. Pearman, rector.

T. A. S.

VIRGINIA.

The one hundred and thirty-second annual council of the Diocese of Virginia, which was held in Christ Church, Winchester, May 18 and 19, will be looked upon as an unusually important assemblage in the history of the Church in Virginia. A change in the Canons of the Diocese was effected that will completely alter the existing fiscal system and place the Diocese upon a firmer foundation for future work and development.

At the opening of Council, it was found that the Diocese was facing much the same situation as the General Church faced in New Orleans. A deficit of approximately $45,000 had piled up and there was no absolute assurance that the future years would better conditions should no change be adopted. The Bishop appointed a special committee to study conditions in connection with the budget and to report to the Council their recommendations.

It was decided to call for pledges from the various congregations represented to wipe out the deficit and thus enable the Diocese to obtain a fresh start. Many of the parishes through their delegates responded at once with actual pledges and the remainder promised to bring the matter to the attention of the vestries and expected favorable action on their part, with the result that the Diocese seems to be able to face the future with all old debts erased.

The new canon adopted resembles the "pay as you go" plan of the General Church. One delegate referred to the fact that it was really not a mere slogan of pay as you go, but rather and adoption of an honor system. In the future the apportionment committee, instead of meeting more than ten months previous to the fall campaign, will meet after the council in the spring decides upon the budget. Then after October 1 they will send out the sums apportioned to the various parishes and after the parishes have conducted their campaign they will send in word what amount they actually expect to pay, and the diocesan authorities will actually expend only the amount that has been practically definitely promised.

This new canon assures the Diocese that there will be no further deficit, and the budget as adopted is arranged according to the amounts that have actually been collected in the last few years.

The elections at the Council resulted as follows:

Standing Committee: The Rev. Drs. Berryman Green, W. J. Morton and W. H. Burkhardt, and Messrs. Gardiner L. Boothe, A. R. Hoxton and John E. Minor.

Finance Committee: Messrs. James Caskie, Lewis C. Williams and Judge R. Carter Scott.

Executive Committee of Diocesan Missionary Society: The Rev. Drs. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., G. Freeland Peter, W. H. Burkhardt, W. D. Smith, and the Rev. Messrs. H. S. Osburn, R. F. Gibson and G. P. Mayo; and Messrs. Robert Beverley, John Stewart Bryan, Murray McGuire and Lewis C. Williams. Also the convocational representatives chosen were elected officially by the Council.

Delegates to the Provincial Synod: The Rev. Messrs. Dudley Boogher, F. D. Goodwin, W. Roy Mason and H. S. Osburn and Messrs. W. W. Chamblin, Murray McGuire, John T. Ramey and Lewis C. Williams.

The devotional services held were of unusual interest. On the night before the Council the Department of Religious Education held a service with a fine address from the Rev. W. E. Cox. On Wednesday night the sermon was perached by the Rev. Dr. Floyd Tompkins, of Philadelphia, and it proved to be of extraordinary power. On the last night of council, the Rev. Dr. Wallace E. Rollins, Professor of History at the Theological Seminary in Virginia, preached a masterly sermon on the text, "Never man spake as this man".

The entertainment accorded by the people of Winchester was of the finest type of Virginia hospitality. The congregations of Millwood, Boyce and Berryville assisted in the work of entertaining the delegates, and the general impression was that this Council was one of the most harmonious and entertaining ever held.

C. W. S.

GEORGIA.

The one hundred and fifth annual convention of the Diocese of Georgia met at Calvary Church, Americus, April 27 and 28. This convention followed a one-day convention of the laymen of the Diocese, held at the same church. The Laymen's Convention accomplished many things that will make the laymen in the Church an outstanding factor in the upbuilding of the rural communities. An interesting paper based on "Within the City Limits", was read by Mr. George Urquhart, and was an inspiration for all men to go out and do their bit in making the Kingdom of God reach those within their borders.

The convention opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion, Bishop F. F. Reese, Bishop of Georgia celebrating, assisted by the Rev. J. B. Lawrence, rector of Calvary Church, Americus. At the first session of the convention the Bishop was authorized to secure an Executive Secretary, to assist him in the routine work of the Diocese. At the evening service the Bishop read his annual report and addressed the convention on, "What the Episcopal Church Stands For".

At this convention the Diocese pledged its support to the endowment of the University of the South (Sewanee) in their campaign to raise $2,000,000 for the extension of this university. Plans were made to aid the General Church in raising their amount of the $200,000 deficit.

All the committees gave encouraging reports of their work, especially the Committee on Evangelism, whose work in the Diocese was remarkable. It was pointed out that every place where there is a mission station or even a few communicants, organized; the Bishops' Crusaders reached them within the period of time allotted to them by the General Commission. The period of time given these places ranged from one day to ten days. The Crusaders of this Diocese were the Rev. D. C. Wright and the Rev. J. A. Schaad.

The next convention will meet at Saint John's Church, Savannah, on April 18, 1928.

The elections were as follows:

Standing Committee: The Rev. Messrs. Lawrence, McGlohon, Barber, Wright, and Messrs. Anderson, Cann, Purse, Atkin.

Executive Committee: The Rev. Messrs. Barber, Cornish, Jonnard, Cobey, Tucker, and Messrs. Anderson, Aiken, Williamson, McIntosh, Breen, Ridgley.

The Provincial Synod will be held in 1928 at Columbus, Georgia. The delegates are as follows: The Rev. Messrs. Cobey, Jonnard, Schaad, Lawrence, Wright, Carpenter; Messrs. Harold, Urquhart, Robinson, Sanders, Ticknor.

The Woman's Auxiliary was in session during the convention and reported an active and interesting meeting.

H. B. H.

NORTH CAROLINA.

With a splendid attendance of laymen and clergy, the one hundred and eleventh annual convention of the Diocese of North Carolina met in the Church of the Holy Comforter, Burlington, on May 10 and 11. Following the opening service, the convention met in the parish house on the morning of May 10, with the Rt. Rev. Joseph Blount Cheshire, presiding. Reelecting the Rev. Morrison Bethea as Secretary, the convention heard the addresses of its three Bishops: Bishop Cheshire, Bishop Coadjutor E. A. Penick and Bishop Suffragan H. B. Delaney. Bishop Cheshire's address contained a warning to the churches not to limit their power to give to the work of the General Church and to its missionary work by going in debt for costly structures that were beyond their means. Bishop Penick, referring to the amount of time given to conferences and committee meetings, suggested that activity is no substitute for productivity. Bishop Delaney's address dealt with the work of the Negro churches.

Reports of diocesan treasurers and officers of various institutions were received with great interest. The adoption of a Forward Movement budget of $80,000 for the year 1928 was carried, though the committee on findings reported that the pledges for 1927 did not indicate that enough would be forthcoming for the budget requirements. Following a moving address by Bishop Penick it was decided to have a real every member canvass in the fall, in an effort to secure sufficient pledges. The recommendation of the findings committee that an executive secretary be employed to promote the Church's Program brought forth much discussion, resulting in an instruction to the Executive Council to employ such an official.

The Rev. Charles E. McAllister, Executive Secretary of the Diocese of Newark, made an address on Monday evening before the convention to a large number of laymen from all parts of the Diocese, who were gathered at a banquet. He urged his hearers to make the Bishops' Crusade the beginning of a great spiritual movement that will affect both the Church and Society. On evening he spoke at a mass meeting, arranged by Dr. Wade R. Brown, in the interest of religious education.

Important elections resulted as follows:

Members of the Executive Council: The Rev. Messrs. I. W. Hughes, Theodore Partrick, Jr., R. E. Gribbin and Francis Craighill; Messrs. A. H. London, L. C. Burwell, F. W. Glover and J. C. Webb, and Miss Easdale Shaw.

Delegates to Provincial Synod: The Rev. Messrs. J. L. Jackson, R. E. Gribbin, H. G. Lane, W. H. Hardin, Morrison Bethea and W. W. Way; Messrs. S. S. Nash, E. A. Holt, J. R. Wilkes, N. C. Cordon, W. R. Brown and F. P. Haywood.

Standing Committee: The Rev. Messrs. M. A. Barber, S. S. Bost and I. W. Hughes; Messrs. J. B. Cheshire, Jr., and Samuel Lawrence.

Treasurer of the Diocese: H. M. London.

T. P., JR.

BETHLEHEM.

Bishop Talbot Resigns.

The beloved Diocesan, pleading old age with its infirmities, and long years of service in the episcopate, and feeling that the Coadjutor will "carry on" vigorously and wisely, informed the fifty-sixth annual convention of the Diocese that he would transfer all episcopal authority to the Coadjutor on October 1, 1927.

On October 9 of this year the Bishop will be senty-nine years old. He has been in this Diocese almost thirty years and a Bishop forty years. Steady progress has marked the years of his service. Seldom does a man win the affection of people of all races and creeds or even no creeds as has Bishop Talbot. The bootblack, porter, miner, artisans of all kinds, men and women of all ranks, look upon him as their Bishop and often speak of hi mas "our Bishop".

The convention which met in Trinity Church, Pottsville, one of the most beautiful churches in the Diocese, the Very Rev. Howard W. Diller, rector, was interesting on account of some resignations and new elections. The Chancellor, who served the convention for twenty-three years, refused reelection. He nominated Lawrence B. Jones, Esq., of St. Stephen's Church, Wilkes-Barre, as his successor. Mr. Jones was unanimously elected. He is a son of the late Rev. Henry L. Jones, D. D., who was rector of St. Stephen's Church for forty years. The retiring Chancellor was given quite an ovation and a committee was appointed to draw up suitable resolutions, to have them embossed and presented to the Chancellor. Mr. William J. Trembath also refused reelection as the secretary, having served in that capacity for six years. Horace DeY Lents, Esq., of St. Mark's Church, Mauch Chunk, was elected as the new secretary.

Other Elections:

Provincial Synod: Clerical, the Rev. Messrs. S. E. Neikirk, E. L. Haines, F. P. Houghton and Dean E. G. N. Holmes; Messrs. F. C. Schultz, H. W. Kingsbury, C. A. Mills and F. M. Eshelman.

Standing Committee: The Rev. Messrs. J. P. Ware, J. P. May, R. P. Weatherly, J. Hall Griffith and R. N. Merriman; Messrs. A. N. Cleaver, F. M. Kirby, E. G. Mercur, T. A. Morgan and Col. C. S. Smith.

Executive Council: New members elected were the Rev. Messrs. F. P. Houghton, S. E. Neikirk and W. F. Allen; Messrs. H. E. Bishop and C. A. Mills.

Mr. Hunter Eckert was reelected as treasurer of the Diocese, and Dr. N. M. Emery as the registrar. The Ven. Harvey P. Walter continues to serve as the Archdeacon and Executive Secretary of the Diocese.

The committee on the endowment of the Ethelbert Talbot Chair of Biblical Learning in the Divinity School of Philadelphia was continued. The Rev. F. L. Flinchbaugh, D. D., the chairman, reported that practically all the preliminary work was done and that now the committee had begun to solicit cash and subscriptions. Almost thirty thousand dollars was secured in the first month's work.

ERIE.

The seventeenth annual convention of the Diocese of Erie was held at St. James' Memorial Church, Titusville, Pa., May 17 and 18, with the Rt. Rev. John Chamberlain Ward, S. T. D., D. D., presiding.

Business organization was effected in the afternoon of the first day when, according to the canon, nominations were made for the elections to be held on the following day.

Evening Prayer was said in the church when the Bishop made a short address, and the Rev. Walworth Tyng, for sixteen years one of our missionaries in China, spoke interestingly of our work in that field under present conditions.

There was a Corporate Diocesan Communion Wednesday morning with the Bishop as celebrant, assisted by the Ven. R. S. Radcliffe, D. D., Rev. W. E. Van Dyke, and the rector of the parish, the Rev. Albert Broadhurst.

The Bishop read his address at the morning business session in which he referred to the pressing need of a parish house at Farrell, a mill town, where a great work is being done among the foreign born by the Rev. Sisto J. Noce, and commending it as the one outstanding object to be attained; also to the recent bequest of two hundred thousand dollars by the late George H. Boyd, of Sharon, the income from which was to be used under the direction of the Bishop and Chancellor of the Diocese, and the Rev. E. J. Owen, who was his rector, for the relief and assistance of needy and worthy cases in the Diocese, but not necessarily members of the Episcopal Church.

The elections were as follows:

Secretary: The Rev. Albert Broadhurst, Titusville.

Treasurer: Turner W. Shacklette, Erie.

Standing Committee:. The Rev. Messrs. Martin Aigner, D. D., R. S. Radcliffe, D. D., W. E. Van Dyke and Albert Broadhurst; Messrs. Turner W. Shacklette, C. F. Mackey, C. E. Martin and W. C. Leffingwell.

..Provincial Synod Delegates: The Messrs. M. S. Kanaga, Martin Aigner, D. D., E. J. Owen, D. D., M. DeP. Baynard; Messrs. E. V. D. Selden, Albert Cliffe, F. B. Mallett and F. G. Bellamy.

The convention received with enthusiasm the announcement by the treasurer that the Lenten Mite-Box Offerings amounted to an even $5,000, as compared with $3,587 last year; that two Church Schools, St. John's, Sharon, and St. James' Memorial, Titusville, had given $1,077 and $1,044 respectively, the last named being a contribution of $9.85 per capita; and that we are now in the second year of the payment in full, each month, of the quota assigned the Diocese by the National Council for the Nation-Wide Campaign.

The adjournment of the convention to meet in the Cathedral of St. Paul, Erie, in May, 1928, was followed by the annual dinner of the Men's Club of the Diocese, which was served by the ladies of the parish and at which speeches were made by the Rev. C. S. Allison, of the Diocese of Western New York, on Rural Work, so successfully conducted in that jurisdiction, and by the Rev. Walworth Tyng, who again spoke of the conditions in China.

T. W. S.

LONG ISLAND.

The sixty-first convention of the Diocese of Long Island assembled in the Cathedral of the Incarnation, Garden City, on Tuesday morning, May 17, and ended its sessions on Wednesday afternoon.

At the opening service, Holy Communion was celebrated, as usual, and the Rt. Rev. Ernest M. Stires, D. D., LL. D., D. C. L., Bishop of the Diocese, was celebrant and preacher. His sermon was from 2 Peter 1:5, "Add to your faith courage". He appealed first for a definite and dominating faith, and secondly for a virile courage to face the difficulties and attack the problems of life in Christian optimism and determination. In his address to the convention after the formal opening for business, the Bishop gave specific instances of problems that were challenging the faith and the courage of the members of the Diocese.

Officers of the Diocese were reelected as follows:

Secretary: The Rev. John Henry Fitzgerald.

Assistant Secretary: The Rev. John E. Gerstenberg.

Treasurer: Mr. Raymond F. Barnes.

The Rev. Frank M. Townley, D. D., and Mr. George Hawlett were reelected to the Standing Committee for four years.

Deputies to the Synod of the Province of New York and New Jersey: The Rev. Frederic W. Norris, D. D., the Rev. Charles H. Ricker, Mr. Louis Dutton and Mr. Eugene Denton were elected for three years.

Three new parishes were admitted into union with the convention: St Mark's, Jackson Heights, of which the Rev. R. L. Scofield is rector; St. Andrew's, Astoria, the Rev. Louis B. Rule, rector; and St. John's, Southampton, whose rector is the Rev. Samuel C. Fish, B. D.

The Committee on Canons had been asked to make a general revision of the canons of the diocese, and they brought in a long list of suggestions, most of which were in the way of clarifying and simplifying a body of canons that had been subject to many alterations and additions. Many technical changes of this kind were made. Provision for a Suffragan Bishop was written in, Bishop Stires having plainly indicated that in his judgment episcopal assistance was necessary.

A proposal to admit a delegate to the convention from each mission congregation of the diocese was approved; but being an amendment to the Constitution it must be reaffirmed next year to become effective. A budget of diocesan expense for the coming year was presented by the committee on budget and finance of the Diocesan Council, and was approved as presented.

Interesting reports were presented by the Archdeacons, recounting the missionary activities within the diocese; by the Diocesan Board of Religious Education; and by the Board of Christian Social Service.

At the close of the first day's session, the Bishop and Mrs. Stires gave a reception in the Bishop's House to the members and guests of the convention.

C. H. W.

NEWARK.

Bishop Lines Transfers Increased Authority.

Bishop Lines, in his annual address to the diocesan convention on May 17 announced the transfer of largely increased authority in the administration of the Diocese to the Bishop Coadjutor, the Rt. Rev. Wilson R. Stearly, D. D. The Bishop asserted that he was not resigning at this time and paid a fine tribute to the Bishop Coadjutor. He stressed the importance of the Bishops' Crusade, earnestly requesting that it should be regarded as a beginning and should be followed up with the most definite interest. He strongly suggested an educational campaign in all parishes for general and intelligent giving, pointing out that in the midst of all drives for great amounts of money, the Church is not getting its share. The address contained a strong plea for simplicity in life and religion, for the home and family, for the displacement of bad books and degrading amusements, for the parish as a servant of the community. The Bishop stated that the finest actions of the United States in the present generation were entrance of our country into the great war to save civilization and the prohibition amendment. The Bishop's action in the transferring of increased activity to the Bishop Coadjutor aroused intense interest, especially in view of the recent action of the Bishop of Massachusetts. At the conclusion of the Convention a resolution was introduced and unanimously adopted expressing the deep appreciation of the Diocese for Bishop Lines' twenty-four years in the episcopate, the great love in which he is held, not merely by communicants of the Church, but by all of Northern New Jersey, and the hope that he may be long spared to undertake all such tasks as he may deem fit in the future. The convention was marked by many expressions of deep personal affection for Bishop Lines and the great love in which he is held is apparent on all sides.

Bishop Stearly's address was largely taken up with the presentation of the diocesan undertakings, which had marked the year with strong approval of the Bishops' Crusade and of the advance made in the Diocese, both spiritually and materially. Bishop Stearly, in his address, paid tribute to Bishop Lines and to the deep sense of fellowship that has always existed in the Diocese.

The Rev. Charles E. McAllister, Executive Secretary of the Diocese, reviewed the work of the Diocese for the year. There was a gain of $35,000 in pledges for diocsean and General Church work and the total of $250,000 was the largest in the history of the Diocese. Eighty-four parishes and missions pledged their full quotas. There was a gain of approximately five hundred communicants and the total income amounted to $1,887,174. There were 2,187 Confirmations and $2,128 Baptisms.

The House of the Holy Comforter for Aged Women, and the Girls' Friendly Society with its new Holiday House were represented and reported by Mrs. Geo. W. Bond and Mrs. A. D. Story.

A Canon was introduced, making the Executive Secretary of the Diocese an ex-officio member of the Finance and Advisory Board, which has charge of appropriations and disbursements in the Diocese.

As only one-third of the membership of the various boards and commissions were elected for the current year, the business session was considerably shortened and the work of the convention completed in one day.

The result of the elections was as follows:

Standing Committee: The Rev. Henry B. Bryan, of Jersey City, and Mr. E. O. Stanley, East Orange.

Deputies to the Provincial Synod: The Rev. Henry M. Ladd, Rutherford; Mr. E. O. Stanley, East Orange; the Rev. M. A. Shipley, Hoboken; Mr. J. C. Woodhull, Summit.

Treasurer of the Diocese: Mr. Albert H. Baldwin, Chatham.

The night of the convention was given over to the annual dinner of the Church Club of the Diocese. Dr. John W. Wood, Executive Secretary of the Department of Missions of the National Council, made a stirring address on the situation in China at the dinner where more than three hundred men were assembled. Brief addresses were made by both the Bishops, and the Rev. Joseph R. Lynes, D. D., rector of St. Paul's Church, Englewood, spoke on the importance of parish organization.

Church Intelligence

The Chinese Situation.

A cable from Shanghai on May 17, states:

That the Rev. T. L. Sinclair, of Anking, left for Manila on May 14, probably to take temporary work in the Philippine Islands. This probably means that Mrs. Sinclair and the children are remaining in Shanghai.

That the following are leaving Shanghai for Seattle on the President Grant due June 7: The Rev. and Mrs. J. F. Davidson of Shanghai, Miss Henrietta Gardiner of Hankow, Miss Irene Gehrling of Anking.

That Miss Elizabeth Roberts transferred from St. Mary's Hall, Shanghai, to St. Margaret's School, Tokyo, leaves Shanghai May 21.

That Mr. A. H. Stone, Headmaster of Kuling School for the children of missionaries, sails for San Francisco May 13, on the President Lincoln, due June 7.

Recent letters from Bishop Graves state that:

"At Sungkiang, the Rev. D. M. Koeh has been siezed by the Southerners and dragged about the streets as 'the running dog of the foreigners'. Soochow has been evacuated by all missionaries and our three men got down on Sunday afternoon. Mr. Smith and Mr. Green from Zangzok managed to get to Soochow and should arrive at Shanghai tonight. We have no news of our people at Yangchow, but believe that they are on the way out."

"Further news to date is as follows: Yangchow houses have been looted, Mahan School occupied by soldiers and Holy Trinity Chapel buildings occupied by the Kuomingtang as their official meeting place. Our Chinese clergy have been forced to escape from Yengchow, Wusih, Sungkiang and Kiangwan. The clergyman at Woosung has had to vacate and our buildings there are occupied by the Labor Union. Kiangwan Chapel is occupied for the second time by soldiers. Our Chapel at Chu-ka-kaugh, a sub-station of Tsingpoo, has been occupied by the Kuomingtang. At Nanking the soldiers are occupying all our property and also the new buildings of the Central Theological School."

Cantonese soldiers have occupied our buildings at Hsiakwan, just outside the walls of Nanking. Mr. Shen, the Chinese clergyman, writes to Bishop Graves on April 10:

"On April 10 a contingent of Cantonese soldiers arrived at Hsiakwan. A policeman brought over a hundred of them to live here. They wanted to occupy all the buildings, but after negotiations we are to retain all the downstairs of the two school buildings. We hope that with the presence of soldiers there will not be future mob demonstrations around our compound. We are opening classes tomorrow with about forty pupils."

Bishop Graves adds:

"It is pathetic to see how our people try to carry on under such difficult conditions."

Brotherhood of St. Andrew Summer Camps.

In arranging for the various Summer Camps, it has always been the policy of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew to recruit primarily through the clergy for the following reasons:

First: The Brotherhood has always recognized the leadership of the rector.

Second: The Brotherhood camps are operated with the principal aim of inspiring and training potential parish workers among the boys of the Church.

Third: The Brotherhood camps are satisfyingly successful only when the campers, on their return, are enlisted in the parish work in a more definite and resultful way.

Fourth: The rector not only has the right to determine the boys to be trained, but from his knowledge of the field, is the one best able to make the selection. The Brotherhood urges every rector to look on the camps as a field of investment and not to confuse them with other camps—many of which are organized largely for recreational purposes.

The nine camps, which will be operated by the Brotherhood this season are located as follows:

Camp Bonsall—fifty miles from Philadelphia at Kelton, Chester County, Pa. The camping periods are: Older boys—June 28 to July 9; younger boys, July 11 to July 23.

Camp Carleton—in Alleghany State Park, near Salamanca, N. Y. Camping periods—Older boys, June 28 to July 9; younger boys, July 11 to July 23.

Camp Gardiner—in New Hampshire at Fitzwilliam Depot, about twenty miles from Boston. Camp periods are—Older boys, June 28 to July 9; younger boys, July 11 to July 23.

Camp Houghteling—in the Diocese of Western Michigan, twelve miles from Muskegon. The camping periods are—Older boys, June 28 to July 9; younger boys, July 11 to July 23.

Camp Kirk—will be located at Del Mar, By-the-Pacific, San Diego County, Calif. The camping periods are—Older boys, July 4 to July 15; younger boys, July 17 to July 23.

Camp Morrison—on the banks of the beautiful Cedar River near Waterloo, Iowa. The camping period will be July 12 to July 23.

Camp Nichols—Bolinas, By-the-Pacific, Marin County, Calif. The camping period is June 19 to June 30.

Camp Tuttle—in the Diocese of Western Missouri, near Springfield. The camping period will be June 21 to July 2.

Camp Woodcock—covered Bridge Reservation, Harrod's Creek, Ky. The camping period will be June 14 to June 21.

Church Colleges Adopt Honor System.

Two of the colleges of the Episcopal Church are listed, in a statement issued by the National Research Council in Washington, among the eighteen American institutions of higher learning which have adopted the honor system of study, whereby the more promising students in their junior and senior years are freed from all class-room restrictions to devote their time to individual research study in the English manner. The Church Colleges included are St. Stephen's College and Hobart College.

The complete list is as follows: Vassar, Harvard, St. Stephen's, Wells, Swarthmore, Hobart, Radcliffe, Barnard, Colgate, Brown, Carleton, Smith, Elmira, Rice, Converse, Buffalo, Sweet Briar and South Carolina.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. H. St. Geo. Tucker, D. D., Coadjutor.

Crusade Mission at Spotsylvania C. H.

A successful Bishops' Crusade Mission was held in Christ Church, Spotsylvania C. H., the first week in May. Services were held in the evening only, until Friday, when there were all day services, with sermon and a celebration of the Holy Communion in the morning, and sermon and the presentation of the pledge cards in the afternoon. The Rev. John F. Coleman conducted the mission, and his sermons were interesting and helpful, and enjoyed by all. Mr. Coleman had charge of Christ Church while attending the Virginia Seminary about twenty-five years ago, so was not a stranger to the people of Spotsylvania. On Tuesday evening, the Rev. Clifford Stanley, student in charge of Christ Church, came down from the Virginia Seminary, bringing with him the organist and some of the Seminary Choir, and took charge of the music for the evening. A number of cards, pledging daily prayer and Bible reading, were signed.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland D. D., Bishop.

"Diocesan Day."

Episcopalians from the more than two hundred parishes in Philadelphia and vicinity on Saturday, May 21, held their "Diocesan Day" celebration on the one hundred acre site recently acquired to be the home of the proposed Protestant Episcopal Cathedral and also to be developed as a great Diocesan center for Church institutions.

Bishop Garland made the address in connection with the "First Religious Services on the Cathedral Site". This service was the outstanding feature of "Diocesan Day". Bishop Garland announced a number of suggestions he has been considering looking to the development of the one hundred acres.

The day's celebration began at 12:30 o'clock, when several thousand children of the Sunday Schools in the Diocese presented their "Liberia Day" program, which included exhibits of children's work and children's gifts to be sent to children in Liberia, a short tableau and children's games and missionary stories by the Rev. Elwood Haines, of Bethlehem, a former missionary to Liberia. Trumpeters from the Church of the Good Shepherd, under direction of Mr. Frank Longshore, organist and choirmaster of the Church of the Good Shepherd, furnished the music.

The "Diocesan Day" Program was under the auspices of the Church Club, an organization of prominent laymen in this Diocese, and the Cathedral League, an organization of prominent laywomen interested in the Cathedral movement. The Women's Aids of the six convocation districts of the Diocese, the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary, the Churchwoman's Club, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, the Sunday Schools of the Diocese, and many other diocesan and parish organizations, the latter under the leadership of the rectors, participated in the day's program.

Dedication of Lych-Gate.

The Rev. Charles E. Tuke, rector of St. John's Church, Lansdowne, on Sunday, May 22, officiated at the dedication of a Lych-Gate, presented to that parish by Mr. Alexander Wilson, Jr., as a tribute to the Rev. Lyman P. Powell, a former rector of the Lansdowne Church, who is now rector of St. Margaret's Church, New York City.

Dr. Powell, who made the address at the service, was accompanied by members of the vestry and congregation of St. Margaret's Church, who united with the people of St. John's in the dedication services on the church lawn and afterwards in the church. During Dr. Powell's rectorship of St. John's, Lansdowne, the present church building was erected. The Lych-Gate marks the entrance to the church grounds from Baltimore Avenue, and conforms in its architecture to the other church buildings.

R. R. W.

Seminary Alumni Meeting.

The sixty-eighth semi-annual meeting of the Philadelphia Association of the Students of the Theological Seminary of Virginia was held at the City Club, Philadelphia, Thursday, May 5, 1927. The speaker, the Rev. Paul Micou, took as his subject "Buchmanism".

J. H. L., JR.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. A. S Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, D. D., Suffragan.

Presentation of Sunday-School Offering.

Children from one hundred and eighty-three Sunday Schools in the Episcopal Diocese of New York Saturday afternoon, laid $46,822 on the altar at their annual missionary service in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. This sum represented their offerings for missions, saved during the year. The total was $4,700 more than they contributed at last year's service.

The children, numbering about 2,500 marched into the Cathedral through the incompleted nave. The procession was under the direction of the Rev. J. Mark Ericsson, precentor of the Cathedral.

Bishop William T. Manning delivered an address of welcome to the children and congratulated them on their generosity. The Rev. Dr. H. Hyde Prichard, of Mount Kisco and a canon of the Cathedral, announced the offerings of each parish school and awarded the prizes.

Christ Church, Rye, N. Y., won two of the three banners for the highest awards. The first for having the largest offering of any school, $3,786, and the second for having the highest per capita offering, $15.78 per pupil. The third banner went to the church making the largest percentage increase in offering. This went to All Saints' Mission, Valley Cottage, N. Y.

Certificates of honor were presented to twenty schools for offerings twice the amount of those of last year. The winner of the gold medal award in the Missionary Essay Contest went to Mildred Cronk of St. Andrew's Church, Arlington, N. Y. The silver medal for second best went to Rosmund Kuerzi, St. Faith's School of the Cathedral, New York City, and third prize, a bronze medal, was awarded to Gertrude Black, Trinity Church, Mount Vernon.

A banner for the largest offering among the parishes having current expenses under $2,000 went to Christ's Church, Piermont; for churches with expenses under $4,000 to St. John's Church, Tuckahoe, and in the $8,000 class to St. James' Church of Scarsdale.

New York Bible Society Gives Bibles to United States Fleet.

The New York Bible Society from its Bible House, New York City, with the cooperation of over two hundred young people from the National Bible Institute and various Churches of New York, recently made a large distribution of Bibles, Testaments and Portions to members of the United States Fleet just before it left New York Harbor. The young people visited more than a hundred ships in making the distribution and six hundred and fifty-five Bibles, 2,175 Testaments and 34,840 Portions were personally handed to the men, making a total of over 37,000 volumes.

The arrangements were made through Captain Scott, Chaplain of the Fleet.

On Sunday morning there was a formal presentation of a Bible to Admiral Charles F. Hughes, Commander-in-Chief of the United States Fleet, on board the Flagship U. S. S. Seattle. This presentation was made by a group of Managers from the New York Bible Society, Mr. John C. West, President, making the presentation address. Admiral Hughes responded saying that the Bible which his mother had given him was much worn from use and that he was grateful to receive the new one.

The Honorable Curtis D. Wilbur, Secretary of the Navy, who was present at the presentation ceremonies, in praising the influence of the Bible upon the men of the Navy said: "There are a thousand passages in the Bible, any one of which a man can tie his whole life to, such as the first verse of the Twenty-third Psalm—'The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want'."

A New Community Work.

Work has been begun at Grace Church, New York, upon the conversion of the Day Nursery into a new boarding home for young business women and students. The Grace Church Day Nursery, founded in 1878, has been in continuous operation until the first day of May, 1927, and during these years has cared for thousands of children, some of them members of Grace Parish, but a far larger part from the general community of the East Side. During the winter a careful survey was made of all the neighborhood of Grace Church in relation to the Nursery work, and this survey disclosed the fact that the Nursery no longer filled so vital a need as it used to do, both because other nurseries had been founded to the east and because the improvement of economic conditions in the district reduced the number of mothers who needed help in the care of their children. On the other hand, a study of conditions in the city showed that there is a great need among young self-supporting women for places to live in which they may be assured of a wholesome atmosphere and happy surroundings. Consequently, upon the advice of the Board of Managers of the Day Nursery, the rector and vestry of Grace Church decided to change the buildings to serve the new purpose. The alterations now being made will provide accommodations for about thirty-five women, and will be opened in September with Deaconess Theodora Beard as the Director. In honor of a former rector of Grace Church, the Rev. William Reed Huntington, D. D., the building will be called "Huntington House".

Impressive Memorial Service.

Squadron A of the New York National Guard and its Ex-Members' Association, on Sunday afternoon, May 8, attended their annual memorial service at the Church of the Heavenly Rest.

Thirty-eight times this cavalry organization has made its pilgrimage to the Church of the Heavenly Rest to do honor to those who have died in war since the inauguration of the Squadron in 1889, or who have passed away during the year just previous.

From their Armory at Madison Avenue and Ninety-Fifth Street to Fifth Avenue, and down through throngs of Sunday promenaders, to Eighty-Ninth Street, these veterans from the Spanish War, the Mexican Border and World War, passed through Eighty-Ninth Street into the old Chapel of the Beloved Disciple, where the services for the Church of the Heavenly Rest are temporarily held. There they were addressed by their Chaplain, the Rev. Henry Darlington, D. D., who is the rector of the Church of the Heavenly Rest.

Immediately after the address, the memorial service proper was held. As the names of active members who have died during the past year were read, colors were dipped and taps were sounded.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

Services In French at St. John's.

The services, conducted in the French language at St. John's Church during Lent are being continued on Sunday afternoons with good attendance. The clergyman in charge, the Rev. Florian Vurpillot, has been appointed an assistant in St. John's Parish and will continue to conduct these services. The vestry of St. John's, in conference with seven members of the French congregation, contemplates the formation of a French foyer to be held in the parish hall as a meeting place for the foreign-born French speaking citizens of Washington.

The Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary held a quiet hour service at Epiphany Church on May 19 at 10 A. M. This was followed by a Corporate Communion service. Dr. Phillips, the rector of Epiphany Church, had charge of the service which consisted of prayers and meditations and was also the celebrant of the Holy Communion.

The Washington Sunday-School Institute held its regular monthly meetin gon Tuesday evening, May 17, in the parish hall of the Church of Our Saviour. The Bishop of Washington was the principal speaker, his topic being, "Christian Education for Life Service".

The Field Department of the Executive Council of the Diocese of Washington will assist the Bishop in raising the necessary funds to complete the quota subscribed by the Bishop to the liquidation of the deficit of the General Church, which at the time of the last General Convention amounted to about $1,500,000. The quota assumed by the Bishop of Washington amounted to $30,000 and Bishop Freeman has already, through his personal efforts, raised about $17,500. The remaining $12,500 the Bishop desires to raise through the churches, and thus complete Washington's full quota.

Lecture On Church Music: Mr. John Finley Williamson, conductor of the Dayton Westminster Choir, has held recently in Washington a series of lectures on the subject of choral Church Music, and at the same time conducted a chorus in concert, made up of the combined choirs of about forty churches and musical organizations. Mr. Williamson's lectures were inspiring and instructive and were received with earnestness and enthusiasm by the more than one hundred people attending the series of lectures, about ten Episcopal Churches being represented.

M. M. W.

NEWARK.

Rt. Rev. R. S. Lines, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, D. D., Coadjutor.

Presentation of the Lenten Offering.

The service for the presentation of the Lenten Offerings of the Church Schools was held on May 14 in Grace Church, Orange, with a very full representation from the parishes. Both Bishops and a large number of the clergy were present. The address was made by the Rev. Dr. Cameron F. McRae, of Shanghai. The offerings from one hundred and sixteen of the one hundred and fifty-three were reported as about $23,000, considerably larger than from the one hundred and forty-two schools last year, and with the assurance of a large sum when complete reports are received.

Young People's Fellowship.

The annual meeting of the Young People's Fellowship of the Diocese was held at Grace Church, Orange, the Rev. Charles T. Walkley, D. D., rector, on May 7. With both Bishops and several of the clergy in attendance, forty-five branches of the Fellowship were well represented. There are now nearly seven hundred members of the Fellowship and the outlook for its progress and usefulness is hopeful.

Christ Hospital.

The cornerstone of the new Nurses' Home of Christ Hospital, Jersey City, was placed on May 12, with a large attendance of trustees, doctors, nurses and friends. Brief addresses were made by the Bishop, Dr. Dickinson, Mrs. Wittpenn and the Hon. Marshall Van Winkle. Last year, as the result of a campaign in Jersey City and Hudson County $500,000 for Christ Hospital were given in a general subscription. About $200,000 will be used for the Nurses' Home opposite the hospital, which is now well advanced in construction. There will be thought for everything which such a building ought to contain for eighty nurses. Another a year a new wing of the hospital will be built, making a hospital of two hundred and twenty-five beds. Christ Hospital was founded in 1873, especially through the efforts of the Rev. Dr. Abercombie, rector of St. Matthew's Church. It has made a record of great usefulness and has won a place in the regard of the people of Jersey City, and a large section of the northern part of the state. The Rev. Thomas A. Hyde is the Superintendent and under him it has developed remarkably.

The annual meeting of the Women's Auxiliary of the Diocese was held on May 4, with a very large and represesentative attendance. The address was made by Mrs. Pancoast of Philadelphia.

NEW JERSEY.

Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. W. Knight, D. D., Coadjutor.

Meeting of Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

About fifty men representing a dozen Chapters, more or less, of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, met at St. Luke's, Metuchen, N. J., Sunday afternoon and evening, May 15, for their regular meeting.

The Rev. Dr. Fenton, rector of St. Luke's, officiated at the services assisted by the Rev. Mr. Martin, of Cranford, and during the conference, presided over by James W. A. Smith, of Elizabeth, a number of excellent reports of Chapters were given by their directors.

The Rev. Elliston Perot, of Linden, spoke inspiringly of many of the former leaders of the Brotherhood in the Houghteling days. At the conference in the afternoon, Mr. Randall, Associate General Secretary of the Brotherhood, made an address and also at the evening service in company with Mr. Smith, a member of the National Council.

The delegates were entertained at supper by the Young People's Fellowship of the Parish, and a profitable and delightful afternoon and evening were spent.

SOUTH FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. Cameron Mann, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J. D. Wing, D. D., Coadjutor.

Y. P. S. L. Convention.

Nearly two hundred young people, representing twenty-three congregations of the Church in South Florida, assembled in Sanford, from Friday to Sunday, May 13-15, for the purpose of organizing a Diocesan Young People's Service League.

At the opening banquet, addresses were delivered by Bishop Mann and Bishop Wing, welcoming the delegates and commending their purpose of forming a Service League within the Diocese.

On Saturday, after addresses by Mrs.

Elizabeth Fry Page, Miss Janet Howes and the Rev. Melville Johnson, Church Student Chaplain at the University of Florida, organization was effected by the adoption of a constitution and the election of officers.

Morton Nace, Trinity Church, Miami, was elected President; Virginia Gray, St. Andrew's Church, Tampa, Secretary and the Rev. Mortimer Glover, rector of the Church of the Holy Cross, Sanford, Director of Young People's Work in South Florida.

The Very Rev. Phillips S. Gilman, Dean of St. Luke's Cathedral, Orlando, on Saturday evening conducted the service of preparation for the Corporate Communion, which was celebrated the following morning at 7:30 o'clock, Bishop Wing being the celebrant and also the preacher at the mid-day service.

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. C. M. Beckwith, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, D. D., Coadjutor.

Generous Gift.

Holy Innocents, Auburn, is the recipient of the gift of five thousand dollars toward the completion of the church there. This amount was recently donated by Mrs. Matthew Scott Sloan, of Brooklyn, N. Y., whose parents and aunt were among the founders of Holy Innocents.

Auburn is the seat of Alabama Polytechnic Institute, making it necessary that the Diocese aid the small local congregation in erecting a suitable church and parish house to meet the requirements of the community and large number of Episcopal students of the Institute.

The last diocesan council espoused this undertaking, each parish and mission submitting to a pro rata apportionment for a three year period, that the building may proceed at once.

The Rev. William Byrd Lee accepted a call to this field last January, coming from Berkley-Norfolk, Va. Besides his work as rector and student pastor, he has with tireless energy visited the greater part of the diocese, in order to interest all rectors and congregations in the undertaking, demonstrating that all are sharers in its benefits.

Rural Conference.

The third rural conference of the Diocese of Alabama was held in St. John's parish house, Robertsdale, May 10-12, under the presidency of the rector, the Rev. Joseph R. Walker. Rev. E. R. Neff, of Birmingham, served as secretary. The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. J. W. Heyes, of Eufaula. Mr. Heyes later spoke on the Problems of the Country Church. The Holy Communion, Wednesday morning, was celebrated by Bishop McDowell, who made an address on the Purposes of the Rural Conference. The student chaplain and the Rural Church was discussed by the Rev. Wm. Byrd Lee, Jr., student chaplain of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn. The principal speaker of the conference was Prof. Roy J. Colbert, who, during its sessions made addresses on the Social Structure of the Community, Health and Welfare, the Nature of the Social Problems of the Community and Population Shift. These addresses were helpful and greatly enjoyed. Other speakers ably discussed various features of rural work.

The afternoon of the second day was given over to a sight-seeing tour. Ten near-by mission stations were visited. At the last of these, Bon Secour, the evening meal was provided in the nature of a fish and oyster supper. Evening Service was held at St. Peter's Church, Bon Secour, before the return to Robertsdale.

Unique Advertisement.

In the advancement of Christianity, the Rev. J. W. Heyes, rector of St. James' Church, Eufaula, has had erected a large poster facing the Central of Georgia depot, bearing a noted picture of Christ with the words, "Come unto Me, and I will give you rest". The bill board space was donated by a local advertising company, and the picture by the rector, Mr. Heyes, personally. It is a reproduction of a famous painting which won the first prize of two thousand dollars, offered by the American Advertising Company.

The picture is merely to advance the cause of Christianity, and is undenominational. It can be plainly seen by the passengers from the trains. The churches throughout the country have in recent years seen the advantage of advertising, and these posters are being extensively used for that purpose.

G. W. R.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D. Bishop

Centennial of St. Matthew's, Sunbury.

On Sunday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, May 8 to 11, St. Matthew's Parish, Sunbury, the Rev. B. Talbot Rogers, D. D., rector, celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of its organization and incorporation. Sunday was "Home Coming Day", and began with a Corporate Communion at eight o'clock. At the Church School session many of the former pupils and teachers were in attendance, and the Men's Bible Class was honored with the presence of "Mr Morrison's Boys", the men who were pupils in the Church School during the incumbency of the late Rev. Charles Morrison, who was rector of the parish from 1883 to 1906. At eleven o'clock there was a choral celebration of the Holy Communion, at which the Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D. D., a former diocesan when the parish was a constituent of the old Diocese of Central Pennsylvania, was the preacher. At the evening service the preacher was the Rev. Walter C. Pugh, a former rector of the parish, his subject being "St. Matthew's in American History".

Monday opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion. The afternoon was devoted to parish visits, and a reception at the rectory. In the evening Bishop Darlington administered Confirmation to a large class. This was followed by a reception in the school room. Tuesday's proceedings also began with a celebration of the Holy Communion, the Woman's Auxiliary of the Archdeaconry of Williamsport being guests of the parish. The church was crowded, and inspiring addresses were given by Bishop Murray, the Presiding Bishop of the Church, and by Bishop Darlington. In the afternoon the diocesan convention opened its sessions, having been specially invited to assist in the anniversary celebrations.

Beginning with a Sunday School in January, 1820, in January 1827 the parish was organized. The first services of the parish were held in the grand jury room of the Northumberland Courthouse. The first church was built largely through the indefatigable efforts of Mrs. Catherine Ogle, of Philadelphia. For at last fifty years the parish bravely struggled to survive, and finally emerged as a substantial, self-sustaining congregation. In later years the parish made steady progress until today it is one of the leading parishes of the Diocese, furnishing the Diocese and the National Church with several of its prominent laymen. St. Matthew's Church, Sunbury, is always associated in the public's mind with the names of the Rev. B. Talbot Rogers, D. D., and General Charles M. Clement, both of them familiar figures on the floor of General Convention. The present church edifice is a commodious and attractive building, one of the most churchly in the Diocese. The parish also owns a splendid parish house situated in the heart of the town.

A. A. H.

EAST CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop.

District Meeting of Woman's Auxiliary.

The Edgecomb District of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Diocese held its spring meeting in All Saints' Church, Roanoke Rapids, on May 17, and almost every available seat in the church was taken by interested Church women from near-by parishes. The Holy Communion was celebrated by the Rev. C. H. Jordan, of Weldon. Miss Rena Clark, of Tarboro, presided as chairman. Addresses were made by Miss McNaughton, head of Samracand Manor, the North Carolina home for delinquent girls; Mr. Kemp P. Lewis, a leading layman of the diocese, who discussed parish financial responsibilities; Mrs. F. S. Spruill, diocesan president of the Woman's Auxiliary; and the Rev. Theodore Partrick, Jr., who substituted for Bishop Penick, who was prevented by illness from attending. Reports from the various parish branches reflected the great activity of the women.

T. P., JR.

TEXAS.

Rt. Rev. G. H. Kinsolving, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. C. S. Quin, D. D., Coadjutor.

Reorganization of The Standing Committee.

Owing to the removal of the Rev. W. P. Witsell, D. D., for seventeen years rector of St. Paul's Church, Waco, to Christ Church, Little Rock, in the Diocese of Arkansas, the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Texas (of which Dr. Witsell was president) recently held a reorganization meeting in Houston. The Rev. Willoughby N. Claybrook, rector of Christ Church, Tyler, was elected president; the Rev. S. M. Bird, rector of Trinity Church, Marshall, was re-elected Secretary, and the Rev. George L. Crockett, rector of Christ Church, Nacogdoches, was elected to fill the vacancy upon the committee, occasioned by the removal of Dr. Witsell from the Diocese.

Any communications for the committee should be sent to the Rev. S. M. Bird, Secretary, Trinity Church, Marshall, Texas.

Family Department

May.

1. Scond Sunday after Easter, SS. Philip and James.
8. Third Sunday after Easter.
15. Fourth Sunday after Easter.
22. Fifth (Rogation) Sunday after Easter.
23, 24, 25, Rogation days.
26. Thursday, Ascension Day.
29. Sunday after Ascension Day.
31. Tuesday.

Collect for Sunday After Ascension Day.

O God, the King of Glory, Who hast exalted Thine only Son, Jesus Christ, with great triumph unto Thy kingdom in heaven; We beseech Thee, leave us not comfortless, but send to us Thine Holy Ghost to comfort us; and exalt us unto the same place whither our Saviour Christ is gone before, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

Matins.

I cannot ope mine eyes
But Thou art ready there to catch
My morning soul and sacrifice;
That we must needs for that day make a match.

My God, what is a heart?
Silver or gold or precious stone,
Or, star, or rainbow, or a part
Of all these things, or all of them in one?

My God, what is a heart?
That Thou shouldst it so eye, and woo,
Pouring upon it all Thy art,
As if that Thou hadst nothing else to do?

Indeed, man's whole estate
Amounts (and richly) to serve Thee;
He did not heav'n and earth create
Yet studies them, not Him by whom they be.

Teach me Thy love to know;
That this new light which now I see
May both the work and workman show;
Then by a sunbeam I will climb to Thee.

—George Herbert.

Carried Away by Lowly Things.

We are ambitious for high things in personal attainment and place and power, but Paul, in writing to his Roman friends, urged them to "set not your mind on high things, but be carried away with things that are lowly". The point of his strange admonition is that the things we count common and mean have in them possibilities of interest and worth that would carry us away with enthusiasm if we would only study and develop them.

We may begin at the lowest point with material things. When we see the wonderful and beautiful products of human art, we think, What means and opportunities these workers had. See the fine polished woods, the rich fabrics, the beautiful colors, the gold and silver and precious stones they had with which to work. We never could do anything because we do not have these materials; we have only common wool and wood and stone. But when we come to look more closely at these products, are they not made of common materials? At the Chicago World's Exposition there was exhibited some wonderful wood carving from Europe. Here would be a column festooned with vines and flowers and a line of angels with clasped hands lightly clinging to it and ascending to its summit, a marvel of grace and beauty all carved out of a single piece of wood. Now what was that piece of wood originally? Some rich and rare and costly wood brought from a far-away clime that only some artist of ample fortune could obtain? No, it was just a stick of common pine that could be had anywhere and by anybody. We would have thought it of no use and would have only pushed it out of our way, but that carver saw in it fruits and flowers and angels and it carried him away with enthusiasm and he wrought it into a work of art that was valued at fifteen hundred dollars. He did not set his mind on high things, costly woods, but he was carried away with things that were lowly. The same truth is illustrated in great discoveries. A man does not need to have a bar of gold or a big diamond in order to make a valuable discovery. Anything will do, if only he can see into it and be carried away with it. Here comes a man along the shore, kicking a clump of seaweed aside and crushing the silver sand under his feet. He is seeking high things and cares not for these things that are lowly. He passes out of sight: let him go. Another man comes along and picks up the seaweed. He asks, "Why do men call you a weed"? Answers the weed, "Because they do not know what is in me". The chemist shut himself up in his laboratory with that weed for months. At length he came forth and called to all the medical schools in the world, "Come, see what the seaweed has yielded us: a new balm for human pain, Iodine". Again he went to the shore and scooped up some of the silver sand. He put it in his crucible and at length took out a crystal, hard and clear as diamond. He polished it and put it in a tube and through it gazed at the fleecy nebula in Orion; when lo! four thousand stars never before seen by human eyes burst on his vision, bright, burning, beautiful, the very thoughts of God.

The same truth applies to people. We commonly think that the mass of human beings are a dull, plodding crowd and that only bright minds are worth our notice. We want to associate and work with a few choice people that we think are interesting. But all people are interesting, if we only have eyes to see their interest. Men of genius see this and base their art upon it. Ruskin says of the painter Turner: "One hour he is interested in a gust of wind blowing away an old woman's cap; the next he is painting the fifth plague of Egypt. A soldier's wife resting by the roadside is not beneath his sympathy; Rizpah watching the dead bodies of her sons not above it. Nothing can possibly be so mean that it will not interest his whole mind and carry away his whole heart."

This truth applies with special force to our means and opportunities of usefulness, our work in life. We are disposed to think that we can accomplish nothing of any worth because we have only a humble place and narrow means. If we had more money or education or an office, we might do something and be heard from, but as it is, we have no chance. Circumstances shut us in and keep us down. We are seeking high things only as a means of usefulness. But this is just what Paul intimates we need not do. Set not your mind on high things, but be carried away with things that are lowly. Study your circumstances, use the means you have and make the most of them and your work, however humble and hard, will begin to develop interest and will presently sweep you off in a current of enthusiasm. And then it will appear that your work has wide relations of usefulness and power.

The great example is Jesus Himself. He had none of the things that men count high and seek after. Born of humble human ancestry, He was brought up in an insignificant village and worked as a carpenter at the bench. When He set out on His divine mission of saving the world He had no means such as we would have wanted: He had no money, no office, no church. When He gathered a few disciples, they were not men of education and wealth, but mostly illiterate fishermen. And what kind of people did He give Himself to? Not to the rich and the great, but to the poor and lowly, to blind men, to beggars, to the woman of notorious character in Samaria. He seemed to shut Himself up in the narrowest circumstances and obscurest places and to work with the least attractive and most unpromising and repulsive kind of people. We wonder how He stood such work; we would not have the least taste for it. This is just what the disciples themselves thought when they found him talking with the woman of Samaria. And what did He say? "I have meat to eat that ye know not of. My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me, and to finish His work." That kind of work was His bread, His satisfaction, His joy, He was carried away with it.

This truth has in it the power of keeping our lives fresh, full of vitality and growth. There is a disease in our modern life which the French call ennui. It is a feeling of weariness and disgust; languor and dulness of spirits, arising from satiety or want of interest. It is emotional exhaustion. It may grow out of a life of excitement in which the senses are satiated and new shocks of sensation fail to excite any interest. Such persons are always craving some new and more startling excitement and lose all interest in ordinary things. Such excitement is not healthy, it is an intoxicant, and it burns out the emotional nature until it is a mere cinder. This sense of weariness, also, may grow out of a life of monotony and tedium in which there are no change and picturesqueness. Whatever its cause, it is one of the most depressing and miserable states of mind into which we can fall. And one of the most effective preventives and cures of this mental disease is in seeing the interest there is in common things.

Let us live a simple natural humble life, doing the work God has given us, developing the materials we have and not feverishly craving and striving after other materials we cannot have, recognizing the worth and dignity of all service, opening new mines of interest, tapping the streams of living water that are everywhere flowing around us, and life will never run dry and become a parched channel, a wearied and wearisome existence, but it will keep young and fresh, it will bear us along in a stream of enthusiasm, ever gathering new streams until it loses itself in the eternal sea. Set not your mind on high things, but be carried away with things that are lowly.—Presbyterian Banner.

For the Southern Churchman.

Memorial Day.

Mary Davis Reed.

Step gently, lest your walking mar
Their quiet slumbers;
Speak softly, lest your talking wake
The countless numbers.
Let naught disturb the restful sleep
Of those who in their dreams may keep
Glory they have won.
Let no one grieve for them as dead,
Who for their country bravely bled—
Duty nobly done.
Let no one mourn for those who died,
And left the joys of life untried—
Their work scarce begun.
The splendor of their sacrifice
Will bless their dreams, and still suffice
Till time's course is run.
Let no one weep, lest weeping break
Slumber calm and deep;
Bow humbly, for our prayers may bring
Peace, like theirs who sleep.

Answer to an Eskimo's Prayer.

The Collect for the Second Sunday in Lent has been translated into Eskimo, and has been used daily by many Eskimos. Archdeacon Goodman writes from Point Hope of an occasion when the prayer was answered for Ognapugoo, son of Oomittuk, Crucifier of St. Thomas' Mission Church and teacher in the Church school, at Point Hope, Arctic Alaska.

"He had driven many miles with his seven dogs to the reindeer herd to kill one for food. Returning, he chose a trail over the frozen Kookpuk River. At a bend in the river where the water is deep he crashed through the ice. In a moment he and his dogs were milling round in this ice hole, hoping to get a hold on the ragged edges of the ice and save themselves. But the ice kept breaking off. There was no one near to help. The dogs soon gave up, being unable to resist the heavy weight of the sled which dragged them down. Ognapugoo's strength was going, his hands were freezing, and he felt that soon he would have to give up and sink.

"Just at this time Kowmaluk, son of Kowunna, came along with his dogs and sled. Hastily he seized a seal line from his sled, making it into a noose as he ran towards the sinking Ognapugoo. He approached the hole by lying flat and crawling on the thin ice until he was near enough to throw the seal line. The drowning boy was able to grasp it and get it over his shoulders. Wearily and slowly Kowmaluk crawled towards the river bank, drawing Ognapugoo out of a watery grave. Kowmaluk took off some of his clothes and wrapped his friend in them and then drove many miles to the nearest igloo, where Oknapugoo could get warm and dry his frozen clothes.

"Dogs, sled and deer meat were lost, but the mission gave thanks that God spared Ognapugoo and answered the oft-repeated prayer."

For the Southern Churchman.

Labels.

Louis Deschamps.

Critics of human nature are too easily deceived by a system of classifying people by a few outstanding characteristics contrasted with the observers' ideas of what they should be. If a certain virtue is found missing, the corresponding fault is at once apparent to such a degree that the individual is so labeled. The habit of labeling people is not only superficial, but harmful both to the person labeled and to the person who thus acquires the easy habit of passing judgment. In the wisdom of God all people have not the same virtues nor faults. Unless there is care in character study, the observer will find that he is losing faith in human nature because of skill in finding faults in others. The tendency to find faults rather than virtues is often due to a malicious conceit that enjoys the suggestion of another's supposed inferiority. There is also a current theory of worldly wisdom that dictates a suspicious attitude as a defense against being deceived. The greatest cause is thoughtlessness.

There is a service in life for each of the individual virtues that seem so widely different. If all trees were sturdy oaks, there would be no fruit. The mines should not be closed because some men prefer spectacular mountain peaks to tunnels. The phlegmatic is as necessary as the temperamental nature. To lose faith in human nature is to become one of a wolf pack. The more one looks for human wolves, the more people resemble wolves. It is because the attention is fixed upon wolf-like qualities. There are very few critics, proud of their shrewd judgment of people's faults, who do not feel a pang of desolating loneliness at heart. The life of a critic is not a happy one. To know others as classified types rather than complex personalities and potential friends may make the critic wise in his own conceit, but his soul is warped. Each individual is such a combination of good and bad that no one can classify another accurately in the final and complete way it is usually done. Uncharitable and hostile thoughts, once persisted in, are easily believed. The so-called "snap" judgment is thoughtless and selfish. An individual is too complicated a puzzle to be solved so readily. It is good to realize that we are all human, with common joys and woes. Our little span of life is too short to spend in hostile suspicion of each other. Differences in condition and opinion, interests and ideals, prevent congeniality; but need not make enemies. Suspicion breeds suspicion, and people become hostile by a mysterious mental electricity that charges the air with mutual dislike. The entire attention is focussed on some difference or fault, until a prejudice is established which interprets every experience with each other in a particular way.

Sometimes a great disaster or common danger breaks the spell of individualism, and enemies discover that they are not justified in their hatred. Before condemning any one in the court of our opinion, it is necessary to be sure that such false witnesses as envy, suspicion and prejudice are not present. The first step in obeying the New Commandment is to learn how to combat malice so easily held one toward another.

The Antidote.

"Don't tell Dorothy anything about the feud, please, mother," said Mrs. Perkins appealingly as she and her husband boarded the train which was to separate them from their seven-year-old daughter. The little girl was to spend two months at her father's boyhood home and Mrs. Perkins well knew that the mental atmosphere of the town was not at all in keeping with its natural beauty and charming climate.

Several weeks later Dorothy was talking to her doll on the back porch while her grandmother, and her Uncle Alfred, just home from college, were sitting within hearing and smiling together at her prattle.

"Oh, no! Phyllis," the little voice piped up suddenly, "you must not play with the little girl next door and you must not ask me why. No, she is not sick. Maybe she is naughty, 'cause we mustn't even smile at her. I wish she was good, 'cause she has a nice dolly and a carriage like yours. You would look nice riding out together. I think we could have lots of fun."

Alfred's face had changed.

"For goodness' sake, mother!" he exclaimed in disgust. "Has another generation imbibed the poison?"

"Poison?"

"Yes, the poison of ignorant bigotry and hatred."

"Shame on you, Alfred! Dorothy doesn't know the meaning of the word 'hatred', and nothing has been said to her about the feud. Of course I had to keep her away from the Morrisons."

"Why, mother?"

"Ask me that, after all these years, Alfred?"

"That is just it, mother. Why perpetuate the quarrel year after year and generation after generation? Why feed it to Dorothy?"

"Alfred, I told you I said nothing to Dorothy about it. I only told her not to talk to Mr. Morrison's grandchild. Dorothy asked if she might smile at her and I said, 'No, you'd better not'."

"And of course Dorothy put her own construction on the prohibition just as other generations of children have done. She has taken only a small attenuation of the poison, but it has begun to do its work. Cousin Everett is an example of what large doses administered regularly from infancy to manhood will do to a really fine nature. It was just before the Prom Dance that he said to me in an unusually confidential moment, 'None of the girls have any use for me—nor the fellows either'. It seemed kind to be frank with him. 'Do you know why?' I asked. 'You habitually appear morose, opinionated, intolerant and suspicious. It is the poison of the spirit of hatred always rife in our town.' 'You breathed the same atmosphere,' he said a bit resentfully. 'I had an antidote,' I answered. I had a wiser mother than he, but I did not like to tell him that. I told him about the summers that I spent with Grandfather Rollins when I was ten and eleven.

"I guess grandfather realized what I was up against in our town. He made no mention of it, however, but he kept me with him constantly, feeding me on stories from secular and sacred history that illustrated nobility, tolerance and magnanimity. But it was not only the commendable act to which he drew my attention. He showed me that wrongdoing was usually the result of weakness, and we spoke not of bad men and good men, but of weak men and strong men. I learned that the strong should have compassion for the weak, that the strong were themselves susceptible to moments of weakness and the weak at times showed surprising strength. He searched for exhibitions of strength in the weak characters of history, and these always led us to wish they might have had the help they needed in their times of weakness.

"Then grandfather would point out distant objects to me from the plain, the hilltop and the valley, and afterwards we came upon them from different angles. In this way, with his help, I learned the meaning of 'point of view' and also the wisdom of suspended judgment.

"Those summer experiences were a wonderful antidote, mother, for the poison of a feud. I guess we fellows take most of the good things that come to us as a matter of course, but I really have been grateful for my grandfather."—Jane Carpenter.

For the Young Folks

A Deaf Boy's Prayer.

He was such a little tot,
The youngest in the school year,
And as he knelt beside his cot,
I drew near that I might hear
What his baby lips were saying,
For I saw that he was praying.
Only three words, the names of his toys,
Had he been taught to say.
But he had watched the other boys
As they knelt each night to pray:
And his little soul in darkness bound,
Was seeking the light the others had found.
Surely on breath of angels borne,
The prayer he uttered ascended above,
And the Christ, who pitied the lamb new shorn,
Looked down on the child with wondrous love.
These words I heard, all that he knew,
"A fish, a top, a shoe".

—Pauline B. Camp.

For the Southern Churchman.

LITTLE TALKS ABOUT THE BEST FRIEND.

Jesus the King.

M. L. G.

When the Wise Men came to worship the Child Jesus at Bethlehem they brought gifts for a king. Yet through the thirty-three years He lived here on earth He was a poor man, working with His hands for His daily bread, until He began to go about preaching the gospel of the kingdom. Then He had not where to lay His head, and He lived most humbly, sharing the life of His village companions. He never restored the kingdom to Israel. He left His country as He found it, a province of Rome.

Yet when He ascended from the hillside of Olivet and those friends of His, who had hoped to be great men in an earthly kingdom, walked back to Jerusalem without Him, they "returned with joy". For now they began to see what He had so often tried to show them—His kingdom was to be within them. No throne is His on earth but the heart of His friends, no flag but the banner of His love over them.

To the children of this country the thought of being subject to a king is strange. We prize our independence, so bravely won. We would not trust ourselves or our country to the power of one man for a lifetime. But here is a King whose service is perfect freedom and whose law is love. The greatest earthly title confers less honor than to be, as Paul proudly called himself, "a servant of Jesus Christ".

And not servants only we are, but friends, as He said Himself, and fellow-workers. It is ours to spread the good news and to help bring on the time when the kingdoms of this world "shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ.

"And He shall reign for ever and ever."

The Purr-Adventure: A Kitten Tale.

Once upon a time there was a White Kitten who went out into the Wide World to seek his fortune. He sought far and wide and hither and yon, but not a bit of a fortune did he find; only an old black Witch-Cat with yellow eyes like brass buttons.

"Good morning, madam," said the White Kitten, and purred graciously. His mother had taught him to be polite; and the politest thing a kitten can do, as every one knows, is to purr. "Can you tell me, madam, where in the Wide World I can find my fortune?"

"Good morning, White Kitten," said the Witch-Cat. "That I cannot. But one thing I can tell you: you have a lovely purr. My own purr is quite worn out and useless. Suppose you give me yours."

And before you could say Jack Robinson she had taken the White Kitten's purr and had thrown her own to the Four Winds of Heaven.

"Oh, please!" cried the White Kitten, in dismay. "You may have my purr, and welcome, but please don't throw yours away! Give it to me—do! A worn-out purr is better than no purr at all!"

But he spoke too late. The Four Winds of Heaven had already carried the Witch-Cat's purr beyond the White Kitten's reach. The Witch-Cat tried the White Kitten's purr to see how it worked; and indeed, being very new and always properly cared for, it worked beautifully.

The White Kitten sat down on his small back legs and stared at the Witch-Cat and listened to the rumble of his purr in the Witch-Cat's throat. Finally, "Please," said the White Kitten, "how am I to get along in the Wide World without my purr?"

The White Kitten felt very badly about this; but those who go seeking their fortunes have no time to cry; so he got to his four feet and trotted on again.

The next thing he met in the Wide World was a Bottle of Cream.

"This is indeed fortunate," said the White Kitten to himself, "for I am hungry and thirsty."

He approached the Bottle of Cream, intending to say politely, "Please, sir, may I slake my thirst"? But, alas! he could not be polite; he had no purr. Therefore he mewed instead; and to mew is very rude. It was as if the White Kitten had said, "Hey! Gimme a drink"!

"Hoity-hoity!" said the Bottle of Cream. "Such manners! Indeed, and you shall not drink from me. I'll turn first." And the Bottle of Cream turned on the spot.

The White Kitten drew back quickly. Hungry as he was, he could not drink curdled cream.

"Oh, dear me!" said he. "I have found no fortune, I have lost my purr, and I am very hungry. What shall I do?"

But he had not yet traversed all the Wide World; so he took heart and trotted on again.

It was cold and uncomfortable in the Wide World, because the Four Winds of Heaven were blowing as hard as they were able. They were tossing the Witch-Cat's purr from one to another, and enjoyed the sport immensely. But the White Kitten did not enjoy it at all. He was very tired and very hungry and quite discouraged. Finally he came to a little cottage with a doorway so small that all the Four Winds of Heaven couldn't blow into it at once; and there the White Kitten curled up. So tired was he that he fell asleep at once and slept a long, long while.

"Why, bless my soul, it's a White Kitten!"

The White Kitten opened his eyes in astonishment. Standing in the door before him was a Little Old Lady. She wore a dust-cap; her skirts were pinned up around her waist; and in her hand she held a broom, for this Little Old Lady was doing her early morning housework and had opened the door to sweep off the step.

The White Kitten jumped to his feet, and to show that he had been taught to be polite, even though he had lost his purr, he rubbed his back against the Little Old Lady's petticoats.

"White Kitten," said the Little Old Lady, "you must be cold and hungry. Won't you come in?"

The White Kitten was very glad to come in.

"Kitten," said the Little Old Lady, "would you like something to eat?"

The White Kitten arched his back and rubbed a second time against the Little Old Lady's petticoats. And that, as perhaps you know, is about the politest way in which a cat can say, "Please, I am very hungry".

The Little Old Lady went to her pantry and fetched the White Kitten a bowl of milk. When he had drunk all he could hold, the Little Old Lady took him on her lap and said:

"White Kitten, I am very lonely, and for many years I have been wanting a kitten. A great many cats stop at my door on their journeys through the Wide World, and I give them a good meal, and treat them kindly, and always hope that perhaps one of them will stay with me. But they all go back again into the Wide World."

The Little Old Lady wiped tears from her eyes with her pocket handkerchief, and continued:

"I will tell you why they leave me, and then perhaps you will leave me, too. I am quite deaf, and no cat likes to live with a mistress who cannot hear him when he purrs. As his purr is the most important thing about a cat, I'm sure I don't blame them at all. Now, if you want to go, I shall not try to keep you."

Of course the White Kitten made up his mind then and there to stay forever. And all his life long he was never sorry again that the Witch-Cat had stolen his purr; for with the Little Old Lady who was quite deaf and could hear nothing he had the very finest home in the Wide World.—Youth's Companion.

For the Southern Churchman.

The Lunatic's Lion.

Louis Tucker.

Once upon a time there was a lion who dined with an African explorer and criticized his boots. They were yellow boots with hobnails, and the lion thought they showed bad taste. After dinner the lion and the explorer took a nap together, and when the lion woke he saw a box of chocolate creams that the explorer had dropped out of his pocket during dinner-time, so he ate them for dessert. They were chocolate creams and the lion licked them so much that he went to look for another explorer; but he could not find any. So he went to the nearest place where there were white men, which happened to be a mission station, and there he ate two converts and a native catechist before the missionary could explain to him that they wished him to go away. The missionary explained with a rifle, and after the lion got well he never went to church again.

The next place he tried was a railroad station, for the land where he lived was back of Mozambique, where they are building a railroad to Nyanza. The station agent, who was a Hindu, telegraphed the lion's name and address and then climbed the telegraph pole; so the lion had the station porter for dinner and came away. After that he explored a great many places and tasted a great many people, but he never could find anybody that tasted like chocolate creams.

At last, one very late afternoon he joined a picnic party and met a fluffy little girl. The little girl had stopped to tie up her stocking and so she did not see him join the party; and the party had all run away screaming, which the little girl thought was a joke, so they did not see her meet the lion. He was lying down by the tablecloth in the grass when she saw him. so she could not tell how very big he was and she thought he was just a great, large poodle dog that had got covered with yellow dust.

The lunatic lion was very much astonished because she walked up to him; so he wagged his tail as a cat does when a mouse comes out of its hole. Now the little girl was carrying a box of chocolate creams for her share of the picnic. So while she still thought the lion was a dog she gave him one. He knew the taste and begged for another and another, and when the little girl saw it was a lion she was too scared to run and had to go on giving him chocolate creams.

Just then her father slipped out of the bushes with a great big elephant rifle, for the rest of the picnic had run and told him. So he coughed and the lion looked round, and the little girl's father shot him quite, quite dead. So now she wears his skin on her bedroom floor for a rug; and she is so pretty that everybody says he must have been a lunatic lion to give up eating little girl for the sake of chocolate creams.

"This Little Pig Said 'Wee, Wee, Wee'."

Mother had just tucked Baby Buddy away for a nap after his bath, and Mary Lou had counted his rosy toes. Now she danced about, chanting the old, old nonsense that has been told to babies' pink toes since the time old Mother Goose told it to her youngest little gosling:

"This little pig went to market,
This little pig stayed at home;
This little pig had roast beef,
This little pig had none.
This little pig said, 'Wee, wee, wee!
I can't find my way home'!"

Out of the kitchen door down the path skipped Mary Lou with a pail of potato parings, over the puddles left by the fast-melting snow. Oh, but the sun felt nice and warm! And oh, but it was fun to be out of doors after so much snowy shut-inness!

Little Red Calf went hop-skippety-jump across the barnyard when he saw Mary Lou, and the only way he knew how to say "Hello" was a funny "Ma-a-a"!

Father was washing the flivver truck and whistling. He and mother were going to town, and Mary Lou expected a pink lollypop and new tan shoes when they came home. She reminded father, and declared: "If they don't squeak you'll have to take them back."

"Upon my word!" twinkled father. "Whoever heard of a girl wanting a pink lollypop that would squeak!"

Mary Lou wiggled and giggled over this and skipped on with her pail of potato parings.

"We, wee, wee!" came the shrill squeak of her own little fat pig in his pen. He was not politely wishing her good morning. Not at all. If pigs were polite—well, they wouldn't be pigs.

"What have you brought me to eat?" That is what Weeny Pig called to the little girl who fed him, rubbed his pink back and laughed at his quirly tail.

Weeny gobbled the potato parings, but he wasn't satisfied. When Mary Lou was bending over to rub him and not thinking, that greedy piglet made a grab for the red apple in her hand. Gobble-ob! That was the end of the apple—core, seeds and all.

Mary Lou just laughed. Then she filled up the new hole Weeny had been rooting at all morning with his pink nose. He didn't care if he was all dirty; goodness, no! If he had cared about being dirty—well, he wouldn't have been a pig. Weeny was always digging a hole so he could get out and make a nuisance of himself, and maybe see more of the world. And Mary Lou was always filling the holes up.

Sister Lucy called to Mary Lou to come and have her dinner after awhile. Mother and father would be gone all day, but Sister Lucy was so big and so smart she could iron and sew and take care of the baby, easy as anything. But she didn't always keep an eye on Mary Lou, as you shall see.

"My, but it's thawing fast!" cried Sister Lucy once when she went across to the spring-house for butter and cream. "The roads are like rivers. You must put on your boots, Mary Lou, before you play out or gather the eggs."

Well, that was all right. Mary Lou loved her little rubber boots. But when she went sloshing and sploshing toward the chicken-yard she heard the wildest squealing. She looked past the barn and oh, how she ran! She squealed herself, for little rivers of muddy water were trickling down the slope straight to the pig-pen.

Poor Weeny was up to his roly-poly tummy in cold, yellow water, and wasn't he a scared little piglet! Mary Lou sloshed right into the pen and gathered the little squealer up in her arms.

"Oh, poor Weeny! Mary Lou will take you where it's warm and dry. Don't cry, Weeny!"

For once Weeny minded. He didn't let out a single cross "wee, wee", and Mary Lou was sure his teeth chattered as she started sqush-mush toward the barn with him. Then she had a better idea.

Lucy might not like it, but Mary Lou would explain. She poked her head into the kitchen, puffing. Whir-r-r! That was Sister Lucy sewing upstairs. That made it easy. Mary Lou hunted up that old, faded blanket of Buddy's and wrapped Weeny in it. Then she placed him on a saggy old sofa in the corner where it was sort of warm and sort of dark.

"Coo-oo!" Goody! That was her friend Martha from down the road, and she had come in rubber boots, so they had the jolliest time splashing in the puddles and making believe they were at the seashore. They stared with round eyes when a shiny new car stopped under the cottonwoods.

"Why, it's the new preacher!" gasped Martha. "What'll we do?"

"Just tell him mother's gone, and he'll prob'ly leave his card and go ahead." Mary Lou gave her shrinking courage a hitch and ran to greet the dignified visitor. But he was not inclined to leave his card and go. He wanted to speak to Sister Lucy. Something about having her take charge of the primary class, he explained to Mary Lou as she piloted him inside. Not even in the best front room would he stop, but made a bee-line for the kitchen. Sister Lucy was there feeding the baby. The caller was in no hurry, and pleasantly said he would sit down a few minutes.

"Do," invited Lucy hospitably. "I'll get you some milk and fresh gingerbread." Mary Lou and Martha, preparing for flight, wavered. Gingerbread. The preacher was just sitting down on the comfy old sofa. Then—everybody jumped at once. There was the most awful squealing. Up hopped the visitor, and out on the floor rolled an indignant, disturbed little piglet.

Oh, you should have seen Sister Lucy's face! Mary Lou explained fast and scared, and darted after Weeny, who capered round and round the kitchen squealing: "Wee, wee, wee! I can't find my way home!"

Then that dignified preacher just laughed and laughed till he had to take off his tortoise shells and wipe his eyes. And Sister Lucy was so relieved she began to laugh, and that made Baby Buddy crow, and everybody had the most fun!

After Weeny was shut in the barn where he belonged, Mary Lou came back and joined the gingerbread party, and by the time the preacher left they were so well acquainted that Mary Lou told him the joke about the pink lollypop that must squeak.—Exchange.

For the Southern Churchman.

What a Crocus Saw.

M. A. Norman.

A dear little Crocus popped out of the ground
And said, "It is Springtime! I've looked all around,
There're daffodils budding and narcissus white;
The world will soon be a most beautiful sight.

There's Bleeding Heart sighing, and coming along
She makes my heart ache, though it seems like a song
When she bursts into bloom; indeed I could sing
To see the wee bleeding hearts on a green string.

But I'll have to hurry, it's growing late now,
To Flowering Almond and Clove Bush I'll bow;
Sweet Lilac is dressed in beautiful green,
When in bloom she's the loveliest sight to be seen.

And many more beautiful friends I could note.
I'm a lovely soft pink, with a creamy white throat;
I'm sleepy, I'm drooping, I'm closing, that's all,
I've slipped away down, in a tiny brown ball.

Always Do Your Best.

"When I was a little boy," said a gentleman one day to a friend with whom he was talking, "I paid a visit to my grandfather. He was an aged man, and wore a black velvet cap, and knee breeches, with large silver buckles at the knees. When I went to say good-by to him he took me between his knees, kissed me kindly, then, laying his hand on my head, he said, 'My dear boy, I have only one thing to say. Will you try to remember it'? I looked him in the face and said, 'I will, grandpa'. 'Well,' said he, 'it is this—What you have to do, always do the best you can.' This was my grandfather's legacy to me. It was worth more than thousands of gold and silver. I never forgot his words, and have always tried to act upon them."—Selected.

Classified Advertising and Notices

All notices and advertisements, excepting positions wanted, will be inserted in this department at a rate of 20 cents per agate line, each insertion. Special rates to contracts of any length. A rate of 15 cents per line is made to persons seeking positions. No advertisement accepted for less than 50 cents.

Copy for this department must be received not later than Tuesday of the week in which it is intended that the first insertion shall appear.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO LEPER MISSION FEBRUARY 1ST TO MAY 1, 1927.

Mr. H. M. Kendall, Richmond, Va.	$ 7.00
Miss M. T. Bargamin, Richmond, Va.	3.00
Presbyterian, Baptist and Methodist Churches, Waynesboro, Va. (Pete Banks)	46.41
For Pete	.04
Woman's Auxiliary, Diocese of Virginia	46.50
Alexandria, St. Paul's...$13.00
Berryville, Grace 15.50
Marshall, Trinity ..... 5.00 (Canal ZZone)
Oak Grove, St, Peter's... 5.00
Richmond, St. Thomas .. 5.00
The Plains, Grace 3.00
	$46.50
Mrs. Maria B. Walker, Farmville, Va.	5.00
Mrs. Langbourne Williams, Richmond, Va. (support of Leper)	25.00
Mrs. Randolph Williams, Richmond, Va.	5.00
Mrs. Frederick Hahr, Petersburg, Va.	25.00
Peterkin Branch, Woman's Auxiliary, Zion Church, Charles Town, West Va.	25.00
St. Mark's Bible Class, Richmond, Va. (Pete Bank)	1.10
Mrs. L. L. Nottingham, Sr., Culpeper, Va.	2.00
Mrs. D. C. T. Davis, Warsaw, Va..	2.00
Mrs. B. L. Strother, Washington, Va.	5.00
Mrs. J. J. Spratley, Smithfield, Va..	20.00
Mrs. J. F. Spalding, Denver, Colorado	5.00
March Meeting at Ascension Church, Highland Park, Richmond, Ba....	29.85
Miss Diana M. Todd, Smithfield, Va.	5.00
Master Varian Crawgey, Wytheville, Va. (Pete Bank)	2.00
Miss Florence Stacy, Richmond, Va.	1.00
Mrs. Annie Coleman, Richmond, Va.	.50
The Camp—E. P. M.	1.00
Mrs. T. W. Meriwether—Miss Evelyn Meriwether and Friends, Madison, Conn	16.00
Mrs. H. N. Mordecai, Richmond, Va.	1.00
Sunday School First Presbyterian Church, Richmond, Va.	30.00
Dr. W. B. Lorraine (Support of Rhogu of Ranigaj, India) Through Sunday School First Presbyterian Church, Richmond, Va.	20.00
Miss Gabriella Hunter, Richmond, Va. (In memory of her mother).	5.00
Stewart Bible Class—Sunday school Grace Covenant Church, Richmond, Va. (Support Leper Child, Dr. Wilson's Hospital, Korea)..	16.00
Mrs. Charles Warren, Smithfield, Va.	2.00
Mrs. Jackson, Richmond, Va.....	1.00
Mrs. J. A. Kratz, Richmond, Va...	5.00
Good Shepherd Mission Sunday School, Bluemont, Va. (Birthday Offerings)	6.00
Millwood, Va., Branch—Support of Leper in Korea, from Wickham Byrd, Long Beach, California...	25.00
Mrs. H. H. Edmunds, Halifax, Va..	3.00
Total	$392.40

Our final meeting until November was held at Mayo Memorial on May 11, 1927, with Rev. C. Stanley Vaughan, from Manamadura, India, as the speaker. Mrs. Vaughan, M. D., who has charge of a hospital there, was prevented by sickness from keeping her appointments in Richmond, much to our regret.

Mrs. R. R. Harrison will give $1,500.00 to Rev. Mr. Vaughan to build a church for the lepers at his station in India, which they greatly long for; the proceeds from the Pete Banks of which she has charge.

All contributions gratefully acknowledged by

MISS EVELYN P. MERIWETHER,
President and Treasurer, Richmond Branch Leper Mission, 2346 West Grace Street, Richmond, Virginia.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

PIPE ORGANS.

If the purchase of an organ is contemplated, address HENRY PILCHER'S SONS, INC., Louisville, Kentucky, who manufacture the highest grade at reasonable prices. Particular attention given to designing organs for memorials.

ANTIQUES.

WE PAY THE HIGEST CASH PRICES for old-time furniture and antiques of all kinds. H. C. Valentine, 209 East Franklin Street. Richmond, Va.

CHURCH LINEN.

PURE IRISH LINEN at wholesale prices for Church Guilds, Rectors and others. Also Handkerchiefs. Samples on request.

MARY FAWCETT.
115 Franklin St., New York City.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS—CARDS.

CHURCH EMBROIDERIES, SILK AND LINEN. Imported religious cards for all occasions. G. L. Bender, 7421 Boyer St., Mt. Airy, Philadelphia, Pa.

STAINED GLASS

JAMES POWELL & SONS (Whitefriars), Ltd., London, England—Stained Glass. Designs and estimates submitted on receipt of full particulars. Distributor ADRIAN A. BUCK, 665 Fifth Ave., New York City.

FOR RENT.

COMFORTABLE ROOM, VERY REASONABLE. Object to have some one in the house. If necessary will furnish breakfast reasonably. Address Miss T. C. Gordon, 1304 Main Street, Fredericksburg, Va.

BOARDING.

WANTED, IN COUNTRY HOME IN Northern Neck of Virginia, six or eight children to board; ages five to thirteen years. References given and required. Address Mrs. C. T. Peirce, "The Oaks", Nuttsville, Va.

MEETING OF TRUSTEES.

THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia will meet at the Seminary on Wednesday the 8th day of June, 1927, at noon.

S. SCOLLAY MOORE,
May 5, 1927. Secretary.

RIVERCREST FARM

An Ideal Place to Spend Your Vacation

Beautifully located on New River in Heart of Southwest Virginia. One and one-half miles from Railroad and Lee Highway. Fine for Fishing and Swimming. Always cool. Good food and beds. Rates reasonable. Apply

MRS. W. C. JENNINGS
Draper, Virginia

FOR RENT.

JUNE 15 TO SEPTEMBER 15, TWC cool apartments, modern, completely furnished:
6 rooms .....$100 per month
5 rooms .....$ 90 per month
407 and 415 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y. For further information write Mrs. W. T. Renison, 415 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

—CATHEDRAL STUDIOS—
Washington London.

Church Embroideries and Vestments, Silks, Fringes, Gold thread, Stoles with crosses from $7.60, Burse and veil from $15, Surplices and exquisite Altar Linens, Church vestments imported for the Churches free of duty.

MISS L. V. MACKRILLE,
11 W. Kirke St., Chevy Chase, Washington, D. C. D. C. Telephone Cleveland 52.

SITUATION WANTED.

POSITION WANTED BY WOMAN OF mature years in Deaconess orders; executive position in school or mission as teacher of Household Economics, nurse, housemother, chaperon, or household management. Excellent References. Address "Deaconess", 1002 W. 17th St., Anniston, Ala.

WANTED, POSITION AS PARISH VISITor, mother's assistant, or companion, by an Episcopal Southern lady. Address "A, L.", 1823 Prytania Street, New Orleans, La.

POSITION WANTED AS COMPANION, OR secretary, by cheerful, capable, refined lady; willing to travel and be useful. References. Address "E. G.", 2027 P Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

HELP WANTED

WANTED, IN CHURCH SCHOOL FOR boys, trained nurse for session beginning September 15, 1927. Address X, Y. Z. care of Southern Churchman, giving age and references.

WANTED, A WOMAN WORKER FOR A Mountain Mission. State experience and give reference. Address "A. S. F.", care of Southern Churchman.

Deaths

PURCELL: CHARLES WILLIAM, in Huntington, West Va., May 5, 1927, son of the late Samuel H. and Elisabeth A. Purcell, of Albemarle county, Va. His widow, two children, three brothers, two sisters and devoted friends are left.

"He asked life of Thee, and Thou gavest him a long life, even for ever and ever."

MILLER: Died, in Wilmington, Del., on May 6, 1927, ELIZA H. MILLER, in her 84th year; daughter of Robert H. and Anna Miller, of Alexandria, Va.

MRS. ROBERT CARR BLOCK.

Died, suddenly in Paris, France, on May 4th, ANNE SCOTT BLOCK, Diocesan Directress of the Altar Department of the Woman's Auxiliary, Diocese of Los Angeles, and devoted member of St. James Church, South Pasadena, California. Funeral services were held at the American Church in Paris on May 6th, the interment taking place at her old home, St. Louis, Missouri.

Grant her, O Lord, eternal rest, and may light perpetual shine upon her.

GEORGE DOWNMAN EDMONDS.

On January 4, 1927, GEORGE DOWNMAN EDMONDS died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. B. G. Baldwin, Glasgow, Rockbridge county, Va. He was born January 5, 1844, in Fauquier county, so was 83 years old. He was the son of Thomas W. Edmonds and Olivia Beale his wife, whose home was near Warrenton, Va., and was the last living member of a devoted band of sisters and brothers, and was also among the few survivors now left of "the brave soldiers who wore the gray", having at the age of 18 years joined the Confederate Army (C. S. A.) in The Valley of Virginia. On September 1, 1862, becoming a member of the "Black Horse Company H", Fourth Virginia Cavalry, under Colonel William C. Wickham and Captain Robert Randolph. A year later in September, 1863, the gallant young soldier was severely wounded, losing an arm, and upon recovering he joined Mosby and as First Lieutenant served to help defend his native State Virginia until the close of the war.

After the war was over George Downman Edmonds settled in Stafford county, Va., where he met and married Frances Isabella Towson. They led a long and happy life together, she having been called away from him by death only one year ago. They raised two sons and two daughters and lived to enjoy their grandchildren. They were both zealous and useful members of the Episcopal Church and always loyal to its teachings. George Downman Edmonds will be sadly missed by his children and grandchildren and his many friends and relatives, who loved him, and in the passing of his soul to God we feel that one more dear old Confederate soldier has answered his last Roll Call and gone to join his comrades in Heaven, where there is peace and joy forevermore in the Presence of "The Captain of their Salvation" Jesus Christ, who has said:

"Because I live, ye shall live also."

D. M. G.

IN MEMORIAM.

Entered into Life Eternal, March 14, 1927, MISS XARIFA MASON HOOE, aged ninety.

Born at Montchene, King George County, Virginia, she was the daughter of Lieutenant George Mason Hooe, United States Navy, and Elizabeth Mason Grymes Hooe, who were first cousins, and great-grandchildren of George Mason of Gunston Hall, Fairfax County, Va., the Author of the Virginia Bill of Rights.

Her father died of yellow fever on his return voyage in 1845, aboard U. S. S. Vandalia, and was buried at sea. He had two brothers, Lieutenant Robert Emmet Hooe, U. S. Navy, and Captain Alexander Seymour Hooe, U. S. Army, who was distinguished in the Mexican War.

After the Civil War Miss Hooe lived in Washington; later she returned to King George County, Va., to "Lauerdale", the home of her first cousin and dear friend, Mrs. Lucy Barnes Hooe, with whom she lived—ministering to her in her last illness with a sister's love; and by her side she now sleeps, in the family lot in St. John's Church Yard, in King George County, Va.

Miss Hooe entered the Louise Home in Washington in 1904 and enjoyed the blessings of Mr. Corcoran's generous forethought, where "he being dead, yet speaketh".

She was a devoted member of Epiphany Church and none present at her funeral at the Louise Home can ever forget the beautiful and touching services, conducted by her rector, the Rev. Dr. Phillips. The committal service was read in St. John's Church Yard, King George county, Va., by Rev. Mr. Cartright. She is survived by many relatives, among them Mrs. James Boggs, Dr. and Mrs. A. Barnes Hooe; Mr. and Mrs. Rice Hooe; Dr. R. Arthur Hooe and Miss Medora Hooe, of Washington, D. C. Also Mrs. Alice Ashton Fitzhugh and Mrs. Lucy Pratt Ashton Ninde, of Virginia.

Near the closing of Miss Hooe's life came the death of a specially beloved member of her family, a young girl who had just graduated at "Gunston Hall", and had taken the highest honor the School confers; and it is fitting to commemorate together, these two, so closely connected by the ties of love and relationship, who were so far apart in age and life's experience.

The older was an example of Christian faith, courage, and patience; after a long, unselfish, useful life.

The younger was Margaret Hooe, a flower just coming into the bloom of early womanhood, who died February 16, 1926, daughter of Dr. A. Barnes Hooe and Mrs. Eliza Mitchell Hooe, of Washington, D. C.

As the older woman had learned in patient acquiescence to her Father's will, the blessing of His peace—so the young girl (just as she had loved and trusted her earthly parents) resigned her young life into the hands of her Heavenly Father, and for them both "death was swallowed up in Victory". Together they rejoice in the Presence of their Lord.

(Signed) "M. W. M."

MRS. ELIZABETH MINOR LEWIS.

On May 12th, at "Strawberry Hill", Richmond, Va., the home of her son, Hunter Lewis, Esq., MRS. ELIZABETH MINOR LEWIS passed to her great reward.

Elizabeth Morris Minor was the daughter of Dr. James Hunter Minor, of "Music Hall", and widow of Robert Walker Lewis, Esq., of "Castalia".

Six children survive their beloved mother: Hunter, Hanson, Roy, Robert, Miss Mary Minor and Mrs. Elizabeth Evans.

"And behold her children shall rise up and call her blessed."

The interment was in Oakwood, where her husband and three children already sleep.

"And so for me there is no sting of death,
And so the grave has lost its victory.
It is but crossing—with a bated breath
And white, set face—a little strip of sea,
To find the loved ones waiting on the shore,
More beautiful, more precious than before."

MRS. CAMPBELL W. BLUE.

Coming as a shock to her family and many friends was the news of the sudden death on May 2d at Martinsburg, West Va., of MRS. CAMPBELL WARD BLUE, formerly Miss Eliza M. Hoge, Wheeling, W. Va.

Mrs. Blue had gone with friends on the Thursday before to the Apple Blossom Festival at Winchester, Va., for the day. Returning, they had stopped at Martinsburg for supper and shortly after, while apparently in the best of health and spirits, she was stricken with hemorrhage of the brain. Taken to the King's Daughters Hospital at Martinsburg, everything possible was done for her, but to no avail, and after three days of unconsciousness, the "spirit fled".

Mrs. Blue was a great favorite because of her bright disposition and happy ways. Always ready to help a friend in need or trouble she brought cheer by her very presence and smile. She had many friends both in Wheeling, where she was a lifelong member of St. Matthew's Parish, and in Jefferson county, where she had lived ever since her marriage in 1912 to Mr. Campbell W. Blue, of Hampshire county, W. Va.

Services were held at the home, "Aspen Hill", near Charles Town, by the Rev. Hunter Davidson, of Martinsburg, where "Lead Kindly Light" and "In the Hour of Trial" were beautifully sung by members of Zion Church Choir of Charles Town. Interment was made at the cemetery at Shepherdstown, where amid the fragrance of the apple blossoms she loved so well, this dearly loved mother, wife and sister was laid to rest.

Mrs. Blue was the youngest daughter of the late Wm. V. Hoge, Wheeling, W. Va., and besides her husband and two little daughters, Judith and Josephine, is survived by four sisters and two brothers, Mrs. Charles E. Blue and George P. Hoge, of Charlottesville, Va., Mrs. Virginia H. Kendall, of Chicago, Misses Florence, Ellen D. and Wm. V. Hoge, Jr., of Wheeling. Also by an aunt and uncle, Miss Eliza M. Hoge and Mr. Lucius Hoge, of Wheeling.

"Father in Thy gracious keeping Leave we now Thy servant sleeping."

Not Useless.

When the news came, a few years ago, that James Chalmers, the missionary to New Guinea, was murdered while trying to make peace between two native tribes, many were tempted to ask doubtingly, "Is it, after all, useless, the sacrifice of this great life"? A letter from a native teacher to one of the missionaries answers the question: "May you have life and happiness. At this time our hearts are very sad because Tamate (the native name for Mr. Chalmers) and Mr. Tompkins and the boys are not here, and we shall not see them again. I have wept much. Hear my wish. It is a great wish. The remainder of my life I would spend in the place where Tamate and Mr. Tompkins were killed. In that village I would live. In that place Jesus Christ and His name I would teach to the people that they may become Jesus' children. My wish is just this. You know it. I have spoken."—Selected.

"O Lord, may I have a deepening experience of Thy resurrection, so that it shall not be to me a theological dogma or historical tradition, but a present reality in my life!"

THE NEW HYMNAL

The Authorized and Approved Hymnal, Available in Three Editions

The New Hymnal is now available in three editions.

The Standard Musical Edition, bound in dark blue cloth, intended for the congregation as desired by the General Convention.

The Choir Edition, bound in red buckram and specially reinforced binding for heavy usage.

The Word Edition, without music, bound in dark blue cloth, the same size as the usual Prayer Book.

Choir Edition ..... $1.50 per copy, or 1.30 per copy in lots of 100 or more

Standard Musical Edition ..... 1.20 per copy, or 1.00 per copy in lots of 100 or more

(An order for 100 or more of the Musical Edition, part of which are to be the Choir Edition, entitles the purchaser to the reduced prices on both editions.)

Word Edition ..... 40c per copy

Carriage Charges Extra

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND

14 WALL STREET, NEW YORK

VIRGINIA TRUST CO.

Richmond, Virginia

THE SAFE EXECUTOR

Was organized in 1892 to act as Executor-Guardian and trustee.

Many prudent men and women in every section of the State have named this Company Executor and trustee in their wills.

Inquiries cordially invited—no cost and confidential.

Capital Stock $1,000,000.00
Surplus earned $1,500,000.00
Held in trust $30,000,000. (plus)

EARN $25 WEEKLY SPARE TIME
Writing for newspapers, magazines. Experience unnecessary. Details FREE. Press Syndicate, 1303 St. Louis, Mo.

YOU WANT TO

OWN A HOME

We will gladly send you a little dial by which you can tell how long it will take to raise the cash required or the purchase price, and a booklet explaining a new method by which you can begin to plan now.

It can also be used to get other worth while things.

Ask for Booklet on Income Building Plan

Mention this Paper

INCORPORATED 1882

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $3,398,462.62

Fred'k E. Nolting, President.
B. C. Lewis, Jr., Secretary — J. C. Watson, Treasurer
J. M. Leake, General Agent — Wm . P. Hill, Asst. Secretary

A Complete Store of shops and --- more --- an Institution

Miller & Rhoads

"THE SHOPPING CENTER"

Richmond - Virginia

The Bell Book and Stationery Co.

ENGRAVED WEDDING ANNOUNCEMENTS
VISITING CARDS.
Fifth Street between Broad and Grace
RICHMOND, VA.

Baby Loves A Bath With Cuticura Soap

Bland and Soothing to Tender Skins.

BEVERLEY HEATING

The Best for Homes, Churches, Stores and Buildings for all uses.
R. C. BEVERLEY HEATING CO., INC.,
308 E. Main St., Richmond, Va.
QUALITY—SERVICE

The South's Best Book Store

HUNTER & CO.

105 E. Broad Street
Richmond, Va.
Stationers, Engravers, Bookmen.
Prompt and Reliable Service.

SYDNOR & HUNDLEY'S STOCK REDUCTION SALE

Complete Suites and Hundreds of Occasional Prices at

25 Per Cent, 33 1-3 Per Cent and 50 Per Cent Reductions.

7th at Grace — Richmond, Va.

A NATIONAL CHURCH PAPER FOR ALL THE FAMILY.

Southern Churchman

DOMINUS FRUSTRA NISI 1835

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., JUNE 4, 1927. No. 23.

The Revelation of the Bible is Complete :: Its Doctrines Immutable :: Its Truth is Invincible :: And its Authority is Absolute :: :: ::

"The Southern Churchman holds to the historic faith of the Church as expressed in the common creed of evangelical Christendom. We cherish the faith of our fathers as expressed in the Prayer Book and particularly in the Thirty-Nine Articles of Religion. In regard to some disputed points of doctrine we wish it understood that we accept the Diety of Christ, Virgin Birth of Christ, the personality of the Holy Ghost, the supernatural and plenary authority of Holy Scripture, the substitutionary atonement, the necessity of the new birth, the second coming of Christ.

We hold forth the Word of God as our supreme standard and guide and seek to conform our acts to its plainly expressed teachings, making it the supreme authority in creed and conduct.

In accordance with Scripture we believe that the supreme work of the Church is to win souls for Christ, and we give the first place to evangelism. We make a strong appeal to the unsaved to accept the Lord Jesus as their personal Saviour, believing that no one is a member of the Church who is not born again and that they are begotten through the Gospel.

We believe that a Church ought to be a praying Church, a Bible reading and Bible studying Church, a soul winning Church, a witnessing Church, a giving Church."

EDUCATIONAL

The Virginia Home and Training School

Falls Church, Fairfax County, Va.
For the Feeble-Minded.
Established 1892.
For terms and information address

Episcopal High School

NEAR ALEXANDRIA, VA.
The eighty-eighth year of this School for Boys opened September 15, 1926. Modern equipment throughout. Catalogue on application.
A. R. Hoxton, B. A., Principal.

The General Theological Seminary

CHELSEA SQUARE, NEW YORK.
The next Academic year begins on the last Wednesday in September.
Special students admitted and Graduate Courses for graduates of other Theological Seminaries.
The Requirements for admission and other particulars can be had from THE DEAN, 1 Chelsea Square, New York, N. Y.

Virginia Episcopal School

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA.
prepares boys at cost for college and university. Modern equipment. Healthy location in the mountians of Virginia. Cost moderate, made possible through generosity of founders. For catalogue apply to
REV. WILLIAM G. PENDLETON, D. D., Rector.

St. Hilda's Hall

Charles Town, W. Va.
Near Harper's Ferry.
Chevron School for Girls. Episcopal Junior College—four year' High School and two years' College Courses. Elective Music, Art. Business, Athletics. Limited numbers.
MARIAH PENDLETON DUVAL.

The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary in Virginia

The One Hundred and Fourth Session Opened Wednesday, Sept. 15, 1926.
For catalogs and other information address The Dean, Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va.

College of William and Mary

WILLIAMSBURG, VIRGINIA.
Winter and Summer Sessions.
Regular courses for Bachelor and Master Degrees. Special courses in Teacher Training, Pre-Medicine, Pre-Engineering, Home Economics, Jurisprudence, Business Administration, Physical Training, etc.
J. A. C. CHANDLER, President.
H L. BRIDGES, Registrar.
Catalog sent upon request.

Southern Churchman

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY, Publishers,
112 North Fifth Street - Richmond, Va.

LANGBORNE M. WILLIAMS..President
REV. JAMES W. MORRIS, D. D...Editor
ALFRED B. WILLIAMS..Assistant Editor
MISS FENTON WILLIAMSON
News Editor
MISS SUSAN C. COOKE,
Circulation Dept.
JOHN H. COOKE..Secretary and Manager
Entered at the Post Office in Richmond, Va., as second-class mail matter.
SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.
$3.00 a year in advance. To the Clergy, $2.00. Six months, $1.50. Trial subscriptions, 3 months, 50 cents; 10 cents a copy. Foreign postage, 50 cents additional.
For the convenience of subscribers, subscriptions are continued at expiration unless otherwise ordered. Notice of renewal, discontinuance or change of address should be sent two weeks before the date they go into effect.
RECEIPT OF PAYMENT is shown in about two weeks by change of date on address label. If date is not properly extended after each payment, notify us promptly. No receipt for payment will be sent.
Notice post office address. The exact post office address to which we are directing the paper at the time of writing MUST ALWAYS BE GIVEN. Our mailing list is arranged by post offices and not alphabetically.
Make all checks and money orders payable to the Southern Churchman, and not to an individual.
ADVERTISEMENTS.—Rates quoted on request. For classified see head of that department.
Representatives wanted in each Parish; liberal commissions.
News concerning the Church at large always welcome.

CONTENTS

	Page.
Thoughts for the Thoughtful.....	4
Editorials	5-6
Evolution and the Supernatural—The Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, D. D.	7
For English-Speaking Unity	9
Our Nation's Capital Should Have Sunday Law	9
The Church and the Young People's Work—The Rev. Karl Morgan Block, D. D.	10
Christianity and the Community...	11
Letters to the Editor	12
Diocesan Councils and Conventions	13
Church Intelligence	14
Family Department	18
Children's Department	20
Personal Notes	22

The Bishop Payne Divinity School

The accredited Seminary of the Church for training colored men for the ministry. The curriculum covers the full course for Deacon's and Priest's Orders. The degree of B. D. is awarded.
For catalogue and information apply to
Rev. F. G. Ribble, M. A., D. D., Dean,
Petersburg, Va.

St. Stephen's College

An Undergraduate Church College for men. There are four curricula—Classical, Literary, Scientific and Social Scientific.
For tution $250.00 a year; for a room furnished and heated $150.00 a year; for board in hall $250.00 a year; a total of $650.00.
Address: BERNARD IDDINGS BELL, President
Annandale-on-Hudson, N. Y. (Railway Station, Barrytown N. Y.)

Five Virginia CHURCH SCHOOLS

FOR BOYS: St. Christopher's School, Richmond; Christchurch School, Christchurch, Middlesex County.
FOR GIRLS: St. Catherine's School, Richmond; St. Anne's School, Charlottesvile; St. Margaret's School, Tapphannock.
(For Catalogs, address Principals.)
LEGAL TITLE for wills: Church Schools in the Diocese of Virginia (Inc.)
(About gifts or bequests, address the Dean, 110 West Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.)

ST. CHRISTOPHER'S

A CHURCH SCHOOL FOR BOYS.
Richmond, Virginia.
Healthful, beautiful and historic surroundings. Boarding Department limited to 60 pupils.
RATE $700.00
Reduction to sons of Clergymen, teachers and missionaries. Illustrated catalogue on request.
REV. C. G. CHAMBERLAYNE, Ph. D., Headmaster

St. Agnes' Episcopal School

Alexandria, Virginia.
Boarding and Day School for Girls on Braddock Heights overlooking the Potomac River.
On the interurban trolley and bus lines between Washington and Alexandria.
Athletics and open air life; sixteen acre campus. Primary, Intermediate, General and College Preparatory Courses. Music.
For information apply to
THE PRINCIPAL.

Episcopal Theological School

Cambridge, Massachusetts.
Affiliated with Harvard University.
For catalog address
The Dean.

HOBART COLLEGE, Geneva N. Y.

A Church College for men, founded 1822. Four year liberal arts course, leading to the degrees A. B. and B. S. High standards; faculty of thirty. For catalogue and information, address
REV. MURRAY BARTLETT, D. D. Pres.

TEMPLE SCHOOL

MANASSAS, VA.
Christian home and training for refined girls 3 to 12 years. Kindergarten through grades, music. expression and dancing. for children. References required. En- for children. Refereneces required. Enroll now as number is limited.
MARGARET T. HOPKINS, Director.

STUART HALL

STAUNTON, VA.
1843 1926
FORMERLY VIRGINIA FEMALE INSTITUTE
Oldest girls' school in Virginia—Episcopal. Location healthful and beautiful. General and college preparatory courses. Loyal alumnae find here for their daughters the familiar atmosphere of culture and refinement, combined with modern equipment and teaching methods. Supervised outdoor sports. For catalogue, address MRS. H. N. HILLS, A. B., Box P.

The Hannah More Academy

The Diocesan School of Maryland, Founded 1832. A Country School for Girls—fifteen miles from Baltimore. College Preparatory and General Courses, Music, Art, Supervised Athletics.
Principal, LAURA FOWLER, A. B., Reistertown, Maryland.

The Racine School of Religion

FROM JULY 12TH TO AUGUST 2D, 1927.

The following courses are offered:

CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE
The Holy Spirit, the Church and the Means of Grace. The Rev. M. Bowyer Stewart, D. D.

NEW TESTAMENT,
Church Literature of the First and Second Centuries. Professor A. Haire Forster.

CHURCH HISTORY
The Church Since the Reformation, with particular reference to the Anglican Communion. Professor Percy V. Norwood.

APOLOGETICS
A discussion of the present relations of Science and Religion. The Rev. D. A. McGregor.

MINOR COURSES
On the Background of the Gospel, Christian Morals, the Prayer Book and its Antecedents.

For further information apply to

MRS. GEORGE BILLER,
Taylor Hall, Racine, Wisconsin

St. Paul's Boys School

Rogers Avenue, on Heights above Mt. Washington, Maryland,
A Parochial Boarding School for Boys Between the Ages of 10 and 17; College Preparatory Capacity, 60 Boarders and 10 Day Scholars
Wholesome Christian atmosphere, thorough instruction by competent masters.
Headmaster—The Reverend S. Janney Hutton, former Chaplain of The Gilman Country School, Baltimore; and Virginia Episcopal School, Lynchburg.
Assistants—Mr. Beverly R. L. Rhett
Mr. Harry P. Rhett
Mr. Harry P. Rhett
Mr. Robert W. Pearman
Mr. Louis Clark
Matron—Miss Sally H. Barron Assistant—Mrs. Noel M. Bush
Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving D. D.
President of Trustees
Next session opens Tuesday, September 12, 1927.
Applications should be sent to Headmaster St. Paul's Boys' School, Mt. Washington, Md.

CHATHAM EPISCOPAL INSTITUTE
Box S, Chtham, Virginia.
College preparatory school for girls. Certificate privileges. Advanced academic work. Music, Art, Expression, Home Economics included in tuition. Modern equipment. 15 acre campus. Pool, Golf. Terms moderate. 34th session September 21, 1927. Bishop of Diocese of Southern Virginia President of Board.
For catalogue address
MABEL ELEANOR STONE,
Principal.

National Cathedral School

A Home and Day School for Girls.
The Bishop of Washington, President Board of Trustees. Jessie C. McDonald, M. S., Principal. Helen L. Webster, Ph. D., Academic Head. Mount St. Alban, Washington, D. C.

MARY BALDWIN COLLEGE and MARY BALDWIN SEMINARY
Staunton, Virginia.
For young ladis. Established 1842. Term begins Sept. 8th. In Shenandoah Valley of Virginia. Unsurpassed climate, modern equipment. Courses: College, 4 years, A. B. degree; College Prep., 4 years. Music, Art, Expression, Domestic Science Physical Education, Athletics — Gymnasium and Field. Catalog.

YOUR ESTATE

Will be handled in a business-like manner by executive officers of wide experience, if you name as your executor or trustee

THE

RICHMOND TRUST COMPANY

Capital One Million Dollars
CARTER N. WILLIAMS, JR., President
TRUSTS AND GENERAL BANKING
RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

VIRGINIA POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE

(The State Agricultural and Mechanical College)
ALL CURRICULA OPEN ALIKE TO MEN AND WOMEN
Four-year curricula for high school graduates, leading to the B. S. degree in Agriculture, Home Economics, Engineering, Science, Business Administration, Secretarial Work, and Teacher-Training. Two-year curricula in Pre-Medicine Pre-Dentistry, and Pre-Law. Graduate work leading to the M. S. degree and the professional degrees in Engineering.
For catalog and full particulars, address:
DEAN OF THE COLLEGE,
V. P. I., Blacksburg, Virginia.

Rockford College for Women

Founded in 1847

for Modern Women

A college of distinguished graduates, fine traditions, and high standards of Christian scholarship. Chartered on February 25, 1847; this year is the 80th anniversary of Rockford College for Women. A. B. and B. S. degrees. Majors in the regular academic subjects or Education, Art, Social Service. Home Economics, Music, and Secretarial studies. A campus of wooded acres on Rock River, 88 miles from Chicago. All students participate in athletics. An intimate college with many student activities.

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE AND BOOK OF VIEWS
Wm. A. Maddox, Ph. D., LL. D., Pres.
BOX S. C. ROCKFORD, ILL.

GUNSTON HALL

A Girl's School in the National Capital. Founded on the soundest principles and highest scholastic standards. Under Church influence. Prepartory and academic courses. Two years graduate and college work. Music, Art, Expression, Domestic Science. Athletics. Richard N. Mason, Business Manager.
MARY L. GILDERSLEEVE.
MARY B. KERR, B. A., M. A., Prins.
1930 Florida Avenue, Washington, D. C.

Randolph-Macon Woman's College

Lynchburg, Virginia.

A Woman's College of the first rank, offering A. B. and A. M. degrees. Sixty acres, four Laboratories, Library, Astronomical Observatory, five dormitories, modern gymnasium, swimming pool, large athletic field. O cers and Instructors 100, students 836 from 32 States and three foreign countries.

For catalogue, address

D. R. ANDERSON, President.

ST. MARY'S SCHOOL

Raleigh, N. C.
A Junior College
Rev. Warren W. Way, A. M., Rector.
An Episcopal School for Girls. Four years High School and two years College Courses. Accredited. Special courses: Music, Art, Expression, Home Economics, Business.
20 Acre Campus-Gymnasium-Field Sports
New, Indoor, Tiled Swiming Pool
Advent session opens September 15, 1927.
For catalogue address A. W. TUCKER,
Business Manager, Box 19.

St. Albans

The National Cathedral School for Boys

Thorough Preparation for Leading Universities splendid equipment, unexcelled location on Mt. St. Alban overlooking Washington.
Eight years' course. Athletics for Every Boy.
Address:
WILLIAM H. CHURCH, Head Master,
Washington D. C.

The Divinity School of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia
42nd and Locust Streets.
Graduate Courses in Theology, Privileges at the University of Pennsylvania.
Address: The Rev. G. G. Bartlett,

SUMMER RESORTS

GRAY GABLES INN

119 South Washington Street
WINCHESTER, VA
Miss Caroline S. Hunter, Proprietress

THE INN

Located in Historic
CHARLES-TOWN, WEST VIRGINIA
In the beautiful Shenandoah Valley. Two hours from Washington on the National Highway. Large shady lawn; home atmosphere; home cooking.
Address
THE INN,
Charles Town, West Va.
Mrs. John P. Briscoe.

EVERYTHING FOR THE CHURCH

J. & R. Lamb
23-25-27 SIXTH AVENUE NEW YORK
MEMORIALS IN STAINED GLASS
MOSAIC · MARBLE · STONE · GRANITE
CARVED WOOD · METAL · ETC.

WOODY ART GLASS SHOP
Art Stained and Leaded Glass
Church Windows a Specialty
402 East Marshall St.
Richmond, Va.

R. GEISSLER, INC.
56 W. 8th STREET, NEW YORK, N.Y.
Church Furnishings
IN CARVED WOOD AND MARBLE · BRASS · SILVER
FABRICS + WINDOWS
EST. 1837

We are Headquarters for
CHURCH BOOKS and CHURCH SCHOOL SUPPLIES
Send for a copy of our Complete Catalogue
GEORGE W. JACOBS & COMPANY
Booksellers-Stationers-Engravers
1726 CHESTNUT STREET
PHILADELPHIA

PARISH PAPERS
Any church, school or class can publish a parish paper by using our co-operative plan. A parish paper fills empty pews, keeps community informed, speeds up church work.
Free Samples and Particulars.
Our plan provides a paper for your church without cost to you.
The National Religious Press
Grand Rapids, Mich.

Church and Sunday School Furniture
THE SOUTHERN DESK COMPANY,
Hickery, N. C.
Send for Special Catalogue.

Washington Cathedral
A Witness for Christ in the Capital of the Nation

* * *

THE CHAPTER appeals to Churchmen throughout the country for gifts, large and small, to continue the work of building now proceeding, and to maintain its work of Missionary Education, Charitable, for the benefit of the whole Church.

Chartered under Act of Congress.

Administered by a representative Board of Trustees of leading business men, Clergymen and Bishops.

Full information will be given by the Bishop of Washington, or the Dean, Cathedral Offices, Mount St. Alban Washington, D. C., who will receive and acknowledge all contributions.

* * *

Legal Title for Use in Making Wills:
The Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia

GRANITE AND MARBLE MEMORIALS
Largest stock in the South. We pay the freight and guarantee safe arrival
The Couper Marble Works
(Established 79 years.)
204-206 Bank St., Norfolk, Va.

"Palmer's book is a wonderful contribution to the subject," says Bishop Darst.

THE MINISTRY OF LAYMEN
A Plea for Lay Evangelism
By
LEON C. PALMER.

Over 2,000 copies sold before edition was off the press.

Postpaid: Single copies, 25c.; four for $1.00; nine for $2.00.

From
The BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW
202 S. Nineteenth St., Philadelphia.

MOLLER PIPE ORGANS
three thousand churches. Every organ specially designed for the church and service in which it is be used and fully guaranteed. Specifications and estimates on request. Correspondence solicited.
M. P. MOLLER.
Hagerstown, Maryland.

CHURCH VESTMENTS
Cassocks, Surplices, Stole,
EMBROIDERIES
Silks, Cloths, Fringes.
CLERICAL SUITS
Rabats, Collars, Shirts.
COX SONS & VINING,
131-133 E. 23d St., New York.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS
Gold, Silver and Brass.
Church and Chancel Furniture
Write for Catalogue for Episcopal Churches.
W. & E. SCHMIDT CO.
308 THIRD ST. MILWAUKEE, WIS.

XANTHINE
Hair Restorative
Will hereafter be sold in the new style bottle and package. Always best for the hair Not a dye, but restores the color, promotes growth and prevents dandruff.
Price $1.00 at druggists, or sent prepaid by us.
XANTHINE CO., Richmond, Va.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"The words of a wise man are heard in quiet."

"In every gladness, Lord, Thou art
The deeper Joy behind."

It is ten times harder to keep one's own heart pure than to clean up the lives of others.—Rev. Wm. Porkess.

"When the law was given, three thousand men lost life; but when grace and truth came at Pentecost, three thousand obtained life."

Come very Sun of heavenly love,
Come in Thy radiance from above,
And shed the holy Spirit's ray
On every thought and sense today.

You will find as you look back upon your life that the moments that stand out above everything else are the moments when you have done things in a spirit of love.—Henry Drummond.

Never be afraid to ask questions. It is well said that the badge of this age is an interrogation point. The whats and Whys and Hows open doors for the entrance of truth. The mind is always hungry.

There are times when a strange warmth takes possession of our hearts as we pore over the pages of the Bible. What does it mean? Simply this—Jesus is talking with you. And oftentimes He does it "by the way".—R. A. Torrey.

In the Christian view, the body is not a shell which the spirit reluctantly inhabits and exultingly sheds. It is not something to be despised as evil. It is of God, sacred here as a vital phase of personality, and therefore, continuing its sacredness in the future organ of expression which becomes its successor. Many religions have arrived at the conviction that man's spirit must survive the dissolution of the physical; only the revelation that culminates in our Lord's resurrection assures us of the immortality of man's full personality.—Selected.

Cassocks
Surplices, Stoles, Altar Hangings, Bookmarkers and Embroideries Altar Linens, Materials, Rabats, Rabat Vests, Birettas, Collars, Cuffs and Shirts. Clerical and Custom Tailoring.
Moderate prices.
J. M. HALL, Inc.
9 East 35th St., New York
Tel. Caledonia 3648

The Charm of Golden-Voiced Chimes is within reach of your church, too!
Imagine the rich, musical tones of
Deagan Tower Chimes
coming from the belfry of your church—a constant inspiration to worship; a golden voice eagerly awaited by multitudes every day. Write for plan.
Standard Sets $6,000 and Up.
J. C. DEAGAN, Inc., 112 Deagan Building, Chicago, Ill.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

Catholic for every truth of God; Protestant against every error of man.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 92. RICHMOND, VA., JUNE 4, 1927. No. 23.

STORMS

"And the rains descended, and the floods came and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock."

Storms far worse and more ruinous and destructive than any brought by natural disturbances are all about us and beating now with furious menace and diabolic power on the homes we have built for ourselves or in which we shelter our families. We read with awed and sorrowing hearts of devastation from riotous surging of great rivers bursting their banks, of ruin and wreckage from tornado and cyclone. We give too little heed to the more deadly dangers to homes safe from flood and tempest, but assailed by perverted intellect, debased art, reckless follies and greed unrestrained by conscience or sense of decency.

Villainous and loathsome books crowd our public libraries, shops and stores and come fresh from the presses almost daily. Filthy newspapers, reeking with, revelling in, details of hideous crime and scandal and immoralities, pander to the lowest tastes, blazoning their corrupting and repulsive contents in huge headlines at the street corners. Theatres, from billboards and with blazing electric lights, flash suggestive titles of plays designed to allure those craving garbage. Mawkish and feeble sentimentalists, convinced of their own superiority to all mankind, random theorists, excited by sudden acquisition of what they believe to be ideas, blatant and noisy sensualists, unconscious of their own depravity, hungry seekers for publicity at any cost, raw and silly youth, with smatterings and glimpses of knowledge, and cloistered age, stuffed with arid philosophies until mental processes have but the flavor, color and substance of whey, unite in one conclusion of confusion and despair. They tell us no law nor power exists above or beyond such as we may make for ourselves, that we may consider no judge of right and wrong but ourselves, that without love, fear or reverence for authority or guidance, but its own will and reason, mankind may be trusted to demonstrate beauty, usefulness and nobility of life. These apostles and disciples of brutal nonsense strive with sickly, feverish eagerness to spread the infection of their own disease and deformities and teach that whether our few years here are crowded with vices, inevitably to live after us and continue to work evil, or made beautiful by generous endeavor or splendid achievement. we must go to the same dismal end, extinction and oblivion.

Frivolity, burning desire for public notice, itch for sensations, too often in what we call high life, seek to make immodesty the fashion, licentiousness and loose living evidences of progress and right assertions of freedom. Vulgarity and the humor of the gutter and the speak-easy are welcomed and encouraged in circles assuming to be choice. Barbaric sounds, borrowed from rum and drug-crazed decadents of the lowest stews are telling boastfully of their origin, are blared and pounded and beaten into our ears day and night from the jazz bands, desecrations of the name of music.

All these instruments and agencies of evil and degeneracy rage and surge against the structure, the sanctity, the sanity, the love and hope of our homes; or come creeping insidiously, like pestilence.

They are not new. Like storms have smitten the homes of families and the faith and affections, the purity and pure aspirations and clean standards and righteousness of which the home should be the abiding place and the unfailing source. It was so before the flood, so in Sodom and Gomorrah, in Babylon and Tyre and Egypt and the other old civilizations that have arisen, flourished in pomp and grandeur, from these same storms decayed and vanished.

After the flood came the rainbow, which yet gleams the old promise in glory of color and beauty when the storm has ceased. The assurance represented by that arch, its brilliant hues shining amid the parting clouds, was confirmed by the sombre, blood-stained cross, instrument of ferocious cruelty and torture made symbol of gentle mercy and pity never wearied, never denied. Since the cross was consecrated on Calvary the storms, ever recurring, age after age, generation after generation, have beaten in vain. Atheism, agnosticism, anarchy, infidelity, the follies, sins, crimes and debaucheries of kings and courts, nobles and entire nations, profound writings of skilled men laboring to prove that there is no God, no future life, no hope for humanity, no place where the tears shall be wiped away nor compensations for sorrows and pain endured here, even treasons within the ranks of religion and hypocrisy using it as mask, have failed to destroy the homes built on the rock. Always there has been a remnant of faith and honest and courageous reason and of the cleanliness of life and purity of purpose established on them. Always, sooner or later, that faith and reason have arisen in irresistible strength and flamed to new light and inspiration and purification.

So it has been. So it is. So it will be always. This country of ours, amid all the blare and jazz and parade of filth and crime and exaltation of folly and preaching of cheap and fallacious philosophies, is sound fundamentally. It is so because it has millions of homes built on the rock, therefore not to be wrecked nor shaken. These are the homes of the poor, plain people on the farms in the mountains, the working people at the factories, of the great dominant element of the neither very poor nor very rich, of the more wealthy and cultured in cities, towns and the rural communities. All are bound and held together by the faith shared by all and the common instinct of piety. These are the people who do not strut nor display themselves nor seek publicity, of whom we do not read in the newspapers. From their homes prayer ascends. In them the old-fashioned virtues of temperance, soberness and chastity, honesty and truth, the fear and love of God, the old-fashioned gentilities of regard for decencies and proprieties, humility and kindliness, are stamped into the characters of children by precept and consistent example. By such homes, when vital tests come, the country is governed and ordered. They cannot be swept away in any swirl of the floods of follies, beaten down by any torrent or tempest of false teachings or fashionable coarseness of conduct or conversation. Wise mothers, or fathers, or both, have established them on the rock, enduring and invincible.

Alfred Brockenbrough Williams.

AUTHENTICITY OF THE BIBLE

By the Late Bishop McIlvaine.

Article II.

Now, in ascertaining the authorship of the New Testament, we are furnished with evidence precisely similar as that which settles the question so conclusively as to either of the works above-mentioned. An unbroken chain of testimony ascends from the present generation to the preceding one, and thence to the next beyond, and thence onward again till it reaches the very age of the apostles, exhibiting an uninterrupted series of acknowledgments of the New Testament, as having been written indeed by those primitive disciples to whom its several parts are ascribed. Besides this, historians and other writers of the age ascribed to this volume, as well heathen and Jewish and Christian, not only recognize its existence in their day, but speak of it as notoriously the production of its reputed authors. The language is characteristic of their age, nation and circumstances. The style and spirit exhibit the well-known peculiarities of their respective minds and dispositions. And again, although the New Testament at the time of its first appearance, either in parts or collectively, was surrounded with numerous, learned and ingenious, as well as most bitter enemies, both among heathens and Jews; and although there arose at an early period many animated controversies between the real believers in the gospel truth on the one side, and sundry heretical pretenders to the Christian faith, whose cause would often have been materially served by a well-sustained denial of the authenticity of certain of the books of the New Testament, none in the primitive ages, whether heretics or open enemies, ever denied that this volume contained the genuine writings of the original apostles and disciples of Christ. On the contrary, all received, argued and acted upon it as unquestionably authentic. Thus we have the same evidence that the books of the New Testament were written by those whose names they bear, as that Paradise Lost was written by the man whose name it bears. The force of this evidence is in no wise diminished by the consideration that the apostles lived in the first and Milton in the seventeenth century.

Thus have you received a general outline of the argument. We proceed to a more particular view.

THE BOOKS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT ARE QUOTED OR ALLUDED TO BY A SERIES OF WRITERS WHO MAY BE FOLLOWED UP IN UNBROKEN SUCCESSION FROM THE PRESENT AGE TO THAT OF THE APOSTLES. In proof of this, it is necessary for the satisfaction of any person of ordinary information to trace the line of testimony from the present time, or from any point of departure lower down than the fourth century. Whoever has the least acquaintance with the history of the civilized world as far upward as the fourth century must know that the acknowledgment of the New Testament, as composed of authentic writings, is interwoven with all the literature, science, and political as well as religious institutions of every subsequent age. We begin therefore the chain of testimony at the fourth century.

It is very impressive evidence of the high estimate in which the New Testament was universally held at this period, that besides innumerable quotations in various writings, no less than eleven distinct, formal catalogues of its several books were composed at various times during the fourth century by different hands; and two of them by large and solemn councils at the heads of the Christian Church. All of these are still extant; and all agree in every particular important to the present argument, with the list of the New Testament writings as at present received. In the year 397 a national or provincial council assembled at Carthage, consisting of forty-four bishops—Augustine, Bishop of Hoppo, was a member. The forty-seventh canon of that council is thus written: "It is ordained that nothing besides the canonical Scriptures be read in church under the name of divine Scriptures; and the canonical Scriptures are these." In the enumeration we find precisely our New Testament books, and no more.

About the same time Augustine wrote a book entitled, "Of the Christian Doctrine", in which is furnished a catalogue of what he considered the authentic writings of the evangelists and apostles, agreeing entirely with ours. "In these books," saith he, "they who fear God seek His will."

A short time before this, Rufinus, a presbyter of Aquileia, published an "Explication of the Apostles' Creed", in which he includes a catalogue of the Scriptures. It commences thus: "It will not be improper to enumerate here the books of the Old and New Testament, which we find by the monuments of the fathers to have been delivered to the churches, as inspired by the Holy Spirit." This list differs in nothing from ours.

Jerome, a contemporaneous writer, universally allowed to have been the most learned of the Latin fathers, in a letter concerning the study of the Scriptures, enumerates the books of the New Testament in precise correspondence with our volume. With regard to the Epistle to the Hebrews, he states that by some it was not considered the work of Paul; though it is evident, from other places of his writings, that he is satisfied of its authenticity, and numbered it among the canonical Scriptures.

In the year 380, wrote Philastrius, Bishop of Brescia. In a book "Concerning Heresies", he gives a catalogue agreeing entirely with ours, except that it omits the Epistle to the Hebrews, and the book entitled the Revelation of St. John. But it does not follow that these were not considered canonical. The object of his catalogue is to enumerate the books appointed to be read in the churches. The Epistle to the Hebrews, he says, was read in the churches "sometimes". "Some pretend", he writes, "that additions have been made to it by some heterodox persons, and that for that reason it ought not to be read in the churches, though it is read by some. Philastrius himself received it, and frequently quoted it as the work of St. Paul, and reckoned it a heresy to reject it. He received also the Revelation as the work of John the evangelist, mentioning its rejection by some as among the heresies of the age. "There are some," he writes, "who dare to say that the Revelation is not the work of John the apostle and evangelist."

About the year 370 flourished Gregory Nazianzen, Bishop of Constantinople, who in a work on "The True and Genuine Scriptures", enumerates all the present books of the New Testament except that of the Revelation. This, however, he has quoted in his other works.

At the same time wrote Epiphanius, Bishop of Constantia, in Cyprus, "a man of five languages". He wrote against heresies, and gave a list of the New Testament books which agrees exactly with ours.

About the year 350 another catalogue was published by the council of Laodicia, differing in nothing from ours except in the omission of Revelation. The decrees of this council were, in a short time, received into the canons of the universal church; so that as early as about the middle of the fourth century we find a universal agreement, in all parts of the world in which Christianity existed, as to the constituent parts of the New Testament, with the single exception of the book of revelation. That this was also generally received, and why any doubted its authenticity, will appear in our subsequent progress.

Athanasius and Cyril, the latter being Bishop of Jerusalem, a little earlier in the century, have furnished catalogues: that of the former agreeing entirely with ours; that of the latter in everything but the omission of the Revelation of St. John.

The last catalogue to be mentioned in the fourth century is that of Eusebius, Bishop of Caesarea, who flourished about the year 315. "A man," says Jerome, "most studious in the divine Scriptures, and very in making a large collection of ecclesiastical writers." In his Ecclesiastical History he mentions, as belonging to the canon of Scripture, all our present books. While he speaks of the Epistle of James, the second of Peter, the third of John, and the book of Revelation, as questioned by some, he states that they were generally received, and declares his own conviction that they ought not to be doubted.

The above testimonies, though capable of great multiplication, are amply sufficient to exhibit the universal confidence of Christians, of the fourth century, in the authenticity of the New Testament.

Let us proceed to the third. In this, among other important names, we find that of the celebrated Origen, who flourished about the year 230, having been born A. D. 184. Jerome speaks of him as the greatest doctor of the church since the apostles; that he had the Scripture by heart, and labored day and night studying and explaining them. Great numbers of all descriptions of men attended his lectures. Heathen philosophers dedicated their writings to him, and submitted them to his revisal. He wrote a threefold exposition of the books of the Scripture, on which he bestowed all his learning. He lived within a hundred years of the death of St. John, and was therefore so near the time of the publication of the books of the New Testament that he could hardly avoid obtaining the most accurate knowledge of their origin and authors.

His enumeration of these writings contains no other books than those of our sacred volume, and includes all that we receive except the Epistles of James and Jude, which could not have been omitted by design, as in other places he expressly acknowledges them as part of the sacred canon.

Besides Origen, we have in the third century Victorinus, ory, of Neo-Caesarea, and Dionysius, of Alexandria, in whose writings are found most copious quotations from almost every book in the New Testament.

EVOLUTION AND THE SUPERNATURAL

By the Reverend W. H. Griffith Thomas, D. D.

III.

XI. Evolution in Relation to Sin.

It is sometimes said that science has no trace of the fall. This is doubtless true in regard to physical science, and we have no right to expect it there. Why should anything purely moral be indicated in geology or biology? But there are other branches of science and these call for equal consideration. There is the testimony of moral philosophy or, as it may be called, psychology. What can be said of man's conscience, which clearly testifies to the fundamental distinction between right and wrong? How has man come to the consciousness of guilt as the result of wrongdoing? Education can do much to develop science, but many tribes of savages have more enlightened consciences than even some educated and cultivated men. These savages show the work of law writen on their hearts, and the idea of a conscience developed from the lower animals is unthinkable, for no one ever associates a conscience with a dog, a tiger, or a shark. Man, on the other hand, is everywhere conscious of a law, for the observance of which he is responsible; and he is equally conscious of breaches of that law. These breaches are called in the Bible by the name of Sin, so that "man in becoming a sinner does not rise, but falls". (Bavinck, p. 78.) Dr. Denney once remarked that many minds in the present day are endeavoring to explain away the consciousness of sin under the influence of current conceptions in biology. If all life is one, Denney goes on to argue, then as it comes from the same source and reaches the same end, man's present condition is merely an inheritance from the past remains of an animal nature for which he is not responsible. "There is no doubt that this mode of thought is widely prevalent, and that it is one of the most serious hindrances to the acceptance of the gospel" (Denney). It is vital to face this issue and to challenge the thorough-going evolutionist in regard to it. If things are as he represents them to be, how are the terrible facts of life to be explained? What about the lying, thieving, murder and many unmentionable sins? Where are these to be found in a scheme of unbroken progress? As all observers can see, it is not a matter of a few occasional discords in an otherwise perfect harmony, but it is the harmony which is occasional and the discords which have been the rule. A doctrine is true or false as it explains or is unable to account for all the facts, and it is impossible for any one to argue that the doctrine of evolution is adequate to an explanation of the facts of life. It cannot account either for the existence or the persistence of sin.

XII. Evolution in Relation to Redemption.

Since man is a sinner and cannot save himself, it follows that if he is to realize what was evidently the original divine purpose for him, namely, freedom from sin, some divine intervention must accomplish the task. This intervention took place in the Person of Christ and the outcome is Christianity as a redemptive religion. But if it be such, it follows that evolution cannot explain it. Two elements are all that now need to be considered in this connection. First, the death of Christ, which is always associated in the New Testament with man's salvation, and with this casual connection between the death and the salvation some divine act on man's behalf is clearly involved and demanded. Then as the outcome of the atoning death of Christ, the New Testament reveals the Holy Spirit as the divine power for human redemption. Christ's appearance and death took place nineteen centuries ago, but in order that man may benefit thereby today, the Holy Spirit makes Christ real to the soul, and thus "The Jesus of history" becomes "the Christ of experience". Christianity is marked by three special features in relation to human life. The first is conversion, by which is meant the believer's initial spiritual experience. Then follow fellowship with God as the supreme purpose of redemption, and character as the outcome of redemption in practical reality. It is the province of the Holy Spirit to make real these three essential needs of man, and the action of the Spirit is summed up in the Bible word "grace". Now this necessitates a continuous process of divine intervention. Christianity is a moral miracle. The Bible asserts that given certain conditions, a new power will enter man's life and change it. Thus, every conversion involves the interposition of the supernatural, and thereby the absolute impossibility of any mere naturalistic evolutionary development. Evolution can have no place for that incoming of life which is the very essence of the Christian redemption.

XIII. Conclusion.

From what has been said, it is clear that evolution is not a fact, but only a hypothesis, and it is still as necessary as ever to seek for adequate proof. To speak of it (as one writer does) as "the idea of ordinary change governing all things" is not only ambiguous, but is wholly different from what is usually regarded as evolution. "Ordinary change governing all things" might easily mean a theory of development which all can accept. And to say, as a leading theologian has recently said, that "every educated man knows that the main facts of organic evolution are firmly established" is to assert what is not correct. The various theories of evolution associated with the names of Lamarck, Darwin, Weismann, DeVries and Mendel reveal such fundamental and contradictory differences that while they do not in themselves disprove the fact of evolution, they show the difficulty of believing it to be almost if not quite insuperable, and they go far to set aside the idea as it is generally accepted.

"It is a pity that such a conception which is to explain everything should itself so much need explaining. The definitions that are given of it vary immensely . . . and no single definition covers all the phenomena that are subsumed under the conception." (Bavinck, p. 43.)

The fact is that men of science, as well as men in the Church, have found that evolution does not yield the desired and expected results, and when a scientist, like Huxley, endeavored to explain the universe in the light of this principle, he was compelled to settle down into agnosticism, while Herbert Spencer went further by saying, not only that he did not know, but illogically maintaining that it was impossible to know. And now that, fifty years afterwards, agnosticism is no longer the fashionable attitude of earlier days, the explanation of evolution is as far off as ever, because science realizes that the universe is infinitely more complex than it was formerly considered to be. Here again some words of Professor Osborn may be adduced:

"Between the appearance of 'The Origin of Species' in 1859 and the present time, there have been great waves of faith in one explanation and then in another; each one of these waves of confidence has ended in disappointment, until finally we have reached a stage of very general scepticism. Thus, the long period of observation, experiment and reasoning which began with the French philosopher, Buffon, one hundred and fifty years ago, ends in 1916 with the general feeling that our search for causes, far from being near completion, has only just begun."

It is also not unfair to call attention to the frequent, or rather general, tendency of a large number of leading scientists who accept the doctrine of evolution to depart from the theistic, to say nothing of the essential Christian position. Darwin himself, who at first held a deistic form of belief in creation, was led more and more in the direction of an agnostic naturalism. A scholar once said that we do not want to know what Darwin believed or was convinced of, but what he could prove, and the prophecy that Darwin's attempt to solve the riddle of life would not survive until the end of the nineteenth century has undoubtedly been fulfilled. And "the declaration of J. B. Meyer has met with wide assent, that Darwin's doctrine of descent was not so much a hypothesis proposed to explain facts as rather an invention of facts for the support of a hypothesis." (Bavinck, p. 35.) Yet, though Darwinism in its strict form is not accepted today, the theory of evolution is still dominant in scientific circles, and on this account continues to call for thorough consideration by Christian thinkers. It is in this prevalence of the theory that the danger lies of confusing inference with fact and of dogmatizing with the uninstructed. From the very first the idea of evolution was criticized and opposed by eminent scientists, and it is not incorrect to say that it is now held, in its Darwinian form, only by those who have not given it thorough consideration, but who have taken their views at second hand from others. It will be evident, therefore, that evolution, whether as a fact, or as a theory to explain the fact, is incompatible with the supernatural Christianity recorded in the Bible. It is opposed to the Bible in regard to its idea of God, its view of morality, its conception of miracle, its view of sin, its doc-

---

The article, "EVOLUTION AND THE SUPERNATURAL", by the Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, D. D., is copyrighted, and is being published by permission of the Sunday-School Times, Philadelphia. The article in pamphlet form may be had for twenty-five cents per copy, or $2.50 per dozen, from the Sunday-School Times Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

trine of the uniqueness of Christ, and its conception of the fact and forces of redemption. Indeed, evolution is opposed to the whole conception of Christianity as a divine revelation. Huxley once said: "Evolution, if consistently accepted, makes it impossible to believe in the Bible." It should also be remembered that it is quite immaterial for Christian theology to be in complete harmony with the latest science, because scientific knowledge is speculative and changeable, and is being constantly modified. What is needed, whether in evolution or Christianity, is fact and not theory, certainty and not mere hypothesis. It has been truly said that there are three main schools of evolutionists, the atheistic, who deny the divine existence; the agnostic, who ignore it; and the theistic, who affirm it (Cook, "Biology"). And of the theistic form of the doctrine of evolution there are three varieties:

"(1) That which limits the supernatural action in the origination of species to the creation of a few primordial cells.

"(2) That which makes divine action in the origination of the species chiefly indirect, or through the agency of natural causes, and yet sometimes direct, or through special creation.

"(3) That which makes God imminent in all natural law and regards every result of cosmic forces as the outcome of present divine action." (Cook, "Biology".)

But none of these theories can be regarded as true to the conception of God either as transcendent in nature or as revealed in Christianity. All these views of theistic evolution rob the Bible of authority as effectually as does evolution, because evolution rules out the miracles, and the Bible is miraculous or nothing. And if present conditions can be fairly adduced, it must be confessed that the tendency of modern thought is to make God less and less recognized in the intellectual world.

From all this it is obvious that the theory of evolution is still a hypothesis which we have a perfect right to question until facts are forthcoming to transform the hypothesis into scientific truth. It is, therefore, time that the whole truth be known in order that those may be reassured who fear the authority of the Bible is destroyed. Evolution is not an explanation of anything. It does not and cannot say a word as to how the primal impulse arose from which the whole movement proceeds. It does not explain the upward tendency of things. It does not explain the particular forms and laws in the universe. It cannot bridge the gulf between mind and matter. All these vital matters have to be taken for granted at the start; and from the standpoint of evolution, agnosticism is the only position in regard to them, for they are unknown and apparently unknowable. They may be described, but cannot be accounted for. Evolution may attempt to describe; only theism can explain.

It is well known that if any single cell of life, in plant, insect or animal, cannot take in from without, the issue is death. There is no such thing as development merely from within, for development is also dependent on appropriation of force from without. If nothing is taken in from without, there is no development from within, and it is this that the Bible specifically teaches, both as to the realms of nature and of grace. The truth is that so many seem content to take evolution for granted, as though it were absolutely assured beyond all possibility of question. Yet those who take this line are, as already seen, opposed to some of the plainest scientific facts, and they can only be regarded as adopting the science at second-hand without proper inquiry.

Thus, in spite of all the brilliant discoveries of science, the fact abides that we must come back to the Bible for an explanation of the origin of life. And those who have been perturbed by any utterance on this subject may possess their souls in patience, and should remember that not every statement found in books and magazines is necessarily true, especially when it has to do with religion. There is no need to apologize for the Word of God, and no need to be disconcerted when any one declaims against it.

Those who are inclined without due knowledge of the facts of the case to accept what they understand as the modern doctrine of evolution should first of all face certain questions:

(1) How is it that life has never yet been produced from that which is non-living?

(2) How did the mental, moral and spiritual faculties of man come into existence on the theory of evolution?

(3) How is it that embryonic life is incapable of being improved except by means of a better quality of the mature members of the species?

(4) How is it that embryonic life is incapable of preserving itself and needs the constant protection of the mature parent species during the period of development? How, then, could the embryo or germ survive unaided the great catastrophic changes of early ages?

(5) How is it that evolution fails to explain man's appearance on the earth in view of the many gaps between the highest animal and the lowest member of the human race?

(6) How is Jesus Christ to be explained by the theory of evolution, and how, on this theory, has no being superior to Him been developed during the last nineteen hundred years?

(7) How is the supernatural element in Christianity to be explained, including regeneration, continuous grace in the soul to overcome sin, and the guarantee of resurrection hereafter?

When these questions are satisfactorily answered, it will be possible to settle the true relations between evolution and the Bible.

This is how a scientist puts the case in a summary of the facts in five departments of knowledge as they are now known:

(1) Both matter and energy seem now to be at a standstill, so far as creation is concerned, no means being known to science whereby the fixed quantity of both with which we have to deal in this world can be increased (or diminished) in the slightest degree.

(2) The origin of life is veiled in a mist that science has not dispelled and does not hope to dispel. By none of the processes that we call natural can life now be produced from the not-living.

(3) Unicellular forms can come only from pre-existing cells of the same kind; and even the individual cells of a multicellular organism, when once differentiated, reproduce ony other cells after their own kind.

(4) Species of plants and animals have wonderful powers of variation; but these variations seem to be regulated and predestined in accordance with definite laws, and in no instance known to science has this variation resulted in producing what could properly be called a distinct new kind of plant or animal.

(5) Geology has been supposed to prove that there has been a long succession of distinct types of life on the globe in a very definite order extending through vast ages of time. This is now known to be a mistake. Most living forms of plants and animals are also found in fossils; but there is no possible way of telling that one kind of life lived and occupied the world before others, or that one kind of life is intrinsically older than any other or than the human race ("Q. E. D"., by Price, p. 125f).

Meanwhile, there is profound force in one of the last addresses delivered by that great scientist, Lord Kelvin, who said:

"I marvel at the undue haste with which teachers in our universities and preachers in our pulpits are restating truth in the terms of evolution while evolution itself remains an unproved hypothesis in the laboratories of science."

Literature.—The position taken in this article can be studied more fully in "Evolution: An Investigation and a Criticism", by Graebner, and "Fallacies of Evolution", by J. D. Charles, to both of which the present writer is much indebted. Other books following a similar line are: "Evolution Criticized", by T. B. Bishop; "Theistic Evolution", by Fairhurst; "The Philosophy of Revelation", by Bavinck; and "Evolution at the Bar", by Philip Mauro. A brief bibliography of other books (of various views) will be found in the writer's booklet, "What About Evolution"?

(End.)

Christian faith does not say that everything is right; It does not say that the night is real and dark. Whot Christian faith does say is that the morning cometh. The darkness shall be light. The burden shall be lifted. The hard experience which we cannot understand, which seems to contradict not only our own best plans, but the purpose of God, shall somehow work out into a good which we never imagined.—George Hodges.

Let the weakest, let the humblest remember, that in his daily course he can, if he will, shed around him almost a heaven. Kindly words, sympathizing attentions, watchfulness against wounding men's sensitiveness—these cost very little, but they are priceless in their value. Are they not almost the staple of our daily happiness? From hour to hour from moment to moment, we are supported, blest, by small kindnesses.—F. W. Robertson.

For English Speaking Unity---Magna Charta Sunday, June 19th

"To Help Keep Vibrant Anglo-Saxon International Good Will."

The greatest influence for World Peace lies in a unity of the English-speaking Nations, so strong and so intelligent that it will defy all the evil forces in the world which seek to make our nations forget their great obligations to each other and to the world.

In behalf of this great need, English-speaking unity, the International Magna Charta Day Association urges the observance by the Churches and Sunday Schools of our nations of one day annually in common—Magna Charta Sunday, June 19—dedicated to strengthening the consciousness of the ties which bind together the seven Englisn-speaking nations: The United States, Canada, Newfoundland, The British Isles, Australia, South Africa and New Zealand.

A day, but not a legal holiday, set aside for the annual commemoration of the source of their common liberties, their common legal system, their common language and their common culture. Many people do not know that there are 200,000,000 people living under and enjoying Anglo-Saxon traditions, and that the need of uniting this English-speaking world is pressing hard upon us.

Those traditions, laws, culture and liberties are all directly traceable to one great document—Magna Charta—of which President Coolidge advised us: "It is the background of all that we have." It is in behalf of English-speaking unity that the International Magna Charta Day Association urges our nations to annually commemorate the Common Charter of their liberties in the observance of June 15 as Magna Charter Day—"Inter-Dependence Day".

Among Churches and Sunday Schools, the third Sunday in June—Magna Charta Sunday, the fixed date—is thus observed. The support of the press has been and will be of the greatest help. Teachers are asked to impress upon their students the importance and significance of this day.

The movement was started in St. Paul, Minn., many years ago for the purpose of developing the essential unity of thought and purpose of our far-flung race and is growing rapidly through the help of the press and pulpits of our world.

Our Great Heritage—Its Obligations.

The English-speaking nations have a great heritage, although we often allow it to become tarnished. Just in these most critical times it should be more than a landmark. It must be to ourselves and to all others—especially to those inimical and undermining forces that threaten the world today—a symbol and an ideal which we must strive not merely to maintain, but to develop and some day to perfect.

Let us establish a day—Inter-Dependence Day—consecrated to the fostering and the purifying of this ideal—a day wherein we may look not only backward over the centuries past, but forward to those coming years which shall bring a nobler and a more enlightening freedom—Law, Order and Fellowship clasping encircling hands around the "Will to do Right".

Its Growth and Influence.

The movement is growing rapidly through the enthusiasm of people all over the English-speaking world who feel the burden of a moral responsibility to do their share to defeat the powerful enemies who seek to cause trouble between England and the United States and to destroy all that our race stands for. It is this sense of moral responsibility which we seek to arouse everywhere, for our movement is a direct challenge to those evil forces.

Honorary Presidents.

The United States—Hon. Calvin Coolidge, President.
Great Britain—The Rt. Hon. The Earl of Kintore, K. T., G. C. M. G., Hon. Vice-President.
Canada—The Rev. Charles W. Gordon, D. D., LL. D., "Ralph Connor".
Australia—Hon. P. McM. Glynn, K. C., B. A., LL. B., Etc.
New Zealand—The Rt. Hon. J. G. Coates, Premier.
Newfoundland—Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, D. D., C. M. G.
South Africa—Alexander William Roberts, Senator, Union Parliament.
British West Indies—Hon. Willoughby Bullock, Attorney General.
Ulster—Rt. Hon. Viscount Craigavon, Premier.
Free State—Rt. Hon. Sir Horace Plunkett, K. C. V. O.
Egypt, Sudan—The Rt. Rev. Bishop Llewellyn H. Gwynne, D. D., LL. D., C. B. E.

This Association was the first to recognize the value of the English-speaking nations observing one day annually in common, having begun the movement some twenty years ago. We are not duplicating the work of any other Association and we are most happy to cooperate with all societies having better relations in view.

The Founder-Secretary, Mr. J. W. Hamilton, P. O. Box 512, St. Paul, Minnesota, will be glad to hear from all those interested, and to send leaflets.

Our Nation's Capital Should Have Sunday Law

Remarks Of THE HON. W. C. LANKFORD, of Georgia.

On Sunday Rest Bill for District of Columbia, Including Statements of Drs. David G. Wylie and Harry L. Bowlby of the Lord's Day Alliance of U. S.

In the House of Representatives,
February 5, 1927.

The Capital of the Nation, under the direction of Congress, owes it to the Nation, her traditions and her customs, to bring that area of the Federal Government under such restrictions on the first day of the week, the Christian Sabbath, as will command the admiration of a God-fearing people and prove a worthy example and influence to the youth of America and to the countless thousands who come from foreign shores to visit the Capital of the greatest Republic on earth.

It has been said that "civilization moves forward on the feet of its children". That being true, the Government owes much to the young who are to be its guide and guardian in the future. The converse is likewise true—through the children, the Government owes much to itself. It should keep the keys to the lock on its doors of future strength and security.

Our Nation can never be greater than our citizenship, our citizenship never greater than our homes, our homes never greater than the children reared therein, and our children, who are to preserve this Nation if it is to endure, can never be greater than is the faith of their fathers and mothers in God and in the teachings of His Word.

* * * * *

I think it may be shown that an abiding civilization has always gone with the Christian Sabbath, and I believe it will always go with it.—Henry Ward Beecher.

* * * * *

The longer I live the more highly do I estimate the Christian Sabbath and the more grateful do I feel to those who impress its importance on the community.—Daniel Webster.

DAY OF REST CONFERENCE,
At Pittsburgh, Pa., June 20-22.
To Mobilize Forces in Behalf of the Day of Rest for the District of Columbia.

To Churches and Moral Welfare and Social Service Organizations and Committees:

A Sunday Rest Conference is to be held at the Fort Pitt Hotel, Pittsburgh, Pa., June 20-22, 1927, to formulate and further plans to secure the enactment in the next Congress of the Lankford Sunday Rest bill for the District of Columbia.

Will you kindly write us whether you can send one or more representatives to the conference? That you are interested in such urgently necessary legislation for our Nation's Capital and in this cause elsewhere we have no doubt and we are confident you will be pleased to do all you can to help make this conference of workers for so desired an end, a magnificent success.

Our King and our Country call and challenge us to this task. The Son of Man is Lord of the Sabbath, the Lord's Day. "As goes the Sabbath in the United States, so goes the Nation."

We are preparing a tentative program, which will consider this principal question from various angles and we can assure you that it will be much more than worth the time of every one who can attend to hear what is presented and to have an opportunity to take part in the discussions.

It is the purpose of the conference "to discuss and formulate plans for the educational and legislative campaign necessary to accomplish the enactment of the Sunday Rest Law for the District of Columbia". On Monday and Tuesday evenings, June 20-21, after a brief popular address, the audience will engage in a practical conference to organize our forces for the successful accomplishment of our task.

We are pleased to state that the following rates have been given for rooms at the Fort Pitt Hotel, the Headquarters of the conference:

Single rooms (one person)—without bath, $2.50 and $3 per day; with bath, $3.50, $4 and $5 per day.

Double rooms (two persons)—without bath, $4 per day; with bath, $5, $6 and $8 per day; twin beds and bath, $7, $8, $9 and $10 per day.

Fraternally,

Lord's Day Alliance of the United States and Cooperating Societies,

David G. Wylie,
William Sheafe Chase,
Isaac W. Gowen,
R. H. Martin,
Harry L. Bowlby,
Committee.

156 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

THE CHURCH AND THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK

Edited by the Reverend Karl Morgan Block, D. D.

YOUTH'S QUESTIONS.

IT IS rather generally admitted that one difference between the young people of today and those of a past generation is this—youth today is thinking for itself. Unhappily, the young people are not always thinking straight. A great many questions that young people are asking in regard to fundamentals of faith are stimulated by their collegiate experience. The schools of philosophy and psychology are raising questions in the mind of youth for which they have no available answers. This spirit of inquiry is reflected in our Young People's Societies. If we can preserve our sense of humor and of sympathy, and can recognize the seriousness of these inquiries, we ought to have a much more intelligent and devoted constituency when these same young people arrive at maturity. Later adolescence is the age of intellectual revolt or at least, inquiry. The Church needs above all things, consecrated, intelligent and qualified councilors who can guide our young people to an apologetic, not only easily available, but sufficient for some of the best minds the world knows today.

The following account illustrates the situation commented upon here:

One of the eternal questions is that of youth. Age asks what is to become of the world? What are the young people thinking? We fail to realize that youth is not the problem; but that youth is faec to face with vital problems, and wishes to know their answers.

There was held recently, at the Pro-Cathedral, Baltimore, a Conference of College and University Students under the very able leadership of Bishop Dallas of New Hampshire. The following interesting questions were asked:

Does prayer have an objective answer?

Should we keep the unfit alive?

Can the Christian life be kept alive without Church attendance?

What is meant by the resurrection of the body?

What is the answer to suffering?

How can we find God in the modern world?

What should we believe of the nature of God?

Has Christianity done more for the world than other religions?

What is the status of the chaperone?

What appeal does the Episcopal Church make to the man on the street?

What is the value of Holy Communion?

Some of these questions were adapted by the Young People's Service League of St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Baltimore, the Rev. Dr. Wyatt Brown, rector, which is composed of about seventy-five boys and girls from sixteen to twenty-three. Some of these being students of Johns Hopkins University and Goucher College for Women.

The question—"What is the Status of the Chaperone"?—was discussed. It will be a surprise to the average person who sees only the failures of youth, to know that these young people argued most ably and earnestly for proper chaperonage. None of them wanted the supposedly popular chaperone who is blind, dumb and frivolous. They claimed there was a great need for a proper chaperone who would lend dignity and poise to any kind of young people's dance or fraternity affair.

Surely we can be most hopeful of the present age when a group of city boys and girls of college age want the presence of well balanced older people at their gatherings. The youth of today is looking to their elders for sane leadership.

THE NEW HANDBOOK.

All of the young people of the Church will be interested in the definite news of the publication of a new handbook. This book is a departure from anything that has hitherto been offered the societies of the Church. It is full of suggestions and resource material, compiled from actual experience. It contains a foreword by Bishop Murray and Mr. John Suter, and then follows seven sections, beginning with an introduction giving the scope and function of the National Organization and the National Commission, reports and recommendations of the National Commission and the National Constitution.

Section Two is entitled—"Building the Whole Program"—and gives illustrative types of programs, enterprises, with corresponding resource material.

Section Three is a Book of Prayers and Worship, with Litanies, Meditations, Preparation Services, Bible Readings, Hymns, Grace at Meal, and an Admission Service.

Section Four is a Book of Songs of Fellowship—a compilation of the songs used by the young people's groups throughout the country.

Section Five deals with Building the Parish Organization—contains suggestions for organization, with illustrative types, constitutions, parliamentary procedure and recommendations for the weekly meeting.

Section Six is entitled—"Building the Conference Program"—and is illustrated, as above.

The last section contains a list of existing handbooks and newspapers available from different parts of the country, and an address list of the National Commission members.

Then follows a section of blank pages for notes, and a pocket envelope on the back covers for clippings.

The new handbook is published in loose-leaf form and at a nominal cost—$1. The binder is of standard size, so that one can use leafax sheets, sections from the recreation manual "Handy", and any of the publications put out for young people by the International Council of Religious Education. The issue is to be limited and it is indeed questionable if a new edition will be published until after the next National Conference in August 1928. Those who wish copies will wisely order them now, from The Book Store, No. 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

It is needless to say that this publication should be welcomed by the entire Church and that several copies ought to be in the hands of every parish and diocesan group.

If there be some weaker one,
Give me strength to help him on;
If a blinder soul there be,
Let me guide him nearer Thee;
Make my mortal dreams come true
With the work I fain would do;
Clothe with life the weak intent,
Let me be the thing I meant;
Let me find in Thy employ,
Peace that dearer is than joy;
Out of self to love be led,
And to Heaven acclimated,
Until all things sweet and good
Seem my natural habitude.

—Whittier.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE COMMUNITY

"The Kingdom Come, Thy Will be done on earth"

COMMENTS ON CHILD TRAINING.

By Mary Evelyn Brydon, D. D.

ARTICLE XXI.

During the discussion of the spiritual training of children in the past several numbers, an attempt has been made to discuss it from the standpoint of the Ten Commandments. I wanted to limit the discussion to what the Old Testament taught, but as we went along I found it to be impossible to confine it strictly to moral teachings and not to let Christ's teachings influence me—so saturated are we with His teachings at the end of nineteen hundred years. New Testament words that came into general use later and His ideals and aims are inextricably mixed with our lives today; and try as we will, we cannot separate our modern life from His influence. This is because we are a group of people born into Christian homes and trained in Christian communities, and our very country was founded in order that we might be free to interpret Christ's teachings as our consciences prompted. However, it has been an interesting experiment.

When He lived on earth He found a moral people among whom He lived and worked. These people, the Jews, were trying to live their lives by the Ten Commandments as laid down for them by their lawgiver, Moses. Now what I want you to think about is this: Is there a difference between the lives of the Jews of that day and the lives of all the moral and upright people of today who lay no claim to be Christians, and the lives of those who do lay claim to be Christians? I am sure that there is as much difference between these two groups today as there was in Christ's time. Else what need for Him to have lived? What do you think about this? In other words, what is the essential difference between a moral life and a Christian life, and if there is a difference, what bearing will this matter have upon you in the training of your children?

The Church Catechism says:

Q. What dost thou chiefly learn by these commandments?

A. I learn two things: my duty towards God and my duty towards my neighbour.

Q. What is thy duty towards God?

A. My duty towards God is to believe in Him, to fear Him. And to love Him with all my heart, with all my mind, with all my soul, and with all my strength: To worship Him, to give Him thanks: To put my whole trust in Him, to call upon Him: To honour His holy Name and His Word: And to serve Him truly all the days of my life.

Q. What is thy duty towards thy neighbour?

A. My duty towards my neighbour is to love him as myself, and to do to all men as I would they should do unto me: To love, honour, and succor my father and mother: To honour and obey the civil authority: To submit myself to all my governors, teachers, spiritual pastors and masters: To order myself lowly and reverently to all my betters: To hurt nobody by word or deed: To be true and just in all my dealings: To bear no malice nor hatred in my heart: To keep my hands from picking and stealing, and my tongue from evil speaking, lying and slandering: To keep my body in temperance, soberness and chastity: Not to covet or desire other men's goods: But to learn and labour truly to get mine own living, and to do my duty in that state of life unto which it shall please God to call me.

Now, if you will study this subject as I should like for you to study it, you will find that people of today, like the Jews, Christian Scientists, Unitarians, Ethical Cultorists, etc., are strictly moral and upright people. They try to keep those same Ten Commandments just as carefully as we try to keep them. They are as good citizens, as good loving and intelligent fathers and mothers, as good neighbors. What have we got that they haven't got? Is there anything more in life than just to be good citizens, good fathers and mothers, good neighbors? If so, what is it?

THE AIMS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF SOCIAL SERVICE.

Report of the Rev. Charles N. Lathrop, Secretary, to the National Conference at Des Moines, May 11, 1927.

The only way the National Department can operate is through the Diocesan Department of Christian Social Service. There is no other way. If the Diocesan Department is inactive, then the work in the Diocese comes to a standstill, for the National Department has no power. There is not a word of authority in the canons that invests the National Department with any power. It can only promote and influence the social service activity in the eighty-seven Diocesan Departments of Social Service of the Church.

This conference that we are holding here in Des Moines has as its major purpose the effort to work out together a common program that can be carried back to the Diocese. We have been holding these conferences for seven years and the result is beginning to be that we have a practical definite plan of work to put into effect in the Diocese.

What is the primary goal, the great objective of the department? I intend to give in a few words first this general air, and next, three concrete practical objectives.

I. The General Aim.

The ultimate objective is to get the people in our parishes to accept a wider view of their Christian responsibility. This is not primarily activity. The social gospel is not primarily a Department of Christian Ethics. It is an inherent part of the gospel, and therefore an inherent part of all Christian teaching and action—everywhere and always. All the basic doctrine of the Church have inherent in them social facts. Ultimate success will be the recognition on the part of every earnest communicant of the social facts in his religion.

This is very distinctly a change from the kind of statement those interested in the social gospel have been accustomed to make. A great deal of the "reforming" activity and thought have been in the hands of people who are interested in certain principles they find—or think they find—expressed in our Lord's sayings as applied to modern social conditions, rather than in any doctrines of the Church. They have chosen the statements that appear to them as applicable, from our Lord's soyings, taken them apart from the context of Christian theology and applied them as their own desires and interests demanded. Many of them are perhaps Christians, certainly not Churchmen; or if Churchmen, they make their own circle, feeling that their ethical enthusiasm has carried them far beyond the position of the Christian body. Like most enthusiastic idealists, they want short cuts to their immediate goal.

I want, then, to think over more carefully the thesis that I have presented, that the social gospel is an inherent part of our basic dogmas.

Perhaps it will be more clear if I presented it through the case of a rich man converted to an intense devotion to our Lord. He had always had association with the Church. I think he was at one time a vestryman. The Church had never really meant much to him, however. I do not know how it came about, but he rather suddenly came to a realization of Jesus Christ as his Master, and of God as the end and purpose of his life. He was confirmed, and a few weeks after was out at a bridge party with his wife. She in the course of the evening violated every rule of scientific bridge and spoiled the evening. Next morning breakfast was fifteen minutes late, and he realized that he was going to miss his train. The temptation was greater than most of us are willing to admit. There is a freedom of expression in the average home, and there is no place where we more easily show our natural self at its worst. He did not do this. He acted as though his wife had played good bridge and breakfast was on time. In this action he was making his first great social contribution. He was establishing the unbreakable family, a great need in our modern society. His business was the manufacture of pipe. He had perhaps some 500 men in his employ. After his conversion it broke into his realization that every man working for him was "one for whom Christ died", that each was an end and never a means toward an end in himself. He immediately set upon developing a new relationship with his employees. I have not the space to follow out all the difficulties and discouragements and setbacks that he had to deal with, or his quiet work as a big brother to some jail men. I want rather to think over what was the real background for his conversion. He came to a realization of the "tender mercy" of God, as he fell in love with his Saviour. God, a living Person with whom he could make a living personal contact. In this fact we come face to face with Ultimate Reality. What is it we face? First, God the Father revealing Himself through Jesus Christ as Love. Inherent here is the Doctrine of the Trinity, that is God, His Personality; He knows, He loves, He wills. That Personality finds its expression in personal relations in the Godhead. Personal relations mean willed relations, social relations. "It is the perfection of fellowship within the Godhead, a communion of unrestrained, reciprocal self-giving. God is Love, unfettered, absolute, or otherwise He could not be perfectly Personal and perfectly social." We have here a standard of personal relations, the source and goal of all social work, the explanation of human society. Christian experience and Christian fellowship in terms of the society of the Godhead is, in my judgment, the only hope for a decent world.

We can work this great principle out in our Lord's attitude. His life presents God—absolute Love—expressing toward every human being He meets in every human relation this absolute Love. And he presents this attitude as our example.

"Self-giving is of the character of God, and thus the only true law of personal and social life. "Self-giving is the only secure tie between persons."

The Christian dogma asserts that this tie exists within the personal-social Being of the Deity. The result then will be an entirely revolutionary attitude toward the accepted social doctrines of this world. The fact must influence the relations of men in industry and commerce, and the relations of classes and nations. "The divine fellowship must control all the relations of its members." It must apply to every department of life, or else it must stultify itself in them. "The Church cannot claim to reveal the Blessed Trinity as the true ground of personal-social life, and permit her people to be perpetually organized in a system which denies any Christian principle. Either she must seek again, in some way, to realize her centricity and leadership in a society one and Catholic, or she must be content to suffer an ever-declining significance amongst the governing forces of the modern world."

This is a rather terrifying conclusion. I cannot see, however, that we can avoid it. And its practicability in business—in statesmanship—can be proved only as a sufficient proportion of those who are responsible can be brought to think about it and to do their utmost to apply it.

You will find these principles developed in a book by W. G. Peck, "The Divine Society", published by the Student Christian Movement, London, England. It can be bought at the Book Store, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York, for $2, and I suggest to those who are interested in Christian Social Service that they become acquainted with the book.

A number of conclusions that it seems to me are of interest come as the result: And the love of God and the love of your neighbor are not really two commandments in Christianity; logically, yea; but morally they are one. St. John tried to say it. Consequently, Christian social service, social work, the social gospel, are related to the First Commandment, and result from it.

(To be continued.)

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions. No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

A NATIONAL PROBLEM: WILL THE CHURCHES HELP?

Mr. Editor:

According to official reports 500,000 refugees from the flooded regions, men, women and children, whites and blacks alike, are huddled in temporary camps dependent entirely upon the efforts of local people who have not been flooded, and upon the splendid work of the Red Cross. Five hundred thousand people have seen their homes to a very large extent washed away; their livestock, their fowl, their furniture carried away by the mighty rush of waters.

These people, amid all of their sufferings and losses, are displaying a heroism which should be an inspiration to the nation. It is impossible to estimate the aggregate losses which have been sustained. Some estimates have been made as high as $500,000,000, but probably this is too high. That it will run, however, into the hundreds of millions admits, I think, of no question. But in the meantime these 500,000 homeless people are wholly dependent upon the work of the Red Cross and the people in the regions of these states which have not been overflowed, and who are with wonderful liberality and wonderful self-sacrifice giving of their time and their money to care for these homeless people.

Here is an opportunity for the fullest expression of the charity of the people of the whole country. This is a national problem. The waters which have engulfed the regions that are overflowed have been drained from more than one-third of the total area of continental United States, and probably one-half of the area measured by its wealth of opportunities in soil and in minerals. That drainage basis extends from the Rocky Mountains to the Alleghanies, from the border line of Canada to the Gulf.

In this situation there is an opportunity for the churches of the entire country to give as they have never given before in any great disaster. Many churches have taken up collections to help these people; probably most of their members have given through the Red Cross; but the situation is so appalling that it seems to me the churches of the entire country should continue week after week to appeal to their members to give through the churches or through the Red Cross in order that a fund equal to the tremendous needs may continue to pour into the Red Cross treasury.

Many of the smaller towns in the South have gone far beyond their quota, some have given two to three times what was asked of them by the Red Cross.

In this situation, therefore, with a half million people living in refugee camps, most of them with but a limited supply of clothes, and everything which they own washed away in the terrific rush of water which overturned houses as though they had been built of cardboard, I would like to suggest that the churches throughout the entire country make additional appeals to their people and lay before their congregations the tremendous issues involved. These half million people must be fed and clothed. Where their houses have been destroyed they must be rebuilt. Where their cattle and hogs and fowls have been washed away they must be given a chance to start life over again.

The disaster is so vast, so incomprehensible in its magnitude, that it seems to me a special session of Congress should be called immediately to appropriate a sufficient amount of money from an overflowing treasury to meet the whole situation; for however great may be the contriibutions to the Red Cross work, they cannot possibly take care of this situation. President Coolidge, however, does not favor a special session of Congress. Therefore, until he does take action in that respect the religious forces of the entire country it seems to me should be marshalled week after week into a study of this problem in order that the young and old, the rich and the poor alike, may take some part in lifting the burden of appalling poverty which rests upon 500,000 American people. In this work the utmost influence of the entire religious forces of the country should be consecrated, with a full realization of the fact that "unto whom much has been given of him will much be required".

RICHARD H. EDMONDS,
Editor, Manufacturers Record.

Baltimore, Md.

SOME INTERESTING FIGURES.

Mr. Editor:

May I call the attention of your readers to some figures not without interest in view of the determination of the National Council of our communion to cut its appropriation for Church colleges to the almost non-existent sum of $2,500 a year each?

The figures are from the report of Dr. Frederick E. Stockwell, Director of Colleges of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A. Incidentally, it is interesting to note that the Presbyterians have such an officer.

During the college year ending in June, 1925, $5,341,000 was added to the endowments of the Presbyterian colleges; more than $1,800,000 to the value of their buildings and equipment. The valuation of the Presbyterian colleges was raised by $7,100,000 in one year. The total resources of the colleges, fifty-six in number—as against our five—are now $75,741,675. But with this Dr. Stockwell is far from satisfied and makes an urgent appeal for more reasonable donations, commensurate with the importance of the work.

Is it to be wondered at that the Presbyterians are forging ahead in the mission fields, particularly the home mission fields, while we graspingly hold our own? It is incredible that those in charge of our colleges sometimes wish they could without too great difficulty become Presbyterians—or Roman Catholics or Friends or Methodists or any one of a dozen other kinds of Christians where Christian education is not regarded as an ornamental excrescence on a proper Church program? The fault in this matter of non-support of our Church colleges—that patent disgrace to our communion—is not that our people are stingy more than Presbyterians, but that the national authorities need some lessons in statesmanship. Meanwhile the University of the South, Kenyon College, Trinity College, Hobart College and St. Stephen's College starve.

BERNARD IDDINGS BELL,
President of St. Stephen's College.

Annandale-on-Hudson, N. Y.

A UNIQUE ENTERPRISE.

Mr. Editor:

A recent issue of the Richmond Times-Dispatch Magazine contained an article descriptive of the mysterious "Bell Tower", in the southwestern corner of the Capitol Square, about which so little is known generally; and yet we are told: "The tower, silent and deserted though it seems to be always, still serves a forceful purpose in the military affairs of Virginia," and "is always alive with activity."

Another writer, in the same issue, refers to the "obscure shop in the heart of the Old Dominion's capital", where "for thirty years governments from all over the world have been coming to Richmond to buy early cotton seed", and states that the extensive operations of this business are better known away from Richmond than in our own city.

Reading these articles, I thought of another enterprise, of which, also, little is known in this city. I refer to the Braille Circulating Library, which was organized in this city in November, 1925. No expense is attached to its use, as all reading matter for the blind may be mailed free; and all readers are welcome.

The idea of organizing this work for the blind was conceived by a devoted Christian girl, of this city, who realized that one of the most urgent needs of the blind is for sound, inspiring devotional literature in the Braille type, and the helpful books of Mr. James H. McConkey, a consecrated layman, whose writings are non-sectarian, were selected for publication in Braile.

The work of mailing these books to all applying to them, is done by volunteer workers from several of the churches of the city. Many beautiful books have been put in circulation, and others are being printed for the rapidly increasing number of readers, as funds are received. The printing of these books in Braille is made possible by voluntary contributions; one who has done much to encourage and support the work, stating that he is making thank offerings for the gift of his sight.

Readers of these books are scattered over the United States, Canada, England and Scotland; and calls for this literature have come from Australia, China and Japan. Of the seventy thousand blind in Japan, seven thousand can read Braille, and one of the native Christian workers writes that these books will greatly aid in propagating the Gospel among these sightless people.

Many letters are received from grateful readers, testifying to the comfort and inspiration they have derived from the perusal of these books, and asking that others be sent them.

This truly missionary enterprise is located in the Central Y. M. C. A. Building, and was founded on the strong conviction that those who are daily bearing a heavy and almost crushing burden in the handicap of blindness, need access to just such literature as is going out daily from this source.

ROSE HENRY REDD.

Richmond, Va.

DIOCESAN COUNCILS AND CONVENTIONS

NEW MEXICO.

The thirty-third annual convocation of the Missionary District of New Mexico and Southwest Texas, was held in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Silver City, N. M., May 3-5, 1927 The convocation was opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion, Bishop Howden being the celebrant, assisted by the Rev. R. R. Calvin, Ph. D., rector of the parish. The convocation sermon was preached by the Very Rev. H. R. A. O'Malley, Dean of St. John's Cathedral, Albuquerque, N. M.

The Bishop's address to the joint session of the convocation with the Women's organizations, clearly indicated the rapid strides being made in the spread of Christ's Kingdom through the efforts of the Church in the great Southwest. This is apparently caused first by the fact that the clergy are sticking to their posts for a greater length of time, thereby casting upon the community in which they live a greater and more widespread influence as indicated by the increased numbers being presented for confirmation. This is particularly noticeable in centers such as El Paso, Albuquerque, Gallup, Roswell and others. Secondly, by the increased interest of prominent laymen in the work of the Church.

The reports of the various district institutions show an increased work, especially in St. Anne's, El Paso, and the Cloudcroft Conference. The work at St. Anne's Spanish-American Mission has so impressed the National Council that it has appropriated the sum of $9,000 for the purpose of building the first unit of its future home. By this building the work will be greatly facilitated and consequently increased. The Cloudcroft, begun in 1926 as a conference for clergy only, has this year expanded into a conference for all Church workers.

The following convocation officers were elected for the ensuing year:

Secretary, the Rev. D. J. Williams, Roswell, N. M.; Treasurer, Mr. F. W. Nichols, East Las Vegas, N. M.

The Council of Advice is the same as last year.

Bishop and Council—(The Bishop and Secretary ex-officio), the Rev. W S. Trowbridge, the Rev. B. T. Kemerer, the Very Rev. H. R. A. O'Malley, Mr. A. F. Morrissette, Mr. T. D. Porcher, Major W. L. Carbine.

Deputies to Provincial Synod—The Rev. Messrs, Baker, Kemerer, Hemkey and Eller; Messrs. A. F. Morrissette, J. W. Crowdus, Dr. P. C. Kalloch and the Hon. Ballard Coldwell.

The sessions of the Woman's Auxiliary and other women's organizations were held at the same time as the sessions of the convocation. The convocation of 1928 will meet in St. Andrew's Church, Roswell, May 1-3.

D. J. W.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA.

The Diocese of Western North Carolina held the fifth annual convention of the new diocese in the Church of the Ascension, Hickory, May 18 and 19. The organization meeting of the diocese was held in 1922 in this church, of which the Rev. S. B. Stroup is rector.

At the annual Woman's Auxiliary service the special speaker was the Rev. Louis G. Wood, of the Field Department of the National Council, who on the following day, addressed both the convention of the diocese and the Diocesan Branch bringing a message of helpful contact with the work of the National Council.

Bishop Horner's Convention address dealt with the need for carrying forward the work of the Bishops' Crusade, and later provision was made for creating a standing committee on the Bishops' Crusade with the Rev. G. Floyd Rogers continuing as chairman. The Bishop appealed to the diocese to measure faithfully to the large trust the General Church had put in this diocese by laying the early foundations. He urged completion of the unfinished new dormitory of the Patterson School under the care of the Rev. Mr. Dobbin.

Two of the diocesan boarding schools, ministering in the heart of the mountains, reported that they had been admitted by the state authorities as accredited high schools. These are the school at Arden, under the care of the Rev. R. R. Harris, rector, and the Valle Crucis School for Girls under the Rev. J. Preston Burke, rector. The Penland School also reviewed a year of growth and larger enrollment.

The convention gave special consideration to the Bishop's charge for a larger response to the needs of the National Council and the urgent needs within the Diocese. Announcement was made of the excellent outlook for the Valle Crucis Summer School for Religious Education to be held at Valle Crucis July 4-16 as a joint school of the five Carolina Dioceses. A summer camp to be known as Camp Horner will be held for boys and girls June 10-20 at Rockbrook, near Brevard, under the direction of the Department of Religious Education, cooperating with the Young People's Service League. Mrs. Jean S. Knight reviewed the educational work undertaken as Field Secretary in the Diocese.

The Rev. Warren W. Way, rector of St. Mary's Junior College, Raleigh, preached Thursday evening. Mr. Way for St. Mary's, the Rev. Alfred S. Lawrence for the Church's work at the University of North Carolina, the Rev. William H. Wheeler, Superintendent of Thompson Orphanage, Charlotte, N. C., brought messages concerning the Church's interest in the life of that institution.

New Elections.

Executive Council—The Rev. G. Floyd Rogers, the Rev. J. W. C. Johnson, Mr. Haywood Parker, Mr. W. Vance Brown.

Sewanee Synod—The Rev. Messrs. S. B. Stroup, J. P. Burke, A. G. B. Bennett, S. R. Guignard, C. P. Burnett, L. A. Jahn, and Messrs. F. P. Bacon, H. V. Smedberg, J. W. Yeager, Haywood Parker, D. Heffner and Sheldon Leavitt.

The deans, Standing Committee and Secretary of the Diocese were re-elected. The next anual meeting is appointed for May 9, 1928, in St. Mark's Church, Gastonia, N. C.

J. W. C. J.

FLORIDA.

Charging his people not to fall backward, but to hold their advance line, so splendidly achieved, Bishop Juhan, in his address to the eighty-fourth annual Council of the Diocese of Florida, which met in historic Trinity Church, St. Augustine, the Rev. L. Fitz-James Hindry, rector, May 18 and 19, congratulated his people on the large attendance of delegates and visitors present; on the largest number of confirmations in any year; and on the fact that the Diocese of Florida stands alone among the Dioceses of the Church, in having met, not only her full share of the budget, but also her full advance work quota, on the Program of the National Church.

Opening its session with a service of the Holy Communion, in which the Council, the Diocesan Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary and the Florida Chapter of the Daughters of the King, as well as numbers of visiting Churchmen participated, according to a resolution passed to this effect at the last year's Council, two busy and profitable days were spent in consideration of the affairs of the Church in Florida and of her responsibility to the Church at large.

Of outstanding interest was a resolution adopted providing for the purchase of additional land in Gainesville to increase the efficiency of the work already being done at the University of Florida by the student pastor, the Rev. Melville E. Johnson, and also authorizing the appointment of a special committee to secure funds for the erection of suitable buildings to be used as student centers at Gainesville for the boys of the University, and at Tallahassee for the girls in attendance upon the Florida State College for Women. This work is under the joint supervision of the two Florida Dioceses and a similar committee will be appointed in South Florida.

Great interest was shown in the reports on the Negro work, the work of the Rural Commission and the Bishops' Crusade. These three phases of diocesan responsibility and activity were referred to by Bishop Juhan in his annual message to the Council. The Bishop stated that, in spite of some bright features in the Negro work, it is, on the whole, "dragging badly". He advocated another colored missionary clergyman and a commission, composed of white and Negro members, to take hold of this important problem. Under rural work Bishop Juhan asked for at least one more clergyman, for the necessary steps to be taken to provide every rural clergyman with a car and its upkeep, and for an increase in stipend for the missionaries in the field. The Diocesan Commission on Evangelism has become a permanent force within the Diocese, and the Rev. Charles W. Frazer retains his chairmanship of this commission.

Other advance work urged by Bishop Juhan is the purchase of a diocesan camp site for the use of both Young People's and Adult Conferences; the building of a clergy house in the mountains of North Carolina, where some property has been offered to Florida for this purpose; and the establishment of a Layman's League, which shall undertake progressive work in the Diocese, as the Woman's Auxiliary already does.

The eighty-fifth Council will be held in May of 1928 in Christ Church, Pensacola, the Rev. G. Hendree Harrison, D. D., rector.

The Standing Committee was elected as follows:

President, the Rev. L. Fitz-James Hindry, D. D.; the Rev. George E. Benedict, the Rev. Harris Mallinckrodt, Mr. George C. Bedell, Mr. Raymond D. Knight, Judge S. D. Clarke.

Delegates to the Synod of the Province of Sewanee are:

The Rev. Messrs. William S. Stoney, W. Jeffery Alfriend, Francis B. Wakefield, Jr.; Messrs. George W. Thames, Jr., George E. Porter, Judge B. A. Meginnis.

J. O. M. C.

HARRISBURG.

The twenty-third annual convention of the Diocese of Harrisburg was held Tuesday and Wednesday, May 10 and 11, in conjunction with the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of St. Matthew's Parish, Sunbury, the Rev. B. Talbot Rogers, D. D., rector.

On Tuesday afternoon a pre-convention conference was held, the subject of discussion being, "Our Rural Work". The speakers were the Rev. Y. S. Ford, of the Diocese of Newark; Bishop Darlington and the Presiding Bishop.

The convention opened with shortened Evensong by the Rev. B. Talbot Rogers, D. D., rector of the parish. The Lesson was read by the Rev. Oscar F. R. Treder, D. D., rector of St. Stephen's, Harrisburg.

At the conclusion of the service and following Bishop Darlington's annual address, the convention went into session, the usual nominations to offices being made. The Rev. Archibald M. Judd was elected Secretary of the convention, and the Ven. William Dorwart was elected Assistant Secretary.

The annual Churchmen's Banquet was held in the Legion Hall, covers being laid for about three hundred and fifty guests. General Charles M. Clement, senior warden of the parish, and chancellor of the diocese, acted as toastmaster. General Clement's work in the parish covers more than half a century, and he has held offices in the diocese since its organization, and also in the old Diocese of Central Pennsylvania, out of which the Diocese of Bethlehem and Harrisburg were erected. The first speaker was Bishop Darlington, who reviewed briefly the progress of the diocese.

Bishop Murray spoke of his administration of the affairs of the National Church.

On Wednesday morning the Holy Communion was celebrated by Bishop Darlington, assisted by the Archdeacons of the Diocese. An attempt to have the convention rescind the Rule of Order which makes ineligible for election or appointment to any office in the gift of the convention of the clergy or lay deputies of any parish or mission which has failed to meet its Field Work Quota was defeated. A Canon was passed requesting the Bishop to discontinue public services in any mission station which refused to meet the pension premium of its incumbent. This does not apply to occasional offices. The canon is designed to penalize vestries whose members by their action place in jeopardy the pension status of all the diocesan clergy.

The following were elected to vacancies:

Standing Committee: The Rev. Messrs. William Heakes, Leroy F. Baker, Paul S. Atkins, Alexander McMillan, Clifford G. Twombly; Messrs. T. Spencer Hamilton, Thomas J. Brown, Sr., Thomas R. Hammond, Abram Bossler, John Lloyd, Jr.

Deputies to the Provincial Synod: The Rev. Messrs. B. Talbot Rogers, P. H. Asheton-Martin, Richard A. Hatch, Charles E. Berghaus; Dr. W. J. Middleton, and Messrs. John J. Brandt, Benjamin Brown, George W. Ziegler.

Vacancies on the Executive Council: The Rev. Messrs. Hiram R. Bennett, Richard A. Hatch, Thomas Worrall; Messrs. Harry A. Gibson, Dr. George A. Gorgas, William B. Seward.

A. A. H.

Church Intelligence

Conditions in China.

A cable from Bishop Roots, received May 23 states:

That Boone Middle School and Central China University, of which Boone University is the largest unit, closed on May 17. No definite reason was given. The Bishop says that there was no trouble.

The Bishop also says that with regard to the future of Boone Middle School and Boone University he cannot express an opinion.

The Bishop recommends that Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Kean, now in this country on furlough, delay their return to China until the autumn of 1928.

